Mr. Fred Rusk: My role ended after the awarding of the RFP. At the time, I was asked if I'd like to be in charge of the air program or take another position within emergency health services in eastern Ontario as a regional manager. I thought, well, I'd been in the ambulance service for seven or eight years, basically working on an ambulance, and this would be more to my liking. So I went to Ottawa and became the regional manager for eastern Ontario from 1977 to 1982.

During that time, the program as it started was a pilot program, and there was some talk of it being disbanded until there was huge bus crash in the Barrie area that involved a lot of children in a school bus crash. A single helicopter—it was a Bell 212, a fairly large helicopter—transported a lot of these kids to the roof of Sick Kids. Sick Kids at the time was the only one with a helipad on the hospital for sure and probably the only hospital in Ontario that had a helipad at the time.

I went off to Ottawa and worked in eastern Ontario for four or five years. From that, I was asked to transfer as a regional manager to central-east Ontario, for which the office was in Barrie. I looked after the city of Toronto and basically Durham, York, and Simcoe county up to Parry Sound, I guess, and Alliston way and over that way. I was there for nine years.

During that nine-year period, I took part in the evaluation of the—I guess you'd call it the permanent helicopter program. Forgive me; I can't remember the years, but it was during those years that I was in Ottawa and in central-east Ontario that I helped with the preparation of the RFPs and in the evaluation of the submissions of RFPs at the time.

Other than that, the only other involvement I had was the other job that I had with emergency health services, and that was that I was the VIP health services coordinator for the ministry. That was a wonderful experience that I had, preparing medical plans and working with the RCMP and the OPP and making plans and looking after, in certain cases, heads of state and the royal family. I did that for about 19 years as kind of a, "You're going to be doing this. Would you like to do it?" I said, "Absolutely," so I did it.

The program itself went from a single helicopter—it was stationed in Buttonville. That's where the companies that bid operated out of, and that's where all the maintenance was done on the helicopter as well. They had a twin-engine Bell 206 as a backup, which is a very small helicopter, and it wasn't appropriate.

The program started to expand. I was asked to come in and look at the expansion again, and we had all kinds of consultations on where they should be. The helicopter program started in Toronto and it went to Sudbury and Thunder Bay. They were the three main helicopter bases at the beginning of the program.

At the same time, all along there were a number of private air companies that provided service for fixed-wing airplanes, long-range. Then it was decided that we should probably have a dedicated fixed-wing service, and I took part in that. The two bases that were started up were in Timmins and northwestern Ontario. I'm sorry, I can't remember the name—Fort Frances, I believe. That contract was won by, I think, the forerunner of Air Ontario, actually. They had two Citation jets that operated out of those two bases.

The program grew from one to three helicopter bases and two fixed-wing. These were dedicated programs that were all won by RFP and were staffed by Ministry of Health paramedics. As you can imagine, at the start of all this, there really weren't "paramedics" in Ontario. I was fortunate enough, back in, I guess, 1972 or 1973, to take part in the forerunner of this type of program for advanced-care paramedics. We were called EMAs, emergency medical assistants. I guess it was probably more like a physician's assistant type of course. At the time I was selected to do it, I think there were about 40 of us who were trained in the province back in the 1970s.

I was a multi-engine pilot as well at the beginning of all this. I had aspirations of flying the big stuff. But I got hooked into the ambulance service and enjoyed it all my life. And here I am today, I guess.

Mr. Frank Klees: I appreciate that background. Can you describe for us the emergency health services branch and its role in overseeing that air ambulance operation? What did that look like?

Mr. Fred Rusk: After I moved off to Ottawa, the fellow that I worked with, who did all the groundwork for it, was the manager of the program for the first couple of years, I think. There were a lot of groundbreaking things that took place: the training of these air medics by Sunnybrook—very intensive training, because there wasn't anything available at the time. They were the first base hospital in Ontario, as far as delegating medical acts to the paramedics.

The first people we hired were a mix of nurses and—actually, there were some people who went on the course with me who worked there for quite some time. They were constantly being trained to do more and more, until today, where what they do is absolutely fabulous. I guess the line is "the sandwich between the meat," where these men and women take the sickest of the sick and transport them between hospitals and go to scene calls from car accidents. I'm sure that many, many lives were saved at the time.

The overview of the program was the Ministry of Health emergency health services branch. I had spotty interjections because of my experience with it and my knowledge of airplanes and helicopters and so forth.

There was a section now in emergency health services called the air program. They had a—he would be on the same level as a regional manager, I suspect. The gentleman who ran it for many, many years, and who has passed on now, was Hank Brown. He was a colonel in the Canadian military, and very knowledgeable about air transport. I think he was in charge of the air transport division at Trenton for a number of years. He and a number of people in the branch looked after the air program, because then there were managers at each one of these bases who looked after the staff, if you will, and the affiliations with the then base hospitals for the air program and the local communities.

Mr. Frank Klees: That air program section of the emergency health services branch had the responsibility, then, from the ministry's standpoint, to oversee the air ambulance program of the province. Is that correct?

Mr. Fred Rusk: It is correct, along with the Ministry of Natural Resources. They're the lead ministry for the Ontario government for aviation.

Mr. Frank Klees: On the aircraft side, right?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right. Moving forward then, that would have been the structure that was in place when the government started to think about restructuring that air ambulance program.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Were you engaged in any way in those discussions early on, when the government, if I recall correctly, was responding, really, to some reports that had been done that pointed out that there were some weaknesses within the system in terms of some of the connectivity, communications and so on; that there was a desire to streamline the system; and that a number of different options were under consideration? Were you involved in any of those discussions? Given your background, were you drawn into that discussion to get your advice in terms of what the best structure might be going forward?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No, I wasn't asked that at all. I guess I should have told you earlier that I managed the air program from 1995 to 2000. I was the manager of the air ambulance program in Ontario. After that, I became the senior manager of operations for the branch.

The talk about the air program being devolved, if you want to call it that, from the government started in 2003, if I'm not mistaken, or early 2004; I'm not quite sure. I wasn't involved. I wasn't asked my opinion about what I thought—actually, I probably was asked, “What do you think about this?” It wasn't an official thing, but, “What do you think?” At the time, I didn't think much of it because the government had downloaded the land ambulance system to the 51 upper-tier municipalities and I thought, “Well, this is the way everybody's going.” So with that, that was it.

I do recall there was a standards committee, CAMTS, that comes and does an audit. I do recall some of their comments saying that it was fragmented and, although they passed the accreditation, it wasn't something that they thought was feasible. At the time, I thought, “Well, it has been feasible since 1977, so, you know, if it's not broke, why fix it?”

That was all my involvement. I wasn't involved in any of the discussions or plans of this takeover, or whatever you want to call it. That was it.

Mr. Frank Klees: While you were the manager of the air program from 1995 to 2000, how many staff did you have in your section?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Just at head office? Because there were managers at each one of the air bases.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, let's start with head office and then give me your total complement of staff to run this program.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, I'm just trying to think now; I'm trying to put some faces to names here. It probably was about seven people at headquarters with access to the financial side of things, to the legal side of things, to the ministry's medical advisers sort of things. They weren't, obviously, reporting to me, but—about seven or eight.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was your budget?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Oh, God.

Mr. Frank Klees: You don't have to be to the dollar. When you left in 2000, what would the budget have been for the air ambulance program?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Maybe $90 million to $95 million, I suppose.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. Fred Rusk: The biggest chunk of that was the helicopter contract.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a couple minutes, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay, I'll defer to my colleague. I'll pick up the rest of my time next time.

Thank you. I appreciate that context.

Mr. Fred Rusk: You're welcome.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Pleased to meet you, Mr. Rusk, and thank you for coming to Queen's Park. I will also take you down memory lane. We have you on record, just because everything is on record here. The Auditor General had done an audit of the ambulance system, which at the time included the land ambulance and the air ambulance. It's a special report that the auditor had done, and at the time, you are listed as the manager of the air ambulance patient care and program standards section.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Okay.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Quite impressive as a title, wasn't it? And we're on December 14 in the year 2000. From what you have told us—I'm not sure. Did you leave the ministry in 2000 or in 2003?

Mr. Fred Rusk: It was in June 2004.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Oh, in June 2004. So from 2000 to 2004, what did you do?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I was the senior manager of operations. I'll get my years straight here. I left in 2004, so from 1995 to 2000 I was the manager of the air ambulance program, and then from 2000 to June 2004, I was the senior manager of operations for the branch, as well as this VIP health services coordinator.

M^{me} France Gélinas: As well as the—

Mr. Fred Rusk: The VIP health services coordinator for the ministry.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When you say for the branch, you're referring to the emergency health services branch?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I am. Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. You also happened to be working with Malcolm Bates during that period of time. Do you remember what Malcolm was doing?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I think he was the director of the branch.

M^{me} France Gélinas: He was the director of the branch?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You were the—I thought you told me you were the manager of the branch. Say that again.

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. Malcolm Bates was the director of the ambulance services branch. My job in the last four years or three years that I was there was the senior manager of operations. Under Malcolm, there was the senior manager of operations, all the regional managers, the manager of the air program, I believe, and then down the ranks.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Did you report directly to Mr. Bates?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I did.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You did? All right. But from 2000 to 2004, you are no longer involved with the air ambulance. Somebody else has that job.

Mr. Fred Rusk: That's correct—well, I don't understand what you mean when you say "involved." I had an affinity for it. I always was involved, I felt.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. But in your job as manager of operations, did operations include both land and air ambulance?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Of course.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. I just have a hard time understanding the structure of it all.

Coming back to a question that my colleague had started to ask you about, who was responsible for the oversight? And I'm mainly interested in the air ambulance section of it; I'm not interested in the person. Was the oversight all within your branch, the emergency health services branch?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Up until the point that it was released, always.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And how was the oversight done? I note, because I read some of this thing—it's 12 years old, so I don't expect you to remember, but you talk about a number of standards that exist, standards for time, standards for training, standards for a number of things. How was that handled within the ministry, the oversight of air ambulance to make sure that we get good service?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, we had our own managers at the base, for one thing. We relied heavily on the Ministry of Natural Resources to do operational audits of the—

M^{me} France Gélinas: So your own managers at the base—those were employees of the Ministry of Health at every base; that is, every hospital base?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Every dedicated base, yes. There were the three helicopter bases, the two fixed-wing, and then later on, one of my jobs when I first became the manager of the program was to basically implement the 27 recommendations of the Gail Donner report. It was an extensive report done on the air ambulance program on—forgive me, I can't remember all the recommendations, but I do remember 27 of them, and a lot of it had to do with the disbursement of the regions of the province for the private air ambulance operators to have their contracts and where to position the bases.

As I say, the Ministry of Natural Resources and myself at the time of being the air manager were involved in investigations of complaints. There were hard landings, things that happened to aircraft in the air that we investigated and did reports on. But I think I understand you that the program was managed and overseen by the branch.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So part of your management and overseeing is that you had staff at every one of those dedicated bases?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How did that bring value? How did that help you oversee?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, the day-to-day operation: making sure people were there—attendance—that they got paid properly and their benefits were looked after; anything that would come up at the bases.

The other thing I'd like to mention is that during my tenure at the air ambulance program, the helicopter program expanded to four additional bases. That was a result of the Donner report. Because there were dedicated air bases—there were five at the time—and there were a number of private air programs that were on standing offer agreements with the ministry, the Donner report recommended the consolidation of that. Because these four bases that we expanded to after that were helicopter standing offer agreements, there was one in Ottawa, there was one in Smith's Falls, there was one in London and there was one in Kenora—sorry, in Moosonee—we decided to make them dedicated bases. There was an RFP. Canadian Helicopters won the RFP, and we established the bases in Ottawa, London, Moosonee and Kenora between those years; I'm sorry, I can't remember the exact year.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's okay.

Mr. Fred Rusk: There were managers at those bases too. They dealt with the day-to-day work at every base, whether it was making sure the helicopters and fixed-wing airplanes were properly staffed, equipped, clean. They took part in arranging for continuing medical education of the air paramedics, along with their base hospital, and whatever. They were the local manager. They dealt with the local hospitals. They dealt with the local ambulance services with regard to coordination of land and air. That's about all I can think of at the moment.

M^{me} France Gélinas: They made sure that it worked. I want to fast-forward you. I take it you read the papers, just like everybody else. You know why you're here. You're here because—well, I'll tell you why—the Auditor General did a special report. He went and did an audit of, it's now called, Ornge Air Ambulance. I'm sure you know.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: He did an audit of Ornge Air Ambulance and related services and found a number of, I would say, questioning endeavours going on at Ornge. Have you been following it in the news at all?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I wasn't until somebody called me one day and said, "Have you seen what's going on at Ornge?" I said no. I guess there were a lot of reports in the Toronto Star. I have been, lately.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. I'm now fast-forwarding you. You knew the system when the government ran the different dedicated bases, when the government had managers on the ground and were basically the supervisors. The different people working were all working for the government. Then there were those contracts—what you called standing offer agreements—with the air company that provided the aircraft.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Sure. There were three different types of contracts: the dedicated program, the standing offer agreement program and then the organ retrieval program. There were three. The organ retrieval was basically—you could use any of those helicopters, airplanes, whatever, but basically there were additional companies that provided jets, because they would run to California or out west or wherever, but within a five-hour range of Ontario for organ retrievals.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you had agreements with those different companies to go retrieve something that was a little further?

Mr. Fred Rusk: That's correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In a five-hour flying range, you go far.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes. Well, Vancouver, anyway, and Loma Linda, California, was the farthest I think we ever went.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so—

Mr. Fred Rusk: I should just mention one other thing. During the time I was with the air program, one of the RFPs for the dedicated program was the—I don't know what the word is, but the employees, the paramedics, of the Ministry of Health were let go from the ministry and picked up by the dedicated air operators, so they were employees of the air operator. We didn't have any paramedics that were our employees running on the airplanes; nor were the pilots and nor were the aircraft ours. We just ran the RFPs and oversaw the operation.

I dealt with Transport Canada on different items, providing—when they were rewriting some of the air regulations and that, we provided people to give witness at these air regulations for the air ambulance so that we weren't charged tariff fees by the air traffic control people. So we kind of had a pass on all that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How did you make sure that those private operators did have paramedics and that they staffed them properly?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Service visits. We went there. They provided us names, and all the paramedics were registered with the branch. Today, every paramedic in the province is registered with emergency health services. They're the governing ministry, if you will, that looks after the Ambulance Act. So all that information is gleaned from the colleges, the community colleges, and all their—

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you knew how many staff had been employed by the different—

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes. We kept a list.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you make sure that they were not only employed but they were deployed, as in, they were available? And was there any kind of accountability agreement to make sure that if you're on a dedicated base, you have staff on hand?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How did you do that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: The policy was that, obviously, if you had an air ambulance and it was going to pick somebody up, there had to be at least one person in the back. That was the medical policy, and the policy of our branch.

We did what we call ramp audits—I did them; our investigators at the branch did them; Transport Canada did them—on any of the aircraft, to make sure that—and of course, our dispatch system was controlling it all, and we kept a list of who was flying that day, who the co-pilot was, who the paramedics were in the back, what shifts they were working. All this information was made available to us, and we did spot checks and audits.

In fact, at the time I was with the Ministry of Health, we had our own audit branch. I don't think they have—I could be wrong; I don't know. Our own audit branch did audits on both the land and the air programs.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Because you thought it was important to check, so you audited—

Mr. Fred Rusk: Of course.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, I could see this. And were they usually in compliance?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Very much so. When I was a land regional manager, there were a few that weren't compliant and we actually put out of business. I think back in the late 1970s there were some we even charged and some went to jail for misappropriation of funds. But I can't recall any air operators. There may have been a couple of small air operators that needed to be watched, if you will. In other words, more attention needed to be paid to the cleanliness of the back of the airplane because they weren't using it specifically for ambulance work. They were chartering it and doing whatever. This was all done by our inspectors, our investigators and myself when I was out and about, because our policy was that at least once a year we went to the actual bases of everybody on contract—actually went there.

M^{me} France G  linas: And had a look around.

My colleague wants to ask a few questions.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Certainly.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I just want to draw—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about three minutes left.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you very much.

I just want to draw the connection between Ontario Air Ambulance, which was the predecessor to what we currently have with the Ornge air ambulance service. When you were working—and you’ve described some of the mechanisms of oversight that you were involved with at the Ontario Air Ambulance. How much of that oversight system are you aware was translated over into the Ornge air ambulance? What was the connection in terms of the continuity of those two air ambulance services?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I guess when it actually happened—and I don’t recall exactly when it did happen, but I don’t think I was at the ministry after. When I left, there was a manager of the air ambulance program, and there was still an investigation branch. Because of the downloading of the land program, I think there was an increase in the complement of the investigators, because now the branch became more—instead of an operational role, except for the dispatch centres, which I believe they still operate today across the province, the central dispatch centre. To tell you the truth, I don’t know.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

Mr. Fred Rusk: You know, after I left, I suspect that they would investigate complaints and continue doing that type of thing.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

M^{me} France G  linas: But you were saying that the investigation branch increased the complement of staff because you were not operational anymore; you were more in a role of—and you didn’t finish your sentence.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Overseer, I guess. It wasn’t an investigation branch; it was an investigation section in the emergency health services made up of, I think, five people.

M^{me} France G  linas: And that was for both land and air?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Correct. They looked after the complaints and the investigations and worked with the coroner. They looked after the registration and the issuing of ID cards to all the people in the system and what they did and who they are.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So there’s a clear connection between the role of the ministry—there’s a clear culture and a policy of the ministry overseeing the work of the ambulance services?

Mr. Fred Rusk: There was. And—

Interjection.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Go on.

Mr. Fred Rusk: What I was going to say was that it changed quite a bit with the downloading of the land system. We became more of the guardians of the legislation, if you want to call it that, in the sense that we were no longer operating them, but we certainly had the obligation to oversee them.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Can you talk a little bit about your time at Ornge, your involvement? Did you work for Ornge for some period of time?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I did.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And what was your involvement at Ornge, in what capacity?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I was first asked to come to help transfer the Provincial Transfer Authorization Centre. This is something that was set up during the SARS crisis, where every patient movement between hospitals, nursing homes and so on and so forth, in and out of the province, was screened by the centre. I don’t know if you—well, I’m sure you’re aware of what happened with the SARS issue. It was a very troubling time. And that job was given to Sunnybrook to manage the finances of that to the Toronto ambulance service. They had the space. When it was set up, we needed space. We had a room about twice or three times the size of this, that was set up with tables and fax machines and doctors and lay people taking information and transferring it on to the different dispatch centres, because no patient—no patient—got transferred between facilities without an authorization number. That’s how concerned we were at the time.

That has continued today, and I think we’re probably the only province, because I guess we had a taste of the medicine, that continues to do this—with a lot less people, of course.

My job was to bring those staff from Toronto ambulance, where they worked, into what was, at the time, the Sunnybrook base hospital program. At the time, they were moving from Finch Avenue, their offices, to Carlson Court, across from the airport—anyway, on Carlson Court.

I went there with their IT manager to set up this clearing house of patient information. We went in and set it up, similar to a dispatch centre, because we had to have contact with every hospital in the province. I did that for about a year. We trained the hospitals on how to do it online. We developed a very quick computer program for the hospitals so that they could fill in all the information on the patient and what was wrong with them and where they were going and why.

You always had to have a sending physician and a receiving physician. At the beginning of it all was a physician who watched, to ask all the usual questions. Then that information was passed on to the dispatch centres that would send the ambulance. They wouldn’t send an ambulance unless they had an authorization number from the centre, and it’s still the same way today. Even flights from outside the country coming into Ontario: The vast majority of them that are carrying a patient call ahead to PTAC to get an authorization number.

I did that for a year. For the last three years that I worked there, I was the manager of occupational health and safety and aviation safety. My job was to set up an occupational health and safety program for the branch, getting people certified in occupational health and safety, and doing occupational health and safety audits, which we did. Air quality: I was involved in a study that we did. There was a complaint from our Timmins base, from the air medics, saying that they felt that the jet exhaust fumes were causing some issues, and they didn't know what was in them. Nobody knew what was in them. So we did a study. We hired two companies, actually, to do a study of the exhaust fumes and found that there were no particulates of anything and nothing untoward for a human being in these. It was just the smell of kerosene that the pilot would have when he came through the patient compartment that was an issue.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If I can interrupt you, I think we're about four minutes over. If we can move to the government questioning—

Mr. Fred Rusk: So that was basically my role. The last year I was there, I worked on—Transport Canada instituted an SMS program, a safety management system program, for all airlines. Airlines already had them, the big airlines—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I'll probably ask more questions when it comes back around.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Oh, okay. Great.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Jaczek?

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Yes, thank you, Mr. Rusk. Just recapping a little bit of your role as senior manager of operations, 2000 to 2004: We've obviously established that land ambulance was downloaded to upper-tier municipalities, January 1, 2000, so you had this oversight role as related to that but no direct responsibility in terms of the management.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Correct.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: You had the oversight of the RFP process as it related to air ambulance.

Mr. Fred Rusk: That's correct.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: What about dispatch? Were you in charge of dispatch as well?

0930

Mr. Fred Rusk: The dispatch managers reported to the regional managers. The regional managers reported to the—

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Of the land ambulance side?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Yes.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Sorry. I can't remember exactly—I think there are 15 land central ambulance dispatchers across the province and there was one air dispatch.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Right. So did you have oversight of that as well? I'm trying to get the picture of your role here for those four years.

Mr. Fred Rusk: As the senior manager of operations?

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Yes.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Only to the extent of—like, the managers didn't report to me; they reported to the regional managers of that region, the same as the air program reported to the manager of air—dispatch for air reported to—

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Overall, you were the senior manager of operations. Were you satisfied with the way air ambulance was being administered in Ontario?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes. I saw it grow.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Now, to just recap something Mr. Klees, I think, in his questioning—you said that during that time, during those four years, knowing that land ambulance had been downloaded, you weren't involved in any discussions related to possibly some sort of new model for air ambulance? You were a member of Mr. Bates's senior management team?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I think it happened as I was leaving. Quite frankly, we didn't sit down and discuss what we were going to do now. I mean—

Ms. Helena Jaczek: I see. You were not part of any discussions.

Mr. Fred Rusk: No.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: When would you have first met Dr. Mazza? As we all know, he was at Sunnybrook, a major trauma centre.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I met Dr. Mazza, I think, the second year I was the manager of the air program, so that would be, what, 1996? He was introduced to me as an emergency room physician at Sunnybrook, because Sunnybrook was the base hospital for not only the air program, but for the city of Toronto at the time. It was becoming quite onerous on the medical staff and their own staff—it was getting too big for them to handle. So we agreed—the ministry agreed and Sunnybrook agreed—that they would split the base hospital into an air and a land program. I was introduced to Dr. Mazza at the time as, "This is the lead doctor to do the medical side of things for the air program," train the medics, do all that sort of stuff.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Between 1996 and 2004, when you left the ministry, would you have had the opportunity to interact with Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Certainly.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: On a regular basis?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Sure. Regular, you know. Monthly, I guess.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Did he ever suggest to you that there might be a better way of administering air ambulance—

Mr. Fred Rusk: He was critical of the fact that there were—let's see. There were six or seven base hospitals across the province involved with the air program. He was critical of the fact, as were the other doctors who were in charge. So I met with that group all the time—well, not all the time, but I think we met every two or three months. They felt that there was a need to solidify the air base hospital program with, obviously, strategic affiliations with the local hospitals and the local base hospitals in each of the areas. Then Sunnybrook became the centre for the air program.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: So you took that advice to a certain extent, then, in terms of centralizing the base hospital for air ambulance at Sunnybrook—

Mr. Fred Rusk: Correct. I mean, quite frankly, the training that took place in Toronto and the experience that the flight medics gained by being here in Toronto with the teaching hospitals and so on and so forth had a better exposure, if you will, to major trauma, major illnesses; whereas the farther north you go, even though there are centres of excellence in the north, of course, the exposure to different types of diseases and trauma were far greater in Toronto—and with the teaching hospitals and the University of Toronto, of course, with their expertise.

There was a difference, quite frankly, in the training in the outer-lying areas, even though there was the dedication. I'm thinking of Kenora in one instance, and I think one of the doctors is still involved there. But they just don't get the exposure. So it was decided, and it was a good idea.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Why did you leave the ministry in 2004?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Why did I?

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Yes.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I retired. It was time to leave.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: And who was your next employer?

Mr. Fred Rusk: About five months later, I was approached to come and work for Sunnybrook, to transport the Provincial Transfer Authorization Centre from Toronto into the Sunnybrook program.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Who approached you?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I guess it was Dr. Mazza initially, but then I dealt with the human resources side of things.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer?

Mr. David Zimmer: So when did you formally join Ornge?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Formally?

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, it was a year after—I was hired on contract first to bring these people over, for a year—

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry, I didn't hear that.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I was hired on a contract the first year I worked there.

Mr. David Zimmer: What year was that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: In September 2004. Sorry, wait a minute—

Mr. David Zimmer: So in 2004 you went on contract with Ornge?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes, for one year. I beg your pardon. I'm not sure of the years now, okay? They kind of blend together. But certainly the first year that I was employed by them, I was on a contract. I wasn't an employee, if you will. And then after that, the human resources people asked me if I would transfer over to full-time, which I agreed to.

Mr. David Zimmer: So that would have been sometime in 2005?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: A year later.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just a second.

Mr. Fred Rusk: That was to look after occupational health and safety at the time, and then later—

Mr. David Zimmer: So the first year, you were on contract with Ornge. About a year later you joined Ornge as an employee?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes. It wasn't called Ornge, I don't believe, at the time. I think it was just called the Ontario air ambulance program.

Mr. David Zimmer: Well, you must remember. Were you working for Ornge or not?

Mr. Fred Rusk: When I left, I was.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you leave?

Mr. Fred Rusk: In 2009.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. So you were at Ornge, then, five years?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Sure.

Mr. David Zimmer: Five years at Ornge. And then you left Ornge in 2009. Any involvement with Ornge after you left in 2009?

Mr. Fred Rusk: None.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. So walk me through the gist of your responsibilities from when you started with Ornge on contract in 2004 until you left five years later, in 2009.

Mr. Fred Rusk: As I say, the first year was managing the Provincial Transfer Authorization Centre; in other words, setting it up, streamlining it, training for the hospital staff to access it, buying the equipment, dealing with the computer issues with the IT people, managing the staff. That was the first year.

Mr. David Zimmer: After you joined Ornge and you went from contract to employee status, what was your technical title?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I was manager of occupational health and safety.

Mr. David Zimmer: Ornge?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Correct. Forgive me; I don't know exactly when it changed. I know the name changed while I was there.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you know when the name changed?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Say again?

Mr. David Zimmer: When did the name change?

Mr. Fred Rusk: When I was there. I'm sorry; I don't know exactly when.

Mr. David Zimmer: At some point, you were getting paycheques from Ornge.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I don't have any with me to check, but—

Mr. David Zimmer: But you were getting paycheques from Ornge.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Certainly.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes, all right. And what was your salary at Ornge?

Mr. Fred Rusk: It was $94,000.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was your salary when you left the ministry in 2004?

Mr. Fred Rusk: $92,000, $93,000, $94,000, $95,000? It may have been more than that, because the last year or two was when the ministry was paying bonus cheques to certain classifications, so it would have been more. But whatever it was, it was posted that one year.

Mr. David Zimmer: At Ornge, did you participate in any of the bonus programs, that sort of thing? Stock options, that sort of stuff?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. The bonus program was introduced in Ornge in the last year and a half I was there, so I did receive a bonus in 2008.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just to refresh your memory, in 2009 the disclosure for the previous year, 2004, at Ornge says: Aviation safety manager, $111,829.82. Does that strike you as about right?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I would think so.

Mr. David Zimmer: And were there options or bonuses on top of that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No.

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, how much time do I have left here?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have eight minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Who did you report to at Ornge?

Mr. Fred Rusk: The first year I was there it was a gentleman by the name of Steve Farquhar; I believe he's still there. The second year, I reported to the director of human resources. Then, I believe, Rick Potter became the manager of the air program. That's when they added on the aviation safety to my role and I reported to Rick Potter.

Mr. David Zimmer: And you've heard—or you've been reading the Star, so you know there's a collection of Ornge entities. There's Ornge non-profit and then there are various Ornge profits—

Mr. Fred Rusk: To be very frank with you, I didn't.

Mr. David Zimmer: I'm sorry?

Mr. Fred Rusk: To be frank with you, I didn't know of all these other companies.

Mr. David Zimmer: Which Ornge entity did you work for?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Ornge. That's what I thought I worked for. A company called Ornge, a not-for-profit company.

Mr. David Zimmer: And was your office up at the Ornge head office up there on the 401?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No.

Mr. David Zimmer: Where was your office?

Mr. Fred Rusk: On Carlson Court. It wasn't an office; it was a bunch of desks, and one of those desks was mine.

Mr. David Zimmer: But it was an Ornge office?

Mr. Fred Rusk: It was; correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: I have got your resumé that you handed in here. It's quite extensive, and it's got—do you have a copy in front of you?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No, but I wrote it.

Mr. David Zimmer: You wrote it. All right. So I read it through carefully, a couple of times, and it's got, in great detail, everything that you did, different jobs and so forth and so on, yet I see no reference to Ornge. I don't see the word “Ornge” anywhere in your resumé. Why is that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, I don't know. Maybe it's a Freudian slip or something. I'm not quite sure.

Mr. David Zimmer: What do you mean, a Freudian slip?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Maybe I didn't want to use the name. I always considered it the Ontario air ambulance program, regardless of what the name was.

Mr. David Zimmer: But in back and forth to my questions and answers and in your evidence this morning, you talk about Ornge and you told me, in some detail, about your responsibilities at Ornge; over the period 2004 to 2009, you were in Ornge buildings and so on. Surely when you're submitting a resumé—and resumé, one would expect, would be candid and frank—you've got everything—I can read your resumé out for the record if you want, but there's tremendous detail in there: responsibilities, all the various things that you did over the years, and I see no reference to Ornge and you say it was a Freudian slip that you left the reference to Ornge out. That strikes me as odd.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I'm sorry it does. There's no malice of intent. Obviously, the Ontario air ambulance program is Ornge; I just didn't use the word. Forgive me.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why do you say “Obviously, it was Ornge”?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, it's the Ontario air ambulance program, because Ornge was running it.

Mr. David Zimmer: But your paycheques were coming from Ornge.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why wouldn't you put in your resumé, “In 2004, I left this and I joined Ornge”? You told me in detail that your initial engagement with Ornge was not—

Mr. Fred Rusk: I guess I made an assumption that that would be understood. I put this together. I don't keep a resumé in my back pocket, so when I wrote it up the other day—

Mr. David Zimmer: How would anyone, from reading this resumé through, possibly know that you had worked at Ornge?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I guess you could ask me.

Mr. David Zimmer: I'm sorry?

Mr. Fred Rusk: You asked me, and I said yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why wouldn't you put it in your resumé, then?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I have no idea. I just didn't. I apologize if it caused you some concern.

Mr. David Zimmer: Have you submitted your resumé to other places where you might be interested in working or engaging in contract work or anything like that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. I did some work down in New Brunswick—

Mr. David Zimmer: After you left Ornge in 2009?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes. I started in about November 2009.

Mr. David Zimmer: When you started that, did you—

Mr. Fred Rusk: I guess I did. I don't have a copy of it. I'm sorry.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right, thank you. You had interaction with Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: How would you describe your experience, from your point of view, with Mazza? We've heard from other witnesses over the course of these hearings that they had difficult working relationships with Mazza.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I didn't. In fact, my recollection of Dr. Mazza was that he had helped our branch during the SARS crisis in the Ministry of Health. He was a dedicated physician. He was well-known for his tenacity in his defence of the paramedics. He was certainly—in my mind, I thought he was an outstanding physician at Sunnybrook. My experience with him at Ornge was that he was the CEO. There was a board. I didn't know any of the members of the board and—

Mr. David Zimmer: You've worked with—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're on your last minute, Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you consider him an exemplary and effective CEO?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes, I did.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. I guess we'll move to the opposition, then. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, Mr. Rusk, I have to say that I'm very disappointed that your recollection of your past experience as a very senior person with the emergency health services branch and Ontario's air ambulance service isn't a bit more crisp.

Mr. Fred Rusk: In what way?

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, I think you'll have an opportunity to read the Hansard transcript of the exchanges we're having here, and you yourself I think will empathize with us as members of this committee when you read that. We're asking you some very specific questions, and your recollection just isn't here. But I'm going to try one more time here.

I'm going to assume that all of the things that are on your resumé and everything that I've heard about you is true, and that is that you were an incredibly competent individual heading up a very important aspect of the emergency health services branch in our province, that you gave leadership to the air ambulance program and that you were viewed as someone who is competent and knowledgeable.

I'm going to ask you again about your involvement and your contribution to the discussion leading up to the transformation of our air ambulance system.

In response to my earlier question about what discussions or were you involved in any discussions about that consolidation track that the government was on, you said no. In response to questions from Ms. Jaczek, you did admit that in fact there were numerous discussions that took place in your capacity with the emergency health services branch, with groups of people who had concerns about certain aspects of the program and that there needed to be some streamlining, bringing—for example, to your point that you made—base hospitals together; that it was a fragmented system and so on. That was very much part of that discussion.

I'm told—and I'd like to know from you—that you had a fairly good relationship with Dr. Mazza and that you were actually an advocate for Dr. Mazza's plan within the Ministry of Health. Are you going to deny that? Because we've heard it from others. Were you ever, at any point in time, in discussions with people within the Ministry of Health, and did you, at any time, express your support for Dr. Mazza's plan of consolidation?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Consolidation of the base hospital programs? Is that what you mean?

Mr. Frank Klees: That was one aspect of it. Dr. Mazza's plan was to bring together the air ambulance program under one roof. That was his plan. That was the Mazza scheme. The base hospital was one aspect of it. The rest of it was as reflected in the performance agreement that was negotiated and would be the platform for the Mazza proposal.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I'm sorry that you have that opinion of me. I certainly wasn't involved in any performance agreement—

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me rephrase it. Did you, at any time, express any sense of support for Dr. Mazza's proposal for what his vision was for air ambulance service in the province of Ontario to anybody at any time in the Ministry of Health? We're under oath here and we're all listening. There are people who have come before you and there will be people who will be coming after. These are very simple questions.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Sir, I must have supported it somehow or disagreed with it. To tell you the truth, I really don't recall. It has been a while. I wasn't involved in the negotiations. I knew that in my last year, I guess, or six or seven months I was at the ministry, that this was going to happen. I may have been asked my opinion of it at the time. I didn't think much of it. I didn't think that it needed to be done. I was—

Mr. Frank Klees: Sir, let me remind you that you were asked your opinion and you did express your opinion.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Okay.

Mr. Frank Klees: And that opinion was that you were supportive—

Mr. Fred Rusk: I was what?

Mr. Frank Klees: —of what Dr. Mazza was proposing. But let's move on.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Excuse me; he didn't hear your response, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: You didn't hear my response?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No, sorry. It was reported? I'm sorry, I didn't hear what you said.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me remind you that you were asked your opinion of Dr. Mazza's proposal.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Okay.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you said that he was supportive.

Mr. Frank Klees: And when you were asked, you expressed your opinion that it was a good idea.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Who did I tell that to? Malcolm may have sat me down and said, "Listen: This is going to happen. What's your opinion of it?" I may have said—I know there—I mean, I even read it in the paper that Mel Springman objected to it for a litany of reasons. I don't recall what the reasons were. Believe me, I don't. But certainly at the time, I didn't see anything wrong with it. I mean, I thought that was the way the government wanted to go. They had downloaded the land ambulance service. Now they were taking the air ambulance program away from the ministry. I maybe would have been supportive so that I didn't feel like I was out in left field or something. I truly don't recall, and if you could show me who or what—

Mr. Frank Klees: We'll be hearing from Mr. Bates this afternoon.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I mean, I'm not trying to hide anything, believe me.

Mr. Frank Klees: I have to admit to you that I think a number of us around the table are drawing that conclusion. It's pretty hard not to.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I'm truly, truly sorry that you would draw that conclusion.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, maybe—you know, we've got a few minutes left. Maybe we can kind of get this back into focus. It's all in your hands as to whether or not we're going to leave this committee hearing with the impression that you were trying to hide something or that you were forthright, and you're willing to share some information.

I'd like to move forward. You retired from the public service, and you began to draw your retirement pension?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: And then you took a job with Ornge.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Okay.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay? And you started to get paid a pretty hefty sum when you started with Ornge. You were actually getting paid more by Ornge than you were getting paid when you left the public service. There's nothing wrong with that, right?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, I don't think I was, was I?

Mr. Frank Klees: Pardon?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I'd have to go back and look at my T4 slips, of course.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, I thought you had responded to say—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It looks like he took a salary cut.

Mr. Frank Klees: Oh, is that right? Well it was $125,000 here, and then $147,000 in 2003—

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: And then—

Mr. Fred Rusk: That was on account of—the Ministry of Health paid us overtime during the SARS crisis.

Mr. Frank Klees: That's right. That was a big year for everyone.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Truly.

Mr. Frank Klees: But you did relatively well. So your relationship with Dr. Mazza must have been fairly positive because he hired you into a very senior position; aviation safety manager is a very important role. I'm assuming that during that time you continued to have a positive relationship with Dr. Mazza. Is that right?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. The last time I saw him was maybe a week before I left Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. When you left Ornge, can you tell me what your severance package was?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Fifty-some-odd thousand dollars.

Mr. Frank Klees: Fifty thousand dollars?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Fifty-some-odd—$53,000 or $54,000.

Mr. Frank Klees: That's pretty substantial for someone to just resign. Why would you get paid $50,000 to retire?

Mr. Fred Rusk: When I retired, they offered me a part-time position to look after SMS, safety management systems. That's what I was doing before I left: to convince all the air operators to come together and have one over umbrella safety management system. So they offered me a part-time position to do that, and I said, "No, thank you. I'd rather take a severance than work part-time."

Mr. Frank Klees: But why would you get a severance? You'd only been there for three years—

Mr. Fred Rusk: Five years.

Mr. Frank Klees: Lord knows we have to work in this place for 20 years, and we don't get that much. You were there for three years; why would you get a severance of $50,000 to retire?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Because I was asked to retire.

Mr. Frank Klees: So it wasn't your choice to retire. You were essentially fired, is that right?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No, I wasn't fired. Well, I don't know. Do you call that a firing? I was told that my position had been made redundant, and I was offered the position to work part-time. I said no, I'll take the retirement, but I'll take a severance for retirement because in my mind it's wrongful dismissal.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can I ask you, when you were there in that very important capacity—by the way, I'm sure, although you're saying you're not very familiar with what's been taking place at Ornge, there are a lot of concerns about safety, a lot of concerns about incidents that involved patient deaths, that have put patients at risk. It all comes down to the issue of safety and competence of the entire operation. In the time that you were there, did anything at any time twig with you that something may be wrong with this organization, that it's not quite efficient, that calls are being missed, that complaints are coming in? Did any of that register on your radar?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, at the time I was there, the contracts were still operated by Canadian Helicopters and Voyageur Airways. I don't know when the 139s came into being, but it was certainly after I left. So the program was being run—the only fixed-wing program, once the contract ended with Voyageur and Ornge bought the Pilatus aircraft—I forget exactly; it was about the last year I was there, I think, because I was involved in the hiring of the pilots. That was probably one of my last duties when I was there, hiring pilots to fly the fixed-wing, but the bases hadn't started up yet. We were, I think, about six months in advance of hiring the pilots, four months in advance before the bases started.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'm afraid you're out of time, Mr. Klees. We shall move to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you. You were in charge of the safety management system while you were at Ornge, and that was at a time when the helicopters were being provided by Canadian Helicopters and Voyageur Airways, and at the tail end Ornge had purchased their own aircraft, the Pilatus, and you were also responsible for the health and safety, I want to say, but you use a different—occupational health and aviation safety for the new aircraft and for the people working on the new aircraft?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I'm hesitant because I don't know exactly when they started.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you see the new aircraft while you were at Ornge?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I saw them without the interiors in them before they were put into service, and I participated in the interior design for the patient side of things, but I've never seen one finished.

M^{me} France Gélinas: At the time—you were now working for Ornge—there were people, Malcolm Bates being one of them, at emergency health services at the ministry. Did the ministry oversee any of this? You used to be the overseer doing the annual inspection and visiting the different bases. Now that you were at the receiving end, did people from the ministry talk to you, come and inspect, do you what you used to do?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. I had no involvement with the ministry people.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No? Did anybody else at Ornge have any type of involvement with the ministry?

Mr. Fred Rusk: In what regard? As far as the aviation side of things go or—

M^{me} France Gélinas: As far as oversight.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, it certainly wasn't me, so I don't know who it would have been. Probably Steve Farquhar, Tom Lepine—truly, I really don't know.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But do you remember you told me that when you were at the ministry, every year you would go on-site and visit the different bases you had, and you told me you physically went? Some of them had problems, because the back of the helicopters were not clean because they used them. But didn't the ministry do the same thing: come and ask questions about something as important as safety?

Mr. Fred Rusk: They didn't ask me.

M^{me} France Gélinas: They didn't ask you.

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. The first year, I was the manager of safety. On the air side, coming into it, I went and visited every air base that was under contract, every provider. I sat down with them and met with them and I had a consultant with us to make sure that all the t's were crossed and i's were dotted. The Ministry of Natural Resources representative came with us as well. We did it over a period of two or three days.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, but then—

Mr. Fred Rusk: But nobody from the Ministry of Health. I think I've seen Malcolm three times since I left the ministry: once at a funeral, once at a retirement and I think at Chris Mazza's son's funeral.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Although you were the manager of occupational health and aviation safety, nobody from the government would ever ask you questions about occupational health and aviation safety?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No—well, except the Ministry of Natural Resources. Their lead person and I continued to work together, because I felt that there was still a responsibility to the Ministry of Natural Resources as far as—because they were the lead ministry for aviation, so I kept in contact with them constantly.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And who would—sorry.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What was your communication like with the Ministry of Natural Resources? Who did you speak with and how often?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, anything to do with pilot qualifications or aircraft equipment or whatever to do with the—his name was Ken Wong.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And how often did you meet with Ken Wong?

Mr. Fred Rusk: By phone, probably at least once a week.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Once a week. And then in person?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Maybe two or three times a year.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And this was for the entire five years that you were at—

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. No, because the first year I had nothing to do with—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Oh, that's right. The last three years, maybe?

Mr. Fred Rusk: For sure.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: The last three years, for sure.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes, and quite honestly, there was a bit of a quandary, even on his side, because he didn't quite understand—I mean, I went to him because I felt he was an expert in the aviation side of things.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Can I just pause you for one second? I just want to ask you—we'll come back to that in one second—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about two minutes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Did you hear of anyone else in the ministry—maybe you didn't deal with them directly, but did you hear about anyone from the ministry doing what you used to do: coming in to check on Ornge's delivery of patient care or delivery of the services, or checking on the aircraft?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I saw Malcolm Bates and I believe Dennis Brown come into the dispatch centre, and they had to kind of walk through our area. It was a cordial "Hello, how you doing?", a wave type of thing.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And when was that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Oh, brother.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Or how many times was that? Was that often? Did you see them regularly—

Mr. Fred Rusk: No, I only saw them once.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Only once.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Once in between 2004 and 2009? That was it? That was all?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Okay, I'm trying to be a little clearer than I guess I was earlier, but, I mean, if I say "once," it might have happened two or three times. You know, I really—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. But it was not a thorough check or inspection or—

Mr. Fred Rusk: No, no, it was just a pass-through.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —not to the extent that—when you went to the different bases, you asked questions, you looked. He didn't do any of that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I didn't see them do any of that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No.

Mr. Fred Rusk: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And if there had been questions about occupational health and aviation safety, would somebody else but you have been responsible to do that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. Well, the pilots themselves—but, I mean, no.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That was your responsibility.

Mr. Fred Rusk: And I dealt with Ken Wong.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you dealt with Ken Wong. Okay.

Mr. Fred Rusk: He's the aviation—I don't know what his title is, with the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Would you say that the oversight was not there, that there wasn't good ministry oversight while you were at Ornge?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, I'm tainted because of the newspaper articles. It's obvious that there wasn't.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: But in your personal experience, did you feel—compared to what you used to do, as someone who oversaw the emergency services, do you think that there was not the same oversight when Ornge came about?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I didn't have any reason to ask, quite frankly. I mean, I had left the Ministry of Health. I was doing what I thought was a good job at Ornge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who told you that you were redundant?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Rick Potter.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Rick Potter? Did he explain why, all of a sudden, health and aviation safety was redundant?

Mr. Fred Rusk: They had hired a chap from Air Canada who was more qualified than myself, I suspect.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Who was that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I don't know his name; I forget his name.

M^{me} France Gélinas: To do the same thing you were doing?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, I don't know what he's doing. I guess he's looking after SMS and system safety and that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You are out of time, so we'll move to the government. Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: How much time do I have, Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have 10 minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you know Jacob Blum?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I do know Jacob Blum.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you work with Jacob Blum?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I beg your pardon?

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you work with Jacob Blum?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. Well, he worked at Ornge and I worked at Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: And were the two of you in the so-called executive cadre, the executive suite—that sort of thing?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. I wasn't on the executive side.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was your working relationship with Blum?

Mr. Fred Rusk: He wasn't in my department. He worked in the executive area. He may have asked questions about: How did the ministry do this? How did the ministry do that? There may have been a couple of projects that he and I were involved with—not just the two of us but with other people. I can't recall exactly what it might have been, but it was probably some sort of operational issue that they asked me to partake in—but certainly not a working relationship, no.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you know who Tom Lepine is?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I certainly do.

Mr. David Zimmer: Mr. Lepine told us, when he gave his evidence, that the gossip around the Ornge place was that there was some illicit drug abuse going on, and he specifically referenced Mr. Blum in that regard.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I read that.

Mr. David Zimmer: What's your reaction to that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I was stunned. I was surprised.

Mr. David Zimmer: That's the first you became aware of it?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Absolutely.

Mr. David Zimmer: And no knowledge of illicit drugs, cocaine, anything like that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No, I—totally surprised.

Mr. David Zimmer: In your working relationship with Mr. Blum, to the extent that you interacted with him on a professional or management basis, what was your opinion of his management style?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I don't think he managed anybody, quite frankly.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was your opinion of his—

Mr. Fred Rusk: He was kind of the adviser, I suppose—

Mr. David Zimmer: Adviser to?

Mr. Fred Rusk: To the senior group, I suspect. I probably did know his position, but I don't recall what his position was now.

Mr. David Zimmer: You used the expression in an answer to a line of questioning from Mr. Klees about the events surrounding when you left Ornge, that you were offered a retirement gratuity rather than a part-time job that they wanted you to take, and redundancy—finally you used the expression that you viewed your departure as a wrongful dismissal.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, that's what I told them.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why were you of the view that your departure amounted to a wrongful dismissal?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Because I didn't want to retire at the time.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why did they want you to retire?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Because I was 65 and I guess they thought I had to retire. I didn't think I had to.

Mr. David Zimmer: But these are the same people who in effect offered you a contract for a year or so with Ornge and then took the initiative to move you from a contract basis to permanent employee and gave you serious responsibilities—aviation safety and all that.

What happened that made them decide it was time for you to get out? Something must have triggered that and something must have triggered your thought that that amounted to a wrongful dismissal.

Mr. Fred Rusk: It took me by surprise, quite honestly. I was hoping I could still do some work and be part of the air program. So when I gave it some thought, I just basically said, "What you're doing is pushing me out, and you can't do that." At least I thought they couldn't. And so—

Mr. David Zimmer: What, in your view, triggered it? You started off with what seemed to be a pretty good relationship with Dr. Mazza. You described him as an exemplary and an effective CEO and you said you were quite taken with what he wanted to do on the air ambulance and at Ornge, and then somehow the relationship soured and they wanted you out. What's your theory? What went on there?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I have no idea.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I think they—

Mr. David Zimmer: All right, I'm—

Mr. Fred Rusk: Let me answer that. I think I might—

Mr. David Zimmer: Sure. Go ahead.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I think they were looking for someone who was a professional in the aviation business. They weren't looking for somebody who had historical value because I think they had passed that, quite frankly, and I think when they started bringing in people at the time in the aviation department, these were people that were involved in the aviation industry. I suspect that they felt my time was due, I guess.

Mr. David Zimmer: When you say "they," I gather the effective decision-maker on that was Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, I dealt with the human resources people, and I'm sure Dr. Mazza was involved with that.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes, because we've heard Dr. Mazza was very much a hands-on guy. I listen to your answers now and I detect a certain frustration or disappointment—indeed, anger—at how the Mazza organization treated you.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, up until that point, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: In my earlier round of questions, however, you did describe Mazza as an exemplary and effective CEO. I'm having trouble juggling these two views. On the one hand, you said, "They pushed me out"—

Mr. Fred Rusk: I can understand that, now that I've read the newspapers—

Mr. David Zimmer: "I felt I was wrongfully dismissed." Mazza was, in effect, the guy behind all of that, and then on the other hand you say, "Well, no, he was an exemplary and effective CEO." I'm having trouble reconciling your view of your relationship with Mazza and your view of Mazza's skills and defects. Help me sort that out in my mind. You're all over the map on this.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Well, it's very difficult, you know, to—he was a physician. I've always looked up to physicians in my career. He presented well. He came in to help the ministry during the SARS crisis. He even helped after the 9/11 issue. He was front and centre and ready to go to help in the United States as backup to their system going to New York. I saw a lot of the good things; I'm sorry. But you've had the benefit of listening to an awful lot of people, and I've had the misfortune, I guess, to read about it in the newspaper where I'm sure it's slanted some way. It's a little bit, but—

Mr. David Zimmer: I come back to my last question again: Ornge, over a period of five years from 2004 to 2009, was a big event in your life, and yet in this detailed resumé, no reference to Ornge.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Actually, I said this to Mr. Klees when he phoned me last week, that I'm embarrassed to—

Mr. David Zimmer: Why are you embarrassed? I'm not saying you've—

Mr. Fred Rusk: Because of this. Because of the reputation that I think I have with the private ambulance operators, the air ambulance—

Mr. David Zimmer: If you were applying for another job tomorrow in answer to an ad for someone with your skill set, would you tell them in your resumé about your Ornge connection?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Certainly I would. I'd play it down, believe me. I think I have a lot more—

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you. My colleague wants to have a few minutes.

Mr. Fred Rusk: That may put me in a bad light with you folks, but I was there trying to do the best I could and working with the people there. The people that are still there, the worker bees, as I call them, are good people, and they do good work every day. To read about it in the newspapers—believe me when I say I don't like reading about it. As I said to Mr. Klees, I'm truly embarrassed that I was there. I just truly hope—and this will come at the end of all this, I suspect—that it will be back up on the same level as it was when I knew it. Like I think Mr. Klees said, the father of it—well, I don't consider myself the father of it, but I was certainly instrumental in the starting of the program back then. It has come such a long way, and to have it dragged through the mud because of this one person—and maybe many others, I don't know, but certainly this one person—it's hurtful, to tell you the truth.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mrs. Sandals, if you want a couple of minutes, you can go ahead.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I wonder if we could quickly go back to the time when you were with the ministry. You talked about the base hospital program. As the manager of air ambulance, did you have responsibility for the base hospitals?

Mr. Fred Rusk: For the air base hospitals, yes. When you say "responsibility," not the day-to-day operation of it. It was a funding issue with the hospital that they worked for.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you would have had involvement with the budget and engaging the base hospitals?

Mr. Fred Rusk: I was.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. I also want to recall a comment you made—

Interjection.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Something just occurred to me. You said you were talking to Mr. Klees last week. Could you tell us about that?

Mr. Fred Rusk: Certainly. He just gave me a phone call and asked if me if I'd accept an invitation to attend this committee meeting. I said, "Well, I'd be happy to help in any way I can. I don't know whether or not I can"—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because normally it's the clerk who engages you to appear. So was this sort of a pre-interview to find out what you might have to say?

Mr. Fred Rusk: No. He didn't ask me any questions like that. He just wanted to know if I'd be willing to accept an invitation.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But you got into a discussion of your feelings about Ornge.

Mr. Fred Rusk: I told him that I was—I think I might have said I was embarrassed because of the goings-on.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you are out of time.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I think it is important to clarify this. The clerk had advised us that he did not have contact information for Mr. Rusk. I believe that message went around to all the committee members. We took it upon ourselves to do some research. We located the contact information for Mr. Rusk. I gave Mr. Rusk a phone call in the interest of assisting the committee.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Thank you very much, Mr. Rusk, for coming in this morning.

Mr. Fred Rusk: You're more than welcome. I would just like to say one final thing.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead.

Mr. Fred Rusk: Please don't misconstrue anything I've said in the sense that I'm trying to hide something. I never have, in my 40-some-odd years working in this business, if you want to call it that. If it's something that I've left out, it's only because I certainly don't recall it. It's been nine years since I left the Ministry of Health. Honestly, I've never been back. It's been four years, three years, since I left Ornge, and I've never been back. I still get a lot of phone calls from the private air ambulance operators asking me if I'd be interested in coming back and working with the air ambulance program again. I'm 68 years old. I think it's time for me to do some other things.

I'm happy to help. I've done a lot of—I call it pro bono work, with some other ambulance services, some software companies that are interested in making electronic charting for the air programs. I still attend the conferences that happen in the United States. It was my life, and I was very privileged to take part in it, as well as being in charge of the health needs for all the heads of state and internationally protected persons for 19 years.

I've worked with the RCMP and the OPP and with crown attorneys during my career. I'm always surprised—truly, I'm always surprised—when something goes amiss. I have a high trust relationship with a lot of people in the ambulance industry in this province, and I know that bad things can happen.

I'm just saying this from the bottom of my heart: Just make sure, whatever you do and whoever does it, that you retain the air program in this province. There are so many whose lives have been saved and whose lives have been affected by the people who work on these air ambulances. It goes without saying that I'm sure that will be your conclusion in the end, because there have been a lot of changes, obviously, in the last six months.

Thank you very much, Mr. Klees and this committee, for inviting me here today. I'm happy to be here.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for coming.

For the committee, we're recessed until this afternoon.

The committee recessed from 1026 to 1232.

MINISTRY OF HEALTH AND LONG-TERM CARE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I call this meeting to order. Welcome back, Mr. Malcolm Bates. You've been before the committee before, so I don't believe we need to do an oath again, because you've already done one.

Did you have an opening statement you wanted to make, or did you want to—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes, I do.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, go ahead, then, with your opening statement, Mr. Bates.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Thank you very much. I think it's being distributed.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, great. Are you now retired? I remember the last time you were here, you were getting close to it.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, Jim and I—I told Jim five years ago I would be retired by this point and I would never see him again. I hope sincerely that I can keep that promise this time.

Laughter.

Mr. Jim McCarter: When are you going, Mr. Bates?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, if it were not for this particular event, if we want to call it an event, I would be gone by now. I'm a little past the due date, or stale date, whatever it is.

Anyway, good afternoon, everyone. My name is Malcolm Bates. I'm the director of the emergency health services branch of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care. Thank you for this second opportunity to address the Standing Committee on Public Accounts with respect to the Auditor General's report into the Ornge air ambulance service. Today, I'll focus my remarks on ministry investigations into air ambulance and related services, that being Ornge.

At the outset, I think it would be helpful for me to outline the ministry's complaints process. The services provided by land and air ambulance operators generate a number of complaints or concerns each year. For land ambulance operators, most are handled directly by the ambulance services themselves; those are primarily municipalities, of course. All complaints regarding Ornge now must be reported to the ministry.

The branch receives complaints or inquiries from a variety of internal and external sources: through the ministry itself, municipal representatives, managers or directors of emergency medical services, dispatch centres, Ornge, as well as through patients, their families, the local or regional coroner, police services and legal representatives.

Complaints are conveyed to the ministry's emergency health services branch, which conducts an investigation into each complaint and reports the findings to the complainant as well as to the relevant ambulance service.

The branch currently has a number of ongoing investigations—approximately 50—related to incidents concerning Ornge's response to various patients requiring air ambulance service across the province.

Now, each investigation typically takes many weeks to complete. These investigations reflect a variety of concerns. They range from the standard of medical care to Ornge's responsiveness to requests for air ambulance service.

As I'm sure you can appreciate, we should be cautious about discussing any specifics related to individual patients whose privacy and personal health information is protected under Ontario's Personal Health Information Protection Act.

I should point out that the ministry's process allows for some of these complaints to be forwarded to the service operator to conduct its own internal investigation and then report to the complainant. As of mid-May 2012, the branch's investigation services had not, however, redirected any complaint to Ornge for its own internal investigation. Any internal investigations that had been undertaken by Ornge would have been in response to complaints it received directly.

In terms of the process in relation to the Office of the Chief Coroner, section 10 of the Coroners Act requires that the coroner be notified if an investigation involves a deceased patient whose manner of death meets legislated criteria. The decision whether to conduct an inquest rests with the coroner's office.

So that's the process of investigations.

The purpose of an investigation is to determine whether there had been any contraventions of the Ambulance Act, its regulations or the standards made under that act; to work with the operator of the ambulance service in question to identify issues which require remediation; and to follow up with the operator with respect to the actions that have been taken to avoid future re-occurrences of identified problems.

It's important to note that the branch does not conduct investigations into matters covered by any other provincial or federal legislation, nor does it determine the cause of injury or death, nor does it delve into the actions of other agencies, such as fire and police.

Thank you again for this opportunity to outline the ministry's complaints process with respect to air and land ambulance services. Now I invite your questions.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The NDP will go first this time. Who would like to go first? Mr. Singh?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have 20 minutes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you so much.

Mr. Bates, we heard some testimony today from an individual who also worked at—you're nodding your head. You know who I'm talking about.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I do.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: If you could just explain to me the process underneath the original Ontario Air Ambulance in terms of what the ministry did for oversight and how that differed with the development of Ornge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: All right. Well, prior to Ornge assuming responsibility—and I think I pointed this out the last time we were at this particular session—the ministry basically had full responsibility for the provision of air ambulance services in the province. That was accomplished in a number of ways, one of which is, it had a small administrative group, called the air ambulance unit. It had contracts with two dedicated carriers, Canadian Helicopters and Voyageur Airlines. It utilized standing agreement operators, primarily in the north, to provide service whenever necessary. A dispatch centre, communications centre, was operated directly by the ministry. So we had fairly good, if not excellent, information over what was taking place in the system.

We also had investigative activities that we conducted. We had, I believe, four investigators and a manager who conducted investigations whenever necessary. Service visits were conducted as opportunities permitted throughout the province, and at various times there was—I think Fred mentioned this morning that Mr. Brown was manager of air ambulance, so he had a very good background. We also utilized the Ministry of Natural Resources from an aviation perspective to—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Mr. Bates, I'm sure there are a number of other things. Now if you could just contrast that. When the Ontario Air Ambulance transitioned into what we now call Ornge—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: —what was the ministry's oversight process then?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, let me go back, if you will, a few years, to about 2000, I believe it was. At that time, the regulation under the Ambulance Act included substantial requirements for the air ambulance services and for air operators. At that time, the Red Tape Commission decided that it would in fact look into the standards provided under the regulation, and significant and substantial changes occurred to the regulation at that particular point in time as a result.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That was in 2000?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: 2000, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Let me just pause you there. We can come back to that in a minute, Mr. Bates. If you could just tell me about Ornge, though: When Ornge came into effect, what was the ministry doing in terms of oversight? You just listed a number of things that you did under the air ambulance, but when Ornge came into effect, what was different there? Did the ministry do regular visits?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I was going to say that what changed as a result of the Red Tape Commission was that it went from a licensing situation to a periodic certification situation. I think I explained certification at some length previously. Operators are certified according to the air ambulance certification standards, every three years—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Right. We're familiar with this.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Pardon me?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: We're familiar with the certification. So what did the ministry do in terms of overseeing Ornge—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That is part of a certification. It's part of the oversight—a very important part of the oversight.

The air ambulance unit was disbanded when Ornge assumed responsibility for it, because as you recall, the Provincial Auditor, the Auditor General, said that the performance agreement gave Ornge responsibility for making all key operating decisions, including how to provide service, how many and what type of aircraft, how to establish and evaluate medical oversight, when to dispatch ambulances and which paramedics—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: We can read it, I'm sure.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: So oversight was changed radically. We did investigations of complaints, we did certification, and of course we reviewed financial information provided to us.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. How often, in terms of going from being very heavily involved—obviously, it was directly linked to the ministry, so you would attend and visit the different air bases across the province. What happened in terms of the actual—were there regular visits at Ornge facilities or air bases? Was there regular inspection of the aircraft that were being used? Were those types of steps taken?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's what I was endeavouring to say. Certification came in, and it changed things. It became a three-year periodic review of what was taking—including exactly what you just mentioned.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So those things wouldn't happen on a regular basis; they would happen every three years.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes, other than a few unannounced inspections and certainly a number of investigations that took place in which we reviewed all aspects according to whatever transpired under that investigation.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. And how many unannounced visits did you have, that you conducted? Mr. Rusk indicated at least one time that he remembered seeing you come by.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No. I think, sir, you're confusing—an unannounced visit, an inspection, is when a member of emergency health services' certification team or a manager visits an air ambulance base, if you will, under Ornge's jurisdiction.

What Mr. Rusk was referring to—and I paid very special attention to Mr. Rusk this morning—was in fact the normal sort of exchange of visits and discussions between the administration, the executives of Ornge, and emergency health services.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you for clarifying that. I actually was confused. But then how many times were there these random inspections? How many times were there unannounced inspections? How many times did that happen?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It's not possible to do a lot of unannounced inspections because of the constraints. Let me just tell you what happens.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: It's okay. I'm just wondering, can you say roughly how many times in a month or in a year they would have occurred—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: They've done 10 in the last year.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Ten in the last year?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: How many in the years before that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Very few. In fact, they were not recorded prior to that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: They were not recorded. So from, let's say, 2004 to 2005, would there be—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I can tell you exactly how many investigations there were. There were 105 Ornge investigations from 2007 to 2011.

M^{me} France G  linas: He's talking about complaint investigations.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Right. Not complaint investigations—I'm talking about the unannounced visits. You said there were 10 of them in the last year. How many of them were there from 2004 to 2005?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: There were very few. They were not recorded. I do not have the number.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay, very few. Would it be possible that there were none in that one year?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It's possible—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And 2005 to 2006—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: —but the fact of the matter is that a number of us would go to Ornge; we'd go to the dispatch centre, for instance. You could say that was an unannounced visit sort of thing, because they didn't know we were coming—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: But it wasn't an exhaustive actual—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, no.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So, 2005 to 2006, would there have been any? Do you recall?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I don't believe so.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay, and then 2007 to 2008—would there have been any?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: As I say, I don't know. I don't think so. I don't believe so. He didn't report it.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's fine.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It was a—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I'm just pinpointing when the 10 were. It wasn't in 2009-10, either? It would have been in 2011.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes. It's basically as a result of the good work of the Auditor General pointing out the need for unannounced visits.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So before the Auditor General's pointing it out, unannounced visits essentially weren't really done?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: They were conducted in the land service, primarily.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And not in the air ambulance service?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Not in the air.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. M^{me} G  linas.

M^{me} France G  linas: Why would that be? Why is it that we continue to do unannounced visits on the land ambulance—I'm guessing because they added value if you kept on doing them—but the same was not done for air?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, as I said, it was a result of what the Auditor General pointed out to us. We started with the land services, because at the time we felt those were more important; they are the predominant number of services that we have, sort of thing. So, in about 2008, we started unannounced inspections in that particular area and worked from there to unannounced in air.

The problem with air, as I was going to point out to you—land services are easy to do unannounced inspections on, because you go to a base and normally there's an ambulance in the base, all right? You go to an air base, but chances are good, because there's usually only one aircraft at that particular base, that it could be gone. You've now wasted your resources—the funding to go there, the cost to go there to do an unannounced inspection. So I directed that we would do unannounced inspections only when individuals from the certification unit or the investigation unit happened to be in the area. We don't have significant enough resources to do a lot of these. We have to be very economical as to how we do these—

M^{me} France G  linas: So that was a conscious decision?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Absolutely.

M^{me} France G  linas: And when did you make the decision that you would only go to unannounced visits to the air ambulance?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: In 2011. Before that, it wasn't productive, if you want to call it that, to do that because the aircraft are out; the paramedics are out. To be frank, we had no indication that there was any difficulty. Every indication we had was that the air ambulance service was, in fact, working efficiently.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just to clarify, Mr. Bates, in 2011 when you did the 10 investigations, nothing significant changed in terms of the funding, in terms of the availability of resources? It was the same as before, right?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It was the same as before, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So the same way you were able to do 10 in 2011—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Sorry, 2011-12.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: —2011-12, you could have done those in any prior year as well?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: We could have.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I just wanted to switch gears a bit and ask you about Mr. Apps and Don Guy. Have you had any meetings or any calls with either of them?

M^{me} France G  linas: We'll go to his question in one minute.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Sure.

M^{me} France G  linas: You made a conscious decision. You felt that everything was going good at Ornge; therefore you wouldn't use resources to do unannounced visits until after the good work of our auditor, who pointed the way, and then you started doing them. I want you to look back and think. If you had been doing those, do you figure you would have picked up on anything?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I don't think we would have picked up very much. I'll tell you why. We were doing investigation reports, and whenever there was a problem that came to our attention, the investigators would, in fact, conduct the investigation and bring that forward.

M^{me} France G  linas: Since 2011, when you did 10 unannounced visits, what have you worked on?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: What have we worked on, or what has changed?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Well, let's start with you have done 10. I'm guessing that if you kept going back it's because—the auditor didn't tell you to go there every month; the auditor just told you that this is one tool that you should be considering. The fact that you took it from zero to 10 in one year: Well, it's my assumption that you kept on going because there was a reason to go.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No. There was a reason, of course, but the reason was that the Auditor General recommended that we do that, and we follow what the Auditor General recommends to us very closely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So why 10 in a year? Why not three?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It's only because if someone happened to be in the area—I asked that we conduct these unannounced inspections as part of a continuing process of unannounced inspections with land as a result of what the Auditor General recommended. In fact, that's what we did. As part of it, we would go forward and when, in fact, someone was in the area, they would conduct—for instance, my senior manager of operations was in Sudbury a month ago. I said, "Please do an unannounced inspection at the Sudbury base." And that was done.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And did anything come of those 10 that you have done in 2011-12?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I think that part of it—and I believe that this was mentioned in the newspaper—there was one particular one that revealed that there was no staffing at the London air ambulance base. There was one, in particular, at Timmins, that showed there was down-staffing. The rest of them basically said that the staff were in place when, in fact, the equipment was there, and the equipment was clean.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And do you have a format that you follow for those unannounced inspections?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: We do.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And when was that format developed?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It was developed in 2008 for the land services and carried over for the air. They're basically a similar format, because you're looking at: Is a vehicle—whether it be air or land—clean? Is the equipment there? Is the staff there? Is the base secure? A number of things like that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So the tool to do this was developed to do the land ambulance. You started using it in 2008, and then you started using that same tool in 2011. So far, out of the 10 that you have done, two have brought back issues—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —mainly staffing issues—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Exactly.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —and the other eight brought back nothing?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, it's not nothing. They indicated that, in fact, the staff was there that was required, if indeed the helicopter was there. If the helicopter or the fixed-wing was out of base, then they simply determined that, and said the aircraft was gone. We couldn't do the type of analysis that we normally like to do.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Out of the 10, would you know how many times the investigated report came back to, "We couldn't. They were not there"?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I know that when my manager went to Sudbury that was the case, but I don't know of the other ones.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So one out of the 10 was not there; the other nine, they were there, and two of them—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, I can't say that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You just know for a fact that in one, they were not there.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes. But I assume that in other instances the same was the case.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So I just asked you: If we had been doing those, do you figure it would have brought something forward? You said that you don't think so. But we've done 10 now, and on two of those 10 there were staffing issues. Wouldn't it be reasonable to think that you would have picked up on staffing issues had you started doing them in 2008 or any time before?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: From time to time I suppose that could happen, but the fact of the matter is, we watched what was happening in air ambulance through the investigation side of things, and we saw no indication prior to 2011 that there were staffing issues.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you had no idea that there could have been staffing issues? You had no idea that there could have been any issues going on?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Normally when something like that happens, and the aircraft can't respond, something takes place in the sense that it's normally a complaint from somewhere to let us know—

M^{me} France Gélinas: So this sense of security came from: If something goes wrong, somebody will complain, therefore we will know; there was no complaint coming forward, so you felt pretty secure that things were going well?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, we looked at the number of investigations versus the number of calls. The trend was not out of line, as I said. We were not getting a number of complaints about how Ornge was performing. We were assured, on numerous occasions, by Ornge that they were staffing properly. I have documentation from the chairperson, for instance, that they're totally staffing according to what they're supposed to be staffing.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But we've heard from other witnesses that complaints did go to you. I will take Jacob Blum. He came and said that he had weekly meetings with the ministry, and when he decided to leave Ornge, he was distressed about what was going on, and he went to the ministry and complained. If you base your assessment that all is good because there's no complaint, then there's something that doesn't work, because a number of witnesses have come to us to say that they went to the ministry and they did put in complaints about Ornge. How do you—it doesn't work for me here.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I think, number one, you have to look at the time element. The complaints that started coming in were in 2011, primarily. Jacob Blum left in July 2008. With respect to his contention that he met weekly with us—he certainly was not in operations, in any case. Jacob had nothing to do with operations. His contention that he met with us every week—he certainly didn't meet with myself, because I did not meet with Jacob more than once or twice over the period of time that he was with Ornge. He met with—and I went back after I heard that testimony and spoke to Dennis Brown, who was our manager at that particular time, who was in charge of all contact with Ornge other than financial. He indicated that, yes, he met with Jacob several times a week when the performance agreement was being negotiated. He met with him from time to time when the transfer of staff was taking place. Thereafter, he met with him maybe once a month. So as far as what Jacob said goes, I think I have to take exception to that. It was—

M^{me} France Gélinas: So are you telling us that you never heard any complaints from Ornge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: From Ornge itself?

M^{me} France Gélinas: From what was going on at Ornge. Nobody ever went to the ministry to say, "Listen, I have problems with what's going on at Ornge"?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I'm saying to you, in 2011, all right—

M^{me} France Gélinas: When in 2011?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: July 2011, we received—

M^{me} France Gélinas: And who was that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I don't know; It was an anonymous letter.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You've used your 20 minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move on to the government. Ms. Sandals?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, Thank you very much, and good afternoon again, Mr. Bates. Let's just carry on with the discussion that you were just having with Ms. Gélinas about the frequency of meetings between the ministry and between Ornge. We've had a number of witnesses who have testified that Ornge met regularly, or Ornge met weekly, and you just cited Mr. Blum. Some say quarterly; some say regularly. But the comment has been that the ministry was kept fully informed about everything that was going on at Ornge and that that included being fully informed about what was happening at the for-profits. Do you generally accept that testimony? From your point of view, how frequent were the meetings and how fully were you informed?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It's true that we met with Ornge fairly frequently, because it's required under the transfer payment accountability directive. That's a necessity for us: to meet with our stakeholders. So certainly we met with Ornge.

We developed quarterly meetings after an audit report that was conducted called the Meyers Norris Penny audit. They recommended quarterly meetings, so we set up formal quarterly meetings with Ornge in 2009. There was a number of informal meetings, if you will, primarily through Dennis Brown at that particular point in time.

They kept us informed about a number of things. They kept us informed about what they were planning on doing in the future; they certainly did. We knew from 2003 that they were interested in revenue generation. That was part of their plan in 2003. They kept us informed through the various requirements in their performance agreements, and they provided a five-year plan to us. They told us, again—I think it was in 2008 that they told us that they were intending to purchase aircraft. They told us that they were becoming more interested in generating revenue through various means and methodologies. They did not tell us at that time about the complex group of companies that they were going to set up.

Did they tell us things like that MBAs and purchasing of waffles in Belgium and Brussels? No, they didn't tell us that. Did they tell us about million-dollar salaries? No, they didn't tell us about that. A number of things they did not tell us. Did they tell us about the interior of the aircraft having problems? No, they didn't tell us about that. So there were a number of things that they neglected to tell us.

They changed staff in finance, for instance, very regularly, so we had great difficulty in getting information out of them. The same as the Auditor General had difficulty in getting information, we had difficulty over the years getting information from Ornge about the financial side of things.

So yes, there were meetings, and some of them were formal; there were some informal conversations and dialogues, and that's valid.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So, generally then, I guess as you look back, what were your oversight possibilities at that point and where were there gaps? Understanding that hindsight is wonderful, but as you think back about what you were told and what you weren't told, what were the big missing bits and how did your existing accountability powers allow you or not allow you to address that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, as I indicated earlier with respect to changes to the regulation and as a result of the red tape efforts, there was a major change in the regulation that in fact I felt—and if you'll allow me to read it to you. Is that permissible?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. I was actually going to ask you to explain that because you referenced that, so I think it would be helpful for us to know the difference between licensing requirements and certification requirements.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I'll start with what was deleted from the regulation in, I believe, 2000, in particular, air. Here are some of the aspects. "Where an applicable enterprise receives funds" from the province of Ontario “for the purposes of the enterprise, it shall use such funds only for such purposes.”

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So this is the old licensing requirement—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: This is the old one. Okay?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —or the old rules—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, no. Sorry. This is the financial requirement I’m giving you right now. Okay?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, but this was prior to the Red Tape Commission intervening?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That’s right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: This is what was in effect in 1997; regulation 501 in 1997. Okay?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It goes on to say that where the province of Ontario provides funds to “an applicable enterprise or to an air ambulance service and directs that such funds shall be used for a particular purpose, the person who operates the enterprise or service shall use such funds only for the purpose so specified.”

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And that got deleted?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That got deleted.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Wow.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: The next one is where the province of Ontario provides “equipment, supplies or other tangible property ... to an applicable enterprise or to an air ambulance service, the person who operates the enterprise or service shall use such property only for purposes directly related to the enterprise or service unless a director has approved some other disposition of the property.”

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And you would have been the director?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, not in 1997.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Well, okay, sorry. The person who occupied your position.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That’s right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: And there’s another one which is—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So, if I can just understand the implication of that, when we had, then, Ornge eventually going out and purchasing aircraft, this business of what appears to be purchasing surplus aircraft for the purpose of international revenue, you, under the old reg, would have had the power to veto that, but you lost that power?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I believe that. It would require a legal interpretation, but from my perspective I think you’re right.

The next one that was deleted was, “Where funds provided” by the province of Ontario “are used by an applicable enterprise or an air ambulance service to acquire equipment, supplies or any other tangible property, the person who operates the enterprise or service shall use the acquired property only for purposes directly related to the enterprise or service, unless a director has approved some other disposition of the property.”

I think those are very important parts of the regulation that were deleted.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So those were all deleted about 2000?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That’s right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So, prior to that, the regulation would have given you much more power to intervene in what was happening?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Precisely. If I could quote from Mr. Frank Sheehan, the chairman of the commission, “The commission recognizes a need to set provincial standards to protect public health and safety. We are not questioning the need for standards. We’re simply questioning the need to manage the process in such a detailed fashion.” I think that’s very important too, because that’s what required the regulation to be changed.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But it seems to me, from what I am hearing, that even if the intent was not to be overly prescriptive, the practical implication was that you lost a lot of authority to make sure that provincial assets and provincial funds were being appropriately deployed.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That is my belief.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. That’s very helpful. If we can follow along, then, were there any other things that were deleted by the Red Tape Commission?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: The licensing, as I say, was a constant, if you will.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: There had to be a licence to operate an air ambulance service. That was changed to a periodic certification process.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In going from licensing to certification, was there a different level of rigour involved in licensing versus certification?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I’m not sure I could say that, okay? But as far as the legal aspects of it go, I think it’s important to recognize that it went from a consistent, full-time sort of situation to a periodic situation.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: How often was the licensing?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: The licensing was constant, in the sense that they possessed a licence and unless it was revoked, they carried on.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Am I interpreting you correctly—because I don’t want to misunderstand—that if somebody had a licence and abused it, you would have had the authority to immediately revoke it?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: If somebody had certification, it wasn’t until you recertified three years later that you had any opportunity to step in.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That’s right. And I think the word “opportunity” is a good word, in the sense that when it’s in regulation, you have an opportunity.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, that’s very helpful, because I don’t think anybody has really explained that to us before.

A few of the other comments that you made a few minutes ago around processes here: I take it that, for the most part, the rules you’re talking about here apply essentially to both land ambulances and air ambulances. The inspection rules are the same rules.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You mentioned that you started doing unannounced inspections of land ambulances in 2008. There were, prior to that, no unannounced inspections of any sort of ambulance. Is that correct?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, other than the fact that—it wasn't formally called that, all right?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: There were service visits. But in order to accomplish what the Auditor General wanted, and that was to call it unannounced and to carry on as unannounced, that's what we incorporated.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The procedure that was put in place in 2008, in fact, came out of the auditor's prior reports, for which you've been at this committee before—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes, that's right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —and that led you to hope you never saw him again?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, no; it's not Jim.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Sorry about that.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I would never say that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I'm sorry. I'm teasing.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I know.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I shouldn't be teasing, because this is serious. My apologies.

Can we talk a little bit about the complaint process that is attached to all this investigation? Can you tell us, regardless of whether it's a land ambulance complaint or an air ambulance complaint, what is triggered once you get that complaint?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, a file is opened by our investigation section. Then what takes place is, as I say, a lengthy process in terms of gathering the information. Every ambulance call is taped, so you have access to that verbal information, the voice information. That's gathered together with the ambulance call records in advance by the investigator. Normally, they call the operator and say, "Please send this information to us." They do that. The investigator starts sorting through what the actual situation was. The investigator then would normally go and interview whoever was on the call, for instance, and any complainant with respect to what took place. We'll then make observations and commit that to a report that will be presented to the manager of investigations and subsequently to the—and go back. Normally, they also go back to the operator to say, "This is what we found."

Then a situation will be followed up after a report is sent to the complainant and after the operator is informed as to what the actual problems were, if any. Sometimes the investigator simply says everything was fine. But in some instances, there are problems. A paramedic may make a mistake or contravene a standard. Remember, we're looking at whether there was a contravention of the act or any standard, as far as investigations go.

Then we'll follow up with the operator to ensure that remediation takes place. If it's a paramedic who needs remediation, and depending upon the severity of what the paramedic did, he or she can either be remediated locally and we're told what happens, or he can be brought before a committee, a quality committee, as we call it, to determine from his peers and the base hospital if indeed they're going to recommend to me that that particular paramedic should rewrite the examination to be a paramedic.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Those outcomes that you've described there would be when you found a problem with the actions of an individual.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What would be the possible outcomes if the problem was related to a flaw on behalf of the service provider, be it land or air ambulance?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes. Of course, that happens. The discussion would take place. If it's a land service, it's the field manager in the local area that talks to the operator, to determine what needs to be done. If it's Ornge, it's a manager that we have under the senior manager, operations, that follows up with Ornge, to determine what the changes are and what needs to be done and whether or not they've actually followed up.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You mentioned earlier in your remarks that in some circumstances, the file might be turned over to the coroner, and there are legislated requirements for that. Could you briefly give us a sense of the legislative bar for turning it over to the coroner?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, under the Coroners Act, I think it's section 10, it lists a number of situations—an unexpected death, for instance, is one. Our manager of investigations would determine if that's the case, particularly with respect to a deceased patient, and we'll notify the coroner that he is conducting an investigation. Then the coroner will make a decision as to whether or not he wants a copy of the report. If he does want a copy of the report, it's sent to the coroner. The coroner then determines what action he will take.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it's up to the coroner at that point, as in any coroner's situation, whether the coroner moves in to a full-scale inquiry, or what follow-up the coroner does.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Exactly—whether there's an inquest that will follow. That's right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In your experience, when you do turn the information over, have there been occasions—either land or air, does the coroner frequently then go on to investigate further, or does the coroner tend to review the file and say, "No, this doesn't warrant further"—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I don't know if you could call it "frequently," but it does happen that the coroner will utilize, and frequently does utilize, our investigation report to determine whether or not he wants to conduct an inquest, and will talk to our manager of investigation. But it's not a frequent situation that inquests are called with respect to ambulance services in the province.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, thank you for that. Now, I wanted to ask you about a couple of issues that there has been some public discussion of. Mr. Klees had brought up a question in the House on Monday about you wanting to issue a directive to Ornge, and Mr. Klees said that your ADM told you not to do this. In fact, I believe we've passed another motion here today looking for production of emails and things that might substantiate this or not. But do you have any idea what this is referring to, and can you give some clarity to what is happening here?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Absolutely.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes left in this—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Just by way of background, the Auditor General—and we thank the Auditor General—pointed out in his report that there were some significant adverse events that had transpired at Ornge and that possibly the Ministry of Health was not informed of those. Indeed, that was the case when we followed up with Ornge. We went through all of the situations that the Auditor General had listed, and determined that I believe there were at least three, maybe four situations in which we should have been notified and we should have been in a position of investigating. So we initiated investigations on those, plus there were a number of other investigations initiated. As I mentioned before, there are 50 now outstanding with Ornge. That's a substantial number.

A number of other complaints started coming in as a result of the media coverage and we had to investigate, so we initiated investigations on a number of those types of situations.

I met with staff from Ornge on April 4, I believe, and it's in this particular investigation report that—I believe Mr. Klees had a copy of it. It indicated, I think on page 13, "The ministry has recommended Ornge work with many stakeholders such as unions, land ambulance operators, hospitals, etc. to establish a five-year plan...."

I want to say that Ornge is in a challenging situation. This is not easy to get out of, the situation that Ornge is in. I don't know exactly why they're in that particular situation, because, as I said before, prior to 2011 or in 2011, we were assured by the people at Ornge that they were training critical care paramedics, that they were providing more paramedics, the staffing was fine. All of a sudden, the staffing is not so fine; they have difficulty staffing. I don't think this is anything that you don't already know about. They have problems staffing with paramedics; the level of care with the paramedics, primary versus critical care; they have problems staffing with their pilots and co-pilots.

I said to them, "I recommend that you go to your stakeholders, you talk to them and you develop a staffing plan. It's important to have a staffing plan to give us confidence that you're doing something to dig yourself out of this particular problem." I said to them, "This isn't going to be solved overnight," and I think Dr. McLellan said the same thing when he was here. "This is a substantial problem that Ornge has and it's necessary to try and determine how you're going to do this." I said, "It may even take five years to do this, but let's be open and transparent with that. Talk to your stakeholders and try and make some arrangements for that particular problem that you're encountering." They said they would think about it.

In the meantime, we're getting more situations coming to us, more problems associated with staffing, associated with level of care—primary care instead of critical care—more investigations happening.

I said to myself, "I have to do something about this," and I developed draft director's orders, because there's not a lot of things that emergency health services can do, in all honesty, except under the Ambulance Act it says:

"If an operator has contravened a standard or requirement of this Act or the regulations and the contravention would constitute a failure to meet the certification criteria referred to in subsection 8(5), the director may,

"(a) order the operator to remedy the contravention within the time frame specified...."

You don't always have to issue these orders. The mere threat sometimes achieves something, in my experience. I don't believe I've ever issued orders in the past. I don't know if a previous director issued orders. But the fact that there's a mere threat, and they know that this is possible, may have come into effect, because we met with them again two weeks ago. I once again said, "Where is the staffing plan?" You've got to have some idea of where you're going to be, where you're going to go and how you're going to get there, sort of thing, because this is such a significant item.

I said to my ADM, Patricia Li, "I'm drafting these, all right? I want you to know that sort of thing." Her direction at that time was, "Well, okay, but let's not proceed at this time." She was right, because a week later—actually, I think it was June 5—the staffing plan arrived at our office from Ornge. From that perspective, she was absolutely right that this indeed generated what we were looking for at that particular point in time. Now, a staffing plan doesn't solve the problem, but it helps, right? They indicated—they've told us—that they've added additional paramedics; they're hiring more pilots. I think they put out a press release on that recently. We're very pleased that they're doing that.

I still know that this is not going to be an easy row for them to hoe. It's difficult; it's hard. They have a very large challenge in front of them, because the name Ornge, quite frankly, is tarnished—I think we all know that sort of thing—and it's difficult to hire, and hire the type of people you need to do that. That's why it does take some time.

In the meantime, they've hired additional staff. They've hired Bruce Farr, an excellent ambulance person, and several other people in their organization. It gives us more confidence, going forward, that they have an idea of where they have to go.

That's the situation with respect to the director's orders.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So would it be—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you're about—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I'll just borrow a little bit.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're about four minutes over right now.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That's okay.

So the direction from the ADM wasn't so much, "Don't follow up on the problem."

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, absolutely not.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That wasn't the order.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The order was, "We may be able to resolve this without a director's order."

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right. And we met with them, and Patricia was there and assisted in generating what we needed to have.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you resolved the situation without a director's order, but a resolution was achieved.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right. Now, that does not say that there will not be future director's orders.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I understand; yes. And I understand that the resolution of having to hire more people—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —is a work in progress. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll now move to the opposition. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Bates, thank you for clarifying that you in fact did draft the director's order—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —which was the appropriate thing to do.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Thank you.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you for clarifying that you did forward it to Patricia Li.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And thank you for clarifying that Patricia Li made the decision that it shouldn't go forward—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: At this time.

Mr. Frank Klees: —at that point in time. Fair enough. That's all I made sure was public.

I think the issue here is—and you have to understand that all of us around this table are very concerned that the Ministry of Health does its part when it comes to oversight and holds Ornge accountable. That is largely what the Auditor General's report was about.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Absolutely.

Mr. Frank Klees: With that, I'd like to start by reviewing your testimony of April 18. In response to a question that I put to you about whether the original performance agreement obligated the Ministry of Health to oversee Ornge, you replied at that time, and I'll just quote from Hansard, "I agree that the Ministry of Health and the emergency health services branch have and had oversight responsibilities and that oversight responsibility was basically set in line by the Ambulance Act, by the performance agreement and by the transfer-of-payment ... directive."

That's the end of the quote. You stand by that statement.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I do.

Mr. Frank Klees: So there are basically three areas of authority that you relied on for, first of all, your authority and obligation to provide that oversight.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes, that's true.

Mr. Frank Klees: As the director of emergency health services, would it have been your responsibility to ensure that that oversight was then carried out, consistent with those three authorities?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: To the best of our ability.

Mr. Frank Klees: Prior to the consolidation of the air ambulance services into this new organization that we're dealing with now, can you just briefly describe what your branch's involvement was with the air ambulance service within the province? What responsibilities did the emergency health services branch have?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Oh, okay, fine. The fact of the matter was that it was a ministry operation, if you want to call it that, prior to Ornge taking over. We had, as I said, a small air ambulance unit. We still had the same number of investigators as we have now, other than two that have been added recently. We operated the communications centre directly with ministry staff. Up until 2000 or 2001—under the previous government, the decision was made to divest, is the word, the paramedics to the private sector, that being to the dedicated air operators, Canadian Helicopters and Voyageur, so they became employees of the air operators.

We funded all of this. We went out to RFPs for the operators and contracted with them. We did investigations when it was necessary, and we funded the system.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. So you had a dedicated team. You refer to it as the air ambulance unit. How many people would have been in that air ambulance unit?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I believe about four or five.

Mr. Frank Klees: Four or five.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: You know, it would go up and down as—

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Not many.

Mr. Frank Klees: That team was intact. It obviously had considerable expertise and experience in air ambulance. I'm assuming they kind of grew with the air ambulance organization. As Mr. Rusk this morning indicated, it really was an organic growth that took place within the government. Were most of these people in this unit from the very beginning?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: There were retirements. There was one gentleman, Mr. Stott, who was there for—and I believe he's the gentleman Mr. Rusk went with. Wayne was around for a large number of years. I think Mr. Rusk mentioned the manager, Mr. Brown, who was hired. There were people who came and went, sort of thing, over the years.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. When the transition took place to the consolidation plan, was that team then assigned to assume the oversight responsibilities for the new entity?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: And why would that be the case?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Because the team was disbanded, if you want to call it that, in the sense of, they went on—I mean, the fact of the matter is, one or two of them still partially work on air ambulance. There is no dedicated person in emergency health services at this particular point in time with respect to air ambulance.

There is going to be now an oversight unit hired, under the direction of Patricia Li, but at this particular point in time, there are several people that work on air ambulance—and all of us right now are working full-time on air ambulance, to be truthful—but at the other times they're working on land ambulance and base hospitals and a number of different functions they perform.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm assuming that you were well familiar with and privy to the negotiation of the performance agreement by which Ornge would conduct its business. Would that be a reasonable assumption on my part?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I was not involved in the negotiation of the performance agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: But were you familiar with the performance agreement?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you knew the complexity of that performance agreement, and you would be familiar with all of the oversight responsibilities incorporated into that performance agreement, which are considerable.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you share with us, given the ongoing oversight responsibilities that the Ministry of Health would have over the air ambulance operations, why the very unit within the Ministry of Health that had the experience to provide that oversight would be disbanded?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I have to go back to 2003, if you don't mind. In 2003, Mr. Hugh MacLeod directed that myself and other people within the emergency health services branch provide every assistance to Dr. Mazza—all right?—who would be the lead on the transformation, on the movement from the current system at that particular point in time to a not-for-profit agency. Dr. Mazza had the lead from 2003 to 2005. He was instrumental in ensuring that the unit was not carried on, that oversight was perhaps not as rigorous as it should have been, if you will. He was the main player in the movement from the ministry service to the not-for-profit organization. From 2005 to 2007 I worked for Dr. Mazza, since he was seconded to the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, and he provided executive leadership to myself.

Mr. Frank Klees: So it's true, then, that you were under direct orders from the associate deputy minister, Hugh MacLeod, to support Dr. Mazza in his plans and—let me ask you this—basically support Dr. Mazza in his plan to transform the air ambulance service? Would that be a correct term?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I think it would be probably more than support. It would be to do what Mr. Mazza told us to do.

Mr. Frank Klees: So Dr. Mazza, who was on the outside, all of a sudden became crowned with authority within the Ministry of Health so that someone as senior as you was now being told by Dr. Chris Mazza what to do?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there ever any correspondence, either a letter or an email or emails, that gave you that direction?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Indeed there was. I could show you one today.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you have it with you?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I do have them with me.

Mr. Frank Klees: If you could provide that to the committee, I would appreciate that.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: There are some of them. I have other ones.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Bates. Approximately how many pieces of correspondence would you have given to the clerk?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Ten.

Mr. Frank Klees: About 10? And this would be correspondence? It looks as though they were primarily emails. Were there letters as well?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, there were no letters.

Mr. Frank Klees: Emails, basically coming from the associate deputy minister of health, Mr. MacLeod, to you and others.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Several of them were, but several of them are minutes of meetings that Dr. Mazza conducted, and that type of thing.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to share with you a motion that I put forward to this committee on May 30. I'm going to read it into the record because I think it's very important. The motion reads as follows:

"That the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, pursuant to standing order 110(b), whereby each committee shall have power to send for persons, papers and things, request a copy of any and all correspondence including letters and/or emails, from the associate deputy minister of health, Hugh MacLeod, to Malcolm Bates, director of the emergency health services branch, and Dennis Brown and any other person at the EHS branch in which the associate deputy minister references Ornge, or gives direction concerning the role that the EHS branch is to have concerning Ornge, or relates to allowing Dr. Mazza to do whatever he determines appropriate at Ornge and not to obstruct him during the period October 1, 2005, and the last day of February 2007 or makes any reference to how the EHS branch and its staff is to monitor, oversee, hold accountable or review the performance of Ornge, and that said correspondence be delivered to the clerk of the public accounts committee no later than Thursday, May 31, 2012."

Mr. Bates, that was the motion we put forward. It was subsequently referred to the Ministry of Health. Are you familiar with that motion?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I am.

Mr. Frank Klees: And when you were presented with this motion, what did you do?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I searched my records for exactly what the motion requested.

Mr. Frank Klees: And the material, the correspondence, that you provided to the clerk just now was the result of that search?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, it was not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. And why was it not?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Because the material I provided to the clerk dated from 2003 and 2004, and the motion required between 2005 and 2007 information.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you very much.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: You're welcome.

Mr. Frank Klees: I appreciate that clarification. And we appreciate the fact that you have been forthcoming with that information. It is a big lesson for us here, and that is that whether it's this proceeding or others, apparently the letter is much more important than the spirit. You, sir, understood what it was that we were seeking, and I appreciate you providing us with that information.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: You're welcome.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why do you believe that Mr. MacLeod made the decision to essentially take your authority away and hand it to Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I believe he was given direction, but I'm not sure. In the information we have, it was direction from—well, I will tell you, back in 2003, first-hand, I know that direction was given by the minister's office in 2003 that this particular transfer from the ministry to a not-for-profit organization was to be accomplished and accomplished quickly. There is evidence of that as well. In 2004, it carried on in the same vein that this would be accomplished. It was not whether, according to Mr. MacLeod, it was how soon.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever get any indication as to where Mr. MacLeod's directive came from?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: As I said, in 2003 it was relatively clear to me because I met with Michael Mjanes, who was the chief of staff to the associate minister, Dan Newman. At that particular point in time, Mr. Mjanes was very clear with us that the proponents of this particular service change wanted it done and wanted it done quickly, and the minister supported that.

Mr. Frank Klees: And then there was an election.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: October 3.

Mr. Frank Klees: And post-October 3: new government, new players. Who was then in charge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Hugh MacLeod was still in charge at that particular point in time. It was the same deputy at that particular point in time.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who was the minister?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It was Minister Smitherman.

Mr. Frank Klees: Would Mr. Smitherman have had anything to do with this direction?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Absolutely.

Mr. Frank Klees: Now, notwithstanding the past, we're into a new government; now we have Mr. Smitherman as the minister, and Mr. Smitherman would then have endorsed or directed Mr. MacLeod to implement the Mazza strategy—or the Mazza scheme, as I prefer to refer to it. Is that correct?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: As far as I know, that's correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: So now the implementation takes place, the performance agreement is negotiated and we have a substantial oversight responsibilities built into the performance agreement. You're still the director. I understand that at some point, obviously—and maybe you can clarify for me: At what point was your unit disbanded, the air ambulance unit within emergency health services branch?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: As soon as the Ornge transfer took place—the transfer to Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: So with the skeleton staff that you had left, obviously it still fell to you, as the director, to carry out whatever obligations were in that performance agreement. Is that correct?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Given the complexity of that, did you at any time put in place the resources, a structure, that would allow you to provide that oversight on a regular basis?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: We already had the certification unit that was established as a result of a transfer to the municipal sector of the land ambulance system, and that was a major part of what we were doing. We already had the investigations section, as I mentioned previously. Those are the main points of oversight.

We already had the financial staff that we carried on as well, because we're a fairly large branch, and the reason why we're visited by Mr. McCarter regularly is because we meet his financial requirements. We're a fairly large branch and we had the financial people in place to review things as well.

Mr. Frank Klees: So in order to ensure—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about a minute left, unless you want to keep going on—

Mr. Frank Klees: If you wouldn't mind, I'd like to just finish this part of my questioning, if I could borrow some time from the next session.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Frank Klees: Given the complexity, one would think that it might be a good idea to have a checklist of all of the various components of oversight required. Did your branch ever compile a checklist that would be used to do this?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes. We have a checklist of the performance agreement. We have a checklist of the new amended—the amended performance agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm going to ask the clerk to distribute a copy of what is entitled Performance Agreement Annual Report Checklist, and it's dated January to July 2006. If the clerk could give a copy of that to Mr. Bates, I would appreciate it.

I'd like to just run through a couple of items with you here while it's being distributed. This is a very detailed checklist. It deals with everything from operational issues, as you're well aware, to the financial standards. Was this checklist ever implemented?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It was implemented last year.

Mr. Frank Klees: It was implemented last year?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: It was prepared in 2006—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —and it's now 2012, and last year it was implemented?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why was it not implemented?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, the co-operation from Ornge was not the greatest, if you will. We had difficulty securing information from them; we had difficulties getting this type of information from them—and I think I mentioned that before.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Bates, I'd like to refer to the Auditor General's report, and I'll just read one paragraph from page 12 of his report: "In light of the high degree of responsibility and decision-making power the performance agreement gave Ornge, it was important"—

Mr. David Zimmer: Excuse me.

Mr. Frank Klees: This is the Auditor General's report.

Mr. David Zimmer: Oh.

Mr. Frank Klees: Surely you have a copy of it.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes. I just missed what you're reading from.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll start from the beginning. If someone could give Mr. Zimmer a copy, that will keep him awake, okay?

"In light of the high degree of responsibility and decision-making power the performance agreement gave Ornge, it was important for the ministry to have adequate processes in place to protect its interests."

What I see here is that there was an intent on the part of the emergency services branch to provide that oversight. The groundwork was done for a very comprehensive checklist that, as we read through it—and I'll spend some time with the committee, going through it—that probably 99% of the issues that went wrong over the last number of years would not have gone wrong had the emergency services branch been able to conduct its regular reviews. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I would agree that it would have been of assistance. It would be difficult for me to agree or disagree with what you're saying.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there ever a direction from either Mr. MacLeod or an assistant deputy minister or anyone superior to you not to use this document?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, I don't believe so. I didn't know that it existed.

Mr. Frank Klees: When did you come to realize that it did exist?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: The gentleman who put that together, Mr. Nishman, is still with us. Because things radically changed at Ornge in the latter part of 2011 and because the Auditor General was visiting Ornge, if you will—that sort of thing—he brought forward again the checklist, and I insisted that we work with Ornge to go through it. In fact, he did that. He met with Ornge and went through the checklist with them and came back with a filled-out checklist for us.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I'll defer to the next round, please.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, very well. We'll move on to the NDP, then. Ms. Gélinas?

M^{me} France Gélinas: I still don't understand about the checklist. It was there and it had been done from somebody from your branch, but you didn't know it existed.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, it wasn't that we didn't know it existed. I indicated that for two years, Dr. Mazza was in charge of everything. He was appointed as executive lead. He gave us directions. There was no indication or desire to apply that sort of checklist to Ornge as a result of his obvious close scrutiny over what was happening in the Ornge situation.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Dr. Mazza was not only controlling the operation; he was also controlling the part of the ministry that had oversight of those operations.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Exactly.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Has this ever happened to you in your career before, that the people directing operations also direct the people who offer oversight of those operations?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Never.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you ever think to mention to other people—your ADM or your supervisor—that that was a weird arrangement?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: The ADM appointed Dr. Mazza.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So there was no point in going to the ADM.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I wouldn't think so.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I see where you're going with this. Looking back, do you figure that was part of the problem?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I don't know. Listen: There were three ministers who supported the transfer to Ornge. There was an associate minister, two deputy ministers, an ADM and a Red Tape Commission. All of these individuals supported what was happening and what took place. In my position, it was not a situation in which—even if I objected to something, I'm not sure they would have listened.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. I'd like to check on one thing. You did have contact with Ornge, and people within your branch had contact with Ornge. When were you made aware that the for-profit entities were going to share revenues with the government?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It was a concept that Dr. Mazza put forward, I think around 2008.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's what you said before.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: But there was nothing very specific until they came in to meet with the ministry in January 2011.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you attend that meeting?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I did.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And who else attended?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: A large number of people. I'm not sure if you have a copy of it, but there was Mr. Apps, Mr. Lepine, several other people from Ornge, a deputy, myself and a number of other individuals from the ministry.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Anybody from the minister's political staff?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I don't recall.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No? Anybody from the minister's office?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I don't recall that either.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It's possible; it's likely, but I don't recall.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It's likely, but you don't recall?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So from 2008 on, you have conversations with Ornge. Ornge tells you that they intend to purchase aircraft, that they intend to set up a for-profit venture. You are aware of this. Then you become more knowledgeable about the 3% of revenue for the for-profit that is going to come back to the government.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That was basically a concept. Nothing like that ever happened.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I realize it didn't happen. I'm more interested as to: When was this information shared?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: With respect to the 3% or whatever it was?

M^{me} France Gélinas: The 3%, yes.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: In 2011. It may have been 2010. They presented us with five-year plans, as I said. I'm not exactly sure if it was in one of their five-year plans.

Going back, as I say, it was clear in 2003 that they wanted to generate revenue. In 2008, they provided us with a plan that indicated for sure that they were going to generate revenue of some sort or another. In fact, it did generate some small amount of revenue by charging for training paramedics. In 2010, I think, they entered into an agreement with respect to simulators and so on that they were working on. They did a consulting piece of work in Saskatchewan. So they were generating a very small amount of revenue.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did they share any of those revenues with the ministry?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, because?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, it was small. I don't think they would have shared it, because, as I understand it, they established for-profit companies. The first for-profit company that we learned of was Ornge Peel.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And when did you hear about Ornge Peel?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: In 2008.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. You figured that it was Ornge Peel that was doing those activities?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I'm not sure. Our mandate was a performance agreement, and the performance agreement only covered Ornge. It didn't cover these other entities.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So when Ornge paid for weight overpayments to the helicopter company, you would have considered this as not part of your accountability agreement.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Didn't know anything about it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You didn't know.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: They wouldn't tell us that sort of thing.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. How often would you meet with Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Dr. Mazza? He would call me up. In the early years, he would phone me, usually in a tirade or something—certainly not very happy about whatever was taking place—maybe once a month, once every two months. After 2010, we didn't meet with—well, we met with him once. When we had a meeting at Ornge, he was there. But other than that, we didn't meet with him. He was engaged in other activities, I would assume.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Maria Renzella—you know who she is—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —testified that you were Dr. Mazza's primary contact.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, that's incorrect. It was Dennis Brown.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It was Dennis Brown that was the primary contact of Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How do you know that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Because that's what Dennis was intended to do. That was his responsibility.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know that he did have meetings with Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: He didn't necessarily have meetings per se. He had telephone dialogue.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Do you want to go?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure. Do you recall ever taking any phone calls from or meeting Alfred Apps or Mr. Don Guy?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I had one letter from Mr. Apps. I had never heard of Don Guy before, to be truthful.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I had one letter from Mr. Apps, who wanted to meet with the ministry. He was coming through me, as the director of emergency health services. He wanted to meet and explain the new legal entities that they were starting, just as Ms. Gélinas mentioned. I went to our legal branch, because it's not my prerogative to deal with lawyers, and I asked them what I should do. He wanted to meet with legal branch. Legal branch told me to write back to Mr. Apps and say that he should explain whatever he wanted to explain to the Meyers Norris

Penny auditors; at that particular time that was under way. That's what I did.

I had one other—I didn't meet—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sorry to interrupt you. When did that happen? When was that, roughly?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: In 2009, 2010. I think it was 2009.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: It was 2009. And you had one other interaction? You were about to explain when that was.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: With Mr. Apps? Yes. That was—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What was that? Was that a phone call, an email or a letter?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No. I attended a meeting where Mr. Apps was present, and that was in the provincial comptroller's office in 2008.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What was the nature of that discussion or that meeting?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Ornge was vehemently opposed to consolidation under the books of the province, and Mr. Apps was their representative—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Representing Ornge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Representing Ornge.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I was going to ask you—Mel Springman raised some concerns in 2004. You indicated that his concerns were factually incorrect—he raised some concerns about Ornge. Do you recall making that—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I think if you read whatever it is that you have, I didn't say that his concerns were incorrect. I neither disagree or agree. I want to say from the beginning that I have the highest regard for Mr. Springman as an individual and as a lawyer. I know of no one that I've dealt with that I have greater respect for in those particular areas. If you'll permit me to provide you some background related to this—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I'll pause you for one moment. We'll come back to that.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Okay.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: He raised some concerns about Ornge though, in general. Would you agree with that? With respect to the direction that Ornge was headed with the consolidation of the aviation, he had some concerns with that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Now it turns out, in hindsight, that his concerns were quite prophetic. It turns out that what he was concerned about was essentially the turning point where things went very much downhill for Ornge. In retrospect, do you agree that Mr. Springman's concerns were quite—would agree with that comment, that they were quite prophetic and quite insightful?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, let me just say that Mr. Springman and myself had different directions, okay? I was directed to follow what Mr. MacLeod and Dr. Mazza were intending to do. That was my direction. As a civil servant, I follow that direction.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's fair. And that's my next area, that you were receiving that direction and that you indicated that direction—would you describe that as almost like a pressure?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I'm sorry?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Would you describe that direction that you received as essentially you were being pressured in a particular direction?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I'm not sure pressured—it certainly was direction, and direction is direction.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes, fair enough.

Interjection.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I was directed to come here. I'm here.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just to make it clear: You indicated—you were listing off three ministers, two deputy ministers and one ADM; all knew what was going on and supported what was going on.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just to clarify that, what did you mean by "supported" what was going on?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: They were prime movers, if you will, if you know that term—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: —towards changing the air ambulance system from a government, ministry-operated one to one that was—the full responsibility was given to a not-for-profit agency or organization called Ornge, or OAA at that time.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Were these same people—they were all supportive of specifically Dr. Mazza's view of how to implement that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Exactly.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. And they were all aware of his vision of what he wanted to implement?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I assume they were, if they supported it, but—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you mind, just for the record, naming those three ministers, the ADM etc.?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Minister Clement, Minister Smitherman, Minister Flaherty, associate minister Newman, associate deputy minister Hugh MacLeod, Deputy Minister Phil Hassen, Deputy Minister Ron Sapsford, ADM Mary Kardos Burton, and Frank Sheehan and the Red Tape Commission.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you say that by the time Minister Caplan became Minister of Health he was also aware of what was going on at Ornge, or not anymore?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I know—and this is all I know—that Dr. Mazza visited the new minister. I don't know what transpired. I don't know how much anyone was aware of what was taking place.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you receive directives after Dr. Mazza visited with Minister Caplan, or did the directive given to you change, or did you continue with the same—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No. No directive whatsoever. No direction.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Whatever had been there before just continued.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's correct.

M^{me} France G  linas: When Tom Lepine came to testify, he quoted you and said, "Tom, it would be so much easier if Chris would just report his salary." Do you remember saying that to Mr. Lepine?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Mr. Lepine—and I read his transcript—said that I did that many times. Mr. Lepine, unfortunately, has a memory that doesn't quite extend properly.

I'll tell you what happened. What transpired was, we knew that because of Ornge Peel and so on—if you checked the sunshine list, Dr. Mazza was no longer there. It was quite clear that he wasn't there. Mr. Lepine was on it. Of course, nobody told us he was also securing a salary from another part of Ornge. That didn't show up on the sunshine list, as you know. We were told that as far as Ornge Peel goes, it's not covered under the public salary disclosure list of people there because, number one, it was indirect funding, and number two, it was a for-profit organization. So that settled that, as far as we were concerned.

There was more concern expressed, I think, because in 2010 there was some information again questioning why Dr. Mazza was not on that list, and again it was verified that that was still the case with respect to public salary disclosure. Mr. Lepine is referring to a situation that happened, I believe, around December. I believe your party brought this up in the Legislature about Dr. Mazza's salary, if I'm not mistaken, on December 5. Shortly thereafter, the question down through my ADM, Patricia Li, and myself was, "Why aren't they reporting and how can we get them to report?" sort of thing. Patricia and I called Tom Lepine. Tom Lepine said, "I'll take it back. I think we can accommodate you"—in other words, provide the salaries of the executives who were not on the sunshine list.

The next day he called me back and said, "No, we're not going to do it. The board has decided that it won't provide that information." At that point in time, I said, "Tom, why"—it would be so much easier if I used those words, and I can't verify that I did, because who remembers words they use, but some to that effect—"why won't they provide that information?" It was another four weeks thereafter, due to the tenacity of the minister, that they actually finally provided the information that was required.

M^{me} France G  linas: That's four weeks after—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: After we had spoken to them. I'm not sure if it's four weeks. It's certainly a period of time that they stonewalled the ministry, if you want to use that term; would not provide the information.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a couple of minutes on this.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. In 2010, the NDP asked about the salary disclosure. You start asking Tom—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: 2010?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I think he means 2011.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, no; it's 2011. On December 5, 2011, it was in the Legislature.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You're talking about a question during question period?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Ms. G  linas is referring to questions asked in the committee, and also a freedom-of-information request for Dr. Mazza's salary.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I was not involved with that.

M^{me} France G  linas: You know that his salary was apparently not being disclosed—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: —because it is for the for-profit, but you had their financial statements; you can see that there are executive compensations being paid out of the government funds.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No. That's not visible on the information provided to us, and the Auditor General will verify that. That is not provided, or was not provided to us. Under the new revised performance agreement, it's much different; much more rigorous.

M^{me} France G  linas: So the financial information you got was one big lump sum that included delivery of service, executive—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: We did not get information on these outside companies, if you want to call it that. That was not provided to us.

M^{me} France G  linas: No, I realize that was not provided to you. What I'm saying is that the money that you transferred to Ornge not-for-profit—because the government transferred $130 million to $150 million a year to Ornge not-for-profit. In the money that you transferred to Ornge not-for-profit, there were monies allocated to compensation of the admin staff.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: We did not get detailed information. We did know that there was a chargeback, if you will, for administrative costs, but no breakdown.

M^{me} France G  linas: And the chargeback for administrative costs was the salaries of the people—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, we don't know, because it didn't specify salaries; it just—

M^{me} France G  linas: Administrative costs. And you never asked questions?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: First of all, number one: I asked for an audit in 2008. We did. As part of our oversight, I said, "I need an audit of what's taking place at Ornge," in 2008. I went to the Ministry of Finance and my staff and asked for an audit to be conducted in 2008.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And what happened with that request?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Do you want to keep using time? You're out of time, otherwise.

M^{me} France G  linas: Just one more minute.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What happened with that request?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That request turned into a Meyers Norris Penny review conducted by the Ministry of Finance internal audit.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Did it require any salary disclosure issues or did it cover any specific issues around oversight?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: What it said was that Ornge is providing and spending the money efficiently, effectively and according to the purposes intended.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That was the finding of the report in 2008.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That was the finding of the report.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When was the last time you went to Ornge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Two weeks ago.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Two weeks ago. Okay. You had been there before?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Had you ever seen the motorcycle in the front lobby?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Once.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What was your thought when you saw a motorcycle in the front lobby?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I think it was the same as yours.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Which would be?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Somewhat outrageous. Their contention was that it was as a result of funding contributed by a supplier that they purchased that particular one. They also went to the Rogers Centre, to a Blue Jays game. If you check on their website, you'll see Dr. Mazza and the chap from Orange County Choppers, I think is the name of the organization on that particular chopper. It was an event that they intended, I believe, to kick-start their charitable work in the future. But I never anticipated seeing that motorcycle in that particular building in their front lobby.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And you knew that public funds had been used because it was something that Ornge had an intention to do—start a fundraising effort?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, not as far as I am aware. They said that they secured that money as a donation for those two motorcycles—I think there were two. I didn't realize, until the Auditor General pointed it out, that there were two of these particular vehicles.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. I'll keep my minutes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Would the committee like the Meyer Norris Penny report tabled with the committee?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. We can get that report.

We'll move on to the government. Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I've just gotten these emails which you tabled, Mr. Bates. I guess some of them are emails and some of them are minutes of a meeting. I'm just trying to cast my mind back to dates. The first in this sequence is September 4, 2003. That was, I believe, either the day before the writ dropped or the day the writ dropped or the day after the writ dropped, but the beginning of the election, plus or minus one. We have the record of a meeting that was called to order by Hugh, which seems to read further, Hugh MacLeod. I'm just picking a little bit here:

"The deputy minister of health and the ADM for acute care services want to create a more responsive and agile air ambulance program. They want to create a public sector not-for-profit organization that 'strips away' bureaucratic layers...."

I'm skipping here, obviously: "The new organization will be a separate legal entity...."

Then, skipping down further, "Dr. Chris Mazza is charged by the deputy minister and the ADM, Hugh MacLeod, to produce an assessment of how this is accomplished"—not whether, just how.

We then go on to another meeting on September 8, 2003, which I'm virtually certain is after the writ dropped. Dr. Mazza seems to be the person running this meeting and says that the purpose of the meeting is to "develop an implementation process for the creation of Air Ambulance Ontario as well as timelines for implementation...."

"The team is to have this process developed, analyzed and ready for implementation by November 2003."

This is obviously all at the direction of Minister Clement's associate minister Newman.

Then, oddly enough, because my recollection is the same as yours that the election was on October 3, 2003—

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Second.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Second—some time with one-digit numbers.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Helena will always provide the specifics.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The researcher can get that right for us, okay?

Anyway, what's interesting is that October 8, 2003, would have been a day or two after the election. Again, we seem to have a meeting being presided over by Dr. Mazza, and it goes back and references the previous minutes that I was reading and starts to go into the implementation details.

I guess, given that what we've learned from previous testimony by Cynthia Heinz, who was a lawyer who had been working at Fasken on this file beginning in January 2003 to determine corporate structure, to begin to draft a performance agreement and discuss what legislation required revision and so forth, there was a very firm direction that you were given by very senior levels to move ahead with this regardless. The fact that there had been an election lost, or won, depending on your particular point of view, doesn't seem to have had anything to do with the direction.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That is a curiosity.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Given that, we're in that period when there has not yet been a new cabinet. The government is obviously going to change, but there's not yet a new government and it was still full steam ahead. Am I getting this story correct?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: As far as I know.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Thank you for that very much, because this helps, I think, for those of us who have looked at the records and found it very odd that there was all this legal work going on at Fasken and how this seemed to flow through. You were being directed not to say anything in objection to this, just carry on with the steamroller, as it were.

Anyway, I want to move ahead a considerable number of years to this year—in fact, quite recently—because there have been questions raised about whether Ornge is currently having a deficit budget. I know that's a bit out of your—you're not the person doing the budget. But to the best of your knowledge, is Ornge in a deficit position? Have they asked for more money? Have you provided more money?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: They have not asked for more money, and we have not provided more money.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Did they table a balanced operating budget?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That budget is still under consideration.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So the budget that Ornge provided us with is sort of a draft budget.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And when they talk about fiscal year '13, do they have the same fiscal year as we do?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So this would be—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It's 2012-13.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This is 2012-13, then. They're just picking up the last two digits.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Right, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This information is still to be finalized in terms of their budget presentation, but there is no discussion going on about providing extra money. They're flatlined—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: They know that they have a 0% increase this particular fiscal year.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. Just looking at the draft we've been provided with, it would appear that they may be looking at an operating surplus and that that would carry whatever capital debts they may have.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I'm sorry. I can't provide—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, that's fine. But from your point of view, they've been told, "The budget is frozen. Stick with it."

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. I'm going to turn it over now to Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: There were a number of issues involving patient transport. There were conflicting numbers that we got, or it was unclear about the numbers of patients that Ornge actually transported and there seemed to be two ways of doing the calculation. Can you clarify or give us the correct calculation and the numbers arising from that calculation?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Okay. I have to go back somewhat, in the sense that when the ministry was operating the service, I believe the number of air ambulance calls was something in the vicinity of 17,000 per annum. Ornge claimed that they had a service gap. There were something to the tune of 25,000 or 26,000 calls, and they were only able to handle—I believe 19,000 is what they said. But they indicated that the number of calls they were handling each year was increasing and that they were performing much better each year, in terms of efficiency. Those were the details they provided to us on many occasions. They then took over responsibility for the critical care land ambulance in 2008-09, and there were another 2,000 calls or thereabout.

We were led to believe that these numbers were correct. They engaged a company called the Hay Group to do a review of the service gap. That service gap is what they provided to us. Although I didn't see a copy of the report, they indicated to us that it was necessary to secure much additional funding if they were going to accommodate the service gap. We based upon their information and the details and numbers they gave us, when we requested each year, through the results-based planning process, additional funds for Ornge.

We found out, much to our dismay, after the Auditor General had been in—and I'm sure the Auditor General found out the same thing after he had performed almost all of his work—that the numbers were inflated. Tom Lepine was the individual who provided us with that information, I think in January 2012, telling us that Dr. Mazza had ordered that the numbers be inflated. He wanted to show a growth in air ambulance demand, and he showed that over the years, up until Tom Lepine provided the accurate information to us. There was at least an 8% reduction, according to the information that Tom Lepine then provided us in 2012. So the number of calls actually did not increase over the period of Ornge's work. They, in fact, remained static or maybe even decreased, I'm not sure, other than for the calls performed by the critical care land ambulance.

Mr. David Zimmer: You say there was an 8% gap—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes. I think the total number now, including critical care, is something in the vicinity of 19,000-plus.

Mr. David Zimmer: That's as of today?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: As of the most recent information we have from them.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

Do you know who Jacob Blum is?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I certainly know who Jacob Blum is.

Mr. David Zimmer: Have you worked with Jacob Blum in the Ornge business?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: As I indicated before, I know of one or two meetings with Jacob while he was with Ornge. I know that he met with, as I said, Dennis—I won't repeat what I said before—but he did meet with Dennis from time to time, and I know that he left the employ of Ornge—well, he left the employ, but he went on sabbatical leave for one year, from July 2008 until July 2009.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was your impression of Mr. Blum's executive skills?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, it was difficult for me to assess. I can only say this: that I met with Dr. Mazza one time and he had indicated that he thought that Jacob was providing information to us on their future plans. This was, I think, around the early part of 2007—or 2008, I should say—and we had to tell him that “Jacob has not been providing us with the information that you think he has been providing us.” That was about the only way I had of evaluating Jacob. Jacob was, in my opinion, certainly mannerly, certainly a personable individual. I had really nothing to do with him from an executive performance level in Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: When you told Dr. Mazza that the information that Mazza thought Blum was passing on to the ministry was deficient, what was Mazza’s reaction?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, he was somewhat dismayed.

Mr. David Zimmer: And how did he express that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, just in the sense that he was disappointed.

Mr. David Zimmer: Was he disappointed in the sense that he recognized that the information provided by Blum was deficient or did he feel the fault lay with the ministry, that they had misinterpreted Blum’s information?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No. I’m sure he felt that the problem was with Jacob.

Mr. David Zimmer: Bill 50, which is the amendment to the Ambulance Act to bring Ornge under greater oversight, similar to that of a hospital, is at second reading now. That’s a piece that’s designed to address the concerns of the Auditor General. Have you had a chance to reflect on Bill 50?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I know that it’s in the process. I know that it’s ancillary to a revised performance agreement, and that it’s intended to provide more opportunity, should the need arise, to step into Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: If Bill 50 is passed in its present form, do you think that will go some way to address the difficulties at Ornge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It certainly will assist the situation, in the future—not—

Mr. David Zimmer: In the future?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes. If there is any situation at Ornge now, I don’t think that’s intended for that. It’s intended for a future situation, should a similar type of situation arise, and I think that’s necessary in order to plan for the future properly.

Mr. David Zimmer: Any other observations about it—any sense of what the strengths of Bill 50 are or the weaknesses of Bill 50?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, I’m afraid I can’t give you any sort of—

Mr. David Zimmer: Since the Ornge things hit the public domain, as it were, there have been a number of changes at Ornge. Have you followed the changes that have been made as this matter has been progressing along?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes, I have followed it very closely.

Mr. David Zimmer: What is your observation or comment or reaction to those changes that have started to work through the system at Ornge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, as I say, Ornge is in a difficult situation, a difficult spot for many varied reasons, one of which is the hearings that we’re here for today, which obviously do not foster things at Ornge other than to identify where the problems were, that sort of thing. They are in a very challenging situation with respect to staffing, with respect to the complaints that arise as a result of either lack of staffing or difficulties with respect to previous complaints that have been lodged, people coming forward with information that perhaps they had not come forward with previously. Ornge is endeavouring to address the situation in many varied ways, and we’re working with Ornge to assist them in every way that the ministry can. Perhaps I can give you an indication of ways that we’re doing that—

Mr. David Zimmer: Let me just—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two-and-a-half minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Then Ms. Jaczek has some questions.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Mr. Bates, we’ve just had an opportunity to review some of the emails and correspondence that you presented to the committee this afternoon. I’m sorry to jump around chronologically, but I wanted to ask you specifically about one email here dated July 12, 2004, from Hugh MacLeod, the then-ADM, to you, to yourself. I’ll just read the whole thing because I want you to sort of get the opportunity to recall this.

“Chris and I met with the minister”—Chris being, I presume, Chris Mazza—“and I met with the minister”—who on that date would have been Minister Smitherman—“on Thursday to discuss next steps. The minister is supportive of the proposed model for consolidation of all aspects of air ambulance to a not-for-profit society. I have asked Chris to take the lead on this file and prepare the necessary slide deck for the minister to take forward. Please work with Chris to action this direction. Also”—and this is the bit I really want you to confirm for me—“the minister has requested a detailed breakdown of ‘all fiscal expenditures’ with particular focus on access to dollars. To quote the minister, he wants to be convinced that we have tactically set in direction how we are going to get the biggest bang for the dollars we have.”

This was the way you were starting to look at this project going forward. Could you sort of explain how you took this memo and how you proceeded?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I think it was a very clear direction to myself and my branch. I provided the direction thereafter to the people within my branch as to what was necessary in order to address the direction from, obviously, the minister and Mr. MacLeod. We worked towards generating the necessary submissions to the government that would in fact accomplish what they were looking for; that is, the transfer of responsibility officially to the not-for-profit organization.

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, can we take some extra time on this?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes. You have another three minutes to use all your time up.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Okay. So then you were clear in your mind that you were going to give a detailed breakdown of the budget as you knew it in the existing air ambulance program and you were going to be putting that in front of Hugh MacLeod to take to the minister, presumably, so that they could see what assets the ministry at that moment in time had, and it was your understanding that this would essentially form the basic budget of the new not-for-profit agency.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes, and it was also the desire of Dr. Mazza to proceed with—at that time, we called it the acute care land transfer. It turns into the critical care land ambulance. That was part of a plan, as well as the transfer of the air ambulance.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Could you explain that a little bit more?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Yes. Dr. Mazza had a vision of ambulance services, an integrated ambulance system, that would include not just critical care air ambulance but also critical care land ambulance. At that point in time, all land ambulance services were provided by the municipal sector, as I know you're well aware. Dr. Mazza and Mr. MacLeod wanted to set up the critical care land ambulance. That eventually occurred, in 2008, as I said before. That was part of the vision that he had.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: And this was all to be done—at that time, the thinking was—within the same budget envelope? How did they get into the next stage of increasing budgets?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: There was some funding available for transfer service, in addition to a land ambulance service, because the land ambulance services, as you'll recall, were concerned about inter-facility transfers. I thought you—

Ms. Helena Jaczek: I remember well.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right. This was part of inter-facility transfers, so we had some funds available. The idea was to utilize those funds to establish a critical care land ambulance as part of the Ornge system, as it came to be called later on.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to clarify that Minister Smitherman was obviously very clear that he wanted to get the biggest bang for the dollars we had, as expressed in that email.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Thank you. We'll move on to the official opposition. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: I guess Mr. Smitherman got a very big bang out of this, didn't he? The fact is, Mr. Bates, that when the transition took place, you've just told us that, basically, there was virtually no increase in the number of patients who were transferred. The annual budget for air ambulance service before the Mazza scheme was about $93 million. Is that correct?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I believe so.

Mr. Frank Klees: And today, what is the amount?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: It's $150 million.

Mr. Frank Klees: It's $150 million—not an increase in patient transfer, but a substantial increase—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: But please let me explain, or augment, if you will, sort of thing. There was an angioplasty service assumed by Ornge at additional funding, and the critical care land ambulance was assumed at additional funding. As I said before, the trend for expenditures in air ambulance are in fact no greater—in fact, they are less than they are in land ambulance. So even though it's $150 million, and even though we know what was taking place behind the scenes, if you will, sort of thing, the expenditures are in fact no greater on the trend line. In fact, they're less than the ministry's increases.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Bates. I'd like to move on and pick up where we left off on the oversight issue. I heard you talk about the inspections that your branch is responsible for—the air bases, for example. I'd like to focus on the responsibility of oversight that your branch had for Ornge itself: the head office, where, quite frankly, all the decisions are made that end up with the staffing issues at the bases.

This performance agreement checklist that I distributed—if we could just go through this. This really, in large part, feels—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I'm sorry, I don't have a copy of it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Clerk, did we not pass this to Mr. Bates?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'm sure we did, but I'm sure we can find another one. Take this one, if you'd like.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I'm sorry—

Mr. Frank Klees: About 90% of this checklist deals really with the responsibilities that Ornge had at the Ornge head office, so to speak.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Right.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to just run through some of this, so that we can get a sense of what the intended oversight was, and perhaps where the gap was.

I'd like to start with page number 2, at the bottom, 3.2(d), which talks about the communications officers that must be qualified—"3.2(e) Communications officers document all calls as per key performance indicators using decision support software and determine most appropriate action."

The next page, page 3, at the top of the page: "Technical connections—Ornge shall ensure that communications officers have the technical capacity to communicate" etc.

Over to page 4, at the top left, article 3.3—and, by the way, committee members, where it references the article, that is the article in the performance agreement that actually requires this work to be done by Ornge and would then be a responsibility for oversight. So 3.3(e) speaks to the Ornge education and evaluation programs that were responsible to be put into place.

Page 5, 4.1 and 4.3, talk about—a new system for communications services that was to have to been put in place within two years of Ornge assuming responsibility. We've heard much about the lack of communication and the number of calls that were either not completed or there was a problem with the communications system. According to the performance agreement, Ornge had a responsibility to actually put in place this communications service and ensure that it's functioning, and I'm assuming that the ministry then had a responsibility to oversee that and make sure that it got done—according to this document, in any event.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Can I just say that in fact, it did, and the Auditor General verified that they did install a new system called Optimus? I think some of the concerns that you're expressing are not so much related to a system they put in but, rather, the people utilizing the system.

Mr. Frank Klees: And that goes to the quality assurance issue, which is also referenced on page 7, under articles 5.5, 5.6 and 5.7, which talks about the necessity under the performance agreement to install a quality assurance system and team and ensure that those people are all properly trained.

It goes on, on the next page, page 8, 6.1 and 6.2, when it talks about the documentation of calls and the responsibility for file and data management.

Now, I understand that you've had some problems with Ornge in terms of proper documentation, and again it comes back to this document in terms of the oversight. My question, Mr. Bates, is simply this: As we run through this, and we don't have the time to go through all this, but numerous, numerous times the performance agreement certainly required Ornge to put all these in place. The due diligence was apparently done at the front end to incorporate these responsibilities into the performance agreement. The problem was, they didn't do it, or they didn't do a great deal of it. My question is, given this checklist, given the experience of your branch with air ambulance, knowing the complexity of all of these requirements, why did the emergency health services branch not exercise tighter control and stricter oversight of Ornge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I would disagree with you, sir, in the sense that we exercised the oversight to the best of our abilities, if you will. The certification exercise, the certification review, was done in 2006 and 2009. That's all part of this to make sure that the documentation is done, to make sure that they maintain this type of system, and they were maintaining it. Whether they were utilizing it properly every time certainly is a question, but the certification reviews showed that they were.

The review by Meyers Norris Penny showed that they were providing an effective and efficient—and money spent according to the purposes intended. Every indication that we had and all the reviews that we conducted indicated that they were performing properly.

Mr. Frank Klees: Something is pretty fundamental in this document and under the performance agreement:

Ornge was required to use Canadian dollars in all its transactions. There's a $275-million bond offering that's out there in US funds. Where was your branch when it came to that issue? Were you not aware that they were floating a US$275-million bond?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: First of all, that was, again, as I say to you, another part of their complex number of companies.

Secondly, the fact that they were going to purchase aircraft was made known to the ministry and to the government. Whether it's in US funds or whatever is not something that we in the branch would become involved with. And $275 million, I presumed, was: They had a bond offering, as far as I know, and secured that money in Canadian funds. Whether they purchased the aircraft in American dollars—I presume they probably did, but I'm not—

Mr. Frank Klees: It's going to have a significant impact on the budget. Given where the Canadian dollar is and where it may go, certainly it could throw that budget off significantly, month by month. But that's another issue.

This document then goes on to schedule F, and it talks about the key performance indicators under the performance agreement—numerous references in that document to the opportunities that the Ministry of Health would have had to inspect, to demand access, to audit. I guess my question to you is: Given all these opportunities that the Ministry of Health had along the way under the previous performance agreement, why did the ministry not take that opportunity to insert itself into the operations at Ornge?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: First of all, I will tell you this: As the Auditor General said, full responsibility was transferred to Ornge for all the aspects that I outlined to you before. The paramedics, the air ambulance provision itself, the operation of that was all transferred to Ornge. It was their responsibility how to provide service, how many of which type of aircraft, how to establish and evaluate medical oversight, when to dispatch ambulances, which paramedics. There's no question that that was all transferred to the responsibility of Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: The oversight responsibilities were never transferred to Ornge. You admitted that yourself in your previous testimony here.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That's right.

Mr. Frank Klees: So my question is: If, in fact, the oversight responsibility still rested with the Ministry of Health—and the Auditor General made that very clear as well in his assessment—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I think if you read what the Auditor General said—I can ask him myself—he was not concerned with the oversight itself. He said it could be improved by more accurate information. We agree with the Auditor General.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, let me ask you this, then. You were responsible for drafting the amended performance agreement?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: The amended performance agreement?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I was part of that process, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. One of the things that the Auditor General referred to very specifically was the lack of specific service levels identified in the performance agreement. When you revised the performance agreement, did you incorporate specific service level expectations into that performance agreement?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: In that performance agreement are many varied reports, and if they do not perform, then the funding can be reduced—

Mr. Frank Klees: That's not the question, sir. I'd like to ask you a very specific question: Did any of the initial drafts of the amended performance agreement contain defined service levels?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Frank Klees: Does the final document, the amended performance agreement, contain defined service levels?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: How do you define "defined service levels"?

Mr. Frank Klees: I think that is a question that you shouldn't have to ask me. When we talk about defined service levels, we're talking about the very things that are a problem today at Ornge, and that is, that you're not properly staffed for critical care. You're not properly staffed for advanced care service. You end up with helicopters that don't have the appropriate staffing levels. Those are the kinds of specific service levels that one would expect are clearly articulated in the performance agreement. Are they in the amended performance agreement or not?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: They are not in that, and the reason why they are not in that is because there are standards under the Ambulance Act that ambulance operators are required to adhere to.

Mr. Frank Klees: But those have always been there, and, very clearly, Ornge hasn't performed up to those standards, and it's been very difficult for your ministry to hold them to those standards. Would it not have made sense, now that we're coming forward with an amended performance agreement, given the difficulties that Ornge has had, to actually incorporate that into the performance agreement so that Ornge has a full understanding and so does everyone else of what their responsibilities are?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: One of the requirements under the performance agreement is that they provide an operational plan. That operational plan, including the staffing plan that I mentioned to you previously, outlines or should outline the very things that you're talking about.

Mr. Frank Klees: They had that same responsibility under the previous performance agreement. They failed to deliver that. They failed to live up to that, which is why one would have expected that, given their past failure, we would incorporate those specific levels of service into the new performance agreement. It's one of the things that the Auditor General called for in his report. Why is it not there?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I think that there are enough standards and enough understandings in an operational plan that would be presented to us to include those very things. I agree with you: You need to know those very items that you're talking about, all right? It doesn't necessarily have to be in a performance agreement, as long as it's in the operational plan associated with a performance agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: Which gets us right back to where we started, and that is, that it doesn't matter how many performance agreements you've got, it doesn't matter how much legislation you've got; if you don't have the people on the front line delivering the quality service that they're expected to and you don't have the oversight and the accountability, we're going to be right back to where we started. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I'm not sure I agree with it, but I understand where you're going.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, I have to tell you—you know, one of the frustrating things around here is that we continue to hear from previous executives who say, "It wasn't my responsibility. I don't know anything about this." We have people from the ministry coming forward who, quite frankly, are—and I must admit, I want to thank you for your forthrightness today, and I want to thank you for bringing us documentation that we requested in a motion that the deputy minister failed to deliver because of the date issue. You saw beyond that, you provided us with that documentation, and I thank you for that.

What I'm hoping is that on a go-forward basis, we can all work to restore confidence in our air ambulance service, but it's going to take the focus on getting it right. So when I talk about the need for those more clearly defined levels of service in the performance agreement, the question that I have to ask on behalf of everyone is, if we know that that has been a problem in terms of the service delivery, why would we not take the extra step, put it upfront, let everyone know that these are the defined service levels that we expect?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Can I respond to that?

Mr. Frank Klees: Sure.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Okay. I agree with you. We are all here to do exactly what you're talking about, and thank goodness we are, that we're able to do that and move forward, because it's in everybody's best interests that the air ambulance service be provided properly and effectively in this province for every patient. It's the patients that we are concerned about as far as emergency health services go. That's our prime motivation in life: to make sure that patients get what they need.

The operational plan that is part of the performance agreement must be provided to us. It will provide exactly what you're talking about. I agree with you, that you should have these types of defined service levels. I agree with you that there are problems with staffing at Ornge at this particular point in time. I agree with you that we should all work together, including Ornge and the people at Ornge to make this a better place, to make the Ornge situation a better arrangement, to make sure that the patients are better served in this province.

Mr. Frank Klees: I have one last question for you.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Oh, good.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have five minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Given the experience that we now have all had—we have had a number of witnesses come forward to say that their concern was and continues to be that Ornge did not have and still does not have the core competency to be able to deliver both sides of the air ambulance service. By “both sides,” I mean that the actual business of owning aircraft, maintaining aircraft, managing an aircraft business, which is highly complex, is something beyond the scope of what Ornge is capable of delivering.

My recollection, and you can correct me, please, if I’m wrong—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I will.

Mr. Frank Klees: I don’t believe that there was ever a government mandate for Ornge to get into the business of owning its own aircraft and running its own aircraft business. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That’s 100% correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. I ask you this: If you had the ability to now draft the next steps of Ornge, would you agree with some who have come forward to say that Ornge should be focusing on the medical side of the equation and get back to outsourcing, contracting, the highly complex aircraft side of this business? Because the two are far too complex for an organization like Ornge to manage overall. I’d be interested in your professional opinion on that.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: As I said before, I don’t normally provide opinions. I provide advice, and I implement, when I’m directed to do so, that sort of thing.

At this particular point in time, my direction is to work with Ornge, to assist them, to improve what they are doing as an air ambulance service provider. What you’re saying—

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Bates, I’d like to free you up just for about two minutes. I’d like to free you up from the marching orders of implementation and draw on your rich experience. I would very much like to get your opinion on this.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I can tell you this: The contractors that provided the service previously—in particular, the rotary-wing provider was an excellent provider. I don’t know if that answers your question. It probably doesn’t.

Mr. Frank Klees: No, I think it does, actually, and I thank you for that, because, again, I think that if we’re stuck in forcing what was, in my opinion—and I’m entitled to that—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I think you are.

Mr. Frank Klees: If we’re forcing this plan that was envisioned by Dr. Mazza, and it’s faulty and it’s not going to work, we’re going to continue to waste a great deal of energy. We’re going to draw on a lot of people’s time, and we’re not building on the competency that is already out there. I’m concerned that the mandate may be, under any circumstances, “Make Ornge work the way it’s designed,” when what we should be doing is listening, to say, “What is it about the design that caused it to go off the rails? And what is it about the design that we have to revisit, to get back to an efficient and effective air ambulance service in this province?” Thank you, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you, Mr. Klees. We’ll move to the NDP for the remaining time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Which is?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): About three or four minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Can I say, “Hallelujah”? Although maybe I shouldn’t.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, we’ll be very brief. The suggestion was just made by Mr. Klees that, really, what was great about Ornge was all of the critical care stuff that they were able to link together and get the base hospital to be linked to the land ambulance. And it worked: They did save a lot of people’s lives. It seems to have really fallen apart once they started to try to basically maintain their own helicopters and go into the rotary-wing aviation part of it. This is where it seriously derailed. We can’t change the past. Ornge now owns helicopters. Ornge now owns fixed-wing aircraft.

Could you see a scenario where operators operate those assets for Ornge, where we would go to an aviation company or companies to operate those aircraft and to operate those helicopters while Ornge retains all of the good stuff that they’ve done on the health side?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: That is certainly a possibility.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you see any pluses to that possibility?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I think Mr. Klees sees pluses to that, and I think that, looking at it from an objective point of view, if you will, there are pluses to that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I’m just going to change topics really quickly. There was a memo regarding the for-profit entities that went out from Ornge. Are you familiar with that memo that went out, the very detailed memo?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No, I’m not. I may be, but I’m not sure which one you’re referring to.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It is the memo—you attended the briefing at the beginning of January 11. That’s the memo that went out.

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Oh, that one. The large letter?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That’s right. What was your response? In terms of the ministry and your office and people around you, what was the response to the corporate for-profit strategy?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, first of all, a not-for-profit—and I’ve done a lot of review of this. There is an encouragement, if you will, even through the Ministry of Government Services, that not-for-profit organizations establish other sources of revenue. So that’s not—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So it didn’t send up any red flags for you?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But another source of revenue is not the same thing as operating a web of for-profit companies. A lot of not-for-profits do generate money that comes directly back into the not-for-profit, and they don't have a corporate structure that looks like—

Mr. Malcolm Bates: I agree with you. I totally agree with that. Absolutely right.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Did that corporate structure then raise any red flags, the way it was designed?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: You'd have to be a Philadelphia lawyer to understand what it was all about, or maybe a lawyer from Whitby, but I'm not sure.

M^{me} France G  linas: So when it was presented in that room, and the corporate structure was there in front of everybody—I mean, you've been at the ministry long enough, I'm sure, to fall off your chair when you see a corporate structure like this. How come no alarm bells went off to say, "Wow, what the hell is this? How can this have evolved into such a web of a corporate structure?"

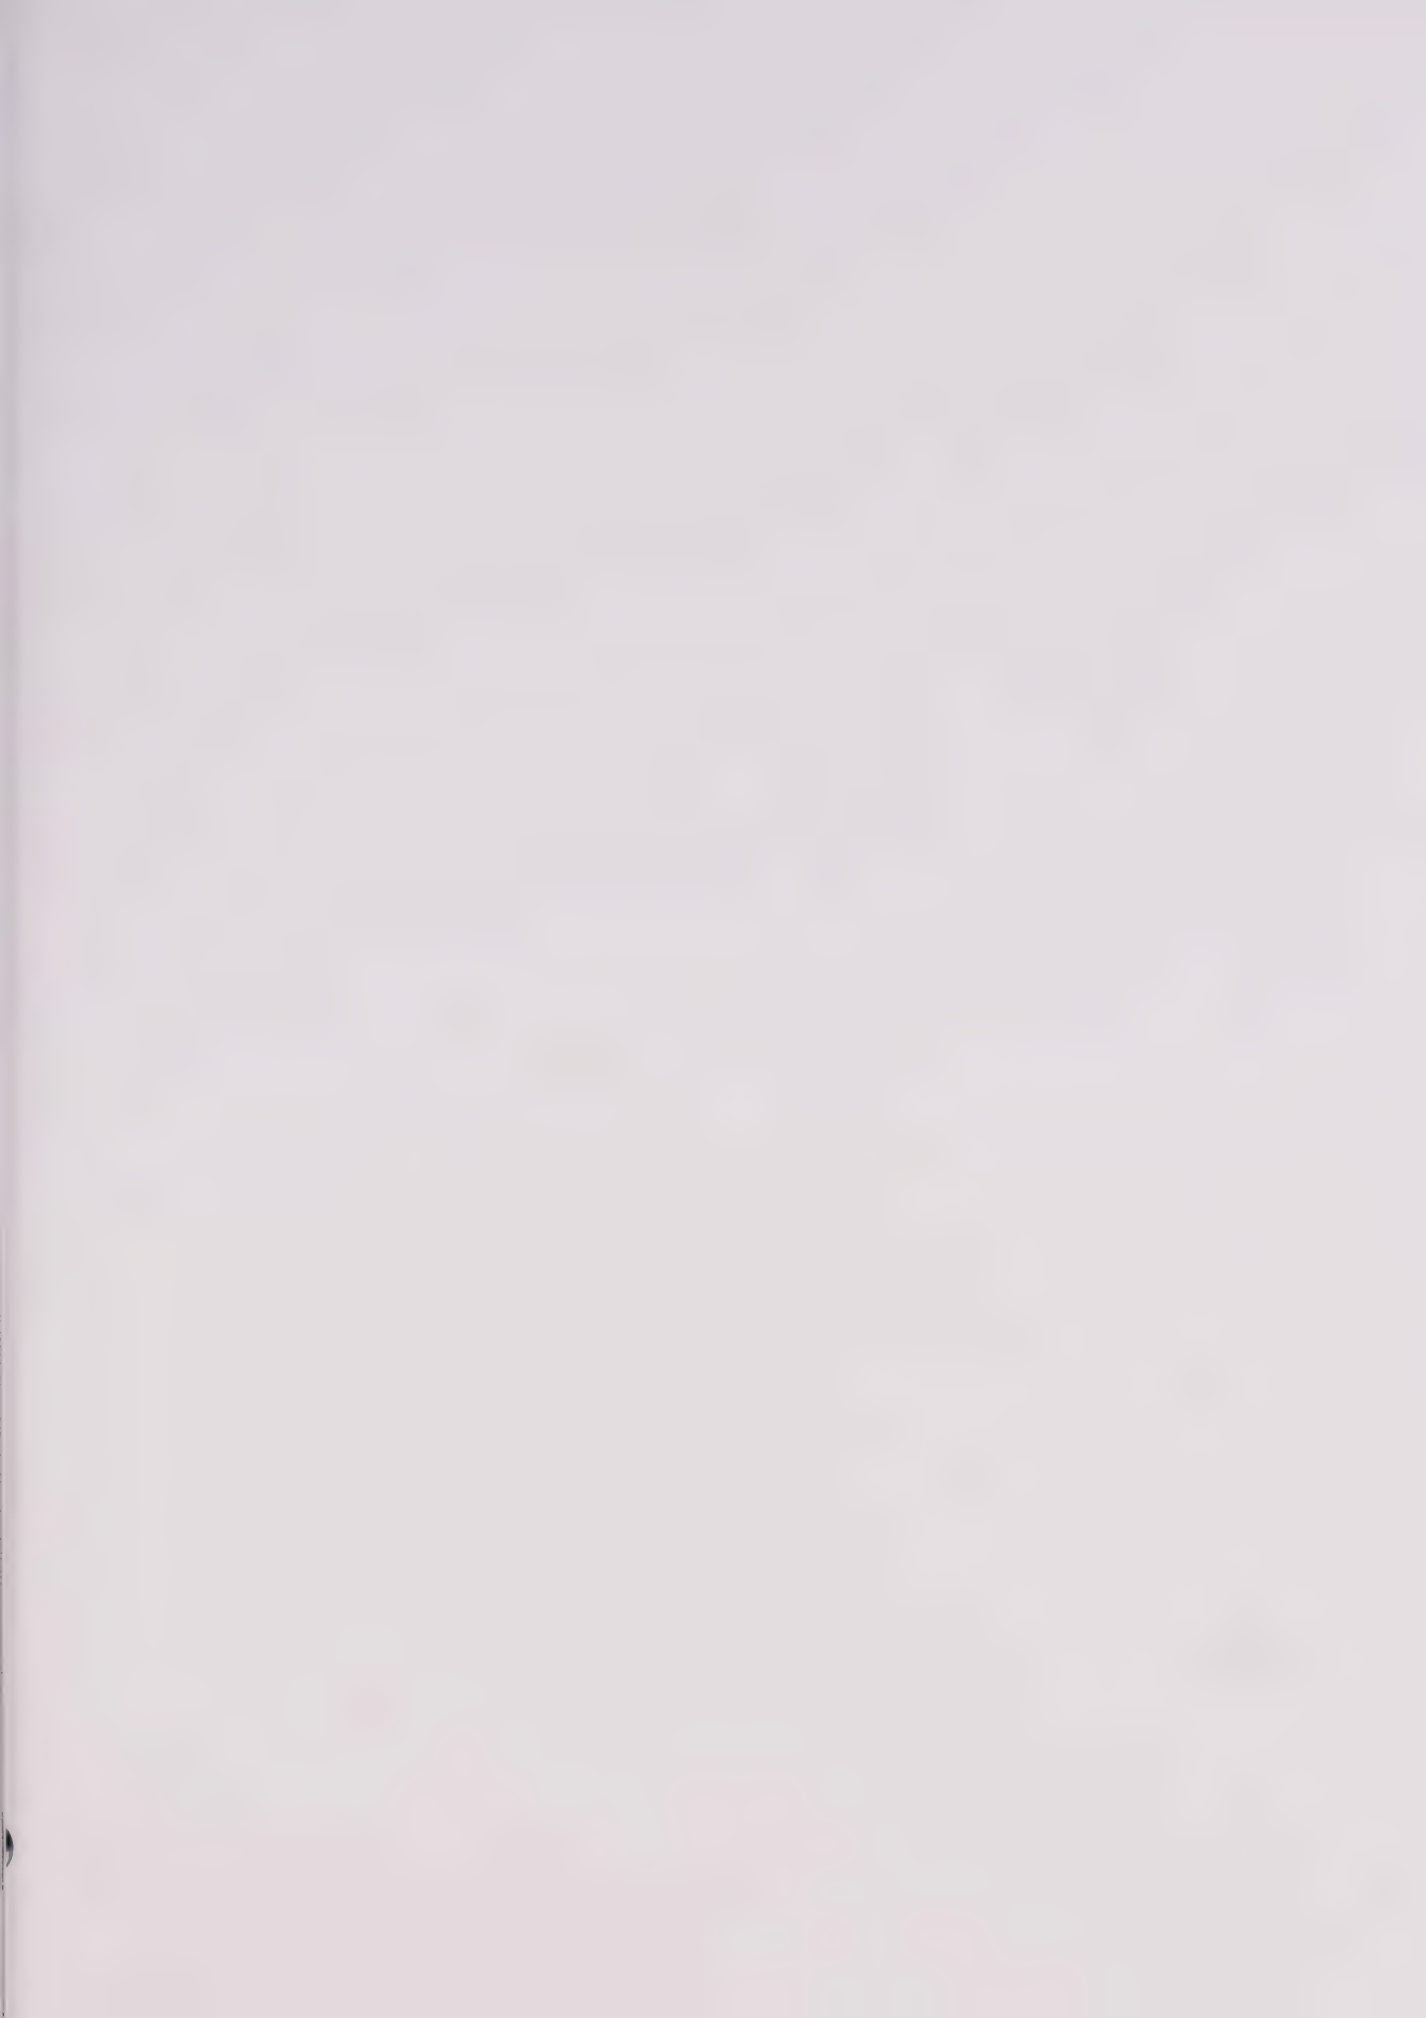

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, I can tell you our point of view, and that is simply, within our mandate—and I'll say it again—is Ornge. It's not all these other entities, that sort of thing. But we were concerned—if you will use that word, or at least interested—that the funding that we were providing for Ornge would be utilized for Ornge and not for the purposes of these other companies.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Mr. Bates, I have one final question that I want to throw in before my colleague. The Minister of Health said, "We believe the province does not control Ornge," the way it was set up and whatnot. But the Ministry of Finance has said, "We feel the government can effectively govern the financial and operating policies of Ornge," given the fact that the ministry provides the money. Who do you think is correct in this—the Minister of Health or the Ministry of Finance?

Mr. Malcolm Bates: Well, the Ministry of Finance took their own perspective on things quite rightly. It's not for me to question what the Ministry of Finance said or determined, but they determined that the funding went to Ornge. Ornge had very little other revenue, as I mentioned to you before, that sort of thing. So this was their main source of funding, income. If the government or if the Ministry of Health wanted to change things, then they could utilize or change the legislation to do something. Whether that's something that I would agree with—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'm afraid I have to interrupt. We are out of time. We would like to thank you for coming in today again. The committee is adjourned until Tuesday, June 26, at 9 a.m. Thank you very much for coming in, Mr. Bates.

The committee adjourned at 1459.

*The committee met at 0902 in room 151.*SPECIAL REPORT, AUDITOR GENERAL:
ORNGE AIR AMBULANCE
AND RELATED SERVICES

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'd like to call this meeting to order. To begin with, just note that the big binder you have in front of you is Mr. Jacob Blum's diary information. As you will recall, Mr. Blum requested that personal information in his diaries not related to Ornge air ambulance remain confidential, and the committee agreed to that. Because of that, his professional diaries will not become public documents as an exhibit with the committee minutes. Mr. Blum did emphasize that members of the committee may refer to parts of his professional diaries that relate to Ornge or to air ambulance in the province of Ontario.

MINISTRY OF HEALTH AND LONG-TERM CARE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our first witness this morning is Ruth Hawkins, assistant deputy minister and chief administrative officer, corporate services division. I'd like to welcome Ms. Hawkins here. You have received the information of a witness coming before the committee?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I have, thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Our clerk has an oath or affirmation for you.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): The Bible is in front of you there, Ms. Hawkins.

Ms. Hawkins, do you solemnly swear that the evidence that you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Please go ahead with your opening statement.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Good morning. My name is Ruth Hawkins. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before this committee with respect to the Auditor General's report into the Ornge air ambulance service.

I have been a public servant with the Ontario public service for 25 years. My direct involvement in the Ornge file began in October 2007, when I became executive lead for direct services, including OHIP registration and claims processing, land and air ambulance services and the divestment of the last provincial psychiatric hospital. I held that position till early 2010. Oversight of land and air ambulance is now the responsibility of the direct services division.

Since early 2010, I have been the chief administrative officer and assistant deputy minister for the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care. My responsibilities now include the provision of corporate services, such as human resources, finance, procurement and facilities management.

I feel it's important to note for the committee that the actions and responses taken by ministry staff, including myself, were informed by reviews of others as well as the information and assurances provided by the board and management of Ornge, which I will discuss later.

The alleged abuses that came to light recently are very concerning for all. Ornge's leadership's apparent promotion of self-interest over the public interest was not expected and was out of character with our regular relationships with transfer payment recipients.

Within that context, I would now like to focus my remarks on some key areas that may be of interest to this committee.

In 2008, the director of the emergency health services branch and I felt that it was important to undertake a review of Ornge. We expected that the Auditor General would likely conduct an audit of the organization in the normal course of his business. A ministry-initiated review could help to identify any potential issues and allow for remedial action. The Ministry of Finance's internal audit division engaged Meyers Norris Penney to undertake the review. This included the assessment of financial management processes, procurement processes, governance and accountability framework, the integrity of Ornge's financial and service data reports, the risk management process, and compliance with the performance agreement.

In addition, MNP also focused on operational and policy considerations. The MNP review determined that, "Ornge is using provincial grant funding economically, efficiently and for the purposes intended in providing air ambulance and related services.” We relied on these conclusions.

In November 2008, the emergency health services branch was forwarded a letter from a former Ornge employee that contained allegations relating to accounting practices and executive compensation at Ornge. This matter was immediately brought to my attention and to the attention of the then chief administrative officer, the director of the health audit service team and the manager of the forensic investigation team in the Ministry of Finance.

Two members of the forensic investigation team met with the complainant in November 2008 to review the contents of his letter. They concluded that evidence did not exist to support the contention that Ornge had a second set of financial books.

In December 2008, the director of the health audit service team and I met with the board chair of Ornge and shared the allegations in the letter. The board chair agreed to conduct an internal review. After completing that review, he assured the ministry that Ornge had thoroughly reviewed the allegations and confirmed that there was no merit to the concerns raised in the complainant’s letter.

The ministry relied on the Ornge board of directors to provide accurate financial and accounting information to the ministry. Hence, there was no reason to doubt the written assurances of the board chair, who is a fellow chartered accountant and a director of the Institute of Corporate Directors, that the allegations had no merit.

The Public Sector Salary Disclosure Act has also been the subject of discussion. Ornge did comply with this act. By definition, non-profit employers who receive more than $1 million in funding are required to report the salaries and benefits paid to their employees who earn more than $100,000 in salary and benefits in a given year. Each year, the Ministry of Finance collects this information from affected organizations and funding ministries.

In 2009, we understood that some executive services at Ornge, including those of the CEO, were now being provided through a related for-profit organization known at that time as Ornge Peel. This was troubling to me. I worked with the Ministry of Finance staff who confirmed that a company that is for-profit, like Ornge Peel, would not meet the definition of an employer under this act and therefore had no obligation to disclose the salaries under that act.

Thank you. I know you have questions, so I am happy to answer them.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much for that statement. We’ll start with the official opposition. You have 27 minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Chair. Ms. Hawkins, according to the ministry website, the corporate services division “leads the development and implementation of ministry management, accountability, controllership frameworks to ensure cost operational services to ministry clients, essential to the ... delivery of ministry programs...” You have been the executive lead for that division, I think you said since 2007. Is that right?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Let me just clarify: I was the executive lead responsible for OHIP registration claims processing, land and air ambulance, as well as the divestment of the last provincial psychiatric hospital. That was for the period late 2007 until early 2010.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, and land and air ambulance is what we’re here to discuss, right?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Are you saying that you had no responsibility for the references to the responsibility of corporate services divisions such as management, accountability, controllership framework? That wasn’t your responsibility?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That is my responsibility currently. I am currently the chief administrative officer, and I took over that appointment in January 2010. The actual direct responsibility for land and air ambulance as of that point in time is now the responsibility of the direct services division.

Mr. Frank Klees: Please clarify for us, then. From 2007 on, when you had responsibility for land and air ambulance, what was that responsibility?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: From the period of late October 2007 until early 2010, I had direct involvement in terms of oversight for land and air ambulance because the emergency health services branch did report directly to me. You are correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you did have responsibility for oversight of land and air ambulance services.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Directly, for the period of October 2007 till early 2010.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. When the Auditor General released his report, a great deal of his report dealt with the lack of oversight. I’ll quote from page 12 of his report, where he says, “In light of the high degree of responsibility and decision-making power the performance agreement gave Ornge, it was important for the ministry to have adequate processes in place to protect its interests.” Given your responsibility for oversight of the air ambulance program, what did you do to put those processes in place to protect the public interests?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: During that period, we had three pieces of framework that we relied on heavily. One was the performance agreement between the ministry and Ornge, the second was the Ambulance Act, and the third was the transfer payment accountability directive. During that period, under the performance agreement that was in play at that time, we had three very defined areas of responsibility as it related to oversight: There was the investigation and compliance—I believe you heard from the director of the emergency health services branch a couple of times in relation to the work that his branch did, and that branch, as I mentioned, reported to me—secondly, the efforts in terms of certification; and thirdly, the reporting under the then performance agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: The Auditor General concluded that the ministry failed in its oversight responsibilities. Do you agree with the Auditor General or do you disagree with him?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I believe, if I understood correctly, that the Auditor General, when he was making reference to that particular statement, was referring to the outcome of the work that he did during the period of his investigation that was identified in his report. What I would say is, I don't agree that the ministry did fail in their oversight for the period prior to when he is articulating what he did in the auditor's report.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you think that the ministry failed in its oversight responsibilities at any point in time relative to Ornge?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: The ministry relied very heavily, as I mentioned, on not only the written assurances that we received from Ornge, but also verbal assurances we received from them, in addition to the reports that we received, as well as the outcome of the third party review from Meyers Norris Penny.

Mr. Frank Klees: So in your opinion, the ministry failed in its oversight responsibilities because they relied on the information from these other people and it's really their responsibility, not the ministry's responsibility. That's really what you're telling us.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I would not agree that the ministry did not exercise their oversight responsibilities. I feel very strongly that we relied very heavily on the information that we received from Ornge, as well as the review of Meyers Norris Penny, as well as other assurances that we received.

Mr. Frank Klees: Ms. Hawkins, when did you meet Dr. Chris Mazza?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: For the very first time?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I would say years ago.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what was the context in which you came to know Dr. Mazza?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I came to know him when he became the CEO of Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: You didn't know him in his role at Sunnybrook?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: In his role at Sunnybrook, he was an emergency physician—

Mr. Frank Klees: You didn't get to know him then?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I did not.

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand that your husband was a doctor or still is at Sunnybrook.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes, that's correct. He is an emergency physician.

Mr. Frank Klees: And did he know Dr. Mazza at that time?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: They would be business colleagues, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever entertain Dr. Mazza in your home?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Never.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you never had a personal relationship with Dr. Mazza?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Absolutely not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why would you have told Mr. Jacob Blum that you did entertain Dr. Mazza in your home?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I don't recall ever telling Jacob Blum that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you recall meeting with Mr. Blum on the day that he left Ornge?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I think Mr. Blum may be mistaken with regard to the date that he referred to, because I did listen to his testimony when he was at this committee. My recollection is that we met in early July. It was the one and only time I'd ever met Mr. Blum and the one and only time that he had actually asked to meet with me.

Mr. Frank Klees: When he met with you, did the discussion of Ornge and irregularities or questionable business practices come up in the course of that discussion?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I actually don't recall the content of that discussion. It was in July 2008. That I can confirm.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you recall saying something like this to Mr. Blum: "I heard from an opposition MPP who stopped me in the hallway and asked me about a boat and lakefront property"? Do you recall that exchange?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, I do not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Now, according to Mr. Blum, he responded to you by saying something to the effect—I'll quote Mr. Blum: "You have the contractual, legislative and regulatory levers to find out anything you" need "to find out about Ornge." Why "rely on ... third party information." Do you recall any of that conversation?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, I don't recollect the conversation.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. What was the nature of your conversation, then, with Mr. Blum?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I actually don't recollect the conversation. I do recollect that we met, I do recall where we met, but other than that, I don't recollect the content of the conversation. It was a short meeting, it was a meet-and-greet, and it was the one and only meeting I ever had with Jacob Blum.

Mr. Frank Klees: So we have a gentleman who was head of one of the major organizations over which you had oversight responsibilities. He had just left this organization. He asked for a meeting with you and you recall nothing about that meeting?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I believe—

Mr. Frank Klees: It was a meet-and-greet.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I believe we met in early July. He indicated in his testimony before this committee that he had left, I believe he said around—I forget the exact date—July 17 or 18.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to refer to a letter from Mr. Keith Walmsley which he wrote to the Minister of Health, as you refer—it actually went to Minister Best. It was dated April 14, 2008. Now, you say that you became aware of it in November 2008. What happened to this letter in the meantime?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I don't know. I can't speak to what happened. What I can tell you is, I believe you're absolutely correct: He had addressed the letter to, I believe, Minister Best, but that letter was forwarded to the director of emergency health services branch on I believe it was November 14 or 15, 2008.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is it typical for a correspondence to bounce around the ministry for months, especially given the nature of this letter?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I can't speak to where exactly that letter was. I can only speak to the point when we received it and the action that we took immediately upon receiving it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did it concern you that it had been sitting around for months—

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: It absolutely—I'm sorry; I didn't mean to interrupt you.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did it concern you that this letter was written in April and you didn't see it until November?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That is why the day that we got it, Mr. Bates immediately—and I mean immediately. It was within certainly a couple of hours that he brought it to my attention, then we had immediately brought it to the attention of the internal audit division. Absolutely, it was concerning. The allegations in the letter were concerning, which is why we acted upon it immediately.

Mr. Frank Klees: So within a matter of weeks—these are serious allegations that Mr. Walmsley made. He refers to the exorbitant salary and benefits for the chief executive officer. He speaks of $2 million in salaries for an organization with 300 staff. He refers to the concern about two sets of books. He speaks about other “eye-opening situations,” as he put it, that are taking place at Ornge. Most are in order to maximize the surplus shown back to the ministry. He speaks of individuals who are “benefiting far too luxuriously.” He's speaking specifically about the president. Then he refers to using funds I do not believe that were the intent of the ministry. These are serious allegations.

You say you met with the director of the emergency health services branch when?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: The letter was forwarded to the director of emergency health services branch on I believe it was November 14, 2008.

Mr. Frank Klees: So November 14.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: You wrote a letter back to Mr. Walmsley six weeks after that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That is correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: And you say, “I want to assure you”—I'm quoting from the letter—“that upon receiving the letter, the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, with the assistance of the Ministry of Finance, have acted quickly to investigate these allegations and express our appreciation for your assistance with the investigation, which included your discussion with representatives from the Ministry of Finance's forensic investigation team.”

You close by saying, “I am pleased to say that the issues identified in your letter have been addressed and once again thank you for bringing forward your concerns.”

In six weeks, you undertook an investigation. You brought in the Ministry of Finance's forensic team. They conducted their investigation and said, “Everything is fine at Ornge.” In retrospect, can you tell me if you thought, if you think now, that that investigation was thorough?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: If I can, let me just talk about what happened—

Mr. Frank Klees: No, I would just like you to answer my question, please. Yes or no? Was it a thorough investigation, in your opinion?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: In my opinion, we acted quickly and we did three very important and key things. The very first thing is, we contacted the forensic investigation team. The forensic investigation team met with the individual in November. I'm not sure exactly what date it was, but it was certainly within the two weeks of the receipt of that letter, and I'm thinking it was even sooner than that. That was one thing.

The second thing is, the director of the health audit service team and I met with the board chair, shared the letter with him, and he was very concerned, as were we. He agreed to do a review, which he did.

Thirdly, we also—because at this time as well, because we're now talking late 2008, Meyers Norris Penny was also—

Mr. Frank Klees: We've been through that. I want to get to the heart of this letter. I'd like to ask you who wrote that letter that you signed, the December 29, 2008, letter in response to Dr. Walmsley. Who wrote that letter?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I would have written that with the support of the health audit service team.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you had some help writing this letter.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Correct, but that would not be unusual at my position.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me ask you, when you first saw Mr. Walmsley's letter, did you speak to Dr. Mazza about that letter?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, I did not, and I deliberately did not do that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you speak to anyone at Ornge about that letter?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, I did not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you speak to the associate deputy minister about the letter?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: The associate deputy minister in 2008?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, I don't believe there was a position that existed at that time in 2008.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you speak to the assistant deputy minister?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That I did, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was the nature of that conversation? Did you get direction from the assistant deputy minister in terms of what steps should be taken?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes. The day that the director of emergency health services branch received that letter, he immediately contacted me, and I immediately advised my assistant deputy minister of not only the letter, but we also then had a discussion about next steps.

Mr. Frank Klees: What did the assistant deputy minister instruct you to do?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: She instructed me to take full action, and that would include the contacting of the internal audit division—not only the health audit service team, but also the forensic investigation team. We did that that very same day.

Mr. Frank Klees: How long did it take for the forensic investigations team to conduct their audit at Ornge?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I'm going to say maybe a couple of weeks, somewhere in that neighbourhood. I couldn't tell you the exact timeline.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there a written report of that audit?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: They did a written response.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever see that response?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I did.

Mr. Frank Klees: I would like to ask if you could table a copy of that response with the committee, please. When can we expect that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: We'll do our best to get it to the committee as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you enlighten this committee as to why it takes weeks for straightforward information that we request to come to this committee?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Could you repeat that, please?

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you enlighten this committee as to why it would take weeks for the Ministry of Health to deliver information that we request here?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: It's my understanding that the latest information that you had requested is very voluminous, and people are working very, very hard on getting the information as quickly as they can.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, there was a lot of information that we requested that was not voluminous—it was fairly straightforward—and we're still waiting.

However, when you saw that report, was there anything in that report that raised red flags for you?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Which report are you referring to?

Mr. Frank Klees: The report that we just discussed, the forensic investigation report.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: As I maybe mentioned earlier, the forensic investigation team has a particular skill set in terms of the work that they do—

Mr. Frank Klees: I would hope it's investigating the issues that were brought forward.

My question is very straightforward. We only have so much time. I really would appreciate it if we could just answer the question. Was there anything in that report that you saw, which came about as a result of the forensic investigation, that raised concerns, that was a red flag for you?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No. They had indicated in the report that there was no merit to the allegation.

Mr. Frank Klees: One of the issues that Mr. Walmsley raised in his letter was how surplus funds were essentially being hidden. We also have reports that indicated that there was one occasion in 2008 where there was some $5 million in surplus funds. Ornge asked if they could keep those funds, and you said yes. Do you recall that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I do.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you have any concern that this forensic investigation would implicate you in that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That the forensic investigation would implicate me in—

Mr. Frank Klees: In allowing Ornge to keep those funds.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Let me explain, if I could, around the $5 million that you have referred to. It would have been late 2008 when—and this would be during one of the quarterly reports that we would have received from Ornge. There was an identification and a request at that time that they may require some additional funding in the air ambulance program. What they were asking for was not new money, but rather to reallocate money from the critical care land ambulance program to the air ambulance program. There were three particular reasons why they wanted to do that. One was related to increased fuel costs; the second one, my recollection was, was related to training that they wished to do for their staff; and the third was related to rate increases associated with their contractors.

Mr. Frank Klees: What about the fourth one, that they wanted to make a contribution to the foundation?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: We did not know that at the time.

Mr. Frank Klees: But that's what happened.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: You're right. The first consolidated statement, I believe, that we received was on June 30, 2008. My recollection is that the—I'd have to go back in my memory—

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, let me reword this. When you found out that the $5 million was actually put into the foundation and not used for the purposes that—what did you do?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I have no evidence that the $5 million was put into the foundation.

Mr. Frank Klees: It's in the Norris report that you yourself commissioned. It's right there. It's a line item. Where did that money come from? This organization had no revenue other than revenue coming from the Ministry of Health.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just so I can follow this: Have we got a copy of the report and that—

Mr. Frank Klees: It was distributed to you.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. I want to just check the line item that you're referring to. It's an important point.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, you have four minutes left.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, do you want to stop the clock?

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes, stop the clock. I just want to—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We only have so much time, so—

Mr. David Zimmer: But this is an important point, Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well.

Mr. David Zimmer: Can somebody direct me? I have this document, Frank.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: And where are we in that?

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me just pull it out.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you have a copy, Madam Witness?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes. I believe he's referring to page 17 in the report.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you see the line item there?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did that concern you?

Mr. David Zimmer: Which one is it here?

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, while we bring Mr. Zimmer up to speed on this, I just want to make sure that I'm not losing my time.

Mr. David Zimmer: Frank, we just got this this morning.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, we read it this morning, Mr. Zimmer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You will have half an hour, Mr. Zimmer, coming up, or 27 minutes.

Continue, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: My question is very straightforward. When you saw that in the audit report, that this organization had no revenue stream other than from the Ministry of Health and all of a sudden we have $5 million in a line item that is a foundation, how did you react to that? What steps did you take to get clarification, and did you take any initiative at all?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Let me go back, if we can for a moment, to the $5 million that you referenced.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just a second: I'm looking at the document and page 17 refers to $8.4 million. Have I got a different document here? I don't see the line item here.

M^{me} France G  linas: The report starts with this on page 17, and it's the top of the second paragraph.

Mr. David Zimmer: "Effective January 1, 2008, Ornge Foundation was registered"—

M^{me} France G  linas: Yes. Go to the next line: "In the year end March 31, 2008, Ornge Foundation was allocated a specified gift from Ornge in the amount of $8.4 million."

Mr. David Zimmer: Ah. Sorry, Frank. You were referring to $5 million. That's why I couldn't find it.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. Continue, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you question that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: With regard to the $5 million: We had a business case request from Ornge with regard to allocating the $5 million from the land ambulance program to the air ambulance program, and it was for the three reasons that I had articulated. There was direction given at that time, because I did not have authority to be able to make that reallocation of funding from critical care land ambulance to air ambulance. So that's an important piece.

I then wrote, as I think you mentioned, a letter to Ornge indicating that a decision had been made that they could allocate the money from critical care land ambulance to air ambulance. Further, I think what's really critical is that in that letter it was not only saying that the funding had to be used for the three matters that I spoke about, but further we asked Ornge to also confirm back in writing to us that in fact they understood that and that the money would be used for the purpose intended.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who made the decision?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: It would have been made by the deputy minister of the day.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who was that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I believe it was Ron Sapsford.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, you are out of time. We move to the NDP, please. Ms. G  linas?

M^{me} France G  linas: I would like to start with really basic information. I take it that you prepared before you came here. You knew we were going to ask you questions about Ornge. You knew we were going to ask you questions about the Auditor General. Knowing what you know now, with all that has been printed and said about this topic, do you figure anything went wrong at Ornge?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I can only really speak for the time that I had what I'd call direct involvement, which is the period of 2007 to early 2010. During that time, if there were any matters that came to our attention, we dealt with them quickly and we dealt with them very expeditiously. Also, when we were dealing with any matters that came to our attention, we certainly sought the advice of others. We also had written assurances from Ornge, not only in some cases from the board or their senior staff, but we also had assurances if we needed to seek advice on other aspects, whether it was the Ambulance Act or whether it was the performance agreement or whatever. During that time, I feel that we had very good oversight. I worked very closely with the very capable staff in the emergency health services branch, who provided me with assistance during that time.

M^{me} France G  linas: So you felt that you had good oversight until 2010. I will go back to this, but for now my question is—you prepared to come here. We're now in June 2012. Do you believe anything went wrong at Ornge?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: When I looked at the findings of the Auditor General, that was a big surprise to me. When I saw his report, when I saw what he had indicated in that report, it was troubling, because he had indicated, in various parts of his report, as I have read through it, that there was certain data, for example, that we didn't receive. We received some information, but we found that we apparently didn't receive all the information that we probably should have.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So my question is: Do you believe that there's anything wrong with Ornge?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I think that the ministry has made great efforts in terms of amending the performance agreement to ensure that any matters that were identified in the auditor's report—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Are any of the matters that were identified in the auditor's report things that you consider wrong?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I think that it's very important, if we look at the auditor's report—he strongly recommended that we amend the performance agreement to make it stronger, to increase the accountability and the transparency—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Why would he say that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: He indicated, in his report, that in the original performance agreement there were particular things where Ornge did not have to come to the ministry to get approval for, for example. That would be in terms of setting up new corporate structures—they didn't need to come to the ministry to get approval for that. They didn't need to come and get approval for the way they delivered their service—

M^{me} France Gélinas: And do you think this is right or wrong that they could do that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I wasn't party to or had—

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, but you are here now, and I am asking you.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I think that the new performance agreement is very, very good, and I think that it does what it needs to do, which is actually to make sure that we have good transparency, we have good oversight and that we have very good accountability.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You tell us that from 2007 to 2010, while you were there, you were really diligent in following up on everything, but what we read about that period of time doesn't make sense with what you're telling us this morning. You have Mr. Blum, who goes to you in 2008; he has left Ornge, and he tells you about wrongdoing at Ornge. You develop amnesia and can't remember a word that this man has told you. Then, a couple of months later, you get a letter in November 2008 that you act upon—a letter that is pretty condemning of lots of wrongdoing going on at Ornge. So within a few months, two credible people come telling you that there are wrongdoings happening at Ornge. The first one you can't remember—you remember that you had the meeting, but you can't remember what he told you. The second one is in writing, so I'm guessing that you remember that letter, and you acted.

In between this, there was freedom of access to information from my party, from the NDP, asking for the salary of Dr. Mazza; nobody could tell us and apparently nobody knew. We also had—I've forgotten—over 42 questions during estimates that asked about what was going on at Ornge, and we never got any answers from the Ministry of Health as to the 42 questions that were put out, that were part of the estimates. We always get answers to estimate questions, but for some reason, that time we didn't.

How am I supposed to reconcile the fact that you're telling us that you were giving good oversight from 2007 to 2010, that you gave good oversight, that there was nothing wrong going on at Ornge because the board was telling you so and the forensic investigator and the health audit services team and the MNP—everybody was telling you that it was just fine, yet you were getting credible people telling you the exact opposite. Try to make sense of that for me, because right now, I fail to see it.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I think it's very important to reiterate what I had mentioned as well, which is that when matters came to our attention, we reviewed them quickly. We also ensured that we got the necessary assurances from very capable, credible individuals in terms of reviewing those situations and providing us with support that would, in essence, provide us with the ability to respond to those particular matters—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Does the fact that you did not know Dr. Mazza's salary—any other transfer payment agency of the Ministry of Health that you have been responsible to and you want to know how much money somebody who makes over $100,000 is making, that has always been available to you. Why is it that this didn't even raise a red flag with you?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: In 2008, his salary was on the sunshine list. In 2009, it was not—I believe I've got those years correct. At that time, I was—you're absolutely right—the executive lead for the land and air ambulance, among other things. We did raise the question about where his salary was. We had determined in early 2009, because Meyers Norris Penny had been undergoing their fieldwork—they had indicated in some of their early review that Ornge Peel actually had management agreements and that certain executives were now working for Ornge Peel.

M^{me} France Gélinas: At the same time that this report was telling you this, it was also telling you that this agency was not making any money; that the only money that this agency was getting was coming from your ministry. Here is your ministry money going to that agency to pay people who could have just as well been paid by your ministry because you were paying them.

You've been a bureaucrat for 25 years. You rose through the ranks because you were good at what you did. You're confronted with something like this, and no red flags went up? Or did they go up and other people shooed them away?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: The matter that you're referring to in terms of the public sector salary disclosure: Once we understood that there may be these management arrangements, we immediately consulted with the Ministry of Finance with regard to the criteria that governed that particular act. The criteria for that act are very specific because it refers specifically to—

M^{me} France Gélinas: I understand all of this, but you're sitting here right now because things went wrong at Ornge. I spent the first 10 minutes of my questioning getting you to say that things went wrong at Ornge. Even today, on June 26, 2012, you were not able to say that things went wrong, yet I tried for 10 minutes to get you to admit that things went wrong. Are you willing to admit now that some things went wrong at Ornge?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: The auditor's report indicated that there were matters that were brought to the attention of him—

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you're not willing to admit it. Why is it so hard?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I am admitting that the findings in the auditor's report are very important and very serious, and that we are taking the recommendations very seriously.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Are you able to say the word "wrong"? Because I'm starting to doubt it.

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, that's browbeating the witness. The witness is entitled to answer the question as she sees—

Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Gélinas, continue.

M^{me} France Gélinas: They come to you to be able to spend end-of-year surplus money. You can remember in detail all of the reasons why. You can't remember conversations you've had a couple of months before, but you remember in detail exactly what they were asking you to do with that money. You failed to follow up to see that this money went to what they had been telling you that you remember in detail. It went to a foundation and a for-profit corporation. Do you figure that there are lots of transfer payment agencies in your branch of the ministry that make million-dollar donations to their foundation, that transfer millions of dollars to for-profit corporations?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I'd like to respond to the question that you talked about with regard to the $5 million. I would disagree with you that we did not follow up. In fact, the original letter that did go to them indicated very clearly that the money was to be used, and it indicated for what. An Ornge senior executive signed back indicating that they understood that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you follow up to see if they actually not only understood but they actually acted the way they said?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: We also received assurances from them. We had no reason at the time to disagree with the assurances that were provided—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you have reason now to disagree with some of the assurances that they had given you in the past?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Well, I could only speak to the assurances in the work that I did during the time of 2007 to 2010, when I—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Good enough. During that period of time.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: We absolutely got assurances from them, and I had no reason to doubt—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you have reason to doubt now?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Today there's certainly a new executive in place, and I'm very confident that they have Ornge on the right track.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I don't understand. You're part of the Ministry of Health. You are here to help us get to what went wrong. If everything was hunky-dory, we wouldn't be here; we wouldn't be asking you to come. But you're not helping at all. You refuse to admit that anything went wrong. You refuse to admit that people did give you signals that things were wrong; that when the board talked to you they didn't tell you the truth. When they signed assurances to you, the signature was not worth the paper it was written on. Why is it that you cannot come forward and see what's plain in front of you?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Ms. Gélinas, I want to be very clear that the auditor raised issues, and those issues were being raised starting in 2011. He raised issues in his report. He absolutely did. And those are things—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Issues that were wrong?

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, the witness has been asked the question several times—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer, you don't have the floor.

Continue, Ms. Gélinas.

Mr. David Zimmer: She can't insist that the witness change her answer. The witness is under oath—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Ms. Hawkins, was it wrong what happened? Was it wrong?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: What I'm trying to say to you is that the Auditor General made—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Not the Auditor General. Do you think it was wrong? Now reading what the Auditor General wrote, do you think what happened at Ornge was wrong?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I think it's very disappointing that information that we as a ministry counted on—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you agree that assurances that were given to you, that you relied on, were false?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: For the period that I had direct involvement, which was 2007 to 2010, I had no reason—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: No, not that you had no reason—hear the question clearly. Not that you had no reason; that now, in retrospect, the assurances that you were given were false?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I have no proof that they were false.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Well, you have the Auditor General's report that indicated that many of the concerns that were raised, that you were advised of, were the same concerns that continued. Despite the board telling you that the concerns had been addressed and that “We will address them,” it turns out the Auditor General’s report makes it very clear that those concerns were not addressed. So in retrospect, very clearly, the assurances that you were given by the board were false. Do you agree with that?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I wouldn’t agree that the assurances were false at that time. Let me tell you why. In the auditor’s report he actually points to, starting in 2011—that’s when he indicates there are matters that I think were disturbing.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: It’s very clear that the issue of Dr. Mazza being paid a disproportionate, ridiculously high salary, given his responsibilities and given the budget of Ornge—that that salary being very, very high, or much higher than would be expected or that’s appropriate—that was clearly going on before 2011. We have ample evidence to suggest that.

At the time you were responsible, when you had been given assurances that there was nothing going on that was amiss, that everything had been taken care of—at least that one component you can confirm, that the salary that was being paid to Dr. Mazza was far disproportionate to what was appropriate. At least that issue, you must admit, was wrong, and that the assurances you were given were not reliable.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Let me do my best to answer your question. The very first thing is, I did not know what Dr. Mazza’s salary was until it was reported last year. I did not know that. That’s number one.

Number two is that the Provincial Auditor also indicated that the way the Public Sector Salary Disclosure Act is currently outlined and the criteria—that according to that act, Ornge did comply with that act.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. I’m going to ask you one question here. Do you agree with me that the Auditor General—these are agree or disagree. Do you agree with me that the Auditor General’s concern—one of his concerns was that the salary that Dr. Mazza was being paid, the $1.2 million, the $1.4 million, was too high. Do you agree that that was an issue raised by the Auditor General?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Very much so.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. Do you agree that the money that was given to Ornge was not being used properly in terms of patient care and that there were issues raised by the Auditor General in terms of the helicopters and the way the money was being used?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I believe the Auditor General was very clear in that the original performance agreement gave the—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Not the performance agreement issue, just that he had raised an issue about the money that was being used at Ornge not being used properly, that generally, that was a concern: Do you agree?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That was his concern, absolutely. What I—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. So the letter—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Singh, let her respond.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure. Go on.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead, Ms. Hawkins.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I believe the Auditor General indicated very clearly that the original performance agreement allowed and gave responsibility for Ornge to undertake and make decisions about how they delivered that service. That was the performance agreement that we were working with at that time, up until it was amended in 2012.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So at least those two points—that the salary of Dr. Mazza was too high and that money was not being used appropriately at Ornge were issues that were raised by the Auditor General. You’ve agreed to that. Those two concerns were exactly what was raised in the letter as well. Mr. Walmsley’s letter was exactly that, Jacob Blum’s concerns were exactly that: that there were some salary issues, that people were being paid way too much and you should look into that, that money was being given out like water; and the second concern was that the money wasn’t being used appropriately. Those were two concerns raised in 2008, and they were the exact two concerns—at least those two; there’s more—that were raised by the Auditor General. So do you not see that the same concerns raised in 2008 turned out to be the exact same concerns that the Auditor General found, and that, in between, nothing was done?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I really want to reiterate that at the time, when we received Mr. Walmsley’s letter, I want you to know and I want the committee to know that we took that very, very seriously. We acted on it immediately, and I mean immediately. That was acted on within hours of receipt of that letter.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We heard this, and you’ve stated this a number of times: The forensic investigation team was called in, the health audit services team was called in, plus we have the MNP that was going—we get all of this. But at the end of the day, you didn’t know how much Mr. Mazza was making, and this is what the complaint was all about. At the end of the day, those people had basically been whistle-blowers, telling you, “This guy’s salary is out of whack.” But you conclude your investigation not knowing how much he’s making. Is it just me who thinks there’s a disconnect here?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I think what’s really important is that at that point in time, we relied very heavily on individual—

M^{me} France Gélinas: But you relied on individuals who did not give you answers.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Just let her respond. Go ahead.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: We relied heavily on individuals who had—let’s think about who the people were that we relied on. We relied on people who have professional designations, that have very high ethics and values. There was no reason, when I received assurances from those individuals, that that information was not correct.

M^{me} France G  linas: Have you ever dealt with Mr. Apps?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Never.

M^{me} France G  linas: Have you ever seen any of the documents that he has prepared?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: What kind of documents?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: He prepared, I believe, a letter relating to consolidation efforts that was, I'm going to say, early 2008, and I believe he also had written a letter—I think one within the ministry and possibly one to the Ministry of Finance as well.

M^{me} France G  linas: There were people within the Ministry of Finance who alerted yourself and five other members of the Ministry of Health that it was weird that when they were asking for basic financial information from Ornge, financial information that your ministry should already have, they couldn't get it and they had to deal through Mr. Apps. Had this been the case with you?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Can you give me more specifics with regard to that request you're just referring to?

M^{me} France G  linas: Sure. During the consolidation effort, the Ministry of Finance was in charge of this. They were asking Ornge for basic financial information; they couldn't get it. They approached, through an email, yourself, as well as five other people within the Ministry of Health, telling them that they're having a tough time getting financial information from Ornge, and isn't it odd that their request for financial information gets answered by Mr. Apps.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Let me try to answer that as well. In what would have been late 2007, just as I'd taken on my role as executive lead, and in early 2008, there were efforts under way with regard to consolidation. As part of that, as one of your other witnesses indicated, the decisions with regard to consolidation are made by the Ministry of Finance through the provincial controller's office. It is not unusual that the provincial controller's office would ask the ministry for various pieces of information. That would not be unusual at all for them to do that. Remembering as well, this would be the very first time that Ornge would be consolidated. So there would be information that maybe was asked for that we may not have had readily at hand.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Ms. Hawkins, I just want to confirm this for the record: Would you agree with the statement that the same concerns—or at least these two concerns—that were raised in 2008 by the letter by Mr. Walmsley, the concerns of salary being too high for some of the executives and that the money that was given to Ornge not being used appropriately, were the two very same concerns—two of many—that were raised by the Auditor General in his report later on in 2011?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have one minute left.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I believe the Auditor General spoke specifically that even though there were for-profit entities and if there were individuals who were hired by those for-profit entities, he felt that it was important that we should receive that information.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: The two concerns were the same. Do you agree with that statement, that the concerns raised in 2008 were the same concerns, ostensibly, that were raised by the Auditor General? Obviously, Mr. McCarter went into much more detail and much more thoroughly, but they were the same two concerns, ostensibly. Do you agree?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We are out of time, so we'll move to the government now. Who would like to ask questions? Mr. Zimmer, go ahead.

Mr. David Zimmer: Ms. Hawkins, Mr. Klees has spent some time in his examination of you bringing up various things that Mr. Jacob Blum had raised at this committee. My sense was, he seemed to put a lot of confidence in Mr. Blum's word and evidence. Have you had a chance to review Mr. Blum's evidence?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I did.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you recall that Mr. Blum was asked questions about the circumstances of his leaving or departure from Ornge?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: My recollection—

Mr. David Zimmer: No, no; do you recall that exchange in his evidence?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: It was in his evidence, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you recall, reviewing that evidence, that Mr. Blum stated unequivocally that he was not fired but that he resigned?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, I do not. I saw it in his evidence, but I think it's important that—my recollection is, when I verified the information, that our meeting was in early July. He indicated in his evidence that he left somewhere around July 17 or 18.

Mr. David Zimmer: But Mr. Blum's position is that he resigned, and sometime a couple of weeks later, Mr. Tom Lepine—do you know who Mr. Lepine is?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. Mr. Lepine said that Mr. Blum was fired. Are you aware of this question about whether Blum was fired or resigned?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Only to the extent of reading the proceedings of this committee.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you have any information or did you get any information yourself whether Blum was fired or resigned?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, I did not.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you have a view as to whether he was fired or resigned?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I do not.

Mr. David Zimmer: When Mr. Blum was here giving his evidence, he brought selected portions of his diary, which he referenced in his evidence, and today, after being compelled by the committee, Mr. Blum has released the full contents of his diary. It's a thick document; I would say it's six or seven inches. Were you aware that this committee had to compel Mr. Blum to release the full contents of his diary rather than selected excerpts?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Only to the extent that I would have read the motions.

Mr. David Zimmer: In previous evidence of witnesses, reference was made to rumours circulating around the executive suite at Ornge about Mr. Blum's drug use; in particular, cocaine use. Were you aware of any of that at the time?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Not at all.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you read that in the evidence?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I read it in the proceedings of this committee—some questioning around that.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you have personal dealings with Mr. Blum?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I only met with Mr. Blum once, and it was the meeting that we have just referenced that was held in early July.

Mr. David Zimmer: From your point of view, did you find that a forthcoming and satisfying meeting or not?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I actually don't recollect a whole lot about that meeting, other than it was held at 5700 Yonge Street.

Mr. David Zimmer: The members of the forensic investigation team that met with the complainant in November about the letter from the complainant: Do you know who those two persons were?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I couldn't tell you their names offhand.

Mr. David Zimmer: Could you determine that and give us that information?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Absolutely, I could. Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Typically, what are the qualifications of someone on a forensic investigation team?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I couldn't tell you exactly, but typically the individuals who are in the internal audit division, of which the forensic investigation team is a part, would typically be individuals who have an accounting designation of one sort or another. Oftentimes they may also have further training as it relates to investigative techniques, so various specialized training courses, for example. I couldn't tell you—

Mr. David Zimmer: What's your understanding of how a forensic auditor's skill set differs from a regular auditor's?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: The forensic auditor, I believe, would be—and I can't speak to it, because I'm not one, which is why we actually engage them. But certainly they would be looking for, I would think, specific evidence, hard evidence as opposed to hearsay, in order to make their determination. They no doubt asked a series of questions, but I can't go beyond that because I'm not one. I do know that we relied very heavily on the work that they did.

Mr. David Zimmer: Would you agree with me that when one calls in a forensic auditor rather than a regular auditor, there's a whole different approach to the audit? They're looking for things that aren't right from a forensic point of view.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That would be correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why did the ministry send in, from your point of view, a forensic auditor rather than a regular auditor?

1010

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: In this situation, I took the advice of the director of the health audit service team. We determined that we felt that it would be very helpful if we did have forensic investigation so that we could actually have somebody who actually goes out and looks for the kind of evidence and asks the kinds of questions that would get at what this gentleman had raised in his complainant letter.

Mr. David Zimmer: Would you agree with me that a forensic audit, as opposed to a regular audit, is really the highest, the most rigorous, the most demanding type of audit?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I would say yes, and that is why we asked that these individuals review the allegations in this letter that the complainant had written.

Mr. David Zimmer: It was the report, then, of the forensic auditors that you placed great weight on in deciding what to do in following up on their report?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: We relied very heavily on their findings.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Good morning, Ms. Hawkins. I'd like to follow up a little bit on the exchange that we had earlier around the MNP report at page 17. There was a question around a transfer of $5 million. If I understood your response correctly, you referenced a transfer of $5 million either from air to critical or critical to air—which was it?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: It was critical care land ambulance to the air ambulance program.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You approved that transfer from one program to another. Just to clarify: That was transfer payment money to Ornge, and do I understand correctly that Ornge came to you and said, "We have a bit of a surplus in this line. We have a bit of a challenge in another line. Do we have your permission to transfer from one program to another?" Was that the conversation?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That is correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Can you tell us, then, the action of the ministry?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes. Actually, that request came in the form of a business case from Ornge at the time. The rationale associated with that particular request: It would come to the attention of the emergency health services branch, and the staff in that branch would do analysis, and that analysis would be submitted to myself as well as, at the time, the chief administrative officer.

We did not have the authority to make that decision. That analysis would have gone to the deputy minister of the day to provide direction.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Is that a process that you would have carried out with other transfer partners? If any transfer partner came and said, "We have a challenge here. We could transfer some money from another piece of the budget. Do we have your permission to transfer from one line to another?", this would be a process that you just described that you would have done had any transfer partner made that request?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That's correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This was a fairly routine conversation around, "Is there a business case supporting transfer from one line to another within a transfer payment partner's budget?"

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That's correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What I don't understand is what, if anything, that has to do with a note in the MNP report about a transfer from Ornge to the Ornge Foundation of $8.4 million. Are these two conversations in any way related?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I would say that they're only related because of the Ornge financial statement, so let me get back to it. The reallocation from critical care land ambulance to air ambulance was a fairly routine request that may come from other transfer payment entities. For the Ornge Foundation that is noted on page 17 and was subsequently noted on the financial statement, I don't have any evidence to show—maybe others do—that in fact Ornge took that $5 million and actually used it for this purpose that is identified on page 17.

We got assurances from the senior folks—it was actually the VP; I forget her exact title, but Ms. Renzella wrote us back and asserted that in fact the $5 million that we had given authorization for was used for the purpose intended. It was for those three things that we talked about: One was for additional fuel costs, the second one was related to training, and the third was related to rate increases associated with the service contractors.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Did the money go through the foundation—

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, it did not.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It did not. So the $5-million transfer from one place to another, if I'm following, really has nothing to do with the entry that's in the MNP report at page 17.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I do not believe so. Our transfer—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, that's why I was confused. I couldn't see any connection between the transfer you were talking about, which I was aware of, and the $8.4 million that is noted in the MNP report.

If I may note, what the auditor says about that is that there was money transferred to the Ornge Foundation, and it would be used to—I'm paraphrasing here—purchase assets. But it then goes on, and this is a direct quote: "Ornge received a perpetual licence to use the assets purchased or developed with this donation, and the asset will be gifted over to the province in the event that the" performance agreement "is terminated." Then it goes on, further down, to say, "The transaction was recorded by way of journal entry, and the funds continue to remain in Ornge's bank account. Management advises that the procurement policies and procedures set up in Ornge will be used in the spending of grant funding by any Ornge entity."

Recognizing that this seems to be a discussion about some different funds and assets, was there anything in that note in the audit report that raised any particular concern, other than perhaps the oddity of why they set up the foundation?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I don't think it did because, specifically, Meyers Norris Penny had indicated in some other notation within the report that they didn't raise any issues with the fact that this Ornge Foundation had been set up. I don't have the exact page, but there is reference to that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, thank you. That clarifies a bit, because we seem to have two sides of a conversation that didn't seem to be directly related. I'll turn it over to Mr. Moridi.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you, Ms. Hawkins, for appearing before this committee. I understand, Ms. Hawkins, that you were assistant deputy minister with the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, and also that you are the chief administrative officer for the ministry's corporate services. How long have you been holding these positions?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I've held that position since early 2010.

Mr. Reza Moridi: What previous positions did you have with the ministry?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Prior to my current position, as I mentioned, from 2007 to 2010, I was the executive lead. It is in that capacity that, as I mentioned, I had direct involvement with land and air ambulance as well as OHIP registration and claims processing. In addition, another role that I played was—we were divesting the last provincial psychiatric hospital. That was also a project. Prior to that, I was working with the late Dr. Sheela Basrur in public health, so I had at least a couple of years that I worked with her and had that wonderful opportunity. I also had the opportunity to work in the deputy minister's office as one of his advisers.

Mr. Reza Moridi: When it comes to Ornge and also its predecessor organization, Ontario Air Ambulance, could you give us some precise information about your oversight and responsibilities over these two organizations?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Yes. Let me just reiterate with regard to my oversight during the period of 2007 to 2010. The emergency health services branch reported to me during that particular time. We focused primarily, as I had mentioned, on the three critical aspects of our oversight responsibilities, which were: the performance agreement that was put in place at the time; secondly, the Ambulance Act; and thirdly, the transfer payment accountability directive. Within those particular areas of responsibility, the emergency health services branch did further investigations. There was also compliance certification that I believe Mr. Bates had spoken to the committee about. Thirdly was the financial reporting. Under the financial reporting, we would get quarterly reports, we would get annual reports, and we would get business plans from them. Then, of course, throughout the course of that time, there was always a lot of dialogue. There was a particular gentleman in the emergency health services branch, during my time as executive lead, who had primarily the day-to-day contact with Ornge.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Did you have any dealings with Ornge and its predecessor organization between 2003 and 2007?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I did not.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Okay. Ms. Hawkins, the Auditor General, in his report, mentions that Ornge refrained to provide information to the Auditor General. Did you have a similar experience in dealing with Ornge, in terms of obstruction of information to the ministry?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I've thought a lot about that statement that the auditor made. At the time, we didn't know what information we weren't getting, frankly. They gave us the information that we had asked for, but we didn't know what we were not told.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would you agree with the Auditor General that they were refraining from the provision of information to the Auditor General?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I'm sorry, could you repeat that?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would you agree that Ornge was refraining from providing information to the Auditor General, as he mentions repeatedly in his report? Would you agree with him?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: He was very clear that he did not get the information that he asked for, and when he did get it, it was delayed.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Now knowing that they actually refrained from the provision of information to the Auditor General, would you think that Ornge did this deliberately? Do you think that they deliberately refrained from providing information to the Auditor General?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I would hope not.

Mr. Reza Moridi: The ministry, I understand, tried to compel Ornge to provide information. Were you involved in that process of asking Ornge to provide information to the ministry?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Could you give me more specifics about what you may be referring to?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Well, the information with regard to, for example, the sunshine list, the salary disclosure. Were you involved in compelling Ornge to provide information to the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: No, I was not directly involved in what had transpired. I think he was referring to 2011 in his report.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Anyone else for questions over there? We have five minutes left.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, I meant we were finished.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're finished. Okay.

Thank you very much. We've had equal time for all parties. Thank you for coming before the committee this morning.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Thank you.

Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Do we have agreement from the committee to allow the last five minutes to be—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I have a few more questions, Chair. Thank you very much.

We've spent a lot of time looking retroactively backwards; I wonder if we could do a little bit more current and forward-looking. If you look at the level of oversight that you had 12 months ago versus the level of oversight that is available today, how would you compare that level of oversight that's available?

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: I would say that the amended performance agreement has a much greater degree of oversight, accountability and transparency. The original performance agreement did not require Ornge to seek approval for—for example, they didn't have to come and ask to issue bonds; they did not have to come and ask to buy helicopters. That was the responsibility of Ornge.

The amended performance agreement that came into place in March has much greater accountability. They must now come to the ministry and ask for approval prior to undertaking something like that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Many of the serious issues, like the issuance of bonds, the purchase of helicopters, the creation of all these spinoff companies that I don't think we've even figured out yet—none of those actions would be possible under the new performance agreement.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: That's my understanding.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. Thanks for coming before the committee this morning.

Ms. Ruth Hawkins: Thank you.

CITY OF OSHAWA

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Now we have our next witness: Mr. John Henry, mayor of the city of Oshawa. Come forward, please. Welcome, Mr. Henry. You've received the information for a witness coming before committee?

Mr. John Henry: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Thank you. Our clerk has an oath for you.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Mr. Henry, do you solemnly affirm that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Mr. John Henry: Yes.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I believe Mr. Henry has a number of documents that he does have copies of for all committee members, which the clerk will distribute to committee members.

You have time for an opening statement. Would you like to take a few minutes?

Mr. John Henry: Thank you, Chair. With me today we have David Potts, director of legal services; Cindy Symons-Milroy, who is the director of economic development; and Stephen Wilcox, who is our airport manager.

I'm happy to be here today. The documents that are being passed around are a complete collection of the history between the transactions of Ornge and the city of Oshawa—all emails, all documents. There is a section in the front of it that will give you the date, the contact and a summary of what the item is, so it should be very easy to follow through. Specific questions related to what went on are available here. I may not be able to answer the aviation questions, so that's why we have brought Mr. Wilcox.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for providing all that information.

Mr. John Henry: Thank you so much for allowing me the opportunity to come here today and bring forward the city of Oshawa's dealings with Ornge, which were actually quite favourable for both Ornge and the city of Oshawa.

The city of Oshawa, as you're aware, is east of Toronto. By bringing Ornge into the Oshawa area, we were able to offer the opportunity for a higher level of health care to 4.4 million people in Ontario.

While we're here and as I'm starting to speak, I really do truly want to take the time. I have a background, from my younger days working in emergency measures—I was trained as a firefighter—to really have the respect for the front-line service people, for the pilots and the people who work on the helicopters. This doesn't deviate from the great work that they do, along with police, paramedics, fire and hospital throughout Ontario, and I want to make that point. They are, despite all that's going on, a key part of the health care of the residents of Ontario.

When you look at the city of Oshawa—and you will hear later today, I'm sure, why the business case for Oshawa worked—it made sense. We were centrally located. If you look at the city of Oshawa and the airport, it has all the features it needed to make Ornge successful.

The first talks related to the city of Oshawa and Ornge go back, actually, into 2009. There was an ongoing history of discussions. It went back and forth. During that time, this was a great deal. It was good for Ornge, it was good for Oshawa, and it was great for the people of Ontario to deliver that kind of service. Within the document, you will find a map in the centre of the document that will tell you why Oshawa worked and how it served all those people. I'm very proud of the interaction that we had with Ornge, and ultimately, as mayor of the city of Oshawa, I am responsible for all actions in Oshawa. This was a great opportunity for two publicly run corporations to come together and deliver a higher level of health care to the residents of Ontario. I'm incredibly proud of the work that the staff of the city of Oshawa did in its relationship with Ornge, and if you read the document, you will see that due diligence was done and this is a great partnership. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. The NDP will go first this time. You'll have about 28 minutes for your questioning. Go ahead, Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you, Your Worship. I appreciate you taking the time to come and talk to us this morning.

I would say that you are an unfortunate bystander to what went on at Ornge, but while you're here, in the dealings of the people before you, did you ever have any inkling as to something was wrong at Ornge, that the salaries were not being disclosed, that maybe money was being used in a way that it was not supposed to?

Mr. John Henry: I wasn't aware of any of that. The only thing I was aware of is that whenever I saw a helicopter fly over the city of Oshawa, I knew that somebody was getting great health care. I wasn't aware of any of the other issues, and if you follow the order, none of those issues came forward during the process when we made the arrangements with Ornge to make it work at the Oshawa airport.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Obviously, I didn't have time to go through your document, although I want to thank you for being so forthcoming and open with sharing all of that with us.

Through memory, do you know if you had any dealings with people at the Ministry of Health to try to secure this partnership between Oshawa and Ornge?

Mr. John Henry: As far as I'm aware, the only dealings we had were interactions between Ornge and the city of Oshawa, and then Ornge had some dealings with people at the airport related to the purchasing of the hangar.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Have you ever met Mr. Alfred Apps?

Mr. John Henry: I do not believe so.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know who he is?

Mr. John Henry: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No. Never talked to him or anything like that? He was never involved in your dealings with Ornge?

Mr. John Henry: Actually, staff pulled together a complete list. Could you say his name again, please?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Alfred Apps, A-P-P-S.

Mr. John Henry: Spell the last name again?

M^{me} France Gélinas: A-P-P-S.

Mr. John Henry: Actually, I have a list of all the interactions by name, and he's not on this list.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Very good. Have you ever talked to anybody within the Liberal Party about helping you with the dealings between Ornge and Oshawa?

Mr. John Henry: Actually, not on this issue, but I've had several dealings with members of the Liberal Party on another issue called the 407.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Oh, yes. I could see this.

Have you ever met Dr. Mazza?

Mr. John Henry: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You've never met him? All right.

Basically, our questions will be fairly brief. You are mayor of a city. It is completely understandable that you would reach out to politicians, your local MPP. Ornge is a service under the wing of the provincial government. Has the city ever approached your local MPP to help with the endeavour of bringing Ornge to Oshawa?

Mr. John Henry: I actually have reached out to our MPPs on several issues related to things for the city of Oshawa and the region of Durham, ultimately the province of Ontario, if you had followed my comments on some of the other things I've done. This is about the economy of southern Ontario. Oshawa is only part of the Ornge issue today, but Ornge is a big part of Ontario. I do reach out to MPPs on a regular basis. I do talk to MPPs throughout the Durham region, because not only am I the mayor of the city of Oshawa, I'm also a regional councillor in the region of Durham and I have interaction with members through the entire region.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Very good, and so you should. I encourage you to keep on doing this. If we are there to help our constituents, if we can be useful, then this is what we're elected to do. Thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Singh?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: No, thank you. I have no questions.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. I'll note how much time you used and we'll move on to the government then. Mr. Leal.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. How much time do I have?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have 28 minutes.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Thank you very much. Welcome, Mayor Henry. Good to see you again. How long have you been mayor of Oshawa?

Mr. John Henry: I was elected as mayor in the October 2010 election and I was a regional councillor for one term prior to that.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Could you tell the committee what provincial and federal ridings are included within the city of Oshawa?

Mr. John Henry: Provincial and federal ridings? Well, of course, we have all parties during elections currently—

Mr. Jeff Leal: No, no, the ridings. What ridings are in the city of Oshawa? Is it one riding, two ridings?

Mr. John Henry: It's two ridings.

Mr. Jeff Leal: What's the name of those ridings?

Mr. John Henry: We have the Whitby–Oshawa riding and the Oshawa riding.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Who are the current members of provincial Parliament that represent those two ridings?

Mr. John Henry: Of course, Jerry Ouellette is here today and Christine Elliott is—I assume that she would be out doing the business of her constituency today.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Who are the current members of the federal Parliament from Oshawa?

Mr. John Henry: That would be Dr. Colin Carrie in Oshawa and the Honourable Jim Flaherty for Whitby–Oshawa.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Could you tell me in which riding, federally and provincially, the airport is located?

Mr. John Henry: The airport is located in the middle of Oshawa. It covers a vast section of Oshawa. It's on the east side of Simcoe Street, so it would be in the federal riding of Minister Flaherty.

Mr. Jeff Leal: As you're aware, you've been asked to attend before this committee because of a decision that was made by Ornge in June 2011 to establish a base in the Oshawa Municipal Airport, correct?

Mr. John Henry: Yes.

Mr. Jeff Leal: It is my understanding that you, as mayor of Oshawa, took on the responsibility of attempting to attract and incent Ornge to establish a base at the Oshawa airport. Is that indeed correct?

Mr. John Henry: We actually worked with Ornge, and you'll find that all those documents that you're referencing are in this document. We did put together a plan to work with Ornge to come to Oshawa, yes.

Mr. Jeff Leal: If we could go back to this period, then, could you describe for the committee in detail what steps you took in pursuit of the resolution to secure the base in Oshawa?

Mr. John Henry: Actually, I can, if you give me one second. I'll give you the reference. If you'd like to turn to page 309 in the manual that you have, the document that we sent to Ornge is there and it's listed. It's signed by me. It was dated June 29 and it has all the things listed. If you look at item 1—

Mr. Jeff Leal: Sorry, what was the page number?

Mr. John Henry: It's page 309.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Thank you. Okay.

Mr. John Henry: I'm prepared to answer any of those questions, or I can walk you through it if you'd like me to.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Sure, if you want to provide a quick comment on it, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. John Henry: Item number 1 talks about waiving landing fees. Currently we do not charge Durham Regional Police for landing their helicopter at the airport because it is an essential part of our community. We looked at Ornge as being an essential part of the community.

Wholesale fuel program: The city of Oshawa actually owns the fuel system at the Oshawa airport.

Priority snow removal: We do priority snow removal for the police department now in the performance of their duties. We would just continue to do that.

The airport apron will need improvements. Those documents are in here. You'll actually find the detailed drawings for those documents in here as well for your own reference later, when I expect you would read the entire document.

Mr. Jeff Leal: I will; you can be assured of that.

Mr. John Henry: There was a grant to offset property taxes, an operation-of-a-hanger grant, a potential grant to offset regional property taxes—I bring in the comment “potential”—potential of an operational/hangar grant—potential—and there are some miscellaneous terms, A through D.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Were you aware during that time that the Oshawa Municipal Airport was deficient in many aspects, as outlined by Mr. Potter in his testimony here, at least insofar as the suitability for the air ambulance base was concerned?

Mr. John Henry: It's kind of funny, because through here you'll find a reference that the airport was in great shape. The business plan is in the front of the document, and I wouldn't be aware of what Mr. Potter has said, nor could I prepare for his comments because I wasn't here for the conversation.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Just to follow up on Mr. Potter's testimony: He indeed, of course, had his testimony under oath. Were you aware that the Oshawa—

Mr. John Henry: As am I.

Mr. Jeff Leal:—as you are. Were you aware that the Oshawa airport, according to his testimony, had a takeoff and landing curfew of 11 p.m.?

Mr. John Henry: Actually, if you would read the document that's included here, medical flights are exempt from that. So are police flights.

Mr. Jeff Leal: According to his testimony, were you aware that the Oshawa Municipal Airport did not have an instrument landing system?

Mr. John Henry: I'm not aware of what he would say. Again, I wasn't here.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Were you aware that if Ornge was to use Oshawa there would be a significant issue in terms of ability to land during inclement weather?

Mr. John Henry: I wasn't aware he said that, no.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Continuing on with his testimony, were you aware the Oshawa Municipal Airport did not have a suitable runway to accommodate Ornge?

Mr. John Henry: For aircraft. We're talking about a helicopter. Helicopters don't need a lot of runway.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Were you aware that the Oshawa Municipal Airport, according to his testimony again, had a significant noise abatement problem and that local residents were very active in raising their concerns about airport-related noise?

Mr. John Henry: We get very few calls about the police helicopters, so I imagine that anything related to an air ambulance helicopter would be minimal. We actually had a very interesting council meeting last night that went to 1:30 in the morning—

Mr. Jeff Leal: I remember those days well.

Mr. John Henry: —to talk about airport issues.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Committee has been provided a comprehensive review of the incentive package. I have a copy of the agreement that was ultimately signed between the city of Oshawa and Ornge.

Mr. John Henry: That agreement was signed by me, yes.

Mr. Jeff Leal: It details a remarkable range of incentives that your city offered up to Ornge in order to secure the base. Perhaps you could read into the record the various incentives that are set out in this agreement.

Mr. John Henry: I think I just did.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Could we go through it again?

Mr. John Henry: Did you miss it the first time?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Yes, I think I did.

Mr. John Henry: If you turn to page 309 within the bundle that we gave you so that everybody is on the same page, we talked extensively—as I lead into the incentives, don't forget: These are two publicly owned corporations working together to provide the best deal for the residents of Ontario, because Ornge services Ontario. This isn't about the city of Oshawa; this is about providing better health care in a faster, more efficient manner across southern Ontario to 4.4 million people.

Number one, if you look at it: Oshawa will waive Ornge landing fees for a period of 20 years. As I stated earlier, we do not charge the Durham regional police landing fees, and they run a helicopter out of our airport.

Oshawa owns the fuel system at the Oshawa airport.

Priority snow removal: We do that for police now. We would do it for Ornge just to make sure that the residents of Ontario get the best health care out of the airport as they possibly could.

We would need to make airport improvements in that amount, as in here. You will find in here later a document that talks about airport improvements and how, when the deal came together at the airport and a hangar was sold, some of the proceeds of that hangar sale were dedicated towards airport apron improvements.

A grant to offset property taxes at the city of Oshawa, operational/hangar grant, a potential grant to offset regional property taxes, a potential operational/hangar grant—and then there are some miscellaneous terms that you can read down through here.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Thank you very much. As a former person who spent 18 years on municipal council, did you consult with council before offering and ultimately agreeing to these—

Mr. John Henry: Actually, you'll find within this document complete approval from Oshawa council for me to go forward. Council was absolutely aware of the deal in the end, as all councils should be informed.

Mr. Jeff Leal: I just want to talk about the hangar for a moment.

Mr. John Henry: We don't own the hangar.

Mr. Jeff Leal: What was the process that it took to convince the particular company to sell the hangar to Ornge?

Mr. John Henry: I wasn't involved in the real estate transaction at all, but there's documents here supporting the conversation that took place.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Is it safe to say that—was there pressure put on the company to sell that hangar to Ornge?

Mr. John Henry: Well, actually, no, because they reinvested in the airport, bought another piece of property, are building another building; and we will increase our property taxes from that endeavour.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Do you know if the particular company involved made any money off of the sale of this particular hangar?

Mr. John Henry: It was a private real estate deal. I don't get involved in private business dealings between any parties in the city of Oshawa. It's not appropriate.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Do you know if any other private entities at the Oshawa airport were designated to make money as a result of the establishment of the base at Ornge?

Mr. John Henry: Well, I imagine that anybody that supplies parts and services would make money. I'm not aware of any direct relationship, nor do I have any relationship with any business at the Oshawa airport.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Another one of the incentives that was offered to Ornge to secure the base was a capital investment of $62,000 to construct a 1,200-foot taxiway. Was that necessary?

Mr. John Henry: I'm not sure. It's definitely less than the money that was put into the Peterborough airport.

Mr. Jeff Leal: The $62,000 was coming from the third party, I take it?

Mr. John Henry: No, it wasn't $62,000; it was $30,000.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Do you know who the third party was?

Mr. John Henry: It was the person that sold the building to Ornge.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Do you know the name of that entity?

Mr. John Henry: I do. It's in the documents.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Thank you very much.

In recent weeks, we've heard testimony from two individuals, Mr. Potter and Mr. Lepine, that the decision to establish a base in the Oshawa airport was not supported by the technical experts at Ornge. For example, on May 9, 2012, Rick Potter, former chief executive officer at Ornge, indicated that "Oshawa was certainly not an airport of my choice...." Here's what he said: He told us that the Oshawa airport was deficient in a number of ways. First, we talked about the 11 p.m. curfew for take-off and landing—

Mr. John Henry: Excuse me; while you're saying that, we've clarified that. There is no curfew for medical flights or police flights or emergency parts delivered at the Oshawa airport.

Mr. Jeff Leal: So Mr. Potter was wrong, then, in his testimony—

Mr. John Henry: Mr. Potter is wrong in that statement, yes.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Is it true—

Mr. John Henry: That document is in here, so you will be able to find it and the reference to the operating hours at the airport.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Is it true that throughout this period of time you were facing some significant resistance from area residents about plans to expand one of the Oshawa airport runways from 4,000 to 5,000 feet?

Mr. John Henry: We've had resistance. Some people have been concerned about the Oshawa airport since 1987, and the Delcan report was quoted yesterday at Oshawa council. There's always been an issue with noise at the airport, and you as a member of council—I'm not sure where you live in Peterborough in relationship to the airport—get noise complaints occasionally. You can be aware that at the Oshawa airport we do have military flights that do come in and out of the airport on occasion too. Sometimes there is some noise, yes.

Mr. Jeff Leal: The Peterborough Regional Airport is substantially outside of the city of Peterborough, so it doesn't have those problems.

Mr. John Henry: Yes. I understand recently a $30-million investment at the airport as well—

Mr. Jeff Leal: Between the federal, provincial and municipal governments; that's true.

Mr. John Henry: To attract Ornge, I believe.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Are you going ahead with your runway extension?

Mr. John Henry: Actually, as of last night's council meeting, we're going on with a business plan on the airport on its current 4,000-foot runway.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Back to Mr. Potter. I'll give you a document, sir, so you're not left out in the cold here. It was an exchange of questions that I had with Mr. Potter—

Mr. John Henry: Mr. Chair, it would be inappropriate for me to go through a document that I haven't been given in advance—

Mr. Jeff Leal: Well, I'll give you tabs. There are tabs there. We can make reference—

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Hang on a second. I would agree that if you want some time to look at it before you continue your—

Mr. John Henry: Well, in fairness, Mr. Chair, if I have it, every other member of committee should have it.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Mr. Chair, here's a copy for you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We will endeavour to get it to all committee members.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Do you want the copy, Mr. Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): All the members of the committee will need a copy of that document. What is the document, Mr. Leal?

Mr. Jeff Leal: It's just a series of tabs and correspondence and my exchange with Mr. Potter when he appeared in front of committee.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it's part of Hansard?

Mr. Jeff Leal: It's part of Hansard, so it's already—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll have the clerk look at this.

Mr. Frank Klees: I would ask that the questions—

Mr. Jeff Leal: Mr. Chair, has the clock been stopped?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We have until noon, and I'll make sure the time is used fairly.

Mr. Jeff Leal: May I continue to—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, we will recess for five minutes to copy this document.

The committee recessed from 1054 to 1100.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'll call this meeting back to order. All members have a copy of the document that was handed out. Of course, the witness has just received a copy of that as well. So if he's comfortable answering questions on that, he's welcome to. If there are things in it that he needs time to get back to us at a future date, that is fine as well.

Do you want to continue with your questioning, Mr. Leal?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

Your Worship, you now have a copy of that?

Mr. John Henry: Yes.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Can we go to tab 6?

Mr. John Henry: Sure.

Interjection: What tab is that?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Tab 6 is the exchange between Mr. Potter and myself.

Interjections.

Mr. Jeff Leal: For the record, of course, Mr. Potter was agency Ornge's former aviation boss.

Mr. John Henry: That was the person earlier you'd mentioned—a comment from Mr. Potter.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Yes.

Mr. John Henry: I understand that Mr. Lepine rebuts Mr. Potter's comments—

Mr. Jeff Leal: Some of it.

Mr. John Henry: Some of it. He says that Oshawa or—

Mr. Jeff Leal: I'm asking the questions, so I'll—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Let him respond, please.

Mr. John Henry: Earlier you'd asked a question. In one of your documents that—I haven't been privileged to read all the information that has come forward, but in one of the documents, on May 30 from this committee, there's a comment that says—I believe it's Mr. Lepine that rebuts Mr. Potter's comments. It says, "We did ... the analysis. There was a matrix done. Oshawa was the clear winner."

I just want to make sure that I've recognized that and read it, so I understand a little bit more of the questions earlier.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Yes, and we can get into Mr. Lepine's testimony too.

Mr. John Henry: My job is not to debate you, sir. Mine is to answer questions.

Mr. Jeff Leal: And I'll keep asking the questions.

Mr. John Henry: I'd like you to.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Okay.

Mr. John Henry: Terrific.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Back to Mr. Potter: There is one very interesting exchange between both of us. I asked him, "Did you advise against the decision to go to Oshawa?" His response was, "I did initially, and I did subsequently, yes."

We have learned that the decision to select the Oshawa base was opposed in the organization by Mr. Mazza, as confirmed by Mr. Lepine. Are you aware of this?

Mr. John Henry: I am not aware of this page at all, but I am aware of the one that I just read into the record, yes.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Did you ever meet Dr. Mazza in 2011?

Mr. John Henry: No, I haven't.

Mr. Jeff Leal: You are aware that, for a period of time, my community, in doing the work on behalf of my constituents—because of the $30-million investment that was designed specifically to house aviation services both potentially for Ornge and for MNR, that Peterborough was the preferred location for the Ornge base?

Mr. John Henry: I have no dealings or understanding of that conversation, nor would I. I'm not the mayor of Peterborough.

Mr. Jeff Leal: There are some media reports about the fact that the city council and residents of Oshawa were never made aware of the precise terms of the deal that was reached with Ornge, despite the fact that there were taxpayers' dollars involved in all this. Is it true that the terms of the deal were not publicly released?

Mr. John Henry: Actually, you'll find a copy of everything in here, and it has 100% of council's approval. You'll find that when you find the document, all members of council were present at the meeting where it took place.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Your Worship, I just want to refer to a couple of tabs here, so I will—

Mr. John Henry: In your binder or in mine?

Mr. Jeff Leal: In the one that I just gave you. We'll go through the tabs.

Mr. John Henry: Sure.

Mr. Jeff Leal: I have a package of documents to share with you, which I have. I'd like to take you through this package. There are a series of letters and emails that I'd like to refer to. Can you turn to tab 1?

Mr. John Henry: Yes. That's the letter from Christine Elliott.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Could you read the letter for me?

Mr. John Henry: Sure.

"Dear Minister Matthews,

"Re: Ornge (Helicopter Air Ambulance) Opportunity at Oshawa Airport

"I am writing to you to encourage you to support bringing a crucial emergency service to the Durham region, through the Oshawa Municipal Airport.

"As you know, Ornge is planning to relocate one of its air ambulance helicopters to the eastern greater Toronto area in order to enhance its emergency response coverage. I understand that both Oshawa airport and the Peterborough Municipal Airport are under consideration to receive the Ornge service.

"Based on my meetings with concerned stakeholders, there are numerous advantages to support introducing this service to Oshawa. Its proximity to the GTA would reduce on time of travel and on cost of fuel. Implementing the service in Oshawa would prevent Ornge staff from having to relocate from Toronto, since they would still be within commuting distance. Moreover, the Oshawa airport has the land and technical facilities to support an air ambulance and medevac operation.

"I support this initiative as a step forward to providing transport medicine to areas east and north of greater Toronto."

Mr. Jeff Leal: Thank you very much, sir. Could you read tab 2 for me?

Mr. John Henry: Chair, I don't understand the purpose of me reading these.

Interjections.

Mr. John Henry: Everybody has a copy. I'm making the assumption that it's been read already. Do you really want me to read these?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Yes, I would like it read into the record.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I want to just make this point—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): No, no, Mr. Klees. If he wants it read into the record, that's fine.

Mr. Jeff Leal: I want it read in the record.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead, Mr. Henry.

Mr. Toby Barrett: Why don't you read it into the record?

Mr. Frank Klees: Why doesn't Mr. Leal—

Mr. Jeff Leal: I'm asking the witness to read it into the record.

Mr. Toby Barrett: No. Why don't you read it into the record?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Mr. Chair, I'm asking the witness to read it into the record. Mr. Henry, please—

Mr. John Henry: Actually, it's Mayor Henry.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Sorry. Mayor Henry?

Mr. John Henry: Thank you.

Page 2—this letter is from John O'Toole, dated April 29, to Christopher Mazza:

"Dear Dr. Mazza:

"This letter is to express my support for locating the Ornge helicopter base at the Oshawa airport. In my view, the Oshawa location would provide a better response time for the rapidly growing Durham region communities and for approximately 36% of the Ontario population.

"As you will know from a resolution passed by Oshawa city council April 11, the city has confirmed that the Oshawa Municipal Airport has the land and technical resources to support air ambulance/medevac operations. I understand the city of Oshawa is also preparing a comprehensive package to attract and support the Ornge operations.

"I trust that this input will be of assistance. Thank you for your consideration, and please accept my best wishes.

"Yours truly,

"John R. O'Toole, MPP

"Durham."

Mr. Jeff Leal: Thank you very much, Mayor Henry. Could you read tab 3 for me, please?

Mr. John Henry: This is dated Saturday, June 11: "Minister Flaherty is eagerly awaiting a decision on whether or not we'll be going to Oshawa."

Mr. Jeff Leal: Could you read tab 4 for me, please?

Mr. John Henry: This one, tab 4, is from Lisa Kirbie, dated June 18: "Tell them decision is imminent and they'll be the first call you make."

Mr. Jeff Leal: And the bottom part of tab 4, please, Mayor Henry.

Mr. John Henry: The same day: "On Oshawa base. I'm being confronted by two Flahertys, Chris Alexander, and several candidates at an event."

Mr. Jeff Leal: Tab 5 is a picture. We've already talked about tab 6.

Mr. John Henry: Actually, can I comment on this picture?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Absolutely.

Mr. John Henry: This was a great day to celebrate Ornge coming to Oshawa. The two gentlemen in the uniforms are from Durham region medical services. This was a good event. There's actually a quote in here from Richard Armstrong on the press release that talks about the importance of Ornge coming to Oshawa and what it will do for the entire Durham region.

Also, just so you know, we were aware of the union's involvement in wanting it to be located in the Durham area as well. They had sent us a series of information. This first came on my weather channel, per se, from the employees of Ornge. That's how I first heard about Ornge and what was going on.

Do you want me to go to tab 6 now?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Tab 6, we've already been through, Mayor Henry. It was the exchange between Mr. Potter and myself.

Mr. John Henry: Yes, and that's the one that has been contradicted by Tom Lepine, on the page within the document I read earlier, which says Oshawa or Peterborough—they did the analysis, there was a matrix done and Oshawa was the clear winner. I think that's important to realize. That is in your document. So, assuming everything that I read is true, then that must be true.

Mr. Jeff Leal: And then, of course, at the end of the day, Mr. Lepine did contradict that, saying that Dr. Mazza made the decision.

Mr. John Henry: It must be on a different page.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Just a couple of more questions. Ornge has publicly stated that the decision to move the Oshawa base is now under review. Are you aware of that?

Mr. John Henry: I'm actually aware. I will tell you that in the document in the back, I've had a conversation—I forget the director; it was a lot to take in and try to absorb—about what's going on at Ornge. I'm quite aware of how a great and essential service of the province, and the talented people that work for Ornge, are in the midst of something that is not so nice.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Through you, Mr. Chair, have you had any conversations in the last little while with Mr. McKerlie?

Mr. John Henry: Mr. McKerlie is the new acting chair or director of Ornge?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Acting chief executive officer.

Mr. John Henry: Yes, I have. It's documented in the book at the back.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Do you know why Ornge made a decision to put the decision to go to Oshawa on hold?

Mr. John Henry: Well, their decision to come to Oshawa was a great financial decision. They saved a lot of money by buying an existing hangar.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Are you currently in any discussions with Mr. McKerlie at this time?

Mr. John Henry: I had a discussion with him—I don't have my Day-Timer with me, but it is written on my desk—I think two weeks ago.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Mayor Henry, would you be kind enough to get back to committee to give us the date of that conversation?

Mr. John Henry: I can do that off my BlackBerry, I think, right now. I can multi-task so you—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Leal, we would need another committee member to make the request.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I'll make the request for that.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Mr. Zimmer or Ms. Sandals may.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, I'll make that request on Mr. Leal's behalf.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer?

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you, Chair. I understand that part of the idea out there to get Ornge located in the community was that the owner of the proposed hangar was going to sell the hangar and then donate the proceeds to so-called capital improvements. Is that correct?

Mr. John Henry: There was a deal that was between the owner of the hangar and the city, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: And what was the deal?

Mr. John Henry: Just off the top of my head, I believe it was a commitment to reinvest some money into the airport.

Mr. David Zimmer: Who was the owner of the hangar?

Mr. John Henry: I can't remember the last name of the person.

Mr. David Zimmer: Can you get me that information?

Mr. John Henry: Yes, I can do that.

Mr. David Zimmer: How much money, of the proceeds of the sale, was going to be donated back to capital improvements?

Mr. John Henry: To apron improvements: I believe it was $30,000.

Mr. David Zimmer: How much?

Mr. John Henry: It was $30,000.

Mr. David Zimmer: When you first got on to this idea of inviting Ornge to locate there—

Mr. John Henry: Actually, before you say "invite," Ornge had been to the city of Oshawa to look at the airport in 2009, so Ornge already realized that there was an airport in the city of Oshawa. The discussions go back to that date. That's in the front of the binder that we gave you.

Mr. David Zimmer: So when did you or the city or the municipal officials become aware that in order to get Ornge there, there were some problems or some changes that would have to be made with respect to the airport: landing rights and runway distances and all those other things?

Mr. John Henry: To answer the first part of your question, my first time becoming aware of it was when a member of Ornge that was in the union started—I believe it was a phone call, and I can't tell you when—to talk about the difficulties for the residents that work for Ornge to commute to Hamilton.

Mr. David Zimmer: What about the length-of-the-runway issue?

Mr. John Henry: The package that we have here before Ornge right now deals with rotary aircraft. The length of the runway does not come into place unless you use planes.

Mr. David Zimmer: And one last—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: So you were in charge or had oversight of negotiating the arrangements with Ornge?

Mr. John Henry: Well, as the mayor of the city, I'm actually in charge of everything that happens in the city, and I take full responsibility for the great work that our staff does each and every day.

Mr. David Zimmer: That being the case, how is it that you don't seem to know a great deal about the deal?

Mr. John Henry: First of all, the real estate deal is between Ornge—

Mr. David Zimmer: No, but you said you're the mayor and you have oversight over everything.

Mr. John Henry: I don't sell property, sir.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you inform yourself about what the gist of the deal was?

Mr. John Henry: I had the basics of some of the deal, yes, but I don't enter into real estate transactions anywhere in the city of Oshawa. Politics should never get into—

Mr. David Zimmer: What about the broader aspects of the transaction, of the deal?

Mr. John Henry: I have the knowledge of what was put in the document that's within the binder.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right; thank you.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That being the case, could you explain to us, if you have no knowledge of the deal, why, on page 324 of the document you submitted, there are appraisals prepared for Oshawa on the properties that are for sale? If you had nothing to do with the financial transaction, then why did the city prepare appraisals of the lots in question?

Mr. John Henry: We own the lots at the airport. We own land at the airport. Our city staff puts together packages for information for the general business community all over the city. In fact, our economic development department gathers information on properties that are privately held in the city as well, so when business comes to Oshawa, no matter whether it's the airport or anywhere else—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So why do you, then, have tear sheets for the Nesbitt hangar and the Canadian Flight Academy? Those would appear to be things that are owned by other people.

Mr. John Henry: You will find that there are sheets on everything related to the airport in here.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But you just told us that you had no knowledge of the value of any of this.

Mr. John Henry: I don't interfere with the value of properties at the airport or anywhere else in the city. I've—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, but you've been telling us that you had no knowledge, yet there are city documents here.

Mr. John Henry: I've read the documents that—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Well, then, don't tell us you have no knowledge.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We are out of time, and if you want to finish off with the response to that question, go ahead, and then we'll move to the opposition.

Mr. John Henry: Chair, thank you. The city of Oshawa, region of Durham, is huge. I also look after and chair all of the social housing for the region of Durham. I sit on the police services board. I help manage the money, and I chair the finance section. I'm responsible for those organizations, too, but I don't get into the day-to-day operations of the police, nor am I allowed—nor do I get into the day-to-day operations of social housing in the city of Oshawa.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But these are the documents—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move on to the opposition. Who would like to start?

Mr. John Henry: I think I've answered the question.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mayor Henry. First of all, I want to take this opportunity to compliment my colleagues Christine Elliott and Mr. O'Toole for advocating for their ridings and advocating for the city of Oshawa to locate the Ornge base there.

And I want to compliment you and your staff for having negotiated what was probably the only legitimate deal that Ornge did over the last number of years.

I'd like to ask Mr. Leal if he bought a hunting licence for this witch hunt that he and his colleagues are on, because it seems to me that having failed in his lobby of trying to get Ornge to Peterborough, he's now insisting on attempting—

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: He's—Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Continue with your question, please.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mayor Henry, we forgive Mr. Leal. He pops in and out of these hearings. If you've noticed the Hansard records, he pops in and out every once in a while to make this very point. We're convinced, on this side, that it's probably out of a deep sense of guilt for having let his own constituents down in terms of not being able to—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Let's not have personal attacks—

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I have the floor.

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I have the floor. This is ridiculous.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, let's not make this personal, please.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, it's not personal.

Mr. Jeff Leal: If he keeps it up, I'll respond, Mr. Chair. You can count on that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Chair, I ask you to take control. Mr. Leal, as you know, is out of order. We listened with great silence here to your attempt to undermine the credibility of Mayor Henry.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, if you could continue with your question.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, Chair, I'm going to ask you—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please just continue with your question.

Mr. Frank Klees: —to assume your role as Chair and ensure that Mr. Leal allows me to question and make statements when I have the floor.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead.

Mr. Frank Klees: I did not interrupt Mr. Leal, and I ask for the same consideration. If Mr. Leal—

Mr. Jeff Leal: And I didn't get personal either.

Mr. Frank Klees: If Mr. Leal is not prepared to respect this forum, I ask you, as Chair, to do your part.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Mr. Klees, continue.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

With regard, Mayor, to the location, I understand—and by the way, a number of us were lobbied over the course of time regarding this Oshawa base. Most of the lobby actually came from the CAW/TCA, who were advocating on behalf of some 200 staff on behalf of what they assumed—and were distributing to us, as MPPs, very factual information about the legitimacy and the justification for having the base at Oshawa. So none of us were surprised when that announcement was made—obviously except for Mr. Leal.

I'd like to ask you this: In terms of the location, what were you told was the justification for locating the Ornge base in Oshawa?

Mr. John Henry: Excellent question, thank you. If you turn to page—just let me make sure I get the right page. Within the document—and I’m sorry, I may have lost the tab—there’s actually a map of the area that shows the Oshawa airport and where it’s located, and beside that is a list of delivery times. I mentioned earlier that I had gone to school to be a firefighter—not in Canada but in the United States—and minutes and seconds make a difference. When you look at the delivery times from the Oshawa airport through the greater part of southern Ontario, you’ll find that the airport makes sense, that you will get faster service, not only into Peterborough from Oshawa but to parts of Toronto. The airport is perfectly situated to service 4.4 million residents of the province of Ontario. It makes sense.

Sorry, I’m looking for the page. I did tab it, but I must have knocked the tab off on the way in, but the map is here. There’s a pin in the middle of the map that shows you where Oshawa’s located, gives you the travel times and the rings. It makes sense. In its proximity—for example, this morning, commute times into the city of Toronto are terrible. Any time that you can put someone in need—

Interjection.

Mr. John Henry: Thank you. It’s on page 206. If you turn to page 206, you will see a photocopy of a map and in the middle it will show a pin that shows Oshawa. It shows the location and it shows the servicing areas that Ornge would cover from that. When you look at that, that covers a large portion of the population of southern Ontario. It makes sense when minutes matter.

This morning I drove downtown, and trying to get downtown today was not easy; finding a parking spot here was even more difficult. But my relationship with Queen’s Park is fairly controversial. Each one of you have received more than one email from me or a letter dealing with every issue that happens that’s important to the city of Oshawa. I have lobbied you all, including on the 407 and Bill 11. By the way, while I’m here, Bill 11 eliminates the ability for businesses in Durham region to get any economic development fund.

I’m fairly controversial. MPP Leal and I do not have the greatest relationship, and that’s come forward this morning. When you stop a highway in the middle of Oshawa, at Simcoe Street, there’s a problem. I’m on the record and that’s well-known. The controversy that has gone back and forth today is directly related to a difference in opinion that we have on the building of the 407, which also impacts about $6 billion of the economy of the province of Ontario every year, so—

Mr. Jeff Leal: It’s Harmony Road, by the way, isn’t it?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Leal, please let him continue.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Do not interrupt him.

Mr. John Henry: Well, now that’s fair, because he’s mentioned it, yes. Through lobbying, including contacting all members of this Ontario government, they came to the sense—the sense—to not run it down a major street through the centre of Oshawa that has three S turns in it, and moved it off to Harmony and eventually to the 115, but the announcement in the newspaper said it was going to stop at Simcoe Street. Now, I didn’t make that announcement; that announcement was made by somebody in this room. It was in the Peterborough Examiner, and that’s how I found out. Since that day, prior to 2010, we have had a difference of opinion, and that has come forward today in the questioning.

You know, it’s troublesome because I really think that the province of Ontario got the best deal they could possibly get, the most cost-efficient deal and the greatest service to the residents of southern Ontario. I’m sitting here and I’m taking it, and I’m getting a little annoyed that this has become personal. It’s not about the business of health care any longer, and it goes back to the pilots and the paramedics and all those people that work for Ornge that do a great job each day. It’s about our staff at the city that put together a great deal. This is a good deal where money has been saved, and you know what, it might be the best deal that Ornge has ever done.

Mr. Frank Klees: That’s my opinion as well. Thank you for clarifying that. It certainly gives us on this committee an insight into Mr. Leal’s intrusions into this committee over the last number of hearing dates.

I’d like to pass on to my colleague Mr. Ouellette for the balance of our time, Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Ouellette.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: Thank you very much, Your Worship, for coming in today. A couple of quick questions: During the process—I’m not sure if you’re familiar—my understanding was that the staffing issue was very key to the decision-making process in regard to the Ornge location. Do you have any background or information that you might be able to inform on how the impacts would take place, should it be located outside Oshawa or the region of Durham?

Mr. John Henry: You know, I can only comment on what I’ve heard about the ability to get pilots back to their home base at the end of the day and travel time and that sort of thing. A majority of their employees live within the boundaries of Durham region, so it just made sense, but—

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: So my understanding was that one of the key concerns was that if it had been located outside the region of Durham, it would require all staff to relocate their housing as compared to where they’re living currently.

Mr. John Henry: My understanding is that it would have been difficult for some members of the—

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: And staffing is a very key issue, as you mentioned about the hard work that these individuals do.

What’s the current relationship that you have with Ornge?

Mr. John Henry: We’re on hold. We don’t really know where it is going. Our hope is that they continue to come to Oshawa, to bring a medevac service to Oshawa. That's what this package that we've talked about today that's in here—those documents talk about great health care.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: So when you're saying you're on hold and you want to ensure they stay there, it sounds like the relationship isn't quite—there are some rocky fields there, possibly something's muddying the water there, that they're looking at potential relocations?

Mr. John Henry: I don't think it's anything—there is no problem with Oshawa and the plan is just, the reasons make sense. I think the problem is the overall picture of what has gone on. It is a problem. In the end, it'll be a great made-for-TV movie, because eventually it's all going to come out.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: So effectively, the concern is that the services that are provided by Ornge may not continue in the future. From what we're hearing now, they're possibly looking at locating to another area, say, even Mr. Leal's riding.

Mr. John Henry: In all fairness, related to Ornge, I'm not sure they know what they're doing yet. I know that they're trying to get to the end of a long process to make it work, but air ambulance is essential to the health care of the province of Ontario. In today's day and age, and traffic congestion being what it is, accidents happen, whether it's something in Collingwood or something in Kingston. People need—and we have great doctors, great medical facilities in Ontario. I like to think that the best health care in the country is located within the boundaries of Ontario. This is exciting. Making it work is even more important. This is going to be a great project for whoever fixes it and makes it go forward, because the business case is there that we need an air ambulance service. I don't know, after this process is done, what that will be, but it is essential that we have an air ambulance service in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: And effectively, there appeared to be some confusion regarding the runway length as compared to a superbase requiring fixed-wing as opposed to helicopter. And Oshawa was located as a helicopter base.

Mr. John Henry: Yes.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: All right. So that kind of ended that because there was no discussion about any other requirement to accommodate fixed-wing during the discussions, as far as you know?

Mr. John Henry: Well, in the overall package, in part of it, they did talk about fixed-wing. But the end result is what is happening in Oshawa. It is a medevac base for a helicopter.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: Okay.

Just in closing, I want to congratulate you on being successful over competing communities to bring Ornge to our community, acting in the best interests of the people of the region of Durham.

Thank you, Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Now, we have not used all the time. There's half an hour left. Is the unanimous consent of the committee to use that time up?

Interjection: No.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, then. We are done.

Thank you very much for coming in this morning. We appreciate you taking the time and bringing along all your documents this morning, as well.

Mr. John Henry: Thank you, Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We're recessed until 1 o'clock.

The committee recessed from 1129 to 1301.

ORNGE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We will call this meeting to order. Our first witness for the afternoon is Mr. Jim Feeley, vice-president, aviation, from Ornge. Mr. Feeley, welcome. Just to confirm, you have received the information about a witness coming before the committee?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes, I did.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Our clerk will have you do either an oath or an affirmation.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): The Bible is in front of you there. Mr. Feeley, do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. If you want to do an opening statement, please—

Mr. Jim Feeley: I do not. I'll just take questions.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, then we'll have half an hour for each caucus, starting with the Liberal caucus. Go ahead. Who would like to go first? Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Good afternoon. How do you do? Welcome to public accounts. We were talking about the Oshawa airport. Actually, before we start here, could you just describe a little bit of what your role is at Ornge so that we all understand?

Mr. Jim Feeley: As the VP of aviation, I'm responsible for and the accountable executive to the air carrier, essentially, now, both air carrier certificates and the approved maintenance organization. So I'm the over-riding principal person within the Ornge group right now responsible for the aviation side of the business.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So this would be the—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sorry, could you pull your mike a little bit closer? Not really close, but a little bit closer.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Certainly. There we go. Is that better?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I think that it probably is better. Thank you.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This would be, then, oversight of the actual air bases, the maintenance, the actual aviation aspects. You're the person who would deal with Transport Canada in terms of that sort of regulation, if I'm understanding that properly?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes. That's true.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Could you tell us, then, what was your particular responsibility with respect to the decision to award the Oshawa Municipal Airport with an Ornge satellite base?

Mr. Jim Feeley: At that time, I was not in that decision role. That would be Rick Potter as the COO at the time that decision was made.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Sorry, we're still having trouble hearing you.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Oh, I'm sorry. I'll get closer, then, and speak up a bit. Is that better?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So at that point you would have reported to Mr. Potter?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And he would have had more direct responsibility?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes, he was definitely—he would have been the signatory on that decision, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But you would have had some knowledge of what was happening at the time. Can you explain to us what it was that led Ornge to be looking for some sort of an air base in eastern Ontario? What was the original rationale for looking?

Mr. Jim Feeley: First-hand, again, I was not really—I guess my short answer would be, I don't know. I was not directly involved in that decision as to why. I do know that there was a desire, and I don't know the reason for the desire, once the Hamilton decision was made, to look at either Peterborough, Oshawa or something east of the city. But that's the extent of my knowledge.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just so we can get this for Hansard, the operation was out of Toronto. Some of the operation was going to move west to Hamilton, so there was, for whatever reason, some need to look at a base east of Toronto.

Mr. Jim Feeley: There was an initial decision to move to Hamilton, to move the GTA facility out of there to Hamilton. Then there was a subsequent decision to move somewhere east of the greater Toronto area.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Do you have any knowledge of what type of base you were looking to establish: how many aircraft, how many paramedics? I understand you don't have responsibility for paramedics, but what sort of a base were you looking for?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I'm going to decline—I don't know, and it would be hearsay or whatever. I was not directly involved in the decisions, no.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You've already alluded to the fact that Peterborough and Oshawa were in the running. Are you aware whether there were any other airports in the running, or it was just basically—

Mr. Jim Feeley: I don't know. I have in my office a binder that supports the decision of those two bases, but that's the extent that I have. Whether they excluded any others, I don't know.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It's my understanding that, in the early stages at least, Peterborough was given some of the documentation that I think the committee has seen as well; that Peterborough seemed to have the most check marks.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I don't know. Again, I have the final decision matrix on the scoring and the process that was done. Whether there was an early runner, I don't know.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Could you just repeat? You say you were involved in the final scoring?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No. I have the final document, as the people who have left—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, you've inherited the paper—

Mr. Jim Feeley: I've inherited the final paperwork. Having reviewed it slightly—I've looked it over—it seems to be complete in terms of the processes there. It's all there. The only discussion is around Peterborough and Oshawa, and there were no biases as far as I could tell.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This is where I think we're having a problem, because we're getting into conflicting testimonies amongst the various players. Mr. Lepine, I believe, testified to issues around landing and takeoff curfews at Oshawa, availability of instrument landing, the shortness of the runway, some noise issues. Are those deficiencies mentioned in the document you've seen? Are these the sorts of issues that people were looking at in the ranking in the paperwork you've seen?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And those were deficiencies that were noted?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I don't know about deficiencies. They were—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Challenges?

Mr. Jim Feeley: —challenges, and they were scored, one facility against the other. There were minimal qualifications to meet the Ornge requirement. If both parties met them, they were scored, in their most desirable to least desirable.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Do you have any recollection, reading the document, what the scoring reflected on any of those issues?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: As we know, there seems to have been, in some of the testimonies we've seen—actually, interestingly, in some of the documents that the mayor provided this morning, there seemed to be some indication that Peterborough, at least in the perception of those who were involved in the conversation, was the lead, at least in the early running.

There's also a lot of confusion in the testimony that we've seen. I'm going to ask one of my colleagues to hand these bits and pieces of paper over. This is either Hansard or stuff that was delivered to us this morning, for my colleagues who are wondering what I just handed over.

The first thing would be the extract that we had seen from Hansard, where Mr. Potter testified that in the initial mix—if you could just give him the whole package, Jeff?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Sure. There you go, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Can we get that around to all the committee members, please?

1310

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It's the same one that Jeff handed out this morning.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It's the same package that Mr. Leal handed out this morning. Anything I'm referring to here was already tabled in this morning's hearings, Chair. I'm not introducing anything that wasn't already introduced this morning.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. Very well. Thank you.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In this exchange, Mr. Potter said, "In the initial mix, we were charged with finding the most suitable airport that would operate our Pilatus aircraft, our AW139 aircraft and a potential business jet." According to him, that was the initial thing.

If you look at the next document I handed you—for my colleagues, I'm at page 77 of the giant Oshawa document. The mayor presented us this morning with quite a large document of material that Oshawa had on hand. What I'm referencing here is an email from Stephen Wilcox, who, if you look at the last page, is the airport manager at the Oshawa Municipal Airport. He's writing to John MacKenzie and to Rick Potter, who would have been the people who were more directly involved in the decision.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes. Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And if you look down towards—just the last line there before we start with point 1 and point 2, he says, "In summary Oshawa offers a number of key advantages over other airport in the greater Toronto area."

If you look at point number 5 on the second page, he talks about "Extension of runway 12/30 to 5,000 feet," and goes on to say, "In 2009"—so this letter is dated December 23, 2009—"Oshawa airport began a process to examine the potential to extend runway 12/30 to 5,000 feet. The timetable for the extension is as follows:

"(a) Preliminary examination of land and zoning. Oshawa retained the services of PSMI engineering in 2009 and they have determined that the extension of runway 12/30 to 5,000 feet is feasible within the current airport property limits and airport zoning. The work included a preliminary design."

He then goes on to, in point (b), get around to the "work is expected to be completed by March 2010." He reiterates that, March 2010—sorry, that was preliminary engineering work in March 2010. The business case was to be completed by March 2010, and then goes on to state: "Construction within the timetable established within the business case. The establishment of a base by Ornge in Oshawa would constitute an immediate business case and would accelerate the construction of the runway extension...."

This is the information that Oshawa airport gave to those responsible for making the decision at Ornge, it would appear.

The mayor testified this morning that a runway wasn't really part of the expectation. Although, when we look at the document, which I've given you a copy of—for my colleagues, it's at page 309, the document on which we have the mayor's signature and Dr. Mazza's signature. If you go to point 4 in that agreement—it's got the Ornge logo at the top. This is dated June 29, 2011, and when you look over the page, it's signed by Mayor Henry and Dr. Mazza. Point 4 says:

"Airport Apron Improvement

"Oshawa will make a capital improvement in the form of an apron or taxiway," and then goes on to say that the maximum cost is $62,000.

The mayor has told us today that, really, this was just a helicopter base. Why would you be committing to possible taxiway—I mean, we've got this initial document saying, "We're doing a runway or proposing to do a runway." We've got the actual agreement that's talking about taxiways, which I don't think help helicopters. Do they?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: They do help helicopters?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes. I'm going to answer it on the fact that I was not in the room when this discussion—but I'll support the question and try and answer it for you.

There was a need to improve the building apron or the building taxiway, the connection between—helicopters still need to fit into the airport traffic. They still will go to the button of their active runway, and they will use that as their takeoff. Now, mind you, they lift off—basically, they go in the spirit of that direction to aid in the air traffic control. Then they'll be vectored off. Once they're in the air, they're vectored off in the direction they want to go, under ATC, air traffic control. So they still use the runway.

The connection in the area and the traffic flow around the front of this hangar was weak, so they agreed—part of the discussion was that they were going to aid in that so that we could get in and out of that building with greater ease, and they were willing to support that. That's my understanding.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What happened to the beginning of the discussion where fixed-wing were contemplated, a longer runway? I take it that fixed-wing could land at Peterborough.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I don't know.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, they can't?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I don't know. It's not necessarily in the length of the runway; it's more the navigational aids and the off-hours support and fuel availability in the off-hours. There are lots of factors considered; yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What happened that it started out as helicopters and fixed-wing and then it ended up just being helicopters in the discussion? Why, if initially they were looking for capacity for both helicopters and fixed-wing east of Toronto—if, as you're saying in the final agreement, the taxiway has nothing to do with fixed-wing, clearly the agreement they signed doesn't have any reference to extending the runway. We hear that that project has been pretty much put to rest. Why was the decision made not to have fixed-wing capacity east of Toronto? That was the initial search, and then it seemed to disappear.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I'm just trying to help out the—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I understand this, that you—

Mr. Jim Feeley: The initial discussion was to go to Hamilton, and then there was a request or a desire or an ambition to go east of the city. If we would look at the current model, it's two helicopters. There were no plans in terms of Ornge air to modify that, so it would have been helicopters, in my opinion. That's all I can say.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This whole discussion around what was required may have been a bit of a moving target, then. Clearly, at one point—it isn't just Mr. Potter's imagination that they were looking for both, because Oshawa is telling them how they're going to get both. Then, for whatever reason, that part of the equation disappeared.

The other piece—was there or wasn't there a problem—that came up in the testimony this morning was the area around noise abatement. There's another document here, which is—Jeff, could you hand that over? The mayor had indicated to us this morning that there was no problem around noise sensitivity, but in the documents that we've been provided with by the mayor for my colleagues, there's an exchange of emails and materials that goes from about page 80 to 90. I gave Mr. Feeley a copy of page 81. But you can see that this is an exchange around noise.

Again, Mr. Wilcox, who is the airport manager, says, "We are looking at the areas south and east as noise-sensitive ... no noise concerns north and west" of the airport.

I admit to having no particular knowledge of the Oshawa airport, but contrary to what we were told this morning, there does seem to be a section of—in looking through this really quickly, there does seem to be a section about noise concerns. Do you have any awareness of whether noise continues to be a concern if Oshawa is used?

Mr. Jim Feeley: As in any airport, there's always sensitivity of noise. I don't know of any that don't have some sensitivity to noise. I believe the proposal that was given Ornge exempted us against the curfew and against any noise concerns, I think largely around what I guess would be public service improvement, and that would be seen as acceptable.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then, just in case anybody thinks—Jeff, once again, sorry. Just in case anybody thinks that I'm having fits of imagination here about the Peterborough issue—Will, this is a letter that wasn't introduced before, so I've got copies for everybody.

Interjection.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This is a letter from Mayor Henry. It's dated April 26, 2011, and it's addressed to the regional chair, Roger Anderson, and other mayors in Durham region, and signed by the mayor—Mayor Henry, that is.

In the second paragraph—he's looking for their support in procuring the Ornge base at Oshawa. He states, "Peterborough Municipal Airport is the preferred choice for Ornge at this point; however, Oshawa is still being considered."

The mayor told us this morning he really didn't know much about Peterborough but clearly he's reflecting that he did know it was the preferred choice at one point.

What I guess we're struggling with is that by June 30, two months later, we have Dr. Mazza and Mayor Henry signing this agreement—two months later. We're trying to figure out what changed in that people seemed to agree Peterborough was preferred, yet two months later we have an agreement for Oshawa. Is anything about what happened there reflected in the paperwork? Can you find any paper trail about how it got from Peterborough being preferred to Oshawa being the signed base within a two-month period?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So there's nothing in the paperwork, in the files you've received—

Mr. Jim Feeley: No. In fact, I'd have nothing to support that Peterborough was preferred. That would be hearsay for me.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, and as I say, I'm just tabling what the mayor of Oshawa himself was telling his colleagues at the time.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Sure.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So this isn't me saying it was preferred. This is the mayor himself saying the other people were preferred.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Understood. Not to direct the answer to you, just that this would be—I have nothing to support this comment here.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So given that you've got—but at any rate, there isn't any paper trail of how the decision-making evolved on this?

Mr. Jim Feeley: The decision-making is all there, yes. There's a complete binder. There's actually a series of questions—or evaluation criteria. There's a scoring matrix and it was scored and the winner was Oshawa. So it's all there. As to whether there were any front-runners—there's nothing to support that either one of them had any kind of precedence—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then I guess, maybe, when you look at the situation today—because I take it that this all sort of got put on hold.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And I'm not asking you to pre-empt announcements, but what sort of decision-making and analysis is going on now, then? We've got Hamilton, Oshawa, Toronto; Peterborough, obviously, still has some interest. How is the decision-making process—

Mr. Jim Feeley: There was a pullback, as you said. There was a pullback when there was a change at the board. Moving forward, from the beginning of this year, we're status quo. We looked at the assets that were available and basically white-papered, moving forward, what are the best opportunities for the taxpayers' dollars, in light of what has already been committed to. That review has been done, and it's currently in front of the board or will be in front of the board this week, I believe.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, so obviously there were acquisitions in here of property and capital, so you're going to have to take those acquisitions into account when you sort it out.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Correct. We'll do the NPVs on each of the assets that are already in commitment.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We'll obviously all be awaiting where you end up with interest.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Sure.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I want to talk about how Ornge has evolved, because you've obviously been—as you said, you're now the most accountable executive in terms of the air operations part of it. So it would be interesting to get your observations. Over the past seven months or so, you've had, obviously, a tremendous amount of public scrutiny over Ornge. Every time you turn around, someone's looking over your shoulder.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I would agree.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It must be a rather difficult situation for the employees. Can you give us a sense of the impact on the good people at Ornge who are trying to deliver the service that they're contracted to deliver? Can you give us a sense of what it's like trying to do your work and having everybody looking over your shoulder?

Mr. Jim Feeley: In fairness, absolutely it has been difficult, and absolutely we've probably suffered from attrition, I'll say, across the ranks in terms of people not certain as to the longevity of the project at large. As far as the professionalism of each of the back office or the support staff, the non-unionized support staff, the AMEs and the pilots, it's completely professional. They've tried and worked hard to divorce themselves from the, I'll say, noise that largely they had no involvement with at all. We were given a mandate to complete tasks, and we've done those tasks, and we just move forward. So the professionalism of the group, as a bunch of professionals, has been above—and to your point, it has been difficult, but we're still doing well.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So the professionalism is there, and people are working very hard to maintain the professionalism. I'm assuming that it's taking a personal toll on them to some degree, looking at the storm clouds that are always swirling around.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I can only assume, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Anyway, we thank you. Relay this to your staff, that we appreciate it has been very difficult and we thank them for their continued professionalism.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I will share that. Thanks.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You've had new leadership at Ornge, obviously, quite dramatically different leaders, in the last seven months. How have things changed for people who are obviously in senior positions, but also the front-line staff that would be reporting to you? How have things changed with the change in leadership for you?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Probably twofold. Two things have happened. We've had the leadership change within Ornge itself; the board and all the most senior executive staff have changed, so there has been a change and a refocus. I don't know what the best word is to use there, but a refocus on what the objective is. Secondly, a big part of the aviation business is the actual vendor, and we've changed helicopter vendors in the interim. So there have been two large changes, and it's hard for me to differentiate, for a given event or concern, which is which in terms of the change of the employer for many of these employees, as well as the change in the overall governing structure of the company itself. Does that answer your question?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: For the people who changed employers, when did that actually happen?

Mr. Jim Feeley: It was a progression. We began on January 13 for the rotary-wing staff, for both the AMEs and the pilots. We began transitioning away from the legacy supplier into the Ornge operating certificate and aircraft maintenance organization as of January 13, and that progressed right up to March 30, for the last day; April 1 was the expiry of the contract.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. So you were actually still having employees transitioning to you that have only been at Ornge as the employer for a month or two?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Correct. Since April 1, it would be—definitively since April 1, everybody's been over in our employ.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it's quite understandable that you're saying that you're having so many different transitions that it's very, very challenging, then, to be going through all those different things at the same time. Do you have—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're on your last minute.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I was just going to say that, recently, I understand that a Mr. Farr, a Mr. Giguere and a Mr. Howard have been brought in at the executive level. Have you had an opportunity to work with any of these gentlemen?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Each one, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Good. And have they been positive additions to the organization?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Absolutely positive. To each individual, absolutely—very supportive. It does two things for us: It brings in another level of support for the actual team that is doing the work; and it brings in, I'll say, another opinion on how things can be done or should be done.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it brings you a new view—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the opposition.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Feeley, who has oversight for air in Ontario?

Mr. Jim Feeley: It's federally—there's two in Ontario: it's the Ministry of Natural Resources that's been given the standards governance by the Ministry of Health.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you tell us, has the MNR audited Ornge recently?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes. Twice.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what was the result of that audit report?

Mr. Jim Feeley: We only have an official result from the fixed-wing review that was done some 13 months ago. We have findings from Mr. Wong. We have yet to receive the final results of the rotary-wing review that was just finished some very few months ago. I have preliminary results, mind you, but nothing official.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you discuss with Mr. Wong the possibility of making that audit public in any context?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I believe, Mr. Klees, that it probably is public. I mean, when he produces it, I can only assume that—I mean, it's his document, but I can only assume that it is. Being that it's in the Ontario public sector, it is public, I can only assume.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you express any concern to Mr. Wong at any time about him making that audit public?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No. I have no issues with that.

Mr. Frank Klees: It would be helpful if the committee could receive both the draft and the final reports of that audit report.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Of the most recent?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I'll provide you with anything that he's given me, for sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you very much.

How many helicopters does Ornge own now?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Twelve AW139s, 11 Sikorsky S-76s.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how many of those helicopters are—can I use the term “activated”—on standby for service?

Mr. Jim Feeley: In-service machines are 10 AW139s and six S-76s.

Mr. Frank Klees: And is that the ideal complement of helicopters on standby for the mandate that Ornge has?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Currently, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how many rotor-craft pilots would it take to fully staff those I guess it's 16 helicopters?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Pilot staffing is not directly related to the number of units that are out there; it's more in terms of the number of bases that we're serving or the flight-line days that we're actually servicing. So it's—

Mr. Frank Klees: So full staffing of all of those bases?

Mr. Jim Feeley: On the rotary-wing side, the ideal number we're shooting for right now is 80.

Mr. Frank Klees: Eighty?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how many are on staff now?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Seventy-six.

Mr. Frank Klees: Seventy-six. And when do you expect to be up to full staffing?

Mr. Jim Feeley: End of July.

Mr. Frank Klees: And are those pilots, of that 76, all active, front-line pilots?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Are any of those pilots on leave for any reason?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes, four of them are on leave, but varying times to return. I can't really tell you when they'll return. I don't have any ones that are kind of on indefinite leave, but just whenever they're ready.

Mr. Frank Klees: We've had reports that a number of pilots have left. How many pilots would have left, say, within the last four months?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I can answer that. When we initially did the transition period from, as I said earlier, January through April, we had 12 who did not transition over or chose to not join us. There was a total of 12 out of the complement of 80 pilots at the time who were working for CHL; 12 chose not to join us.

Mr. Frank Klees: What would the reason be that they chose not to transition—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Again, that would be speculation on my part. I believe—you'd have to verify this—that six of them stayed with the company, the previous vendor, and six chose just not to come with us, and I don't know why.

Mr. Frank Klees: Were you involved in the decision to bring the helicopter operations in-house?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: You had no input.

Mr. Jim Feeley: That was made before I joined, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who did? Who was kind of the brains trust behind that plan?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I can't answer that. I honestly don't know as to who was the impetus, who was kind of making that decision. I don't know. I mean, I was there—just prior to my arriving, they had agreed to purchase the AWs and the PC-12s. The in-sourcing decision and the desires to do that, I don't know, because it was just too far in front of my arrival.

Mr. Frank Klees: We've had testimony here from former employees of Ornge. I speak of Mr. Tom Rothfels, for one, who has some extensive experience in aviation.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: He was very forthright with this committee in saying that he felt it was a huge mistake. He felt, based on his observations, that the Ornge operation just simply did not have the core competency to do both—to manage an aviation business that, as he put it, is very complex. The dimension of maintenance as well as overseeing the ownership and then the staffing and all that goes with the aviation sector—he felt that this was not a wise decision. His recommendation, as a matter of fact, to this committee was that on a go-forward basis what should be very seriously considered is that the aviation part of Ornge's operation be divested. He recognizes the fact that the purchase has now been made, and how do you deal with the hardware? His suggestion was that one option was to lease back to an aviation company that has the depth of experience and essentially revert to the former standing-offer-agreement type of relationship with an aviation company.

We're very desperate to find a solution here. It's not about simply talking about who made all of the wrong decisions.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: In terms of going forward, it's essential for us to hear from people like yourself who are willing to look at this factually and objectively and say, "Look, if in fact a decision was made that was wrong, rather than continue to go down this road and force something that may cause even further problems, should we be looking at this as an alternative?" I'd be interested in your opinion.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Okay. Differentiating from the decision that's been—I mean, I think that's where you're at. The decision has been made. I do and I can support Mr. Rothfels's comments in that there would be a desire or a need, other than I understand maybe where he's coming from in terms of it's a potential. We should look at that in terms of—to be fair, we have to look at overall what's best for the taxpayers' dollars in terms of not only costs but all elements of the business. Can Ornge operate or is Ornge operating as a viable airline? I'll support yes. That's kind of where I'm at, and I'm willing to defend that. We can talk about this some more, but I'm more than happy to say that the airline is functioning well. Really, I don't see, at this point, the advantage in reverting. I'd be quite interested in hearing (a) what we're doing that's substandard currently or (b) what the advantage would be in going to any other supplier.

Mr. Frank Klees: I guess nobody will know under the current structure. First of all, the decision to bring the aviation business in-house was made unilaterally; there was no public tendering of that service. We don't know, quite frankly, whether or not we're getting the highest efficiency and whether we're getting the bang for the buck.

So I think at the very least, we would owe it to the taxpayers to say, given where we are, "Yes, a decision has been made, but it's not irreversible," rather than continuing to go forward with what may be a faulty business plan conceived by one Dr. Christopher Mazza, who, as we look at the trail that he's left us, isn't exactly giving us a great deal of confidence that his plan was the best one. Some of us think that it may well be an appropriate thing to do, given where we are, to say, "Let's look at that option. Let's put it out to an open, public, transparent tender process and see what the results of that would be." What harm would there be in at least taking that step?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I guess we'd have to look at the merits of insourcing versus outsourcing first. I think there needs to be some evaluation of just the different models.

I mean, I've come from an environment where we—my previous 20 years with the Prime Minister's Office, machines federally, with the Coast Guard. In any airline, there's constant discussion as to what's the best model, in any aspect of the business. It can be entirely, the whole business, or it can be portions of the business. You constantly make that decision whether insourcing is the most—from a safety perspective, from the responsiveness to change, to labour relations, to the actual cost, bottom-line dollar. So there are several considerations in that business decision, and I'm sure I've left some out. I mean, there's lots of elements to it.

I think it's a leap to say outsourcing is the solution. I think it needs to be studied or maybe some discussion given around what the right model would be in the first place, and then, if that decision would be to consider outsourcing, you have to look at the cost to do that versus the insourcing.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. McKerlie, shortly after he took over at Ornge, made reference to a cost review that he said showed that Ornge could provide the services for less than Canadian Helicopters, for example. Have you seen that cost review?

Mr. Jim Feeley: We have our budget finalized now, yes, and I can confirm that we are not spending any more money this year than we spent last year. That's a zero-dollar difference over the CHL.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. McKerlie made reference to a specific cost review. Do you know what he was referring to when he said that?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I can't say, and I don't know in what context he would say that, Mr. Klees. I'm a little bit—in a position here a bit. If he was saying empirically that he was going to do a cost review, I haven't been involved in that cost review. We would have had to have completed some comparators, and I don't recall the comparators being done.

Mr. Frank Klees: And I would expect that that would have been done, and so he's referring to this cost review as historical. What I would ask you to do is to present to this committee, if you would undertake to do that, that document, that cost review that was undertaken by Ornge. It would be very interesting to see that.

You mentioned the budget. There's a copy of a budget document in front of you that purports to be a balanced budget for this year. Can you tell me, since this budget document was prepared, are we on track still for a balanced budget at Ornge based on no increase in funding from the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And that's based on the most recent quarter?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I don't know if there's actually a date of execution on this, but this is fairly fresh. So it's probably a little unfair of you and I to agree that we're on budget. I mean, it's early in the fiscal year. Having been involved in a big part of it, yes, I'm on budget. I have no concerns at this point.

Mr. Frank Klees: I don't want to get too technical here, but I'd like you to help me with something because I'm sure, with your aviation responsibilities, you would have had input into this budget, and specifically with regard to the maintenance cost. My understanding is that when maintenance costs are budgeted, you also budget for residual costs. In other words you anticipate, with regard to the AW139s, that these are new machines and that while you may not be incurring the specific maintenance costs this year, there is a requirement and an understanding within the aviation industry that you apportion for each unit a certain number of maintenance hours and costs, rather. Can you tell me what has been allocated as residual maintenance costs under this budget?

Mr. Jim Feeley: In this budget, nothing. I'll explain: We're still under warranty for another 18 months in these aircraft. So within this budget influence there is no—the AW is fully under warranty on all levels, basically: on the avionics suite, on the engines and on the airframe. So—

Mr. Frank Klees: My understanding—

Mr. Jim Feeley: —if I may?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Jim Feeley: We totally understand and recognize your point in that we are concerned about how we do allocate funds going forward into the anticipated non-warranty period. There are a couple of options we are exploring in how we're going to manage that, but in this budget we chose to purposely ignore it for now because one of the considerations is, does Ornge have the ability, under the broader sector guidelines, to allocate funds to carry year over year. Because this is the concern; this is what we'd like to do, be able to do that. We don't know what mechanism there is—if any—in place to do that. So it's something we're exploring.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Feeley, I ask that question because I noticed that intentional entry, which amounts to millions of dollars.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: This is not a balanced budget. I have serious concerns that the same approach to budgeting is being taken by the new management as we had under the old management. This is not accepted accounting principles. Anyone who understands the aviation industry sees through this budget. I have serious concerns. I was hoping, in response to Ms. Sandals's question, that we would in fact have a new day here. We have new executives, we have new people at the helm, and now we're fed this document that tells us we're on track for a balanced budget and millions of dollars are left unaccounted for. How do you explain that, or how can you justify that?

Mr. Jim Feeley: If I may, it's a pretty strong accusation you've made there, and I don't know that it's—I've explained to you what was the decision to do this year. And I have to say that this wasn't made unilaterally on my part or on anybody's part in particular. We were required to balance the budget for this year and we did, recognizing, to your point, the risk going forward.

Now, there are lots of options in how we manage that going forward.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Feeley, you know, I have such serious concerns about that. Yes, you're right, at some point, someone is going to have to pay the piper. But wouldn't it be appropriate, under the circumstances that we're in now—we have an auditor's report who has already told us that in preparing his report numbers were fudged. We had an admission from the senior vice-president that he was fudging the numbers regarding the number of patients—

Mr. David Zimmer: Just a second. Point of order, Chair: We are starting to tread the line on matters that perhaps the OPP and others may be looking at, when we start framing questions in terms of fraud and that sort of—

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Continue.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, Mr. Zimmer should just take a look at this document where the senior vice-president admitted, in writing, that he was directed to fudge the numbers for the number of patients that they were carrying. Now we have Mr. Feeley telling our committee that they intentionally left out millions of dollars of costs that should have been entered into this budget, so that we have a budget, a balanced budget.

Mr. David Zimmer: He didn't say that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Let Mr. Feeley answer, please.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I can't permit you to leave that on the record in that context. There was nothing fudged. There was nothing altered or padded—or use whatever term we want to use. We consciously, totally get what you're saying—

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. Jim Feeley: —and we're going to manage that going forward. That's what the—

Mr. Frank Klees: But it was a conscious decision not to include those costs.

Mr. Jim Feeley: To balance the budget this year—we had to balance the budget, so, yes, we balanced the budget. I don't believe that anybody, myself included—we will work this out going forward, but without any—

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, how much time do I have left?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have nine minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Feeley, I'd like to focus on the medical interiors.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Farquhar, when he was here, testified that you had responsibility for the medical interiors from an aviation perspective. Is that correct?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I will take responsibility for that, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: He told us that you went to Switzerland to help oversee the designing of the interiors. You were on that trip.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes, I was.

Mr. Frank Klees: On that trip, what exactly was your role?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Technical compliance, basically. My objective was to ensure that any of the safety equipment, egress issues, weight and balance in terms of the medical community or the medical group that we were—and airworthiness compliance. Secondly, I was there to—once they agreed on a build, then I was there and understood the build, and as they went into the actual production side of it, that we could comply with what the intent was.

Mr. Frank Klees: All right. So you signed off on the design and it went into the build mode. What went wrong? Because once it got back here, we heard that there were then complaints from paramedics. They could not—apart from storage issues for medications and so on and other things, they couldn't even conduct CPR properly. We have this report that enumerates many, many cases, and I'm sure you've seen this report, where paramedics insisted on not accepting a patient on board. They were then transferred by land ambulance and so on and so forth. Many things went wrong. What happened?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Mr. Klees, honestly, from a technical compliance perspective, my job in going there—and actually, to the point that when I saw the process, I thought it was, from my perspective on the technical side, well done. At the end of the day, we delivered a good product, on time, on budget. So as to what went wrong on the medical, clinical side, I don't know what the oversight was. I'm sure Mr. Lepine and Mr. Farquhar probably addressed those questions.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Farquhar testified that after determining that there were problems, you helped him work out an exemption with Transport Canada and that that took about a year. In the meantime, there was full knowledge that there were problems. Where do we stand now on that? Are we in that position here—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Just to clarify, it didn't take a year to get the exemption. It took some time, admittedly, because it did happen at the same time that the larger story broke, and it did cause Transport Canada to be extra diligent, so that did add to their process, and fair enough.

We had received it in February. That exemption is good until February of this coming—several months from now. There's a phased-in approach to this in that we recognize that a full refit or generation 2 of the interior will take longer than what's remaining in the year exemption, so—

Mr. Frank Klees: What's the implication, now, to patient care, of those faulty interiors while we're trying to find out and wait for—

Mr. Jim Feeley: I believe that the medical advisory committee—Dr. Sawadsky, is quite happy with the interior in this exemption phase, and I believe the interim solution—I think that's the language we're using internally—is quite satisfactory as well. In fact, I think the interim solution will be somewhat—not to get ahead of the process, but the interim solution is somewhat where they're heading on the final solution.

Mr. Frank Klees: The family of a patient who died as a result of a stretcher jamming in that interior would probably not consider it a very adequate solution. Would you agree? You're familiar with what I'm referring to, the incident on May 17 of this year, where a patient could not be extricated from the helicopter because of the stretcher jamming. What we have now is a situation where, because of those faulty interiors, we have patients dying—certainly at risk.

Mr. David Zimmer: That's not fair. The coroner is looking into that. There's no decision—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Continue.

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, there's got to be some fundamental fairness in these questions. You can't put those kind of hypotheticals to a witness like that and ask—

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Zimmer, it's not a hypothetical issue at all. Look at your report. If you get up early enough to read it, you'd know that it's right in the report.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If we can limit the discussion—

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm telling you, I don't know what you do with your time, but you come in here and you haven't read the basic reports.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees.

Mr. David Zimmer: You don't need to get ugly.

Mr. Frank Klees: Come on. It's not ugly; it's just factual. My point is simply this—

Mr. David Zimmer: Don't get ugly, Frank. Don't get ugly.

Mr. Frank Klees: My point is simply this: We have a situation in this province today where we have helicopters that are not adequate to meet the needs of patients. Where I was going, Mr. Feeley, with this question, is very simply this: How long will it take to resolve this issue, and at what cost? We've paid about $6 million now for those customized interiors. How long do we wait? How much more will it cost us to get it right?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Okay, we've made several comments here, so I'm going to try to get through this. I think that the configuration where that—if I can cite your example that you've said there about the patient, that outcome is really very little, if any, result of the medical interior. It was in a transverse position. It was a loading-unloading scenario, so the configuration in terms of the troubles with the CPR and the high Fowler's in that configuration, that stretcher jamming was resultant of just that. It was a mechanical failure or a mechanical breach of the system. I'll argue that—

Mr. Frank Klees: Is that acceptable?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Well, any system that we have out there, whether it's an air ambulance or whether it's a land ambulance or any mechanical device—is it acceptable? Absolutely not, in terms that we do everything in our power to prevent these things from happening, but we have to recognize the business that we're in, in terms that we're dealing with pieces of equipment that may let us down at times. Is that a design flaw? And that's where

I'm going with this: Was it a design flaw, that particular event? I'll argue, no. In fact, we've, as we always do—and I'll go back to one of the comments I made earlier. The internalization of the aviation side of the business, we can react to and observe and study these things first-hand. We don't have to work through a vendor, which seems to help us in terms of our results. So we've investigated that particular incident already and we've come up with what we think is the most probable, repeatable cause of that, and we've put changes in place already.

Let's go back to your question earlier. I think it does aid us in that there's no intermediary there, so we have put a change in place. Was it a design flaw? I'll say if the fix we have actually works for us—and that's yet to be seen; we've only had it in place for a couple of weeks now. We haven't had a repeat since we've made that change, so I'll argue that it was something that we've fixed. Again, it's a piece of a mechanical thing, so we need to work through these discoveries and rectifications.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute left, one minute.

Mr. Frank Klees: Just how long and at what cost—your best estimate—to get those medical interiors right?

Mr. Jim Feeley: The RFPs for the interim and the final, Mr. Klees, are just going out, I believe, and I think are in circulation. The desire is to expedite this and get them out. I'd be hard-pressed to give you a dollar value because we haven't received any return quotes on, actually, this—time-wise, I can talk about time, what the desired time is, but the cost I can't really comment on because we just don't have any feedback from the suppliers.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what is the time?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Recognizing build lead times to whatever the chosen supplier is for the interim—we recognize that February is an absolute—Transport Canada has told us they will not renew this exemption, which is fair. So we have till then to get at least an interim solution in place.

In the meantime, in parallel to that process, we're working towards the final solution as well. So not to let one piggyback on the other, we are working in parallel. The interim solution will be in place within—again, it's contingent on the builders because that seems to be the long lead, the build time on this equipment. It would be a matter of a very few months into this fall, I would say, long before the exemption has expired. And then—

Mr. Frank Klees: Have any of those costs been built into the budget?

Mr. Jim Feeley: It is in the budget, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: How much have you allocated?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We're out of time.

Mr. Frank Klees: If we could just let him finish.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Perhaps the NDP will follow up on that question. Go ahead.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sure. If you have the number or if you know where it is—how much have you allocated?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Do you mind if I look?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Not at all.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I don't want to make a number up that somebody will come back—

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, no. Go ahead.

Mr. Jim Feeley: So if you want to go ahead, I can just—while I'm looking here. This is in the operational budget and, actually, the other budget is the capital budget, and that's where the money is actually sitting for the allocation. Not to make numbers up, it's a million dollars, something like that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Perhaps Mr. Feeley could get that—

Mr. Jim Feeley: It's probably best if I followed up. That's a better approach.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Very good. I'm pleased to meet you, and thank you for coming to Queen's Park.

You've been with Ornge for a number of years.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Can you tell me where you started and how you moved through the ranks and how your responsibilities changed over that period of time?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Just with Ornge?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Correct.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes. At the very beginning of the desire to in-source the fixed-wing and ultimately the rotary-wing operation, I was brought in to basically get the aviation corporation or the air operating certificate and ultimately the AMO certificate approved. I was brought in as one of the early members of the team on the technical op side to actually get the Transport Canada approvals. First of all, it was the air operating certificate for the fixed-wing or, better put, the PC-12s.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And that was what year?

Mr. Jim Feeley: That was 2008 that began.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, in 2008.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you became VP—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Two years later, thereabouts.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What was your relationship to Rick Potter?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Throughout, up until just recently, Rick was always my—at the time he was—don't hold me to this. I believe he was the VP of aviation in the early days, and at some point he moved up to the COO of aviation. Don't hold me to when that happened, but somewhere in there. And then, Rick's workload became such that they wanted to have a VP of aviation, so I competed for that position and won it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So would you report to Mr. Potter?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Throughout, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Throughout?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Is Mr. Potter still at Ornge in any capacity?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Not that I'm aware of.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When was his last day? When did he leave?

Mr. Jim Feeley: That was between him and the CEO, the interim CEO. I'll say March some time, but I honestly don't know.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But he's not there anymore?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No, he's not.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. How does your role differ since Mr. Potter is not there anymore?

Mr. Jim Feeley: It doesn't. I was responsible, under Mr. Potter's term towards the last—I was VP of aviation responsible for basically what I am now. Rick, with the company the way it was structured in the last year or so, with the divestment of their interests—he was divested around, and I was responsible for basically the air carrier and the AMO side. Once that part of the business fell away, it just fell back to the core business, and that's what I'm responsible for.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So for the last two years, you've held the position and the title of VP of aviation.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And basically your responsibilities have changed in the sense that you brought fixed-wing and then you brought rotary-wing in-house to become an aviation provider?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And this has all fallen under your responsibility?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And at the time, you said, the position was open and you applied for it? Is that it?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I want to back up a little bit, if I may.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sure.

Mr. Jim Feeley: The accountable executive throughout that process, through the air operating certificate approvals, was Rick Potter. So there is an accountable executive position that Rick held, which is an overall governance that the corporation must assign, and Rick Potter was assigned that governance. Throughout, though, I was at the working end of the process, if I can say that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Coming back to the interior design of the new AW139, when Mr. Potter was here, he really distanced himself from this. He said that he wanted the operation to look at this; he wanted the people on the front line to make those kinds of decisions. And he basically pointed at you, as in that you were the one responsible for that task. You kind of agree to it today, that, "Sure, I'll take responsibility for that."

At the end of the day, given that we have to go to an interim design in what you call, I think, a final interior, is there anything we've learned? How did we end up needing an interim design and a second-generation design so soon after having gotten them in the first place?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Well, I'll be repeating, I think, what people have already said, but I'll input it. Clearly, some of the medical/clinical issues were—I'm probably wrong in saying they were overlooked, but wrongly analyzed in what was needed. Ultimately the service delivery is the objective, so if it's short in that regard, then we have to fix it. That's all I can say, I guess.

As I said earlier to Mr. Klees, that wasn't my purview, really. I was there to serve a function which we, in aviation, did largely well. It's unfortunate that on the clinical side it didn't work out.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So if you are distancing yourself from this decision, like many other people before you have, who was responsible to make sure that the clinical side worked?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Clearly, it was Tom Lepine. He was the CEO of that side of the—I mean, I'll have to share it a little bit. The clinical side of the company as well—the medical side of it as well as the paramedic side of it were the two teams there that were responsible for that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So when you look back and you say, "Somebody should have caught that," in your mind, that somebody is Tom Lepine and the two paramedics that were on the team?

Mr. Jim Feeley: You're asking my opinion at this point.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, absolutely. That's all I'm asking. We're not going to—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Sure. In the team that were basically assigned to do this, they would have been the best to make sure that that was not overlooked. So I'd have to say yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So when you talk about the clinical side, that was really the two paramedics: the one from Sudbury and the one—those were the clinical side that were assigned to your team? Was it your team or—

Mr. Jim Feeley: In watching the process, I think it was the medical side that would determine what procedures were going to be permitted within this vehicle. They provided the scenarios, effectively, and the paramedical team were provided with or actually exercised the ability to do it. So there were really two sides of it, if you understand where I'm going with that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So the clinical side would have been physicians that said, "You have to be able to do CPR. You have to be able to do intubation. You have to be able to start an IV. You have to be able to do this, this and that." Then the two paramedics would kind of try it out in the interior design that they were developing?

Mr. Jim Feeley: That's kind of how it went, yes. That's actually how it went.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. And at the end of the day, Mr. Lepine was the one who made sure that the service side and the aviation and all of this was brought together to all work. The weight and balance would work, the clinical needs were met—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes, he was the executive sponsor for the project.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you ever ask for the expertise or the opinion of people within government? You've mentioned that certainly there is quite a bit of expertise that lies with MNR with design and that kind of stuff. Were they ever brought in or asked or consulted?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Under the terms of what we've just been talking about, I don't know—I mean, anybody from Transport Canada or MNR, or you're talking about the Ministry of Health? Is that what you're—or just MNR?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Both MNR and health.

Mr. Jim Feeley: From a technical perspective, we can talk about many faults, and Mr. Klees did talk about some faults there, or what were perceived to be faults. From a technical side, the areas that I was in—and we did. Transport Canada approved or at least accepted the approval of this interior. But I argue I don't think that's really what's in question here. I don't think the technical aspect of the interior has really been in question to any great length or great extent.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. As you were going through the process of purchasing those helicopters, did you know if the ministry was interested in following this process? Did they ask questions as to where you were at and what was being done and who was doing it?

Mr. Jim Feeley: The Ministry of—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Health.

Mr. Jim Feeley: No, I'm not aware. I just wasn't in the communication on that side of it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No. Have you ever communicated with anybody, let's say, in government in general? Do you have any contacts within government to help you do your work?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Federally?

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, provincially.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Provincially. Sorry, I have to be careful, because I'm dealing with—with the MNR, which is our provincial governance, and Transport Canada, certainly. They were well aware of the technical modifications we were doing to the aircraft, so we had constant communication. As far as the clinical side, the Ministry of Health side, no. I had no contact. I didn't know whether they were involved or to what extent they were involved.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so it was clearly on the aviation side. You do have a relationship with the people at MNR who are in charge of aviation, but you didn't go to the health side, which was not your area of responsibility.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Do you want to go?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Did you ever work personally with Mr. Mazza?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Were you aware at any point in time of his salary or any discussions about that?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Were you aware of anyone's salary, any other executive's salary?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You've heard the concerns that were raised. I assume that you've been following some of the findings of this committee. In your mind, if you could say as an opinion, what was the key problem at Ornge and how can you address that?

Mr. Jim Feeley: The key problem was probably two principles in terms of—there has been a fair amount of discussion around the medical interiors, which is probably the most important to everybody in terms of providing safe transport for the patients. In terms of getting that right, we're working hard towards that. As to what happened, we've talked about it a little bit. We have to make sure that, going forward, it is absolutely correct.

In terms of what Dr. Mazza or the senior executive team were up to in terms of that larger part of the business—which has been well documented—I don't know. I have no comment, really, as to what went wrong there, what their ambitions were ultimately. It's all, to me, what has come up in this committee and what's in the paper. Until the OPP investigation—it's all hearsay at this point, so I just don't have any comment.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's fine. In terms of your involvement, did you have any involvement or any knowledge of any of the for-profit side companies?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Probably an awareness, but I had no involvement.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. You've already answered this, but just to clarify, in terms of your interaction, you didn't have any interaction with any ministry officials on a regular basis in terms of oversight or providing any feedback of what was going on?

Mr. Jim Feeley: The only involvement I've had—and more so lately, to be honest with you—is on the investigative side. We do have an investigation branch. We worked closely with Rick Brady on the exemption approval. He was actually involved in that. More so lately it's been escalating, but really, as far as the day-to-day reporting to the ministry itself, to Malcolm Bates's office, no, but only on the investigation side we do get involved more and more now.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And just on the day-to-day side, you weren't involved directly. Were you aware of it going on while you were at Ornge before—you've taken over this role as VP of aviation, but before, when the scandal, if you can call it that, was in full effect, at that stage were you aware of any regular meetings with the ministry and did you hear about that as you were working there?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No. It just wasn't in my scope; sorry.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You never saw ministry people come to Ornge to look at what you guys were doing?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I wouldn't recognize them anyway, but I probably know some people now, just because of their public—I've seen the faces—but at the time, no, I wouldn't even have known who they were.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So we find out that Mr. Mazza was interested in offering the type of expertise that had been developed at Ornge, to be able to offer air ambulance and offer those services abroad to other countries that may not have the type of medical and aviation skills that were here. Did you know about that?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Certainly. There was a fair amount of discussion; in fact, there was a whole group of people who were working towards the marketing of that business design. They were in the building. I knew largely what they were doing, but in no great detail at all.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So who would have handled the aviation side? I mean, to fly to the States or to fly outside of Canadian airspace, somebody has to know what they're doing. Wouldn't that have been you?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I suppose, ultimately. I don't know if they had gotten to that point. I think they were still trying to market the concept. Again, I don't know that they had actually gotten into the—I mean, there was different discussions, just in passing, as to whether—to go back to an earlier discussion—in-sourcing it or outsourcing it was the right decision, and I don't know how far they had gone on that. So no, we hadn't. Would we have been involved at some point? I suppose, but I think they were still on the conceptual idea of that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So if you look at where you were, let's say, a year ago today, compared to where you are now, you now have a new board of directors; you now have a new CEO; Rick Potter is gone; Maria Renzella, a number of people who used to be there, who you used to work with, who used to be your colleagues, they're all gone. Is the new leadership, the new CEO and executive, making things better, the same, worse?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Better; no doubt.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, and what makes you say that?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I guess, simply put, it's a focus. We've got a clearer focus on what we're trying to achieve here, and I think now that they're working very closely with the Ministry of Health, there's a focus all around—not only at Ornge, but also at the ministry. It seems that we've got a service to deliver, and what do we need to do to provide that service the best way possible?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you see now—are you in contact with people at the ministry?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Not directly, but there is a morning report that goes over to them, and they do get that in terms of what—there's a very repeatable dialogue going back and forth between the ministry and us. I'm involved in providing that information to a communication officer who provides it over to the ministry, and there's dialogue there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So what kind of events are you supposed to report back to communications for the daily briefing of the ministry?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Basically any service impact is largely what we're trying to do, at this point. It all stems back to the amended performance agreement, and then there are clear definitions around what's reportable to the ministry, as much as possible. I know they've been given a period of time to put it in place, but I think we're working hard to try to get that dialogue going immediately.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you figure that in a year from now you'll still be doing daily reports or—

Mr. Jim Feeley: It's our desire that we can automate that, that it doesn't become so manual. But yes, I think it will be—I mean, it's entirely up to the Ministry of Health in terms of what level of oversight or scrutiny they want to offer upon us. Certainly, I think, as we show our ability to do it, they're going to probably amend their processes accordingly.

M^{me} France Gélinas: One last one: You know that Ornge owns 12 helicopters, although there are only 10 of the AW139s that are in service right now. Do you have any opinion as to what we do with the two spare ones?

Mr. Jim Feeley: The two that are in Coatesville, Pennsylvania, are up for sale. I think my objective or my direction has been given that we will try, recognizing that it is taxpayers' dollars, to buy them or ultimately we'll buy them through the bond payments. We need to get at least what's invested in them back out, so that's kind of the direction that we're trying to achieve here.

That marketing process is under way and as soon as we hit that threshold where we get fair value for them and what's been invested in them, we will dual-surplus them to retrieve the funds.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I want to take you through just kind of a brief overview of before and after. You went through and you described some of the type of rotary-wing aircraft that we have. You cited some numbers. What I want to do is go through—in terms of bases, currently, how many bases do we have up on the aviation side in terms of their staffing? And if you can talk about some of the previous bases that we had and just do a little bit of a comparison. I can walk you through with more specificity—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Certainly.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So right now, how many bases in Ontario?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Bases of operation is a little misleading. We have two bases that have duplicity. We have Thunder Bay and Toronto, which are both—Toronto has two helicopters that operate—or two line helicopters that operate out of that base, and Thunder Bay actually has three, where we have two fixed-wing assets and one rotary-wing asset.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So out of Toronto we have two.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And out of Thunder Bay we have three.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Correct. From an aviation perspective, we actually have three, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. And in the rest of Ontario—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Single aircraft in Sioux Lookout, Kenora, Timmins, Sudbury, London, Ottawa, Toronto and—I think I've got everybody; Moosonee, sorry.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. And now at those bases where there's a single craft—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes, single-line support.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Single line of support.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Often, at those bases now, we have a redundancy of aircraft, but as far as crewing support, it's single-line.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Actually, would you be able to say which areas have two craft and which areas have more than two?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Toronto has two AW139s currently operating, with spares to support those two. We have two medical lines in Thunder Bay, with three assets.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And the other ones are all single, there's only one—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Everybody else is single, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Single-line support.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Single line of support: Does that mean one aircraft or does it mean multiple aircraft?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No—I'll say all locations have at least two aircraft now.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay, perfect.

Now, before this shift towards internalizing the aviation, how many bases were outsourced? Are you aware of that?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No change.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: No change?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No change.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So there weren't any additional bases that were being outsourced?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No. When we did the Ornge Global Air—that's the fixed-wing operation—we displaced the outsource vendor in Sioux Lookout, Timmins and Thunder Bay. We just replaced it.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. What I was leading you to is just to look objectively—if you could assess objectively the difference between outsourcing, which was the previous model, and the internalization, if there was a significant difference in terms of the amount of bases that were in operation or the amount of aircraft that were available at any given time.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Say that first part again. The aircraft that were available?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Right, aircraft that were available for any particular—at any given time, how many aircraft were available for Ornge or air ambulance services, to provide those services?

Mr. Jim Feeley: The service delivery to the Ministry of Health has not changed. The only thing that has changed is, Ornge Air, in the in-source model, does provide one more line item in Thunder Bay. At one time, by contract there was one aircraft required by the vendor in Thunder Bay, and currently we supply two on the fixed-wing side. Other than that, there's no change.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Coming back to the interior design, now that we are faced with a second generation of design, if you had to do this all over, if you're putting a team together, you're on a flight to Switzerland to decide—it was Switzerland, right?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What would you do differently?

Mr. Jim Feeley: Clearly, in hindsight, which is what we're doing today—but to lessons learned from that process, if that's your question, yes, the mock-up has to happen, or the full trial has to happen. That has to be coupled with a complete review of the mission profiles. That's one of the things that we all collectively need to ensure: that there isn't any confusion around what the actual mission profile needs to be. The CPR is the one everybody refers to. There was work done on the CPR in the mock-up twice in Switzerland. This time around, the intention is to try that around the different locations to make sure that in every possible geographical location, if there are any subtleties or differences in the way that the business is done at any location—in the case of CPR, that's probably not the case. Whether one location has a need to do a certain procedure which maybe another location doesn't do very often: They're just going to try that around the province to make sure that there are no gaps in the clinical side of the business.

M^{me} France Gélinas: From what we've heard and from what you've said this afternoon, CPR was tried in the design when you were in Switzerland, yet once it got here it didn't work anymore. What was the difference between what was tried and what we're doing now?

Mr. Jim Feeley: From my perspective, the technical side, nothing.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Nothing is different?

Mr. Jim Feeley: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, but it worked when we were in Switzerland and it didn't work when we were here.

Mr. Jim Feeley: I can't comment on that as to what happened there clinically; I don't know. But from a technical perspective, it's to the millimetre from the mock-up.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So it was basically missed as an honest mistake because the differences were so small?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I can't comment; sorry. I'm not trying to dodge your question at all, but it would be purely speculation on my part as to what changed there.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Perhaps you could just speculate, then, if you were asked—

Mr. Jim Feeley: I can't comment. I just don't know what to tell you to answer the question. I witnessed the activity. As to why it's not working today, I can't comment.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But you agree that it's not working because you're going to the second-generation design and going through—

Mr. Jim Feeley: Correct. Obviously if it's not working, we can be very humble about why that happened or that, in fact, it did happen, and we are. We'll make every effort to expedite the fix, to do it right. Certainly, the lesson learned is to do with the additional diligence required in this second generation.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you figure that a salary of $1.4 million for Mr. Mazza was appropriate?

Mr. Jim Feeley: I have no comment on that. The reason I say that is, I don't even know—I'm hearing here and in the media that that's the case, but until somebody—

M^{me} France Gélinas: The Auditor General knows how to count. He has seen a number or two before, and he's the one who says that it was $1.4 million. He's sitting there, if you'd like to ask him.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Fair enough. What value is it? I'm sorry.

Mr. Jim McCarter: All I can comment is, in our report, when we did discuss this with the ministry earlier on, what we said was that we couldn't disclose an individual's salary but we did say that the top five executives were getting $2.5 million. Our point to the ministry was, "Are you aware of this and are you sure you're comfortable with this?" We didn't come out and exactly specify Mr. Mazza's salary, but I think it has been publicly reported, actually, from Ornge, what the salary had been.

1430

Mr. Jim Feeley: Okay. Inappropriate, in my opinion, but that's just from where I'm sitting.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, your opinion is what—

Mr. Jim Feeley: For whatever that's worth.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Your opinion is what I wanted. The—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And we're pretty much out of time, so thank you very much for coming before the committee today. We appreciate that.

Mr. Jim Feeley: Absolutely.

MINISTRY OF HEALTH AND LONG-TERM CARE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our next witness will be Mr. Rick Brady from the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care: manager, investigations unit, emergency health services, land/air operations. Welcome, Mr. Brady.

Mr. Rick Brady: Good day.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And to confirm that you've received the information about a witness coming before the committee?

Mr. Rick Brady: I did.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Our clerk has an oath for you.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Mr. Brady, do you solemnly swear that the evidence that you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Rick Brady: I so swear.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. If you'd like to make an opening presentation, please start with that, and then we'll go to questions afterwards.

Mr. Rick Brady: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the members of the committee for inviting me to come and present before you. I hope I can be helpful to you.

My name is Rick Brady and I am the manager of investigation services at the emergency health services branch of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care.

I'd like to start with a brief review of my position, and then I'll focus on ministry investigations into air ambulance and related services, including Ornge.

I have been employed by the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care since 1997. Currently, I am the manager and chief expert on investigations at the emergency health services branch. During this period, I have personally conducted over 600 ambulance investigations, and have overseen more than 700 such investigations since 2007, which is the year we began using a database to track such information.

As the manager of investigations, my main responsibilities include planning and managing investigations and follow-up activities with respect to complaints into compliance by air and land ambulance services in Ontario. My work touches on a wide range of legislation, primarily the Ambulance Act, but also including the Personal Health Information Protection Act and the Provincial Offences Act, among others.

I am the emergency health services branch's lead provincial offences officer at the branch. In my work, I am required to identify possible or actual areas of individual or systemic breaches of legislation related to the delivery of ambulance, ambulance communications or base-hospital services.

Now, the ministry's complaints process: The services provided by land and air ambulance operators generate a number of complaints or concerns each year. For land ambulance operators, most are handled directly by the ambulance services themselves, such as the municipalities who operate the services. All complaints regarding Ornge must be reported to the ministry.

The branch receives complaints or inquiries from a variety of internal and external sources: through the ministry itself, municipal representatives, managers or directors of emergency medical services, dispatch centres, and from Ornge, as well as through patients, their families, the local or regional coroner, police services, legal representatives, and sometimes from the media.

When complaints are conveyed to the ministry's EHS branch, we conduct an investigation into each complaint and report the findings to the complainant as well as to the relevant ambulance service.

The branch currently has a number of ongoing investigations related to incidents concerning Ornge's response to various patients requiring air ambulance service across the province. Each investigation typically takes many weeks to complete. These investigations reflect a variety of concerns. They range from the standard of medical care to Ornge's responsiveness to requests for air ambulance service. As I'm sure you can appreciate, we should be cautious about discussing any specifics related to individual patients whose personal health information is protected under the Personal Health Information Protection Act.

I should point out that the ministry's process allows for some of these complaints to be forwarded to the service operator to conduct its own internal investigation, and then they can report to the complainant. As of mid-June 2012, our investigation services had not redirected any complaints to Ornge for its own internal investigations. Any internal investigations that had been undertaken by Ornge would have been in response to complaints it received directly.

In terms of the process in relation to the Office of the Chief Coroner, section 10 of the Coroners Act requires that the coroner be notified if an investigation involves a deceased patient whose manner of death meets the legislated criteria under the Coroners Act. The decision whether to conduct an inquest rests with the coroner. As well, the decision, if the coroner wishes a copy of our report, rests with them. So once they've been notified, if they want a copy of the report, then they notify me, under section 16 of their act, that they wish a copy of the report.

The purpose of an investigation is to determine whether there have been any contraventions of the Ambulance Act, its regulations or the standards made under the act. The branch does not conduct investigations into matters covered by any other provincial or federal legislation, nor does it determine the cause of injury or death, nor does it delve into the actions of other agencies such as fire and police services.

Again, thank you for this opportunity to outline the process and the purpose with respect to air and land ambulance services, and now I'm happy to answer any questions, if I can.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for that opening statement. We'll move to the opposition for the first question. You have 28 minutes, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Chair.

Thank you, Mr. Brady. I'd like to just get, perhaps, a more general view of your role specifically in the investigations area with Ornge. Specifically, I would like to ask you whether there was any change in your role through the transition. I'm talking now from the time that we had the Ontario air ambulance service in-house, and then there was the transition to Ornge, although not called that immediately but under the auspices of that new structure. Was there any difference in terms of how you conducted your business, your responsibilities within the emergency health services branch before and after that transition?

Mr. Rick Brady: No, there has been no change.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there ever any direction that you're aware of to the emergency health services branch to take a more passive role and allow Ornge to conduct its business and affairs as it sees fit?

Mr. Rick Brady: Certainly not to my knowledge. Our function, as doing investigations, did not change. So except for doing more investigations than we did previously, we followed the process that we'd always had.

Mr. Frank Klees: We have testimony that there are a number of areas of oversight that the emergency health services has; you, yourself, referred to the Ambulance Act and so on. With regard to Ornge, there were really three areas of accountability, as set out. One was the Ambulance Act. The other, of course, was the performance agreement. When did you become aware of the performance agreement, and how familiar did you become with that performance agreement?

Mr. Rick Brady: Not very familiar. I do remember, at some point, being advised that there was a performance agreement between the ministry and Ornge, but that's a contract, so as a contract it's not an area that my service becomes involved with, because we investigate whether there's been a contravention to the legislation. Since the amended performance agreement, we have provided copies of that to all of my staff, and they are looking at that performance agreement to indicate whether an investigation they're doing there has been a breach of that performance agreement.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Brady, can I ask you to move your microphone a little closer to you so Hansard can pick you up a little better?

Mr. Rick Brady: Okay, thank you.

Mr. Frank Klees: I find that interesting because the performance agreement between the Ministry of Health and Ornge was very specific in terms of accountability, in terms of performance measures, in terms of service delivery, in terms of dispatch requirement—the communications aspect of the air ambulance service. We have—and I'm sure you're familiar with this because it actually came from your branch and it was distributed. This is a document that was prepared for cabinet, entitled "Investigations Concerning Air Ambulance and Related Services," and I'm sure you provided all of the information that went into this document.

Mr. Rick Brady: A lot of it, yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: We can go through this document. We don't have to. We don't have time. But there are numerous references in here to individual cases that involve circumstances, incidents, where patients have died. There are references to patients not being able to be transported because of the interiors of the AW139. There are incidents referenced in this document of the air ambulance not being able to respond because either there were not enough paramedics staffed or there were not enough pilots staffed to respond. There were incidents referenced here where there was confusing information that came from the dispatcher. These are all incidents that, while they may not have been legislated, one would assume that they certainly would be issues for you to investigate and to make recommendations on. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Rick Brady: Again, sir, when a report is completed, our function is to turn the completed report over to senior management at the branch, originally to the manager of the air ambulance program, and now his title has changed. Their function is to decide—they send the report to Ornge and whoever else is affected. We point out in our reports where we have found evidence of issues and our conclusions, and then it's left to somebody else in the branch to determine what appropriate action they wish to take.

Mr. Frank Klees: But you would have a difficult time, I would think, making an appropriate recommendation or finding if you weren't aware of what the obligations of Ornge were under the terms of the performance agreement. Doesn't that make sense?

Mr. Rick Brady: Not really, sir, because, again, when we're conducting investigations we will look not just to the legislation but at what policies and procedures, for example, Ornge would have in place. We conduct our investigation looking at: Did they contravene their own policy or did they follow their policy? Do we agree with the policy?

The actual performance agreement, as it was: I was never asked or told that we should make that a part of our investigation. Certainly, now, with the amended performance agreement, I made the decision to ensure that all of my staff have that so that they can look at it to determine—because it's much tougher, in my understanding, not having really read the first one, but the tier 1 indicators and some other indicators of timing and the requirements, and we are starting to report on that in our reports.

Mr. Frank Klees: In retrospect, would it have been the right thing to do, would it have been advisable to, in fact, familiarize yourself with that original performance agreement, as well as your staff, to give you a sense of—

Mr. Rick Brady: It may have been, sir, but again, with turning the report over to senior management, who would have been intimately familiar with the performance agreement, it's their decision to review the report and be able to discuss with Ornge how to correct any issues that came up in the reports.

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand that one of your branch's responsibilities is to sign off on, approve—I'm not sure of the correct word; perhaps "certify"—equipment that's being used for either land ambulance or air ambulance purposes. Is that correct?

Mr. Rick Brady: Certainly for the land ambulance side, yes. There's a land ambulance equipment standard, the same as there's a land ambulance vehicle standard. We don't have a legislated standard dealing with air. Prior to—and I can't remember when—the standard was changed, there was a requirement that air ambulance operators would carry the same equipment and types of equipment as the land services. That's not in the current standard. Certainly from a patient-care point of view, I believe that Ornge would be following that standard. I do know that previously, when the ministry operated the system, our contracts with the air carriers specified many things about the interiors, the equipment and other things. Now it has been turned over to Ornge. That's now their issue to deal with.

Mr. Frank Klees: And that's the point that I wanted to get to, because it was my understanding that the third party suppliers were, in fact, inspected by the emergency health services branch, that their interiors had to comply with standards.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: What happened? Why would Ornge not be held to the same standards and requirements as the third party suppliers?

Mr. Rick Brady: Unfortunately, that's something I can't answer, because I'm not part of the decision-making process there.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who would be able to answer that question?

Mr. Rick Brady: I would believe that my director, Mr. Bates, or one of the senior managers—again, we don't get into policy discussions at our department. Our job is simply to investigate.

Mr. Frank Klees: So we had a situation where Dr. Mazza and his executive group decided that they now wanted to get into the business of owning aircraft, both fixed-wing and helicopters. They went out and they invested $145 million of taxpayer dollars—indirectly, because we're on the hook for it—and the Ministry of Health took no measures to ensure that that equipment was up to standard and would be able to deliver safe patient care.

Mr. Rick Brady: Certainly not my department. I don't know if anyone else with the ministry became involved in that, but certainly the decision to buy the helicopters and outfit them was a decision made by Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to ask you, at what point was the decision made to give Ornge carte blanche over these important standards, these safety standards, as it relates to the business of transporting patients?

Mr. Rick Brady: I have no knowledge of that, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, let me ask you this: With regard to the third party suppliers of the service, you still oversee that, right?

Mr. Rick Brady: Anyone who is a certified operator of an ambulance service—there's oversight by the branch, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right. But you don't oversee Ornge.

Mr. Rick Brady: I don't. As I say, we investigate complaints—

Mr. Frank Klees: When I say you, I'm referring—

Mr. Rick Brady: To the branch.

Mr. Frank Klees: —to the branch, because that's where the responsibility resides.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you don't oversee Ornge from that—you oversee the third party suppliers, but you don't oversee Ornge.

Mr. Rick Brady: Even the third party suppliers today come under the auspices of Ornge. They all receive service reviews from our inspection department, because it's mandatory every three years that every ambulance service in the province is subject to a service review—

Mr. Frank Klees: And who conducts that? Sorry.

Mr. Rick Brady: There's a section called the inspection, certification and regulatory compliance unit, and their job is to go in, as I say, and conduct service reviews.

Obviously, not every service is done every—if you understand, at least once every three years all ambulance services need to be inspected by them.

Mr. Frank Klees: And when was the last time that Ornge was inspected under the auspices of that regulation?

Mr. Rick Brady: If I'm correct, there is a service review going on as we speak, or it's being conducted right now.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is that the first one since it was structured?

Mr. Rick Brady: I don't believe so, no.

Mr. Frank Klees: And is that under your auspices? Are you the lead on that?

Mr. Rick Brady: No. That's a whole different department. Again, we're set up that inspections and investigations must be separate, based on Supreme Court of Canada decisions that inspections and investigations have two different functions.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll refer back to this investigations document. There are recurring themes here in terms of problems with dispatch, the problem with down-staffing. The fact that you have been inspecting these incidents and they continue to recur—could you tell me, from your perspective, did you ever take this up to a higher level of authority within your ministry to say, "Look, we've got a mess on our hands here. These people are not complying. They constantly are out of compliance"? I'd like to get your perspective in terms of how serious you thought things were at Ornge.

Mr. Rick Brady: I certainly did, with my senior manager and with the manager of the air ambulance program, point out to them that there are issues, that they're not staffing properly, that they're not getting to calls when they should be getting to calls. Certainly when I was notified of the interior issue, that certain patient care activities could not be done, I was quite angry about that. So I did point it out, which is my function to do, and—

Mr. Frank Klees: When did you first start to have those discussions with your superiors about Ornge?

Mr. Rick Brady: Probably in 2007, because at that point we noted that we were suddenly starting to do more air ambulance investigations than we had in the past.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who did you take your concerns to? I'd just like to know specifically.

Mr. Rick Brady: At that point I reported to Mr. Dennis Brown, who was senior manager of operations, and Rob Nishman was the manager of the air ambulance program.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever report your concerns in writing to these gentlemen?

Mr. Rick Brady: Well, it would have been in our reports that these were issues that we were finding. So in that way, it's in writing, because they would receive copies of our reports.

Mr. Frank Klees: So back in 2007 you started to get concerned about the non-compliance. They obviously continued. Things didn't get any better. Someone in your put at risk. Did you ever attempt to take stronger action? There are such things as orders that can be issued against a provider. Was that ever considered over the course of time?

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: You saw that patients were being put at risk. Did you ever attempt to take stronger action? There are such things as orders that can be issued against a provider. Was that ever considered over the course of time?

Mr. Rick Brady: Again, that's not my decision to make; I don't have the independence to decide that we're going to have the director issue an order or take other action. That's a decision that's made above me by senior management. I can point out that there are issues, that there continue to be issues, that there are trends going on, but as far as the ability to take direct action, again, we don't do that. I can't do that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever question why there was no specific action taken against this organization?

Mr. Rick Brady: I questioned basically along that line, that they didn't seem to be getting any better, and was assured, "No, we're having meetings and we're talking with them and changes will be coming." I thought, okay, fine.

Mr. Frank Klees: In the meantime, changes didn't come. It seemed to get worse.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Patients were at risk, and here we are today.

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: Eventually the thing blew up. Did you ever share your concern with any of your peers at the emergency health services branch about what was going on at Ornge?

Mr. Rick Brady: Again, I pointed out to them, especially when we found out about this interior issue with the helicopters, that I was very concerned. And I'm not just concerned for the patients, but I feel very badly for the paramedics having to work under these kinds of conditions. One of the things that is really interesting—and I'm sure you'd probably note, having reviewed the briefing note—is that the actual patient care provided by these front-line folks is really excellent work when they have the opportunity to get to a patient and then the opportunity, perhaps, to help the patient. Certainly, from a delivery point of view, oh yes, I was very concerned, but—

Mr. Frank Klees: And that's why we're here.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have five minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: We're hearing from front-line paramedics, pilots, who want to deliver that service. They're frustrated because they don't have the resources. I got an email this morning from a paramedic concerning the lack of equipment. They're scouring for medical equipment at various bases. And instead of getting better, we continue to get disinformation.

Are you aware that there was an order that was prepared to be issued to Ornge just within the last month?

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And can you tell us what that order was about? What prompted that?

Mr. Rick Brady: Discussions about some of our investigations. In a meeting with the director, I indicated to him, "I'm sorry, but I think we really need to issue an order," and he agreed. I helped draft the order. There are two orders, actually. At that point, they were given to the director. What became of them, I don't know. I've heard testimony that the orders weren't issued and supposedly why, but direct knowledge of it, no, I don't know.

Mr. Frank Klees: How frustrating is that for you? As someone who's on the front line, you have a responsibility to inspect; you have the responsibility to bring these people into line. You recommend the issuance of an order, you help to draft it, you send it up, and it goes nowhere. How frustrating is that for you?

Mr. Rick Brady: Quite frustrating, but I also take the attitude, as I have through my career as an investigator, that my job is to investigate, to report, and then it's up to someone else to decide how we're going to deal with it—somewhat different than when I was a police officer, when I could actually lay charges if I found an offence.

Certainly, we try not to become overly frustrated in our work, because my staff and I can't become frustrated because we believe in what we're doing. We believe it's very important and we believe we have to put it on record as to what we're finding.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Brady, I want to just tell you that we share your frustration and we know that you're on the front line and there are many front-line workers who want to do the job. What we are seeing, unfortunately, is political interference in a process that should work to the benefit of patients, to the benefit of our air ambulance service. That was just one example, and a very recent example. This was recent. This wasn't under the old performance agreement; it wasn't under the old legislation. This is now, under new executive direction and a new board, and they're still not doing their job. When you want to bring them to task, somebody higher up in the executive suites is saying, "No, no. Don't do that because that might be embarrassing to us."

I just want to thank you for the work that you do on the front lines. We're hopeful that this process will lead to some steps that can restore confidence not only in our air ambulance service but would also empower you for the work that you do. Thank you.

Mr. Rick Brady: Thank you, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Before I start with my line of questioning, I want to finish where Mr. Klees just ended. Back in 2007, you're starting to see more requests for investigations; you're starting to do more investigations; putting those reports up to your director and your supervisor. You just answered to Mr. Klees that you were told, "We're having meetings; things will change"—I'm hoping, for the better. Who were those people telling you that?

Mr. Rick Brady: Again, that would be my senior manager, Dennis Brown, because he had the most contact with Ornge. I would meet with him, talk about reports, sometimes talk about the frustrations we were finding, but again, it was left to him to deal with.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know if he shared your frustration, and is there a chance that he also shared it up to his supervisors, that, "Listen, we're doing investigations here, and we're finding issues. We'd like to see change but change is not forthcoming fast enough"?

Mr. Rick Brady: I can't say for sure that he did that because he never told me. Having worked for Dennis for quite a few years, I wouldn't doubt that he would have had some sort of discussions. But, to be honest, I certainly can't say he did.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And who was Dennis's supervisor at the time?

Mr. Rick Brady: That would be Malcolm Bates, the director.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That was Malcolm. Okay.

I want to take it back to—you helped draft two orders.

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Can you share with us what those two orders were about?

Mr. Rick Brady: There are so many Ornge files that—I'm sure one of them had to do with staffing, the fact that they were not having two paramedics on board the helicopters, and the other, I believe, was they were not compliant with the Ontario ambulance documentation standards. That's a legislated standard that all ambulance services are required to adhere to. I'm pretty sure that was the second order.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So when we hear from Ornge through their budget process that they are maintaining the staffing level that they had before, do we have reason to worry? If we see that they don't always staff at two paramedics per helicopter and they're now telling us that the staffing pattern will stay the same and the budget will stay the same, is there a chance that there will be no changes for the better?

Mr. Rick Brady: I certainly can't speak to that. I can tell you that, from a patient-care point of view, especially for critical patients, that for one critical care paramedic to be working on their own is not ideal for the patient, and if they aren't staffed to a critical care level, if they're advanced care or primary care, there's an issue for the patient.

There's also an issue for sending facilities. The majority of the work that Ornge does are inter-facility critical care transports. So to send a lower level of care, in many cases the hospital would then be required to send a medical escort. Why they are not staffing at the same level that they did when the system was turned over to them—I would be questioning, if I was working at Ornge, "Why am I losing staff?" or, "Why are staff not working?" and figure out what's going on.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So through the investigations that you have done over the years and the benefit of having been there and done quite a few—700, I think you said; that's a lot of investigations. The staffing level that was there before Ornge was put into place was certainly not bringing the type of complaints that you are investigating now. Some of them were because they were staffing with two critical care paramedics and this is not the case now?

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct. I'd like to say that some of the most serious investigations that we did back when the ministry was in direct oversight were complaints like, "My mother was on the aircraft sitting on the tarmac for three hours. It was cold and there was no heat." We never—very seldom—had any patient care investigations. Certainly, when the ministry had the direct oversight, if there were not two paramedics on board a helicopter, then the provider had to pay for that; there was a clawback that we would get. They wouldn't allow—and certainly the base hospital as it existed then would be furious if one of these helicopters was single-staffed. Now it seems—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Because you end up having to send one of your nurses to Hamilton, and she sits there for the weekend before you get her back. That never makes a hospital executive very happy.

Mr. Rick Brady: No, and it's not very fair to the nurse either.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No.

There's an entire section in the Auditor General's report that deals with complaint investigations. The Auditor General is here, and I'm just quoting from his report. He said the following about the ministry investigation process: "However"—because I'm quoting from a sentence—"in October 2010," the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care "stopped recommending ways for Ornge to address issues, stating that such decisions were Ornge's responsibility."

Do you have any more information as to why this decision was made? Why did we change this process in 2010?

Mr. Rick Brady: It's not just Ornge. We don't make recommendations for any service anymore. It was a blanket direction to stop making recommendations, although we're now making recommendations again for Ornge. I have been told that we are to do recommendations.

Why it changed? I asked that. I was told that our reports are written in such a way that anyone can read it and determine, "I know exactly what went wrong, and I know exactly what needs fixing."

I was told that because of the maturity of the service now—because land was turned over to the municipalities in 2000. My senior manager felt that everyone now is mature enough to be able to figure out how to fix it.

Instead of specific recommendations, what we're saying now in our cover letter that goes out is that the service that's receiving this report has 10 days to notify either the field office, if it's a land service, or Mr. Nishman, if it's the air service—"What is your plan to address the issues that we've identified in the report?"—then, in 40 days, advise the ministry that you've successfully completed that plan. So there aren't specific recommendations, but there's still an onus on the service to read the report and fix the issues.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, except that now, for Ornge, you will be making recommendations—

Mr. Rick Brady: Specific recommendations, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do the 10 days and 40 days stay in place anyway?

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: They do. Okay.

The auditor went on to say that he had previously recommended in his 2005 land ambulance audit that the ministry determine a process for ensuring that it receives information on the nature and resolution of serious complaints. Mr. McCarter went on to note that this did not happen. Was any work ever done to implement this recommendation from the 2005 review of the land ambulance audit?

Mr. Rick Brady: I can't answer that question. I know certainly not from my department, but whether anyone else in the branch may have done something, I don't know.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You don't know?

Mr. Rick Brady: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. The ministry also said that it was doing unannounced inspections, but from what you've just said, inspection is separated from investigation.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so do you happen to know if they did do unannounced inspections?

Mr. Rick Brady: I can't say for sure, no. I know they're doing some now, because one issue was reported to me by an unannounced inspection that turned into an investigation. But their previous—I don't know; we don't have that kind of communication.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, I understand. You explained that today anyway.

You are, though, responsible to receive complaints from the dispatch functions of Ornge?

Mr. Rick Brady: Any complaint relating to Ornge is now supposed to be reported to the ministry.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And before?

Mr. Rick Brady: Even the land ambulance services don't have to notify the ministry, so although the minister has the power to investigate complaints, there's nothing in the legislation that says the ministry has to be notified.

Certainly we have an excellent working relationship with the land services. They don't hesitate to pick up the phone and call me to let me know, "We've got a serious issue that we're looking into." Sometimes they'll ask us to the investigation. Sometimes they'll say, "Can we do a joint investigation?" Other times, they want to do the investigation but have one of my people oversee it. So that relationship with the land services is excellent.

A lot of complaints that come into land services have to deal with the attitude of the paramedics, which again, there's a legislated standard that deals with attitude. But they're very competent and very good about conducting investigations, and we've run training courses for the municipalities on how to run investigations.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So, as the number of complaints that you had to investigate with Ornge increased, did you receive many of them directly from Ornge?

Mr. Rick Brady: No, a lot of them came in either through one of the dispatch centres, our provincial dispatch centres that have had interactions with Ornge; quite a few came in from the land ambulance services that had issues with Ornge. Certainly, starting in late 2011 when Mr. Donovan's articles started to appear in the Star, that suddenly brought on an onset of investigations, plus some of the things he was reporting were sufficient that I'd read it and go, "We'd better look into this."

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so those were all legitimate complaints that you were allowed to investigate?

Mr. Rick Brady: Oh, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So before December 2011, did you used to have contact with people at Ornge?

Mr. Rick Brady: As far as doing investigations? Yes, we'd always notify them. We'd notify services that we were doing an investigation.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who would you notify?

Mr. Rick Brady: It has been changing, because there seems to be a lot of staff going through. It was the vice-president of operations, Steve Farquhar, and then they got an executive vice-president of operations, so I'd start to let him know, and now it has moved to the vice-president of clinical affairs; I'm not sure why an ambulance service needs clinical affairs. So I notify her, as well as the vice-president, because we need them to provide us with copies of their audio, their dispatch records, the ambulance call reports, so that we can start our investigation.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So from, let's say, 2007 to mid-2011, before all of this, how would you describe your relationship with Ornge? If you needed a copy of their audio or you needed a copy of their report or anything of the sort, how were they with you?

Mr. Rick Brady: Oh, fine.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Everything went fine?

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: At every level?

Mr. Rick Brady: Well, certainly as far as providing information, making staff available for interviews and such, they've always been very co-operative that way. Of late, it has been a little bit more difficult, but I think it's because there's an onslaught of requests that are being made to them. But they certainly are more than willing to co-operate with us.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And that had always been the case?

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes. We've never had that problem.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And right now it's really a case because the volume has increased exponentially?

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And then the time constraints. I want to come back to—you're in doing your job, the number of complaints increases, you're starting to see trends, you said. What kind of trends did you see?

Mr. Rick Brady: As I indicated, problems with staffing, problems with their launch policies, problems with the ability to do patient care. Those were sort of the main trends that we saw going on.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you shared those trends with Dennis Brown?

Mr. Rick Brady: Well, certainly in the reports it would have been pointed out that, as an example, single-staff air ambulance—the legislation, although it doesn't speak specifically to critical care paramedics, does speak to the fact that an ambulance which transports a patient is to be staffed by two paramedics. So the legislation is there to say that you're supposed to have two paramedics on board.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And the same thing with—let's say we talk about the launching policy. When was the first time you remember thinking, "We're seeing a trend here. There's an issue. It's more than just a one-off?" When would you say that started?

Mr. Rick Brady: Well, when I was first notified that they were changing this launch policy and the reasons behind it, I did write a memorandum—at that point, Dennis had left, so it was now to my new senior manager—indicating that I didn't believe that we should be endorsing this change. I didn't believe that they had provided the ministry with appropriate data to be able to say why they should be doing this, and I pointed out that I believed that this would be something that was not going to work. Of course, the ministry didn't approve it; they simply indicated, "Well, okay, that's your policy. Off you go."

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you wrote this memo.

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who did you write this memo to?

Mr. Rick Brady: To my senior manager, Tony Campeau.

M^{me} France Gélinas: To Tony Campeau. And did you receive any feedback? Did he agree with you? Did you think you were out of line or anything like that?

Mr. Rick Brady: I don't remember receiving any feedback and I was never told I was out of line.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No news is good news or—

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Is this something you did often, write a memo about having basically serious doubts about a change in policy, or was this really something serious enough that you decided to do something that was sort of out of the ordinary?

Mr. Rick Brady: I felt it was serious enough. It was a big change in the methodology of delivering air ambulance service. And as I say, I didn't believe the numbers that were being provided. If memory serves, it was supposedly directly the fault of the Auditor General, who had said in one of his previous reports that there were too many cancelled calls, which is costing a lot of money. So Ornge used that to say they had something like 3,000 cancelled on-scene requests, where they only do 7,000 air ambulance flights a year, approximately. I think it's less than a third are on-scene requests; 3,000 didn't add up.

M^{me} France G  linas: Didn't add up, no.

Mr. Rick Brady: I'm quite willing, and was quite willing, to sit with somebody to say, "Okay, what is your issue? How do we correct it? Is our air ambulance utilization standard impacting you negatively that we can talk about?" But it was just their blanket decision to do it. I said, "Well, I'm going to write my memo with my opinion."

M^{me} France G  linas: So at this point, what year are we in when you did that?

Mr. Rick Brady: I can't remember when they changed the launch policy, if it was 2010 or 2011.

M^{me} France G  linas: I think it's 2010 also, but we have it some place. I'll check.

So by that point, basically, Ornge makes this decision and shares the decision with the ministry. You have concerns enough to write a memo, saying, "I have concerns with this." But nothing goes back to Ornge in the way of, "Could we discuss this, can we look into this together? You need to be accountable to us as to the changes you're doing."

Mr. Rick Brady: If that occurred, I don't know about it, so I can't say it did or didn't.

M^{me} France G  linas: But they never came back to you to say, "Okay, we're ready to discuss that"—

Mr. Rick Brady: Certainly not with me, no, ma'am.

M^{me} France G  linas: And you never heard after you sent your memo—did you only send it to your supervisor or did you send it wider?

Mr. Rick Brady: It may have been copied to Mr. Nishman.

M^{me} France G  linas: Mister who?

Mr. Rick Brady: Nishman. He's sort of like the field manager who looks after Ornge. I don't think it was sent to anyone else.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. To your supervisor, and then you said that you never heard back.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

M^{me} France G  linas: My colleague has a few questions before it comes back.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: On page 2 of your actual opening remarks, you indicated, and you also read it out, that one of your tasks or one of the things that you are tasked with doing is that you are "required to identify possible or actual areas of individual or systemic breaches of legislation."

So what I want to ask you about is what you can do or what powers you have to identify possible systemic breaches of legislation and how that would apply, for example, to something like Ornge. It's not a direct complaint, it's something—the way I'm reading that or understanding that, and you can correct me if I'm wrong, there's a bit of a proactive element to investigations, that you can look at or identify areas where there could be a breach, and if it's a systemic breach even more so. Am I reading that right?

Mr. Rick Brady: Basically, and again our reports would indicate that, as an example, documentation was not completed in accordance with the legislative standard; therefore, there was a contravention.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure.

Mr. Rick Brady: Same as if there's a patient care issue. We point out in the reports: Has there been a contravention?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure. Now, in terms of Ornge, had there been any sort of identification of systemic breaches in the legislation in the time period, perhaps, from, let's say, 2008 to 2011?

Mr. Rick Brady: Again, staffing issues would have been pointed out, and documentation issues would have been pointed out. Once we knew about the problem with the interior of the aircraft, the AW139, that was pointed out in quite a number of reports: that, because they were unable to perform patient care in accordance with the legislated standards, they're in contravention of the standards.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Let's just start with staffing, would there have been any of the systemic breaches that you noticed or that you identified—when would be the first time that you identified it with Ornge?

Mr. Rick Brady: The first time? That's very difficult to answer, only because—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Roughly; maybe the year.

Mr. Rick Brady: A year, year and a half, maybe—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: A year to a year and a half ago?

Mr. Rick Brady: I can't say 100%, but certainly within the last year there has been the problem with the staffing.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Before the issues hit the newspapers, before Ornge became on the front page of the Toronto Star, before that, was there—

Mr. Rick Brady: There were some issues where they weren't staffing appropriately.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Is there a way for us to confirm that? If you perhaps have some documentation and/or if you have a log of that, perhaps.

Mr. Rick Brady: I don't know. We don't keep—even our database is not indicating what was found. It would be very difficult. I'd have to try to get someone to sit down and go through all the investigation reports again, which would be very time-consuming.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: It would, eh? We might have to request that, because if there was any indication that Ornge had had some staffing issues well before the scandal broke, that might be very interesting to this committee.

Documentation issues, as well: Do you know, roughly, what year that would have occurred that there were some documentation breaches?

Mr. Rick Brady: That became more evident of late, because one of the issues that I've had is—again, for an ambulance service and their staff, there are specific requirements when an incident report is required. Certain incident reports must be forwarded to the ministry. In quite a few cases, we started to find that some incident that we're looking at met the criteria for an incident report, and it was never provided.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Previously, do you have a log of the complaints that you received, if any, regarding Ornge's patient care or any complaints, from 2008 or even earlier, to 2011?

Mr. Rick Brady: As far as patient care, as I say, we've never really had any serious investigations of Ornge paramedics in regard to whether they were or were not meeting the standard. They've always met the standard with whatever they can work with. So if they're having issues, like the CPR issue or patients with difficulty breathing on the AW139, that's not paramedics' fault. We can't fault them if the equipment they are given doesn't allow them to do their job.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What about complaints in general? Did you receive any complaints about Ornge just generally that made it to your branch?

Mr. Rick Brady: We have received complaints.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Pardon me?

Mr. Rick Brady: We have, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And when and how often, roughly?

Mr. Rick Brady: Over the years, we've received maybe 15 or 20 complaints about Ornge. They could come in, again, from the land ambulance service. They could be coming in from a dispatch centre—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Would you be able to table those complaints, whatever they were?

Mr. Rick Brady: The complaints or the investigations?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I guess both, really. A summary of the nature of the complaint. Maybe there was a civilian complaint about staffing or a civilian complaint about some other patient care issue.

Mr. Rick Brady: Again, when we open an investigation we would look at what the complaint is about. Is it about patient care; is it about the air ambulance response; is it about the quality of dispatch? So to actually go back in, we'd have to go into the files to determine the specifics of the complaint.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And that's similar to what Mr. Klees had already asked you.

M^{me} France G  linas: Just before we run out of time, this issue that recently you wrote two orders, one having to do with staffing, the other one having to do with documentation standards: As good as your memory could recall, how often does it happen that you write orders?

Mr. Rick Brady: It's not that often. Again, our relationship with land ambulance services is such that when they receive one of our reports—

M^{me} France G  linas: They jump?

Mr. Rick Brady: —they're quite willing to make corrections and make changes. It has occurred a couple of times in the past where we have said to a service, "We're looking towards going the route of a director's order, because you're not complying." That really gets their attention.

M^{me} France G  linas: So just saying that an order is coming is enough to get them to jump?

Mr. Rick Brady: Enough for them to come and sit around the table and find out, "Okay, what is it that we're not doing correctly? What's got you ticked and how do we fix it?"

M^{me} France G  linas: So how come in this particular circumstance you're ready to write two orders that never make it to Ornge? What happened? How come? Basically, if the threat of an order gets you results like you've just described to me—I fully believe that this is exactly what happens—how come this time we didn't use those levers to get the kind of changes that are needed?

Mr. Rick Brady: I can't answer that question. It certainly was not my decision.

M^{me} France G  linas: But it is rather unusual, because in the past, if you had a dialogue about putting an order forward, it basically got action. This time, who do you figure in the hierarchy above you has the right to say, "Don't issue that order"?

Mr. Rick Brady: Well, in the hierarchy above me it could be my senior manager that doesn't want the order issued. It could be the director that doesn't want the order issued. It could be whoever the director reports to. Again, I was asked to help draft the orders and—

M^{me} France G  linas: Who asked you to do that?

Mr. Rick Brady: My director. And then the orders themselves were finalized by someone at the branch who probably writes them a little bit better, and then that's the last I heard. I'd asked, "Are we issuing the orders?" and was told, "No, we're not." I didn't really ask a lot of questions because I wasn't happy about it, and I thought if I asked too many questions I might get really mad and I might say something I shouldn't say.

M^{me} France G  linas: But what a waste of time and what a waste of an opportunity to motivate change, because you really saw it as an opportunity to effect serious change in—

Mr. Rick Brady: I believed it was very necessary to have the orders issued, yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: And somebody above you—

Mr. Rick Brady: Some decision was made.

M^{me} France G  linas: And nobody has come forward and said, "It was my decision and here is why," and put forward a valid reason as to why we should not?

Mr. Rick Brady: No.

M^{me} France G  linas: In your long experience with the ministry in your job, has it ever happened before that the need to issue an order gets squashed down from above?

Mr. Rick Brady: Not squashed. There have been instances where the director or my senior manager may think, "Do we really need to go this route?"—

M^{me} France G  linas: Scaring them would be enough.

Mr. Rick Brady: —and, "We can dialogue about it," as I say, simply the mere letting the service know, and again, that would usually be from the senior manager's position, that, "We have evidence here that looks like we could be issuing an order. Let's talk about it."

M^{me} France Gélinas: And did you know if that conversation took place with—

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes, I was party to some of those conversations where the director of EMS and their superiors came in and we sat and talked and we presented them with the evidence and obtained from them a commitment to change and fix.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And did a similar process take place this time with Ornge?

Mr. Rick Brady: I don't know. I certainly wasn't party to any meetings with them about it, no.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So no follow-up was done.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes left.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Go ahead.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Who would know if it happened with Ornge, this type of sit-down? If the order wasn't actually issued—and you know it wasn't issued—who would know if a sit-down took place, similar to what you described, that, "Listen, we're about to issue an order, but if you come back into compliance, then we won't issue it"?

Mr. Rick Brady: I would presume that my director and senior manager would know if such a discussion took place or what occurred in and around the orders.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And those people are?

1530

Mr. Rick Brady: Malcolm Bates, and then Tony Campeau is my senior manager.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And we are pretty much out of time, so if we could move to the government. Who would like to ask questions in the government?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: How do you do, and thank you very much for coming. You're now the manager of the investigations unit.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And how long have you been in that position?

Mr. Rick Brady: I became manager in August 2003.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you have some experience there now.

Mr. Rick Brady: A couple of years.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What did you do before that?

Mr. Rick Brady: I was an investigator. I was appointed as an investigator—I'm still an investigator—in 2000. When I joined the ministry in 1997, I started off in dispatch. That was 1997. In 2000—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Now did I understand you to say that at some point you had been with a police service prior to that?

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes. I was a uniformed member of the Ontario Provincial Police for 10 years.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. So that's where you learned your investigative skills—

Mr. Rick Brady: It started there. Then, when I left the OPP, it was 10 years as a private investigator and worked for defence counsel.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you've had quite a variety of different sorts of investigative experiences—

Mr. Rick Brady: A few.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —in settings where you've practised your investigative skills.

As manager, what are your particular responsibilities? Can you give us an idea, as manager of the investigation unit?

Mr. Rick Brady: Overall, the complaints will come in to me from various sources. I will dialogue with the complainant. First determine how serious it appears on paper or in discussions with the complainant and at that point make a determination, is the ministry going to investigate? Are we going to have land service investigate? Whatever makes the complainant happy—obviously, if the complainant doesn't want the land service to investigate, we will.

My job is then to start gathering the background materials for an investigator. Once all those materials are in—except lately we have a giant backlog of unassigned investigations—the first investigator who comes in the door to turn something in, it's like, "It's your lucky day. You just got another file."

I just tell them the basics of the complaint. I don't tell them what I expect from them. I don't tell them what route you should go, what answers you should get. It's just, "This is a patient-care complaint." But we look at the entire call, too. If it's a patient-care complaint, we also investigate the dispatch side of things, because anything could have gone wrong in a call. Then the investigator is assigned. They review all the materials they've been given, and they can determine on paper, "Who do I have to speak to? Who do I have to take interview statements from?" Then off they go.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So if you're the initial gatherer of information and documents, what documents, if it's air ambulance, would you routinely collect?

Mr. Rick Brady: It would be the same for land or air.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. Rick Brady: We would get all the dispatch information, so all the audio, the computer dispatch records, any incident reports, or reports that a communicator may have completed because of the call. We'd ask for the ambulance call report, any incident reports that the paramedics may have completed—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: When would a paramedic complete an incident report? What would trigger that?

Mr. Rick Brady: The legislation is very clear as to when they have to complete an incident report. It's the Ontario ambulance documentation standards. Part 3 is incident reporting, and there's a section—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So for those of us who don't know—

Mr. Rick Brady: Put it down as a really unusual occurrence, so, is there a long delay in response? Is there a problem accessing a patient? Has there been an equipment failure that could negatively impact a patient? Did something happen that you harmed the patient, or did something happen that you might have harmed the patient? Those types of things—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But given that you're dealing with critically ill or injured patients, these are incidents that have to do with the smooth flow of the service as opposed to the patient has passed away, because in some cases that's not unpredictable.

Mr. Rick Brady: Well, in some cases, it is predictable.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, or it is predictable.

Mr. Rick Brady: Unfortunately, in the field of paramedicine, patients do die—best efforts to save them—but that would not necessarily trigger an investigation.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because that may be a reasonably expected outcome. So, the incidents are related to things going in an unexpected flow.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Now, if you've got air ambulance, and air and land are both involved, or you've got hospital and air or however these things interrelate, because you're often dealing with transfers from one to another, do you collect all the records from the hospital or all the records from the land ambulance side of the incidents?

Mr. Rick Brady: If land ambulance is involved in an investigation, then, yes, we collect from them as well. If the investigator needs to know how the patient presented either prior to being turned over to the paramedics or how the patient presented when the paramedics turned them over, then we will make a request to the hospital. We use what we call a PHIPA letter. Because we're conducting an investigation that may result in a law enforcement proceeding, we have the authority to ask them to turn the records over.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: If you do go as far as having to access the hospital records—that's an asterisk in the PHIPA, if I can put it that way, that you're authorized to have access to that record. It's not something that can be casually obtained.

Mr. Rick Brady: Oh, absolutely not.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That's very unusual that you would get access to it. It's because you are authorized to do an investigation.

Mr. Rick Brady: We always, when we're going to a hospital to ask for assistance, touch base with the chief executive officer of the hospital first. The investigator lets them know that we are not investigating the hospital, which calms them down immediately—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I'm sure it does.

Mr. Rick Brady: We'd limit to—we don't want the entire patient chart, because it's not really our purview to go over it; we just want to know, "How did the patient present when the paramedics delivered the patient to you?", and/or, "What did you find just prior to delivering the patient?" It's the same as: We'll go in and interview nurses and doctors, with the co-operation of the hospital, to be able to get an understanding of what kind of interaction was going on and what were the expectations.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Again, that testimony from medical personnel in the hospital would be PHIPA-protected—the information that you're exchanging in that interview. Is that correct?

Mr. Rick Brady: Absolutely. Our reports and all of the materials that we gather are officially part of the patient's health record. Our entire file is protected by PHIPA. Again, if someone wants a copy of our report, they have to have the legislated authority to ask for it. For example, your husband couldn't call me and say, "You did an investigation, and it's my wife." I'd say, "Ask Mrs. Sandals to send me a clearance to release. Otherwise, I'm not giving it to you." So we are very careful about our documents.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Having a patient release if you're going to release that patient's medical records.

Mr. Rick Brady: Or the executor's release or something; absolutely, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just to confirm, because the committee has asked for, I think, all the investigation records related to Omge: Within that record, there would be a lot of information which is clearly a health record for the purposes of PHIPA.

Mr. Rick Brady: The majority of the documents in the files would contain personal health information; absolutely.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And you would not normally release that except under authorization of the patient or some other authorized investigative unit that's enumerated in PHIPA?

Mr. Rick Brady: Oh, absolutely. For the coroner, they certainly have the authority, under their act, to seize anything they want, but I have to get something from them, either verbally or in writing, that they're invoking section 16 of their authority. If it's another law enforcement agency, say the Ministry of Labour, who needs information, they would have to issue an order under their legislation. If they issue an order, we have to release. In other situations—say, the police want something—we'll carefully review what it is they're after and why they want it before we just—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So even if the police made a request for some of the information that you have in your investigation records, you might refuse that information to the police unless they clearly have very—

Mr. Rick Brady: Satisfy—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —high need to access that—

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —because, again, it's a personal health record.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. I think that's very helpful for us to understand.

It sounds to me like part of your job is that once you've collected this information you need to take a great deal of care in protecting that information because of the nature of it being a personal health record.

Mr. Rick Brady: All of our investigative files are maintained under lock and key. The investigators, obviously on active files, will have the files with them, but certainly, because of the motion that this committee made to obtain information, it was my staff and only my staff that pulled the initial investigations and made the first set of copies because I didn't want anyone going into them. Some cases, you never know—it's all evidence and it's all patient information. And if something was going to go missing, I'd rather get heck to my staff than to figure out who has got into the files. They did that over a three-day time period and then turned the materials over to someone else in the branch to make the other copies.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So your investigators actually spent a number of days copying the information for other people—

Mr. Rick Brady: They did three days. I had to pull them off the road for three days to do the request—our part of it.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you for sharing that, because I think it's important that we know we've got some downstream consequences in the seriousness of what we've asked for.

Then I presume that the next step would have been to the legal branch at the Ministry of Health or they—

Mr. Rick Brady: Again, because you are the Legislature—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes.

Mr. Rick Brady: —it's one of those things that you don't say no. It's the same as being invited to the committee. As I said when I was invited, "You expect me to say no?"

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You mean you didn't want to come and have tea with us?

Mr. Rick Brady: There's tea?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It's okay. Don't answer that.

Mr. Rick Brady: I didn't get the tea.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We could come up with coffee.

Mr. Rick Brady: No, it's a very arduous task. There are now five people who are doing nothing except getting the materials ready to try and turn over to the committee. So that's five staff members at the branch who aren't being able to do their regular duties that are 7.25 hours a day, five days a week—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Wow.

Mr. Rick Brady: —working to get these materials to you.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you for that information. I understand from what you're going to say that this is going on for weeks now.

Mr. Rick Brady: It's going on for weeks because they are redacting—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because they're personal—

Mr. Rick Brady: Because it's personal information. Two of the staff members who are doing the audio redacting, I think we'll probably have to send them away for a long vacation because it's probably going to take them a couple of months.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Wow. Just in terms of the audio records, how many hours of audio records would you end up with out of a typical air ambulance call? Maybe there isn't any such thing, but give us an idea of how many hours of audio you end up with.

Mr. Rick Brady: It would not be unusual, say, for the dispatch end of things, to have an hour to an hour and a half, because once a call begins, where they're booking the call and their patient information—so you could have an hour to an hour and a half. Then there'd be the land dispatch end of things, if they're involved in the call. One investigation we did, I think the dispatch manager has indicated that we're probably looking at three hours' worth of audio. Then there's when we do our interviews. All of our interviews are audio-recorded.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: When the base hospital is communicating with the paramedics, is that also all audio?

Mr. Rick Brady: That's all on audio, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So while they're in the air, you would have the constant communication between the base hospital and the paramedic—

Mr. Rick Brady: In many cases—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —or intermittent communication—

Mr. Rick Brady: I was going to say, in many cases, with the air ambulance system, the paramedics will be getting their orders from the physician prior to making patient contact. Then once they're in the hospital, they'll likely contact the physician again to either change the orders or get new orders. Then, if they have to, yes, in the air they would get a hold of the base hospital physician for further orders. All of that would be on audio.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you may have, actually, three or four different—by the time you get through dispatch and the land ambulance and possibly conversations between base hospital and air paramedics plus the interviewers, you may actually have four different sets of tapes—

Mr. Rick Brady: Oh, easily.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —from one investigation that would amount to hours—

Mr. Rick Brady: From the investigations that we've pulled to comply with your motion, there are 468 separate audio files.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Wow. And the average length of those?

Mr. Rick Brady: I haven't asked the two folks who were doing the redacting, but I'm thinking the average is 45 minutes to an hour, and it's taking them about three hours to redact 10 minutes worth of stuff.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Wow.

Mr. Rick Brady: Because they have to listen to it and make the determination, "If I'm going to exclude, why am I excluding this?" Because they have a list of criteria that the legislation permits them to do. Then they have to actually exclude it, re-record it as an excluded one, because you can't touch the original recording.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Right.

Mr. Rick Brady: And then they go back to listen to it again to make sure, “Did I miss anything?” or “Did I take something out I shouldn’t have taken out?” and they have to put it back in again.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So in order to produce a redacted audio record, it isn’t a case of transcribing and redacting, the legal definition of a redacted audio record is the actual redacted—in that anything that we shouldn’t hear is removed?

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct, and even if we thought, “Okay, let’s have them transcribe it. It’ll be faster,” no. A verbatim transcript—we don’t do them anymore. We used to. We won’t even do them for the coroner’s office because it’s easily 10 minutes of typing for one minute of audio. The audio quality may not be quite there. You have to listen to it again. You have to catch every “um,” “ah,” pause, giggle, laugh—it’s a time-consuming process.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And I guess if there’s any issue around the sound quality not being clear, you’re then depending on the transcribing to make a decision about what it is that’s being heard as opposed to the raw material, which is what was picked up, and those could be two different things, which, I guess, from the coroner’s point of view, could be quite significant.

Mr. Rick Brady: It could be very significant, and it’s not unusual for us—sometimes the coroners will send us verbatim transcripts their staff have prepared, simply to say, “We don’t understand half of your terminology, so could you have one of your people listen to it?” Because every system has their own nomenclature, so that if we were to say something like “CACC,” some person who’s a court reporter wouldn’t know what “CACC” means if they fell over one.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And it probably means something to you different from my son, who’s a trumpet player?

Mr. Rick Brady: More than likely; it’s probably even spelled differently.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That could be.

Let’s talk about the number of investigations that you’ve been doing, particularly with respect to Ornge. You mentioned that you sensed that there was an increase in the number of investigations in 2007. Is that correct?

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What happened in 2007, do you think, that prompted that increase? Did you have a sense of the why?

Mr. Rick Brady: It was triggered, again, by—most of those complaints, and I’m only going on memory, would have been coming in from either one of the land dispatch systems or the municipal ambulances themselves who were finding issues with the delivery of air ambulance service that wasn’t what they were used to. We did get some from sending facilities—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So were these jurisdictional disputes or disputes about when it should be land and when it should be air or—

Mr. Rick Brady: Well, again—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —what was the nature, because when I think of complaints, I tend to think of patient complaints. I tend to think in terms of medical complaints, but I think what you’re describing is process or service delivery complaints. Is that fair?

Mr. Rick Brady: Well, sometimes also the decisions that were being made by either the Ornge communications centre or Ornge paramedics. One of the things that we found, as an example, is that there is legislation that speaks to when to contact air ambulance, and there’s the field trauma triage guidelines, which permit the direct delivery of a patient from an on-scene, to bypass any local hospitals and go directly to a trauma centre. There seems to have been some disconnect between what the land paramedics believed they were seeing as far as a trauma. Ornge would arrive on scene and go, “No, they don’t meet the criteria. We’re not taking them.” So they would turn to us and say, “Okay, we need someone to come in and investigate. Were my land paramedics wrong or are they wrong?”

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you were almost becoming the referee in a change in protocol.

Mr. Rick Brady: Not just the referee, but also whether everyone was following the rules. I can’t remember the specific case. I know the land service was not very happy with us, because they made they complaint. We found that it was the land service that had made the errors, not the air service. But as I tell them, if you’re going to make a complaint, we look at the entire call. We just don’t look at: “You’re blaming Ornge for something. We’re only going to look at Ornge”—no. We have to look at everybody’s involvement.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Which is why the file is so big, in some cases, because you’re looking at potentially the hospital—or two hospitals, as the case may be—the land ambulance, maybe even two land ambulances, plus Ornge.

Mr. Rick Brady: There could be a giant cast of characters involved. In a multi-patient incident, we could have two or three ambulance services, land services, two of our dispatch centres, plus Ornge. That’s a lot of people involved. We also interview bystanders, so if firefighters were on the scene or police were on the scene, independent witnesses. Some investigations could take a very long time.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So these investigations really become quite huge. Did you notice a change in either the nature of the complaints or the number of complaints as Ornge started to create these private entities? Is that something that you would have detected at your end?

Mr. Rick Brady: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it was really more the transition from the old ministry lead service to the Ornge lead service, rather than the transition from the simple non-profit to the complicated. That wasn’t so much what prompted it. It was the original transfer from the ministry to Ornge that sort of created the volume fluctuation?

Mr. Rick Brady: It's an interesting question. Certainly, whether or not these private companies and the energies that were being put into them took their focus away from their business of running an ambulance service, I can't say. It certainly wasn't something where I sat there and went, "This Ornge Peel must have something to do with why we're getting more complaints," because most of these companies I'd never heard of until it started coming out in the media, because it didn't impact us.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And you're the same as most people. We just saw the Ornge helicopter flying by. We didn't see all those background companies with all the peculiar labels.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I think you also made reference to there being a high volume of complaints now. Is that correct?

Mr. Rick Brady: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Like, in the last six months. The complaints that you've received in the last six months, you're reflecting when you received the complaint. When are the actual incident dates on those complaints?

Mr. Rick Brady: There's two reasons we have more investigations at the moment. Again, the Auditor General pointed out in his report—I think it was 11 or 20 severe adverse events; I can't remember the number.

Mr. Jim McCarter: It was 20. We had 20, and we just mentioned that they'd been reported to the board of directors of Ornge, that we felt that they hadn't been reported to the ministry, and we felt there were some in there that should have been reported to the ministry.

Mr. Rick Brady: Correct. Absolutely. So that triggered my going to Ornge and saying, "What are these 20 severe adverse events that we've never heard about?" They sent me a pile of stuff that was way more than 20. So we had to review each and every one of these, and out of that, there are three—and they're from 2009—that I've opened investigation files on. I haven't assigned anyone to them yet because they're old. We did the same task for 2010-11. I said, "Okay, seeing as how we didn't know about them in that time period"—and again, I think they sent me 21 or 22. One of my staff went through all of them. Ten of those would warrant opening an investigation. So some of these are older matters, and I'm having to be judicious in triaging our investigations now.

Any one that has come in from a patient complaint—one of them, I think, is going back to 2010. Obviously, we'll be giving that priority to investigate. If it comes in from a hospital, that gets priority to investigate. But they're not all 2012 issues. I can't say for 100% sure right now how many are 2012 issues, but out of the 60—odd that we've opened this year, maybe half—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because 60 is a very high number.

Mr. Rick Brady: It's very high.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That's way higher than any number that I've ever seen for the annual complaint load. A lot of that, then, you're saying, is really—Ornge knew about the complaint but hadn't forwarded it.

Mr. Rick Brady: In some cases, but in other cases, it's people who are coming forward now because they do realize—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So is this also when there's media around how to complain that people then go, "Oh, I should complain"?

Mr. Rick Brady: It could be what's driving it.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So some of the media familiarity with the story will increase complaints?

Mr. Rick Brady: That has occurred for a couple of the sending facilities that have contacted, going, "Yes, we did have an issue," and "Oh, my gosh, you people do investigate these things?" It's not like we're widely known outside of the EMS circles, but that has been prompting people to contact the ministry.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes left.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you've got, then, a very large number of cases right now. You've got our request. I'm guessing that your staff is very stretched right now.

Mr. Rick Brady: Incredibly, and it's also holiday season, and I'm loath to tell them, "No, you can't have your vacation," because they well deserve it. I mean, December and January were very stressful because we only had five of us. I now have two more investigators who have been added, but they're in training. Although they come from the EMS system, you still have to learn to be an investigator. So they're assigned to work with one of the other investigators as their mentor.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it will take a while for them to—

Mr. Rick Brady: Get up to speed.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just before we finish, I wanted to ask one question, because you have referenced that you turn materials over to the coroner's office. The coroner recently made a statement a few weeks ago. The coroner stated that in the cases that had been turned over to him, he had concluded there was no evidence that air ambulance issues materially affected the outcome of the case.

Mr. Klees had been quite critical of the coroner. I think in the House he said he was being political. Do you find that the coroner's office is at all political in their evaluation of cases?

Mr. Rick Brady: I've never known them to be. I've worked very closely with the chief coroner, the two deputies, regional coroners. I've never found them to be politically motivated.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you very much. We're pleased that you felt compelled to come and see us this afternoon.

Mr. Rick Brady: You're welcome.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much for coming before the committee this afternoon.

Mr. Rick Brady: Thank you, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The committee is adjourned until July 18 at 9 a.m.

The committee adjourned at 1559.

*The committee met at 0835 in room 151.*SPECIAL REPORT, AUDITOR GENERAL:
ORNGE AIR AMBULANCE
AND RELATED SERVICES

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'd like to call this meeting to order and, first of all, point out to committee members that there's some information in front of you. First of all, there's a large blue binder that was delivered from Mr. Alfred Apps. There is one of those binders per caucus. It is fairly substantial; so, saving a little paper, there is one per caucus. There is also an update from the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care in terms of some more information. As well, there is a letter from Fasken Martineau, from Lynne Golding, providing an update in terms of providing the information and records that were asked for by the committee.

Our first presenter is not until 9, but we did start early because there were some motions that were tabled. I understand that one was tabled by Ms. Sandals, and you have comments about that, Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. I'm not going to read the whole motion, or at least the original motion. We had asked that some documents be tabled with the committee that were referred to in the Fasken's billing, so there is a list of the precise dates on which the documents were identified in their billing records which the committee previously received.

The motion that the committee passed on June 13 asked for those documents to be produced on July 13. They were not produced. We therefore tabled a motion on Monday, I think it probably was, with the clerk that that be reported to the Legislature, because when there is non-compliance with a direction of the committee, it would be the Legislature that addresses that.

Since then, we have received a letter from Ms. Golding specifying that they have about two thirds of the work done and suggesting that they will deliver the work that they have done this Friday. That would be two days from now.

I must say that we find this a little bit frustrating in that the documents were specifically identified. Ultimately, the taxpayer paid for this law firm to do the work, so these are documents that the taxpayer paid for with respect to their work on Ornge and Ontario Air Ambulance, as it was known at the time. Who am I to impute motives, but it's a little bit odd that when we've asked them for documents that were more related to Liberal governments, they proceed quickly, and when we ask for documents that relate to Tory decisions, they proceed slowly. Who am I to impute motives? Mr. Klees was a member of cabinet at that time. Perhaps he knows what's in the documents; we certainly don't.

Given that Fasken's has identified a willingness to produce the documents, what I'm going to suggest is that we defer debating the motion until August 1. We're sitting, Chair, on August 1. That will give Fasken's an opportunity to comply with the motion, because obviously, if they comply with the motion, there's no need to pass a motion to go to the Legislature. So I would ask that we defer the motion until August 1.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Any other comments on this point? No? Okay, then at this point, we are going to go in camera for a few minutes, until our first witness comes before the committee. So I'd need to clear the room.

The committee continued in closed session from 0842 to 0907.

DR. CHRIS MAZZA

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I call this committee back to order and welcome Dr. Chris Mazza before the committee this morning. I'm going to give him a chance to get settled there.

Welcome, Dr. Mazza. I just want to confirm that you've received the information for a person coming before the committee.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. Very well. Our clerk has an oath for you to swear. I see you have a Bible, so we'll proceed with that.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Dr. Mazza, do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We do have a lot of media in the room this morning. I would just ask the media to watch that they don't bump into anybody, and please, don't be filming papers that are on members' desks, as well.

At this point, you have time for an opening statement, Dr. Mazza. Please go ahead and make your opening statement.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Chairman, just before I make my opening statement, on a point of order: Is it okay if I write down questions or points of questions when I hear them, so I don't forget them?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Certainly. Whatever works for you, Dr. Mazza; if that's helpful for you, yes, please do.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Good morning. Mr. Chairman, my lawyer, Roger Yachetti, has made reference to my medical condition, and I would like to state that it was my health circumstances that did not enable me to attend this committee previously. There are those that feel I have been using my medical condition as a shield, to hide. All I can say is that they are wrong.

When my son Joshua died, I felt enormous guilt about my inability to protect him. To assuage my guilt, I poured every ounce of my strength into building Ornge, to save lives, to make him proud. The public dismantling of Ornge has triggered deep-seated emotions related to my son's death that I am as yet unable to deal with effectively.

My intent today is to help this committee understand why we built Ornge the way we did, how it was going to fulfill its mission.

There may be areas of questioning that touch on possible lawsuits. As such, I may not be able to answer all questions, as I am mindful I am under oath.

At the outset, and with the benefit of hindsight, I acknowledge that although I might have done some things differently, I would have, and always have, acted with the best interests of the residents of Ontario in mind.

Much has been made of my compensation package. You will know that all executive compensation was a board decision made with the assistance of compensation specialist Cliste and global governance. My total compensation package may seem to be excessive. It is my understanding that those decisions were made using data that compared my responsibilities and obligations to other similar companies and their executives. I regret that it has been a lightning rod for controversy.

The board relied upon advice from legal counsel at Fasken's not to disclose compensation for senior management. In retrospect, this may have been ill-advised. The trouble it has caused is extensive and unfortunate.

I left a full-time, successful career as an emergency medicine specialist at Sunnybrook hospital in 2003 to help build the Ornge team. I believed and I still believe deeply in what we were doing. For me, Ornge was never about personal enrichment or personal gain. It was about the vital and urgent necessity to transform an antiquated and dysfunctional air ambulance system that everyone knew did not serve the interests of Ontario residents—a system that ignored a critical marriage of cockpit and cabin, outsourcing the cockpit control to a private sector monopoly and consortium of providers with unreliable equipment and dubious operational standards.

This same system was also facing innumerable critical challenges. Amongst them were the following:

There was approximately 2% memory remaining on the dispatch system servers.

The analog phone system for the air dispatch system that was of questionable quality became completely dysfunctional approximately two weeks after Ornge assumed management.

There were no effective management information systems.

Approximately 60% to 70% dispatch reliability existed in the dedicated operating fleet.

Only 18% of flights were using the fixed-cost fleet, while a massive 82% were using the variable-cost fleet.

Over approximately 70% of flight legs had no patients.

There was little choice or control regarding aviation costs.

Working together with a very committed group of people, we began to build a modern, effective air ambulance system that has achieved the following milestones in enhancing transport medicine services for Ontario patients:

Firstly, Ornge successfully replaced the badly needed, seriously outdated capital assets on which the Ontario system relies. This includes information technology, communication and aviation capital assets.

Secondly, as a result of the internalization of fleet ownership and in-sourcing of aviation services, Ornge was able to apply newly acquired capacity and expertise to control the service delivery environment.

Thirdly, Ornge introduced a dramatically more efficient and effective hub and spoke approach to the assembly of infrastructure and the execution of patient transports.

Fourthly, Ornge significantly increased operational efficiency, which included but was not limited to a more optimized approach to basing and dispatching aircraft, which has already resulted in approximately 30% fewer empty legs and a reduction in not-service transports by 19% since 2006-07.

To be certain, Mr. Chairman, not everyone agreed with these changes, and you have heard from some of these people. But the changes that were implemented and continue today are paying dividends.

Utilizing expertise developed by our Ornge team, we realized that we could commercialize the Ornge concept around the world. Ornge Peel and, later, Ornge Global were created with a view to Ontario taxpayers obtaining the financial benefit from systems developed in Ontario. The testimony of former counsel Alf Apps clearly indicates that the first call on any profits derived from exporting Ornge technology and systems would go to taxpayers and would then be used for the domestic funding of Ornge in Ontario. These plans were in the public interest, and they were fully and regularly disclosed to government and to senior officials in the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care. As Mr. James Sinclair, direct of legal services in the Ministry of Finance, testified, taxpayers were not at risk, and like the sale of Teranet decades ago, this would ultimately have been a win-win for taxpayers.

There are those who want to focus on what I was paid or a boat to be used in the promotion of injury prevention among youth or a motorcycle intended to raise awareness and then generate revenue as an auction item. These concerns are not misplaced but should be fairly viewed in the context of what Ornge is achieving. There are those intent on turning the clock back, wiping out Ornge and going back to outsourcing to private sector monopolies with dubious operating standards. Such changes would be ill-advised and not in the public interest.

I feel very badly for the people who have been affected by what has happened here, especially the dedicated staff at Ornge, and for those, who through no fault of their own, have lost their jobs. I also feel badly for the vision that could have been beneficial to Ontarians and was destroyed, with little regard for the consequences.

I will try to answer your questions now to the best of my ability, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity to speak.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for your opening statement. We're going to start 20-minute rounds of questions with the three parties. I would just say that we do have a long day planned today. If you find that you need a break, we can recess the committee at some point, if that's required.

We'll start with the official opposition. Mr. Klees, please go ahead.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Mazza, Mr. Yachetti was quoted as saying that you're very interested in setting the record straight. As you know, this committee has been looking forward to hearing from you for that same reason. I'm sure that you also know that you're making history here. This is only the second time in the history of this Legislature that a witness had to be compelled under a Speaker's warrant to come forward. Have you seen the warrant that was issued?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir, I have.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to, for the record, read the substance of that warrant: You are required to attend and give evidence before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, in room 151, Legislative Building, Queen's Park, Toronto, at 9 a.m. on Wednesday, July 18, 2012, and to remain until your attendance is no longer required. The committee is considering the 2012 Special Report of the Auditor General of Ontario on Ornge Air Ambulance and Related Services. You are required to bring with you and produce to the committee all documents, records or things related to the committee's consideration of the 2012 Special Report of the Auditor General on Ornge Air Ambulance and Related Services. If you disobey this warrant, you may be subject to punishment, including imprisonment.

As we've indicated, we certainly want to be sensitive, Mr. Mazza, to your circumstances, but this committee has a responsibility, as well, to get to the bottom of this issue, and we certainly expect that you will be able to cooperate with us. Is there any reason why you feel you may not be able to attend with us throughout the course of this scheduled day?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Chairman, I am under ongoing treatment for a medical condition that has compromised me severely. I am here today to do the best that I can to attend to my duties to the people of Ontario and to this committee. I am here to do my very best. My medical condition is a reality that I live with, and I will do my best.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Mazza.

Mr. Mazza, have you met the Auditor General?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir, I have not.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to introduce you to him; he's sitting at the head of the hearing table. As you know, it was the work of the Auditor General that has brought us to this committee here. He and his team did an extensive audit of Ornge. He tabled that report in March 2012. Have you read the Auditor General's report?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir, I had an opportunity to read it.

Mr. Frank Klees: We have had more than 30 witnesses come forward who have given us their perspective on the Auditor General's findings, and I must say that while there were those who took some exception, the vast majority of those witnesses confirmed and supported the Auditor General's findings, so we're going to be interested in your perspective.

There's a great deal of interest in this hearing today. Many people have been waiting to hear from you, beyond this committee. Sir, you've affected a great many lives over the past few years, and for many, this is the first opportunity they have to hear directly from you.

In the hearing room today are some of those lives you've affected: former friends and colleagues. One of those former friends is Mr. Jacob Blum. Do you consider Mr. Blum a friend?

Dr. Chris Mazza: At one point in my life, Mr. Blum was a friend and a colleague. I have lost touch with Mr. Blum over the years.

Mr. Frank Klees: He's going to be very interested in your responses to questions today.

Among the many representatives of the media here today observing these proceedings is Mr. Kevin Donovan of the Toronto Star, who has invested a great deal of his time in researching your career. Among those watching this proceeding, Mr. Mazza, are people from across the province, literally hundreds, who have been affected by the decisions that you made as CEO of Ornge. They include employees of Ornge, both current and former; employees who have lost their jobs because of decisions that you made; paramedics who have experienced the frustrations of having to turn down critically ill patients because the helicopter interiors on which you signed off couldn't accommodate administering CPR.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. Is there a question here?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees can use his time as he wishes, Counsel, and please allow him to.

Mr. Frank Klees: There are pilots who are watching these proceedings who have left Ornge because they lost confidence in the administration at Ornge. There are suppliers and former aviation executives who lost their businesses because of your strategy of creating a private sector monopoly. There are families who are watching these proceedings, families and friends of patients who died under circumstances where an Ornge helicopter was not available for a response because of a downstaffing policy that originated with you, never knowing whether that life could have been saved if a timely response had been available.

Mr. Mazza, given the revelations contained in the Auditor General's report, given the fallout and the information of more than 30 witnesses and, quite frankly, the reports that we have had of incidents that resulted from Ornge not being able to perform, do you feel any guilt?

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Is that a proper question, Mr. Chairman? With the greatest of respect, Mr. Klees is making speeches here. Dr. Mazza is here to answer questions.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please allow Dr. Mazza to respond to the question.

Dr. Chris Mazza: What is the question, sir?

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you feel any guilt?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Klees, I feel that at all times, to the best of my ability and with my entire focus and effort from the time that I took my responsibilities at Ornge, I worked in the best interests and for the patients and citizens of Ontario—to the best of my ability at all times. That is what I feel.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Mazza, to your right is a document entitled Investigations Concerning Air Ambulance and Related Services. This is a confidential document that all members of the committee have. I presented a copy at your table. This is a confidential document that is updated periodically for cabinet. It enumerates incidents that were reported.

I won't go into any detail, but suffice it to say that this is a document that has numerous examples of patients who died, patients who were not able to be responded to by Ornge because of interiors that were designed under your watch, because of policies that were made. Because of downstaffing policies, paramedics were not available, pilots were not available. Do you feel any responsibility, Mr. Mazza, for these incidents?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Klees, every death that has ever occurred in my career, either in emergency medicine or as an expert in transport medicine or within Ornge, has been of grave concern to me. I feel great pain and sorrow with every death that I have ever encountered.

I am not aware of deaths directly related to interiors, nor was I aware of deaths directly related to interiors. I have not seen medical analysis to that effect. I do not have the capability of answering your question to that degree.

Death and preventing death, Mr. Klees, was always first and foremost in any decisions I made at Ornge. There were people dying long before Ornge and the things that changed at Ornge came into being. In fact, Ornge was built on the premise of improving efficiency and effectiveness and trying to decrease those issues. It was a focus of our entire executive team to try to find ways to improve on the effectiveness and efficiency, the safety and the patient safety, as well as the crew safety, for anything that Ornge did—

Mr. Frank Klees: And yet, Mr. Mazza, we heard from people from your executive team—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, he was still speaking.

Please finish your response.

Dr. Chris Mazza: So when you ask me if I am upset and concerned about deaths, I may illustrate one particular example that comes to mind, sir, that drove me forward with great fervour. It was prior to Ornge, but it is exemplified in many cases in the history prior to 2006, Mr. Klees.

A young man tobogganing on a hill north of Alliston, the young man 15 years old at the time, hit a tree, his injuries not severe enough that he couldn't walk down the hill with his friend. They were severe; he just wasn't aware. As the family that received them at the bottom of the hill became aware that there was a problem, they called for local ambulance service. Errors were made. A helicopter scene response was not requested. The child was then taken to a local facility. He continued to deteriorate. He required a trauma centre. A call was made. A helicopter was not available because it was in action. Unfortunately, processes did not exist and staff did not exist that had the appropriate competency to make the decisions that were necessary. The helicopter was never taken from where it was attending to a broken leg to come five minutes to attend to this boy who was dying, and the boy died in an ambulance racing for St. Michael's trauma centre.

I received a call, Mr. Klees, to look into that situation. This was 2005, sir. I received a call from the Premier's office to look into that situation. When I did so, it was clear that there were a great many problems associated with it, and I got to know the parents very well.

Ornge's focus, Ornge's obsession—the executive team at Ornge were absolutely committed, sir, committed every day that they came to work, believed intensely that we were trying to prevent such occurrences. Perfection? No, sir, we were not. But we were doing the best that we could and had every intent to continue to improve every day that we worked.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Mazza, you were entrusted with an awesome responsibility by the government of

My question to you is this. As a medical doctor, not only did you allow these things to happen but, according to witnesses before this committee, you personally directed and orchestrated those decisions that have resulted in the scandal that we're investigating today. How could you allow this to happen?

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman; I'm going to interrupt. This is unfair questioning. Mr. Klees has put a number of premises forward that are clearly false. The province is not on the hook for the $300 million, and if you'd read Mr. Apps's report, you'd understand why.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please allow—

Mr. Frank Klees: He's the last person we're going to believe at this committee, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Allow Dr. Mazza to respond, please. And you're not to respond to questions—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: I understand, and I'm trying hard not to.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please allow Dr. Mazza to respond.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, with all due respect to Mr. Yachetti, we have 20-minute rotations here. With his constant interruptions, he is interfering with the work of this committee. I would ask you, as Chair, to caution Mr. Yachetti in terms of his interference.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I've just said that Dr. Mazza is to answer the questions, not his counsel. Dr. Mazza, if you could respond, please, to Mr. Klees's question.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Chairman, I'm just not sure what the question is. I'm hearing a lot of different things and I'm not really sure what the question is. If I could get a question.

Mr. Frank Klees: I will repeat the question.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: As a medical doctor, with the vision that you say that you had in the best interests of patients, how could you allow and, in fact, how could you direct the many decisions that ended up siphoning precious health care dollars from the front-line emergency services into for-profit entities and into a scheme that did nothing to improve patient care in this province?

Dr. Chris Mazza: There are several questions in there, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to try to answer the first one.

Mr. Chairman, I never made decisions and directed issues alone. I had an excellent board of directors that provided very solid governance and oversight. I had a strong team. Those decisions were made in a team-like manner but, most importantly, the decisions were overseen and approved by my board of directors.

Mr. Klees indicates that I orchestrated, that I engaged, and I flatly deny that fact. I had a board. I took my issues, as appropriate and good governance would dictate, to the board of directors. We made decisions, and we believed and still do believe that those decisions were in the best interests of Ontarians and in the best interests of providing more effective, more efficient air ambulance care.

Mr. Klees mentions the debt that the taxpayers are responsible for. That is not my understanding, Mr. Chairman. That debt was incurred with the full knowledge of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, with the full knowledge of the Ontario Financing Authority, and with the full support of both. It was incurred not as sovereign debt. It was a rated bond that was incurred by Ornge, and I understand that the testimony here from the Ministry of Finance has backed up that position: that the taxpayers of Ontario are not on the hook for that debt. That is my understanding.

Mr. Klees also refers to siphoning. At no time was anyone siphoning dollars to for-private schemes. The mandate of Ornge, that started back in 2006 and went through four cabinet ministers and two deputy ministers, two associate deputy ministers and three assistant deputy ministers—always had to generate revenue outside the tax base in order to improve the sustainability and improve the infrastructure of the systems in Ontario, which were, in the view of those of us who built the systems in 2006, not sustainable.

I hope I'm answering the questions. That's the best of my ability.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute and a half left, Mr. Klees, in this round.

Mr. Frank Klees: In that case, I will defer the balance of my questions for the next round.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Who would like to go for the NDP? Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Good morning, Dr. Mazza. It goes in rotation, and I'll be asking questions with my colleague for the next 20 minutes.

I was most interested: When you did your opening comments, you did mention that you fully and regularly disclosed everything that was going on to the ministry. As well, when you answered my colleague, you repeated that you had full knowledge and support from the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Finance.

I would be interested in you taking me down: How did you brief them? How often? Who knew? Was there a schedule in place where you would update the ministry as to what was going on at Ornge, how things were progressing?

Dr. Chris Mazza: If I may ask, just for clarification, do you mean from inception and regarding anything and everything, or on particular issues?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Well, let's start it broad.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Okay. The primary contact at the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care would have been the emergency health services branch. In the beginning, my staff—I don't actually recall which staff. I believe it was shared between one of my operational chiefs, Mr. Lepine, and, at the time, Mr. Blum, but Ms. Renzella was always involved as well in briefing the ministry as required. In 2006-07, it was not as regular as it became. It was sort of more, as I recall, haphazard, but it was certainly many times per month, and obviously often many times beyond that per year.

In the internal audit and review that was performed by Meyers Norris Penny, one of the recommendations was that those reviews, interactions, communications become regular and formalized. We moved to continuing to speak to them, in some cases, on a daily basis, but certainly, again, many, many times per month, but then with formal quarterly meetings regarding all issues and challenges that Ornge may or may not be facing, and that of course would relate to any strategic plans or strategic initiatives that we were undergoing.

During times of major projects, though, ma'am, we would move outside of even that briefing schedule and move into a far more intense format of briefing. For example, in the moving towards the bond offering and the movement into aviation, we were absolutely up front with the ministry as to why we felt strongly that we needed to move into aviation, why we felt strongly that we needed to replace the fleet, what the economic analyses were behind that and so on and so forth.

But we went beyond that. We were engaged, with the help of our financial adviser, which we achieved in an RFP, and corporate counsel for Fasken's, Mr. Apps, in briefing and ensuring that the Ontario Financing Authority not only understood the tenets, the tone, the type of deal that was on the table, but supported it. And it was our understanding that there was broad and widespread support for this.

If at any time, ma'am—if at any time—the ministry had indicated to us that "We do not want this to happen," or "We do not like the way the strategic direction is going," there is no question that we would have changed tracks. They were our principal client. They were the reason we existed. They were who we were trying to please.

Much has been made at this committee about the inability to affect our operation. I must say I've been quite puzzled by that, because while I've read Ms. Golding's testimony—and certainly there are any number of legal means that the ministry could use to effect change in something they didn't like. But I think it's more important that the committee understand that there was an unbelievable moral and ethical power that the ministry had over Ornge. We were there to serve them. That was our belief. That I say from my heart, from my soul, from who I am and from my chairmanship. That was why we were there. I hope I answered you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, that was pretty good. You went from broad to—and you also went from 2006 to, I take it, more recent.

Let's talk about some of those briefings that you've done with the help of Mr. Apps. There was a briefing note that was widely circulated, where you came to the ministry and briefed them on the new corporate structure and the strategic direction of Ornge. This document has been circulated at this committee, and I take it that you know what I'm referring to.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Was this well received?

Dr. Chris Mazza: First, I would qualify that I wasn't involved in those briefings. The briefings, as I recall, were carried out by lead counsel, Mr. Apps from Fasken's, Mr. Beltzner and Mr. Lepine. I believe those were the attendees.

Unequivocally, yes, the briefings were well received in what was communicated to me. Inasmuch as it was, communicated to me, in fact, the briefings were so well received and so well supported that it was communicated to me that one of the deputy ministers—I cannot remember which one, whether it was finance or health; I thought it was health, but I don't recollect that absolutely—indicated that in this restructuring and the bringing in of private investors, would the government be able to invest? They thought that the business plan and the opportunity were so positive that they would like to look at the potential of investing.

They also talked about a number of other potentials down the road, that they thought it was a brilliant piece of public policy. That was why we went ahead with it. Again, to say that in those briefings, if the ministry had said, "We don't want you doing this. We think this isn't appropriate," we would have gone ahead? Absolutely not.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would there be a chance that the ministry did say "We're not happy," and this information never reached you? You thought that the ministry was onside, but really, they were not?

Dr. Chris Mazza: It's a hypothetical question. I can't imagine that—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Scenario.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I can't imagine that, no. But it's hypothetical.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you have any example at any point in time where the ministry advised you, "Don't do what you're doing," or, "We have an issue with the way you're proceeding or with your vision," anything of that sort? Was there ever any input provided from the ministry that was basically, "Don't do what you're doing"?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir. I was very proud of what we were doing and I was even prouder that my ministers—because there had been, as I said, four, which started with Minister Clement, who was actually extremely supportive of the directions that we were going in and the concepts that we were espousing; moving on to Minister Smitherman and Minister Caplan, both of whom I had opportunity to brief on the fullness of the concepts. I had meetings with both of those ministers; meetings with ADMs later. No, sir: At all times, people supported it and told me that they thought it was great public policy.

The only minister whom I never met with was Minister Matthews. I asked, over two years, for a meeting with Minister Matthews. I requested a meeting because I had hoped to be able to brief her on the concepts of Ornge. As was my practice when a new minister took office, I wanted to meet and make sure they understood the ideas.

I was told by my corporate communications staff that the minister didn't require a briefing, didn't require a meeting, and was comfortable that Ornge was managing things to the ministry's satisfaction, and, moreover, I gathered, was busy with other issues. So I—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Would you be able to table any formal requests that you made of Minister Matthews for meetings? Do you have records of—

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. As a matter of fact, sir, I have none of my records; I have none of my materials at all. I haven't been at Ornge since my medical leave in December, and I have access to nothing.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Were they formal requests made in writing or by email, or were they telephone requests, for a meeting with Minister Matthews?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know the answer to the question. I know that I delegated the requests to my VP of corporate communications, who would then have been in contact. Whether it was an email contact or a verbal, I don't know the answer.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. I want to take you back to January 2011. Mr. Apps, your board chair, as well as Mr. Lepine, did the briefing. It was extremely well received, well received enough that they saw a piece of policy that really made sense, that maybe the government should invest in. But yet we have the Minister of Health on record saying that when that briefing was done, red flags went up; they tried to get information out of Ornge and were stonewalled.

Did the ministry ever ask you for follow-up information after the briefings were done?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not to my knowledge, ma'am. I have no knowledge of that or understanding of that. I can't imagine a circumstance at Ornge where we would stonewall the minister.

Our interest in those briefings was twofold. It was to fulfill a board obligation that indicated in the minutes that we ensure that the ministry is supportive. Actually, that is very well outlined in a document that I believe Mr. Apps has circulated with this committee. So that was the first premise.

The second premise was more of a moral obligation on our part to ensure that our principal client, and, quite frankly, for those of us on the executive team, our principal reason for doing what we were doing, was happy and thought it was a good piece of policy. So I don't know why—there would have been no reason to stonewall with them. We were proud of what was going on. So I don't know why that would be said.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Neither do I.

You opened up talking about your compensation and how your compensation came to be.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm with the NDP, and when we reviewed the sunshine list, we knew you and had realized that you were no longer on the sunshine list, so we filed a freedom of access of information with the Ministry of Health to find out what your salary was and what your compensation was and why you were no longer there. They told us that they got 13 documents about this, but they could not share that with us.

Did the ministry ever ask you what your compensation was?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Me, personally? No, ma'am. My compensation was always the purview of my board of directors. I had no input into my compensation. I had no opinion that was ever—my opinion was never requested about my compensation. My board of directors utilized third party compensation advisers that used data and a fairly exhaustive process to establish compensation, and I would be informed as to what my compensation would be.

Similarly, if there were issues or questions from outside about my compensation, those would have gone to my chairman and the chairman of the compensation committee, and I would not have been informed.

In fact, in one particular instance I remember—I don't remember the circumstances, but I remember Ms. Hawkins calling me and asking if she could speak to my chairman because she had a question to go over. I said that certainly she could speak to my chairman and asked what it was about. She indicated that she could not tell me because, of course, it was about my compensation.

So I don't know. I don't have any information about that, ma'am, nor would I have on any matters regarding me; I was kept out of it, as is appropriate in a good governance system.

M^{me} France Gélinas: With your knowledge—I mean, you knew your board—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I was an executive director, similar to you. You get to know your chair pretty good, and you get to know your board members pretty good. If the ministry had asked your board for compensation, how do you figure they would have reacted?

Dr. Chris Mazza: It's a hypothetical point. I don't want to speak for my board, ma'am, particularly under oath, because it's an opinion I'm offering.

I can say that the entire issue of disclosure was one that the board dealt with in 2007, I believe. It was when the organization moved to create Ornge Peel, which was to begin to move on its for-profit initiatives, and many staff were moved into Ornge Peel. The board obtained an opinion from Fasken Martineau as to whether they were to disclose or not, and the opinion was, no, they were not to disclose. I was not privy to the debate that went on about that. I was only aware that there was an opinion that was from Fasken Martineau. There was a board meeting that was in camera that I was not allowed to attend. The conclusion out of that board meeting was that they were not going to disclose because that was the advice they had been given.

On a hypothetical basis, ma'am, knowing my board chair and knowing my board, if the ministry had indicated a strong desire for disclosure, my chairman's only concern would have been, I think, privacy and liability issues, which the ministry could have dealt with by taking on those liability issues.

At all times, I suppose my answer would be that my chairman and my board were interested in pleasing the ministry; those requests were never made.

More importantly, it is important to understand that in the internal review and audit of 2008, the Ministry of Finance's internal audit group was aware that Ornge Peel was not on the sunshine list. No issues were made. No discussion came out of that. There were no concerns, and there was a full report and review of the report and debate.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about two minutes left.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: We're looking at the Ministry of Health's involvement and interaction with Ornge. What did the Ministry of Health do to oversee or provide oversight of Ornge? Would you be able to summarize your experience of the Ministry of Health's oversight?

M^{me} France G  linas: Did they do inspections on-site, that kind of stuff?

Dr. Chris Mazza: As I said, the ministry, I thought, were attentive to their obligations in the quarterly meetings, in being regularly aware of what we were doing and what was going on, evaluating any instances of patient occurrences or aviation occurrences. There were formal processes that they had in place—inspections, we could call them, but the ministry has a specific term, and it escapes me right now—land ambulance review and air ambulance review. They're fairly extensive processes. From what I saw, they were attentive.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: How many reviews do you recall occurred?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't recall.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's fine. Were there any spot audits or spot checks where the ministry would come in unannounced and investigate what was going on or just do a quick review and say, "Hey, listen, we're here to check out what's going on"?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't recall, but more importantly, I wouldn't know, because those things would be occurring at a far different level than where I was. They may have been occurring at an operational level and I wasn't aware, or they may have been occurring in the field and I wasn't aware. I don't know the answer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move on to the government members. Ms. Sandals?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you for appearing this morning, Dr. Mazza. As a member of the committee, I am in one way pleased that you're here to answer our questions because there are so many people of Ontario who have been awaiting the outcome of your testimony to get some sense of the answers to the questions that they have been asking.

In other ways, I'm very much saddened, because what we're coming to understand is that there are a lot of people who have really suffered because of this incident. We've got the paramedics, who feel a loss of their reputation. We have the pilots, who feel a loss of their reputation. We have the dispatchers, who feel a loss of their reputation. I am not saying that they deserve to have that loss of reputation, but that's what they feel: that they are under attack. It's very sad to see such an organization which should be so good and which has provided in the past good service—to see those front-line people who have worked so hard for the people of Ontario feeling as though they're under attack.

I'm saddened, too, for those of us who are members of the Legislature, appointed officials, who've entrusted Ornge with providing a service which is, after all, a life-and-death service. I think that when I listened to my constituents, the reaction I get from my constituents is that the people of the province are very much concerned with what they view as their taxpayers' dollars being wasted on greed and excesses and some form of secrecy that they can't figure out what's going on. Their sense is that it was your leadership that led us into this mess. Quite frankly, a lot of the reaction that I get from my constituents is that they're quite outraged by this whole story from what they read in the media. I think that's because literally what has unfolded was outrageous. What has certainly become clear, as we've listened to the testimony that we've heard at the committee here over the last many months, is a sense that you broke faith with your employees, with the public who are paying the bills, with the members of all parties of the Legislative Assembly and ultimately with the people who matter the most, who are the men and the women and the children who are the patients, the clients, of Ornge who rely on Ornge for services.

The impression that we have certainly gained through the testimony that we've had at the committee and from the stories that we've heard here at the committee is stories about lavish perks, stories about misplaced priorities, stories about looking at your personal gain ahead of the interest of Ontario patients and a sense that it wasn't really until the Auditor General and the government stepped in that this all came to a halt. We've covered a lot of territory already today, but as you yourself mentioned, your compensation has certainly, for the public, been the lightning rod. I think that's because, to the public, the matter of compensation symbolically represents everything that has run amok, so that it has, as you said, become the lightning rod. So I think, given that your compensation is a lightning rod, I'd like to begin there, if I may.

If we go back to April 2007, at that point your name did appear, Dr. Mazza, in the annual sunshine list. The April 2007 sunshine list was for 2006 earnings. Do you recall how much you earned in 2006, what your compensation was?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, ma'am. I recall it was probably around $400,000 or $300,000-and-something. But I don't recall; it's a long time ago.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Oh, that's interesting, because what was actually reported was $284,000.

Dr. Chris Mazza: As I said, ma'am, I don't recall.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Your employer at that point in time would have been—

Dr. Chris Mazza: This was—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In 2006.

Dr. Chris Mazza: It would have been Ontario Air Ambulance Services Corp., I believe—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So whatever the name at that particular point in time—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —at that point, the non-profit was your employer.

Two years later, when you look at the 2009 sunshine list, your name has disappeared. It would appear that that level of salary has also disappeared. Because we don't have access to that information, we have to rely on the testimony of other witnesses. Luis Navas, who I believe was on the board at that point in time, informed the committee that he believed your total compensation by that time was about $550,000. Does that seem about the right ballpark to you?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Again, ma'am, there was a lot going on in my life in the last six years, and I do not recall my compensation numbers. You asked about 2006 earlier. I was struggling with a fair bit in 2006. I had just lost a child. There was a heck of a lot else that went on over those years. I don't recall the numbers, but I'm certain there's data to support these questions regarding those numbers.

What I do know is that my compensation was always defined by my board of directors. It was defined using third party compensation advisers. I'm not an expert in compensation.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I didn't ask you how it got to be that. I'm just trying to figure out what on earth it was, because quite frankly, the public has never received a full accounting of what your salary was at various points.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am, and I'm not sure I can help them in this committee, because I don't recall those numbers.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Even though, as you said, it's the lightning rod, you haven't even checked your own tax records?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am, I actually just got out of hospital a little while ago. I have access to nothing. I've recently moved; everything I own is in boxes. So, no, ma'am.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. So let's assume, then, if you don't have the information, that Mr. Navas, who was on the board at the time, was correct. Given the information which was on the sunshine list, which is public record—and he was on the board, and you say the board was responsible—it would appear that in a matter of a few years, your compensation increased by a quarter of a million dollars. That is, from my taxpayers' point of view, a pretty significant increase, to have your salary increase by a quarter of a million dollars.

Who was your employer in 2009?

Dr. Chris Mazza: That would have been Ornge Peel.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: At this point it's Ornge Peel, so we've now moved from Ornge—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Excuse me, ma'am. I believe from 2007 onwards, it would have been Ornge Peel.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. So when your name disappears from the sunshine list, you've moved from non-profit to for-profit—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, and that fact was made known to—the Ministry of Health was aware of that, as was Meyers Norris Penny, who were the Ministry of Finance's internal audit group, who completed a full and complete review and audit in 2007-08, which the government has possession of, and that fact would have been well known. In fact, I remember having a conversation with the lead auditor at the time, defining the purpose of Ornge Peel and the business purposes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Are you telling us that the private auditor had access to information that the Auditor General of the province of Ontario couldn't get access to? That's very odd.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am, it was the internal audit group from the Ministry of Finance. They hired—I don't understand the process behind that, ma'am, but it would have been the internal audit group in the Ministry of Finance, not the government.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And Ornge Peel, the company of which you were CEO, would release information to one place but not to—

Dr. Chris Mazza: What information are you talking about releasing—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Well, your salary. You just told me that they fully audited your salary.

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, ma'am. I told you that they completed an audit and they were aware that we were not disclosing on the sunshine list. That's what I said, ma'am. And I told you that they were aware of the business reasons for the creation of Ornge Peel, and I am not aware as to whether they asked at all about compensation.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So the internal audit didn't show up your salary either, then?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm not aware. I don't know whether it did or not.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So we've got the move, then, from 2006 to 2009; your salary increases by a quarter of a million dollars, from what we can find out, which we all agree isn't the best source of information; and you've switched employers. Could you take a minute to explain to us how you can defend a quarter-of-a-million-dollar increase in three years?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am, I think that's a question best asked to my board of directors and the third party compensation advisers. I did not derive my salary, I did not derive that increase nor did I demand that increase. That was what I was told I would earn. My responsibilities were going up on an exponential basis. I believe that was taken into account. But those are questions better served to the board of directors and to the third party compensation advisers.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So your salary went up by a quarter of a million dollars and you didn't really notice and you really didn't ever discuss it with the board chair?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, ma'am, you asked me a question on defending or defining it and I—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I didn't ask you how the board arrived at it. I asked you what you thought of it. Do you think that was greedy? Do you think it was excessive to have a public sector employee have their salary go up, during a recession, I might add, by a quarter of a million dollars?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Thank you. I think that I would answer by saying, again, that my opinion was not asked during the—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But I'm asking your opinion. Do you think that was appropriate—

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't think my opinion is as relevant as is the analysis by compensation experts, ma'am. I think the compensation advisers advised the board, the board accepted the advice, and I was told, "This is what your salary would be."

I know I worked very hard and I endeavoured to the best of my ability at all times to quite literally pour my heart and soul into what I was doing.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. So let's move on to 2011. What we have finally found out is that in 2011 your salary was $1.4 million. Is that correct, sir? Or at least your compensation was $1.4 million.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Again, this may seem odd to the committee, but at this point and after what I've been through lately, I'm not going to be able to reflect on what the number was. I know that's what's been reported, yes. What is the question, though, ma'am?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So now your salary has gone up by—if we look at the amount that your salary has gone up over that time, over a few years—during a recession it's gone from about $300,000 up to $1.4 million. That's a $1.1-million increase. And you've got no opinion about that increase? Is it greedy? Is it excessive? Is it appropriate?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am, what I would answer—and again, I will not offer opinion, but what I will answer is that when I started I had, in 2003-04, probably 20 employees and when I finished I had 600—a little north of 500 and soon to be a little north of 600 employees. When

I started, I was running basically a medical oversight group. When I finished, I was effectively running a small hospital as well as a rotor-wing airline and a fixed-wing airline, as well as a communications centre. In addition, I had been asked to run and move forward on a global consulting initiative and the potential of a global operation initiative.

My other point on this would be: The board, again, would have made those decisions with third party advisers. They would have been looking at private sector comparables, I believe. The other point I would make, and something that really I have not often read or heard: Well over half—in fact, three quarters—of any compensation I received would have been based on performance. There were goals and objectives, hard goals and objectives, that I had to meet. If I didn't meet the goals and objectives, then I didn't get paid that. And the goals and objectives had to be approved by the board of directors, by the compensation chairman and then, whether I met them or not had to be agreed to by the board of directors and by the compensation chairman, at which point the performance pay would be forthcoming.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you don't have any opinion, but I think that was quite a defence of why you should get $1.4 million. As the CEO of all this enterprise, when you do the calculation, $1 out of every $150 that was supposed to be providing air ambulance service to the people of Ontario was going into your pocket. As a CEO of an enterprise, do you think it's appropriate that funding for Ontario's air ambulance service, $1 out of every $150, should go directly into your pocket?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Chair, may I interrupt for a moment? Could you please make the witness understand what the 150 represents? Is that the $150 million—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That's $150 million in annual funding which was received from the taxpayers of Ontario to provide air ambulance service to the people of Ontario. At $1.4 million, that's a ratio of about $1 out of every $150 going into your pocket, sir.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am, I would go back to my position on salary, which is that it was not my decision. The decision was made by a board of directors. They were made with the advice and counsel of third party advisers. I have nothing further to add to my answer, ma'am. I do not have an opinion on this issue. I have nothing further to add.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Perhaps you do have an opinion on some of the interest-free loans that you were provided with. As we move forward, you're the CEO of Ornge Global when we get up into the period in 2010 and 2011. It would appear from the work that the auditor has done that over that about 18-month period, you were provided with approximately $1.2 million in personal loans by Ornge Global. If I could work my way through that, is it correct that you received a $500,000 loan in July 2010? This appears to be in some way related to the purchase of a house in Etobicoke.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am, I am aware of one simple loan that I received. The other issues, are not, as you've put, in fact—the one simple loan that I received was for $150,000 due to difficult housing circumstances. The other item that you mentioned was a reflection of a long-term incentive plan that had been enacted years before. The final issue, which people have spoken—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just let me clarify this: The $1.4 million includes your performance bonuses—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am, if I may finish.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please, Mrs. Sandals, let him finish.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm not able to go into complete detail on these issues, ma'am. I'm sure there's paper, both at Ornge and otherwise, to demonstrate it. The long-term incentive plan occurred over years. What you're speaking of, the $500,000, represented paying out, at the end of those years, some element of that. So it is not a simple loan, ma'am. That's my only point.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But you did receive $500,000 in addition to the $1.4 million.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Over time.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're just about out of time.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I'll borrow from my next round, if I may.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You also received at some point, then, a cash advance of $250,000?

Dr. Chris Mazza: That is not correct, to my knowledge. I received a special bonus for ongoing—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Excuse me, can I ask that cameras not be photographing any materials on the tables, please? Thank you.

Continue, sir.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Chairman, I realize it's probably inappropriate to ask, but I can't even hear when they're right behind me.

I'm sorry.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The $250,000 cash advance: You were explaining what that was for.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes. That was not a cash advance; it was a special bonus, as is my understanding and my recollection. Certainly, it has been my understanding, from the moment it was offered by the compensation committee, that it was offered for work done to date, because I had been working substantively, both with institutional investors and, later, private investors, and the strategy had changed multiple times. It was for going forward on the equity, the private placement.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So that was also in addition to the $1.4 million in basic compensation and routine performance bonuses?

Dr. Chris Mazza: In the subsequent year. That would have been in 2011.

It's also important to assess that I am not guaranteed in any year any amount of money. As I said, more than 75% to 85% of whatever I receive is not necessarily coming my way. It depends on meeting performance guidelines.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Then, there is also a record of $450,000 received in 2011.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I already spoke to that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, because the first $500,000 was in July 2010. It would appear there was another $450,000 in 2011.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I understand. I'm saying, I spoke to that earlier. That was, in fact, an interest-bearing loan, that helped me with housing circumstances, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it does add up to about $1.2 million, in addition to the $1.4 million.

Dr. Chris Mazza: My only disagreement with you was in characterizing them all as loans.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Mazza, I'd like to pick up where Ms. Sandals left off.

First of all, with regard to the shifting of salaries to Ornge Peel—I believe that was the private sector company that you began getting paid out of. Is that correct?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: You said very clearly, earlier in your testimony, that it was Fasken's who advised you that the salaries that were paid out should not be disclosed. Do you recall that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: When Ms. Lynne Golding was testifying under oath before this committee, she said this on this topic—and I'll quote from Hansard:

"Mr. Giorno and I did conclude that while Dr. Mazza was employed by Peel, he was not subject to disclosure of his salary under the act. Now, if I may, that wasn't the end of our advice. Our advice went on to say that Ornge should be aware that the ministry could, with the stroke of a pen, pass a regulation designating Ornge and its subsidiaries—Ornge was already subject to it, but its subsidiaries—as entities that would be required to comply. We also urged them to voluntarily disclose the salaries...."

That was Ms. Golding's testimony. Was she telling the truth?

Dr. Chris Mazza: As I've testified, I was aware that there was an opinion by Fasken's regarding the sunshine list. The issue was for my board of directors to debate. It was not within my purview to enter into that discussion or debate. It was an issue for compensation. It was an issue that affected me directly. I was not privy to the debate nor was I privy, Mr. Klees, to the details of the opinion. In fact, I stayed out of it. I was obviously in conflict; it was about me.

Mr. Frank Klees: Ms. Golding went on to say that she suggested that Ornge obtain the consent of the ministry before shifting your salary and others over to the for-profit company. I'm assuming you don't know anything about that either?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir. That would have been a decision undertaken by the board of directors, and that advice was being fed directly to the board of directors and the debate that occurred there.

Mr. Frank Klees: Given the fact that you provided this committee with inaccurate information earlier today, would you agree to withdraw the statement that you made that you received—

Dr. Chris Mazza: What inaccurate—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me for a moment. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that Mr. Klees identify the inaccurate information?

Mr. Frank Klees: The inaccurate information was that Mr. Mazza made it very clear—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Frank Klees: —that Mr. Mazza—sir, I will refer to Mr. Mazza as Mr. Mazza because, based on what I know about his track record, I am not prepared to use a very honourable designation in the context of this hearing.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. We don't need to get into this—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Step outside of these privileged circumstances and say that, Mr. Klees.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please, if we could just continue with the question.

Mr. Frank Klees: The misinformation to which I referred was the fact that Mr. Mazza stated to this committee that it was on the advice of Fasken's that they withheld the information regarding his salary. That is not the advice. Ms. Golding very clearly said that while they don't have to, it was her recommendation that they do, and I don't think Mr. Mazza wants to leave that inaccuracy on the record. So I'm giving him an opportunity to withdraw or correct his statement.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr.—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me, please. I'm still having trouble, and I'm sure the witness is having trouble, understanding what the inaccuracy is.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Do you wish to restate the inaccuracy, Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll say it one more time.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Please.

Mr. Frank Klees: The record will show, when we have an opportunity to read Hansard, that Mr. Mazza made it very clear that it was his opinion that it was Fasken's who recommended that they not disclose the salaries. That is not true. Based on Ms. Golding's testimony, the advice was they don't have to; however, they recommended that they do, and they also recommended that they disclose to the ministry.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Klees, in answer to your question, I was only aware of the Fasken's opinion indicating that we did not have to disclose salaries from Ornge Peel.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you were not given the full opinion?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Klees, if I may finish: I was only aware of the fact that Fasken's indicated that we did not have to disclose salaries. I was not part of the debate or the decision process around whether Ornge Peel would or would not disclose on the list. It was not within my authority nor within my purview to be part of such a debate. That is my recollection. It is not an inaccuracy, sir; it is my recollection, to the best of my ability.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who conveyed the information about Fasken's opinion to you?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I do not recall, sir. That was quite a long time ago. I do not recall.

Mr. Frank Klees: You know, for someone whose resumé is only larger than Mr. Rainer Beltzner's, and who had a reputation—I say “had” a reputation—of being an astute executive, a driver of a major corporation, as you put it, your memory is very questionable. I'd like to ask you: Is that a selective loss of memory?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Klees, I have been in a hospital with a medical condition for approximately three months. I've had a significant amount of difficulty with my health lately, which I believe is a matter of record at this committee. I told the committee that I would do the best that I can. I am not being selective on purpose. I am recalling and offering information to the best of my ability and will continue to do so.

I would prefer, though, Mr. Chairman, that I not be accused of withholding or incompetence based on my challenges with memory. It has been nine months—eight months—since I sat in chairs at Ornge. It has been around the same amount of time that I have not been able to look at anything from my past or my history. It has only been in recent weeks that I've been able to even read any of the material that I needed to read.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well, and I would ask members to be sensitive to Dr. Mazza's condition.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Mazza, do you recall that it was you who actually advocated to route your salaries through Ornge Peel?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir. Ornge Peel was not created to route my salaries through Ornge Peel. Ornge Peel was created to begin to deliver on the mandate of Ornge, which it was from its inception. It was not just my salary; it was staff that were moved into Ornge Peel. The idea was to begin to generate revenue, to begin to generate a revenue flow and business development that would inevitably allow us to improve the sustainability of the Ontario system. Our initial focus was on consulting. We were looking at various other endeavours, including tuition and education, and could not do that from the charity structure that we were in. This was not done to route my salary anywhere, nor would the board have approved that, sir. They would never have done that.

Mr. Frank Klees: No, of course not.

I would ask you this question: When did your board decide—because certainly you never made a request—that you should have a mortgage or a loan to buy a house? Did Mr. Beltzner come to you and say, “You know, Chris, I think you should have a half-a-million-dollar mortgage. We put it into your”—was that a surprise when that showed up all of a sudden, that big loan?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I do take offence, Mr. Chairman, to the tone, but I'll answer the question. The board of directors knew that I was having significant challenges in my housing circumstance, and the compensation chair and the board chair offered that they might be able to assist me with an interest-bearing loan. That was how that occurred.

Mr. Frank Klees: How did the board become aware of your housing challenges?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I believe through regular conversation. I was in some distress. I don't remember who asked in an aside conversation how things were going. It was really that simple. They then came back to me and said that they might be able to assist me.

Mr. Frank Klees: A very sensitive board, indeed.

Mr. Mazza, does November 14, 2005, stand out in your mind?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: That was a day on which you and the esteemed chair of the Ornge board, Mr. Rainer Beltzner, signed the performance agreement with the former health minister, George Smitherman. You don't recall that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sir, I don't recall the date; I recall the event.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who else was present at the signing of that agreement?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't recall.

Mr. Frank Klees: Where was the agreement signed?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Klees, I do not recall. I presume it would have been at Queen's Park, but I cannot recall.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there a celebratory event following that historic occasion?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Members of the committee: In 2005, there are black spots in my memory. I apologize to the committee for this, but I can explain that those black spots exist because my son died March 5, 2006. A lot of my memory stopped, and events previous became grey for me. I do not recall.

Mr. Frank Klees: In the time leading up to the signing of that agreement, did you make any commitments to George Smitherman regarding contributions to election campaigns or support for him in any way?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Absolutely not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was it ultimately George Smitherman, obviously, who made the decision to approve your proposal?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Actually, sir, it began in Mr. Tony Clement's office. It was during Mr. Clement's time as Minister of Health. I was introduced through some folks from Fasken's. Well, specifically, Mr. Blum introduced me to some folks at Fasken's. We then were enabled to meet with staff from the minister's office. The staff from the minister's office then allowed us to meet with the minister. We met with Minister Clement on a proposal to move into an arm's-length organization. The minister suggested that he was supportive of the concept and would like to see us go forward on elucidating this with the bureaucracy. We then began to work towards that.

In March 2003, SARS came to Toronto, and nothing happened in health care for months afterwards. Then, there was an election. Following that election, we then tried to introduce ourselves to the staff of the new Minister of Health, George Smitherman, to bring the issue forward again. We were introduced to his staff; we made the position to the staff. We then made our way through to Minister Smitherman's office, who also liked the concept and asked us to work with the bureaucracy to bring the concept to fruition, and then we worked through 2005 to do so.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you get any help in making those representations to the new health minister or the new government of the day?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm not sure what you mean. Can you clarify, please?

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you retain the services of a consultant or a lobbyist?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Well, no. We had already met with Guy Giorno and Lynne Golding at Fasken Martineau to talk about the concept, to talk about how it looked. I believe the meeting with the minister's staff was organized by Mr. Blum. I don't believe that we utilized a lobbyist, but at the time, that would not have been inappropriate, by my recollection. I just don't think that we did.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Mazza, this is the cabinet document, dated November 15, 2004, that was used to try to convince cabinet to accept your proposal. When that went to cabinet, did you get any advice in terms of lobbying other cabinet ministers or the Premier?

Dr. Chris Mazza: This is 2004?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, which is when the proposal went to cabinet. George Smitherman was the minister.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Most of the issues surrounding the movement, through 2004 and through Minister Smitherman's tenure, were managed by, certainly, myself with the Minister of Health and his staff, making them aware; working with the bureaucracy, making them aware. I believe we were advised—I don't know whether it was cabinet—by the emergency health services branch folks to bring other ministries onside. I don't believe that we utilized a lobbyist to do that. I believe that folks at the emergency health services branch assisted us in that regard.

Mr. Frank Klees: I've arranged to have a copy of the original agreement, referred to as the performance agreement. It's at your desk. That agreement was subsequently negotiated after receiving cabinet approval, under the direction of George Smitherman. You must be intimately aware of that agreement, I would expect.

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir. I am not intimately aware of that agreement anymore. I am familiar with its principles. As a senior executive and leader running an organization such as I was, I was intimately familiar with the principles, with the processes, but not the details of an agreement such as this or many others.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever read the agreement under which you assumed responsibility for our air ambulance service?

Mr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir. I read it back when we started. In sincerity, I then depended greatly on my executives in finance and in legal as well as the regulatory group to ensure that we were always meeting the compliance aspects of the contract.

Mr. Frank Klees: So then you'll recall that there are extensive references to quality assurance and improvement programs, standards of care, compliance and reporting obligations—

Mr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: —a comprehensive list of schedules, schedule K, which refers to performance indicators.

I'd like to ask you: Where in that agreement is there any reference to the creation of for-profit companies for the purpose of building up an international business?

Mr. Chris Mazza: The agreement is silent on any number of things. It is not a prescriptive agreement whereby it dictates every single element. What was clear and what was always clear is that our mandate was to improve the efficiency, the effectiveness, the safety and the sustainability of this program. What was also clear always was that the mandate—and the cabinet submissions would reflect that—including all that I have just mentioned, as well as increasing awareness, as well as generating revenue outside the tax base through fundraising and through for-profit initiatives. That is reflected in the documents that went to Management Board of Cabinet that I am aware of.

Mr. Frank Klees: You refer to cabinet documents. The cabinet documents that are tabled with this committee make it very clear that as they were reviewing their proposal to approve your proposal, one of the key principles was that oversight and accountability were central; that Ornge would always be accountable to the government of Ontario. Do you recall that?

Mr. Chris Mazza: I recall that oversight and accountability was a key component for the operations in Ontario, yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to ask you: At what point did Ornge depart from the intent of that agreement, which was to remain accountable to the government of Ontario, and at what point did Ornge decide that it no longer needed the approval of the government of Ontario to do as it chooses to do? At what point was that conscious decision made to ignore the terms of the actual agreement under which you assumed responsibility and you started to go off as a rogue organization to do your own thing?

Mr. Chris Mazza: At no point did this organization ever depart from the tenets of the performance agreement or compliance with the performance agreement. At no point did the organization Ornge stop informing, engaging and working with the ministries and informing them and keeping them abreast of what Ornge was doing. At no point did we become a rogue organization.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I'd like to borrow five minutes from my next round, please.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I believe that the other members are hopeful to stay on time. We went just a minute or a couple of minutes extra, so you have a couple of minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll take that. Where in that agreement was there any reference to a mandate siphoning $8.7 million of public funds into the Ornge Foundation?

Mr. Chris Mazza: I'm not—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Do you understand what the question is?

Mr. Chris Mazza: Yes. Mr. Klees, I'm not aware of the siphoning of money for—

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, let's use a different term.

Mr. Chris Mazza: Excuse me, sir, if I may finish. I'm not aware of "siphoning" any money. It's the term you wanted to use. Moreover, I am aware that in that particular transaction—I don't recall the details—ministry staff were made aware that the funds were being earmarked for information system upgrades and a number of other upgrades that were multi-year in nature and that this was an effective legal and appropriate means of doing it. The ministry accounting groups were informed. That issue was later looked at by the internal audit group of the Ministry of Finance. So, once again, Ornge did not do that unilaterally. Ornge began to look at doing that—it was in the interests of improving Ornge and Ornge systems and Ornge technologies—and then informed the ministry that it was going to do so.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who was the Ministry of Health staff person who approved the transfer of $8.7 million into the Ornge Foundation?

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me, sir: You said $8.7 million, and earlier you said, $7.8 million.

Mr. Frank Klees: It's $8.7 million.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't recall, sir. It was taken on by my finance department and it was taken on by counsel.

Mr. Frank Klees: Where in the agreement did it authorize Ornge to float a $275-million bond offering?

Dr. Chris Mazza: The agreement is not prescriptive, as I've indicated, sir. The agreement was that Ornge—the agreement indicates, in the context of the agreement, in the overall aspects of the agreement, that Ornge was to improve on the operational and system effectiveness, efficiencies, safety and sustainability, and other aspects of providing this service to Ontarians in ways that it saw best.

Mr. Frank Klees: One last question—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And we'll move to the NDP, now, please.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you.

Interjections.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All good?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: All right.

You have said, when you last talked to me and answered my questions, that you had briefed four ministers. You started with Clement, then you briefed Mr. Smitherman, then you briefed Minister Caplan; you never had an opportunity to brief Minister Matthews, our current Minister of Health. When did you first meet—have you ever met Minister Matthews?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, ma'am.

M^{me} France G  linas: Have you ever spoken with her?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, ma'am.

M^{me} France G  linas: All right.

Let's look at the final few days or weeks at Ornge. We had started the year 2011 with an extensive briefing. The briefing was received by numerous ministries of this government—well received, encouraged to continue; you were on the right track. The corporate structure allows opportunities for the people of Ontario—there's even maybe opportunities for the government to invest into some of the corporate structure you're putting together. Things are doing pretty good.

When did you have an inkling that things were not good?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I first had concerns that things were not good when Mr. Klees brought questions to question period in the spring of 2011, I think it was.

M^{me} France G  linas: In 2011.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Klees had significant concerns that he was tabling. I was disappointed in the answers that were given on the floor of the Legislature to Mr. Klees's questions, and I was confused, because it was my impression and understanding that Mr. Klees's questions should have been able to be answered.

I remember going to my corporate communications VP and saying, "I don't understand. Why aren't they answering?" At that point I made another offer to have a personal briefing so that the questions might be better answered, and I was told, through my VP of communications, that the briefing was not necessary, that the minister understood.

M^{me} France G  linas: And did you question, like, what did she base this on? She told you that the minister understood and she knew this—

Dr. Chris Mazza: And didn't need our briefing.

M^{me} France G  linas: She didn't need your briefing.

Dr. Chris Mazza: And that was all I was told. I suppose, then, that I allowed my concern to settle and continued to go forward. My concern didn't rise again—again, because I was told, "We understand, and there's no need to come in and do a briefing."

My concern began to rise exponentially when the minister's comments appeared with Mr. Donovan's articles. I couldn't understand what appeared to me as the comments. I didn't understand how that could have occurred. That was when I became concerned.

M^{me} France G  linas: Did the Minister of Health contact you at the time—

Dr. Chris Mazza: My illness had been deteriorating. From August of that year, I'd been struggling, and certainly by December I was having a very difficult time. My chairman, as well as two of my executives, undertook to meet and engage with the minister at that point in time, and I went on leave shortly thereafter. So that meeting would have occurred between my chairman and the minister.

M^{me} France G  linas: Did anyone ever ask you to resign?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No.

M^{me} France G  linas: Your work was terminated because Ornge Global was terminated?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I was pretty sick at the time. I found out—

Interjections.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I was pretty sick at the time. I discovered from my family that the newspapers had said that Ornge Global was bankrupt and I was terminated as a result of bankruptcy. I didn't actually even receive a phone call.

M^{me} France G  linas: All right.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I found out from the newspaper that it was due to bankruptcy.

M^{me} France G  linas: Do you believe that Ornge Global was bankrupt?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know that my opinion or beliefs are relevant here. I do know that, to my understanding, in December, when I asked my vice-president of finance, who was managing all aspects around Global, what was left in terms of amounts and what our burn rates were, it was my understanding that there was still approximately $4 million, and that we would be able to deal with the press issues, correct the misinformation and successfully complete the private placement and go on with what we hoped would be something good for Ontario and the patients. So I think I'm answering your question.

M^{me} France G  linas: Yes, you are. You had this vision of having the for-profit leverage some of the knowledge and skills in air transport, and that the for-profit would benefit the people of Ontario. Until your very last day at Ornge, that's what you tried to do, and the ministry knew and supported it.

Dr. Chris Mazza: That is my understanding, ma'am. I was motivated by—in 2005, the death I spoke of, the young boy, affected me deeply. There had been many other deaths in my career as a transport medicine physician that affected me deeply. The triage that I engaged in almost every day as a front-line physician, trying to tell people who could have what resource, knowing that the person who wasn't going to get the resource was going to be damaged, was going to be hurt—and yet there weren't enough resources. Those motivations were strong in me.

In 2005, before we were going forward, the chairman asked me if there was enough money in the funding to actually engage in this service, or were we taking something that was destined to be a monkey on our backs, so to speak. So I engaged, actually, a small set of cohorts in a study that demonstrated that there were potentially 8,000 persons per year that we weren't getting to in a timely or effective fashion. That was frightening. The number 8,000 was not an accurate number; it was approximate because we could only take cohorts and then statistically expound upon them.

But we knew that there was a significant problem. We knew that resources were hard to come by. We knew that health care was already a massive problem for the government. So we came up, as a group, with an idea to generate revenue outside and find ways to bring that revenue back and use it to increase capability, to increase infrastructure and, in our hope, to address what we referred to often at Ornge as the gap. We believed that it was there. Our doctors believed that it was there because they faced it every day when they were triaging.

So yes, ma'am, up until December, I believed that everything we were doing was positive and was going to return dividends.

M^{me} France G  linas: So what do you figure went wrong?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know. To this day, I don't know.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I have some questions. The member from Guelph, Ms. Sandals, raised a number of concerns about your compensation. I want to help and perhaps get your assistance in clarifying some of these points.

Did the Ministry of Health, the government, at any point in time before today express any concerns to you directly about your salary compensation?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Does it seem curious to you now that they seem so concerned about your salary compensation, when, throughout your tenure at Ornge, the Liberal government did not make any direct inquiries to you regarding your compensation?

Dr. Chris Mazza: A number of things seem odd to me now, that amongst them, particularly when it was evident from 2007-08 onwards that we were not on the sunshine list and that the audit that had been done was clear that Peel was not on the sunshine list. So yes, that's odd.

It has also been mystifying to me that the very mandate, the very concept of Ornge, the issues about the gap, the very issues that we were trying to get at, the very issues of generating revenue—it's as if it's a surprise now, yet it was something that we were informing everyone of on an ongoing basis.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just touching on your last point: It was very clear that you had advised and the Ministry of Health knew that you would no longer be on the sunshine list. Did they express any concern when you had advised them of that or when Ornge had advised of that new step?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not to my knowledge, no.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Were any of those concerns ever provided to anyone at Ornge in any written format, or any requests made whatsoever?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not that I'm aware of.

M^{me} France G  linas: You did say that you were not the one briefing the Ministry of Health; it was done through your chair, through Mr. Apps and sometimes through Mr. Lepine—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Actually, it was those three consistently. Do you mean in terms of the reorganization elements? Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France G  linas: When I look at it, it seems very complicated and very complex. Why so many entities? I get the concept that you wanted to set up a for-profit so that the profit comes back to address the gap and to do better and to help people. But why did it go from Ornge Global to everything else on that corporate structure? It is hard—

Dr. Chris Mazza: It's a question I asked, myself, ma'am. When it started, it became increasingly frustrating to me that all of these different elements had to exist.

I would provide two things. One, I think the Apps document that has been provided to the committee quite eloquently deliberates and defines the legal, financial, accounting and other reasons behind it. It also speaks to some of the more appropriate operational, structural reasons.

I think it's important to reflect on the fact that when Ornge started, it was a not-for-profit but not a charity. One of the first structural issues was, "Hang on a second; we can't actually raise money in a foundation unless we're also a charity," and so then you had the charitable issue come into play. Then you had a number of regulatory issues associated with the medical aspects of our function and you had regulatory aspects associated with the aviation aspects of our function.

I think that in trying to put the not-for-profit, the performance agreement, the charitable and the for-profit and all of the different other regulatory issues—you come up with the structure you come up with.

I do know that the structure was delineated after exhaustive debate by the board of directors with counsel—

M^{me} France G  linas: That's Mr. Apps?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Apps, but the board of directors also had its own independent counsel. I don't remember the name of the firm, but they had their own independent counsel.

I do know that the structure had exhaustive review by KPMG, the auditors. I do know that PwC was involved. There were a tremendous number of people far brighter than I in matters of corporate structure, corporate finance and the legalities inherent, and I accepted that that was what was appropriate in order to get the job done.

Interjection.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Apps was corporate counsel. Cindy Heinz had become Ornge counsel. So Apps and Heinz led the deliberations, but really, Apps and others at Fasken's. Actually, it wasn't even just Apps; there were a number of folks at Fasken's who contributed, because there were different specialties required.

M^{me} France G  linas: Did you ever meet with our Premier, Mr. McGuinty?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When was that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I really apologize that I keep having to say this, but I don't recall—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Just tell me what you recall of it. Was it a fundraiser? Was it at night? Was it in Toronto? Was it—

Dr. Chris Mazza: I met Mr. McGuinty formally at a fundraiser in Toronto that I was brought to by Fasken's. I was introduced. I went through, in the five minutes or so that I had with the Premier, the concepts of Ornge at a high level, and focused on generating revenue outside the province of Ontario to improve sustainability, effectiveness etc., so generating money outside the tax base to improve a system that is antiquated and in trouble. I talked about all of the ideas that we had for improving it here; I talked about fleet renewal.

I met the Premier again, in an informal way, at a deployment of the emergency medical assistance team which I created following SARS. It was deployed for the Kashechewan evacuation; I don't remember the date, but the Kashechewan evacuation I remember. I spoke to him for some time there—more than five minutes.

I had met the Premier maybe once or twice after that, at events that I was not involved in where he may have said hello.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You never had dinner with him or anything?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But you know who he is and you've talked to him.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The most formal of all briefings was the five minutes you spent with him explaining the outside-of-Ontario for-profit coming back as well as the aviation—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: It wasn't five minutes. I think he meant to imply "more than five"—

Dr. Chris Mazza: It was more than five minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How long would you say?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Which one was this? The Kashechewan?

M^{me} France Gélinas: No.

Dr. Chris Mazza: The fundraiser. Probably on the order of 10 to 15 minutes. It was for 15 minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Fifteen minutes briefing him. And that was arranged as a one-on-one during a function, or were there a lot of people listening in, or—

1100

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, it was sort of an opportunity that had presented for me to go to a corner and talk.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, and Mr. Apps had helped arrange that? You were a guest of Mr. Apps?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I was a guest of Mr. Apps but, no, it was my job to—the Premier had moved into an area where there was nobody. At that point, Mr. Apps introduced me, and then I spoke.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You went on and said what you had to say.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you recall meeting with Minister Smitherman?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How were those meetings arranged?

Dr. Chris Mazza: The first meeting I had, I don't remember whether it was myself who made the call or one of my staff, but I met with his director of policy at the time, Ken Chan. That was my first meeting, and then I had another couple of meetings where I had to present the ideas. Then I was working with the bureaucracy on bringing forth the appropriate concepts and ideas, and then I met with the minister and his staff to brief him. That was when we started working more completely on the documentation and the issues and the analysis that would be required to move forward.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about two minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

You knew that Mr. Apps was connected to the Liberal Party, did you?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Actually, ma'am, I'm somewhat apolitical and I actually did not know that until much later. I suppose saying that he was connected to the Liberal Party—I knew he had Liberal leanings. I did not realize until much later that he had formal involvement with the Liberal Party, no. He was brought to my attention through Cindy Heinz for his corporate legal capability. That was how I got to know him.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did he ever offer to help connect you with staff in Minister Smitherman's office or with Minister Smitherman? Because we have an email that I will read to you. It's from Mr. Apps:

"Last night worked perfectly. Chris was able to make a real connection with the Premier." I take it this is the meeting you just shared with us?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: "I will organize a private dinner for Chris with the Premier so he can outline the vision and game plan in greater detail." I take it that this dinner never actually happened?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But do you believe that he had the capability to arrange such a dinner or such a meeting?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Do I believe that he had the capability to do it? I suppose he could have; he didn't.

I don't actually recall that email. Was that sent to me?

M^{me} France Gélinas: It's okay. We've received binders that thick of emails he sent you, so if you forgot one I'll forgive you.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, I don't actually recall that. So I'm not sure of the question. Did I think he could arrange that? I don't really know. He didn't.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And if you could wrap up, please?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, my last question. If you went to Mr. Apps and said, "We really need to get to Minister Smitherman," would he be helpful in—

Dr. Chris Mazza: He was not involved in anything to do with Mr. Smitherman.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. We were able to do that on our own because Ken Chan and the policy people in the office loved the idea. So, no, we didn't need any help with that. We didn't ever really go to Mr. Apps to say, "Get us in touch with" anybody. He was corporate counsel. If anything, we would go to Mr. Apps and say, "How do we approach this? How do we pursue this? What do we need to do here? Who do we need to talk to to get the right approach, the right information, and make sure that this is being done appropriately?"

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move on to the Liberals. Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you very much. I've listened to your evidence so far this morning, and it does come across, in the first instance, as someone who had a very objective commitment to improving air transport medicine, that you had an objective and, indeed, a detached view of corporate structure and corporate governance. In fact, in things like your own compensation, you said you did not personally intervene, that those decisions were made by the compensation committee. They fixed your salary. You said that that's how it should be, that you would have a conflict in participating in your own salary level, so you dealt with that all at arm's length, and that you were cognizant of matters of corporate governance and the role of the CEO not to involve him or herself in events that place the CEO in a conflict. I got the impression that you were very careful not to personally intervene as the CEO in any inappropriate way.

But there is another element here, in fact, where I think there was a personal intervention, and that involves the matter of one Kelly Long. On May 12, Kelly Long—who I understand was your girlfriend or partner—testified that the two of you met while she was an operations manager at a sports club in Ontario, and you were a guest of the club. Is that how you met her?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I was a member of the club. She was the manager of the ski club.

Mr. David Zimmer: When you met her, what position did you hold at Ornge?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I believe at that point I was the CEO of Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: At about that time, did you start—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Actually, Ornge didn't exist, so I would have been working at the Ontario air ambulance base hospital program at Sunnybrook.

Mr. David Zimmer: Subsequent to meeting her, you started to date and go out and developed a personal relationship?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I had a friendship with Ms. Long.

Mr. David Zimmer: Was it a romantic relationship?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm not sure that that's relevant. I had a friendship with Ms. Long. What is relevant as regards Ms. Long is that when I developed a relationship with Ms. Long, I declared my relationship to the vice-president of human resources. I subsequently declared, under her tutelage and guidance, my relationship to my board chair and, eventually, to the executives that Ms. Long worked with and that I worked with.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you engage Pathway, which is a government relations firm, to provide services to Ornge?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't recall the date. I remember that the Pathway Group was involved with us from an early time. I had been introduced to Mr. Mitchell, and we were involved in trying to improve our community presence. He had a particular ability in that regard.

Mr. David Zimmer: So Kelly Mitchell, a self-identified Conservative activist, was one of the principal lobbyists at Pathway Group. Is that correct?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, that's not correct. I didn't meet Mr. Mitchell as a self-identified Conservative activist. I met Mr. Mitchell as someone who had a tremendous number of community connections in the north and had a tremendous amount of ability in working with aboriginal folks as well as any number of other issues that I was involved in at the time.

Mr. David Zimmer: But Kelly Mitchell provided services to Ornge through the offices of Pathway?

Dr. Chris Mazza: In those regards, yes. But not as a lobbyist.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. But his fees and Pathway's fees were paid by Ornge. Pathway was hired by Ornge.

Dr. Chris Mazza: From a very early point on in Ornge's work, yes. We were doing community work. They were small projects.

Mr. David Zimmer: We understand that around October 2005, the evidence of Ms. Long and Kelly Mitchell was that you asked Mr. Mitchell at Pathway to hire Ms. Long. Is that correct?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, that's not correct. I'm not aware that Mr. Mitchell gave evidence in that regard. I did make an introduction. It's not unusual for me to meet people and offer to make introductions.

I was approached by Ms. Long at the end of 2005 regarding career interests and possibilities. She was a York University grad, she was an English teacher, she was managing a ski club. She struck me as an articulate and intelligent lady. She asked me at the time, I believe, if there were opportunities at Ornge. I indicated that I was not aware and did not really involve myself in that but that she could check the website. I did offer to make an introduction to a colleague who was in the areas that she was saying that she was interested in: communications, public relations and the like—

Mr. David Zimmer: Were you—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Excuse me—and I made that introduction.

Mr. David Zimmer: Were you in a relationship with her at that time?

Dr. Chris Mazza: She was a friend.

Mr. David Zimmer: Was she a girlfriend?

Dr. Chris Mazza: She was a friend. I was married.

Mr. David Zimmer: We've also learned that once she eventually got hired by Pathway, her salary, according to her evidence, was around $58,000. Do you know that to be correct?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, I don't know.

Mr. David Zimmer: The evidence from Mr. Mitchell was also that Pathway was reimbursed an amount equal to $58,000 by Ornge to cover her salary.

Dr. Chris Mazza: That's not my recollection. As I recall, we were involved in working with the Pathway Group. I had made the introduction. It is my understanding that Mr. Mitchell hired Ms. Long of his own accord and with his own oversight, as would be appropriate for—

Mr. David Zimmer: Look, I don't want to put too fine a point on it, but the evidence—

Dr. Chris Mazza: If I can just finish.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right.

Dr. Chris Mazza: That is my understanding and my recollection. If I can go further and say that we were also looking at increasing our activity in the community specifically related to working with aggregate companies to increase our landing pads—we had a shortage of landing pads for our scene response activities. This was something that Mr. Mitchell's firm would be well suited to, particularly with his background in natural resources. He had already made a decision to move Ms. Long. She became a very cost-effective means of addressing that project, more cost-effective than one of Mr. Mitchell's senior partners. As I understood it and as I recall, it also came along with the ability to have Mr. Mitchell's oversight involved.

Mr. David Zimmer: The evidence that we heard previously—and I'll summarize it—was that the $58,000 salary that she was getting at Pathway was offset by a payment to cover her salary, and that was the nature of the arrangement with Pathway and Ornge regarding Ms. Long.

Dr. Chris Mazza: That is not my recollection. My recollection is Pathway's work increased regarding the aggregate work that we were doing. Pathway was particularly suited to that aggregate work. I don't have anything further to add to my answer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Ms. Long joined Pathway from the fitness club very shortly after, as you've said. She seemed to have some very senior responsibilities. What, in your view, were her qualifications?

Dr. Chris Mazza: As I said, Ms. Long was a very articulate and intelligent lady. Ms. Long was a York University graduate with a degree. She also taught English. She was managing—it wasn't a fitness club; she was managing the water ski club. I was struck that she had substantive abilities. As I said, as a young university graduate, she certainly already had some credentials to that effect.

Mr. David Zimmer: So she joined Pathway in October 2005; in December 2006, she moved over and joined Ornge. Is that correct?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't recall the dates. During her time working on the aggregate project, which was a very important project for Ornge, there was a tremendous volume of work that was done on that, but it was a short-term project—

Mr. David Zimmer: When did she join Ornge?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Again, can I—

Interjection.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't recall. The aggregate project was a very important project and it required a significant volume of activity. We were very pleased with the direction it was going. During her time on that—it was a short-term project, though, and I believe that during her time at Ornge she became intrigued and interested in Ornge and the culture at Ornge, and a position came up. She applied for that position, competed for that position and won that position.

I was not involved in the selection. I was not in the interview process. It was not uncommon at Ornge—we believed very much in word of mouth, bringing talented people into the organization, and that sometimes meant that there were friendships. Human resources oversaw those issues very strictly, and so if there were even friendships, you were not involved in selection and/or interviewing or the decision process.

Mr. David Zimmer: If I told you that she joined Ornge in December 2006, would you disagree with that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: If that's what you've got, then, no, I would not.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you provide a recommendation to the personnel department at Ornge to hire her?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not that I recall.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you recall if you were asked your opinion of her skill set?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think she'd already had an opportunity at that point to demonstrate her skill set, sir, in working on the project that she was working on.

Mr. David Zimmer: So she left Pathway at a salary of $58,000, joined Ornge at a salary of $60,000—that was the evidence—and quickly advanced to the position of associate vice-president a few years later at a salary of $120,000, and I think there were also some bonuses and so on there. Are you aware of that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm aware that Ms. Long worked very hard at the organization, and I believe that the VP of human resources would corroborate that. I believe that she achieved all of her projects with a great degree of attention to detail. She was articulate, timely; she was a very, very hard worker. She impressed her direct reports, and any advancement she made, I can assure you, was on her own.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that the optics of that particular circumstance are not good, but I can assure the committee that Ms. Long worked her way through Ornge, and anything that she achieved at Ornge, she achieved on her own. I did not influence her promotions and I did not influence nor was I involved in her hiring. I did not force her through the organization. Again, she worked her own way through, and I believe that, again, the former VP of human resources would corroborate that.

Mr. David Zimmer: But you were in a relationship with her during this period?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir. I did start a relationship with Ms. Long. I don't recall the date. I did start a relationship. What I do know is that when I started the relationship with Ms. Long, I declared said relationship to my VP of human resources. My VP of human resources then guided me through declaring that relationship to my board chair, and subsequently to my executive. My board chair and my VP of human resources had no concerns and no issues, and I urge you to—my VP of human resources would corroborate that I was assiduous in that, that I did not involve myself in decisions surrounding her, and that was why I declared conflict to the VP of HR. In addition, my chairman of comp was aware. 1120

Mr. David Zimmer: Here's a quote from a previous witness, Mr. Tom Lepine, and I'm quoting from the Hansard record.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

Mr. David Zimmer: The introduction to the—I'll read the quote in a second, but the gist of his evidence was that Ms. Long's employment at Ornge created issues with respect to other managers.

Here's what he said in Hansard: "I think Kelly had more of a direct route into his"—Dr. Mazza's—"office than any of the other executives. In other words, if anybody said something contrary to what Kelly believed, chances are, you wouldn't be with Ornge for very long."

What is your reaction to that thought of Mr. Tom Lepine?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I find that very disappointing and somewhat offensive, to be honest, Mr. Zimmer. Nothing could be further from the truth. That may have been Mr. Lepine's perception, and I'm very sad that that is his perception.

Performance at Ornge was managed under human resources with very, very assiduous attention to the values that Ornge held. If an individual was not performing or their performance was in question, then the direct report of that individual would work with human resources to often come up with a mediation process, assistance etc. People were not just dismissed, nor did I ever take on that authority or approach; direct reports did. So that's the first point that I'm offended by, and saddened.

It is sometimes not unusual, in my opinion, for executives to feel that junior staff sometimes have direct lines to the CEO, which they resent. Mr. Lepine also resented the fact that the president of the union had a direct line to me, and other paramedics had direct lines to me. Perhaps that led to some statement like that. The reality is, I always tried to have some attention to people in the front line who were not my executives so that I could keep a hand on the pulse.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. In the corporate structure, her title at Ornge was associate vice-president. Associate vice-president in a corporate structure means that the associate vice-president reports to the vice-president, and the vice-president reports up to the CEO. So how was it that the associate vice-president seemed to have direct access to you without going through the office of the vice-president?

Dr. Chris Mazza: As I've said, sir, she did not have direct access to me on matters of business. What I said when I answered your question was that it may have been the perception of the executive who made the comment—

Mr. David Zimmer: What would give rise to that perception?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I was trying to answer that, sir, by saying that that perception is because I was often trying to feel the pulse in the front lines, not with Kelly or anybody specifically.

I think it's important to note that when I started a relationship with Kelly, it was very important to us to keep that relationship non-business. That was important for my sanity, if nothing else.

There were many, many things, Mr. Zimmer, that I was not aware of that I am now, having been away from Ornge for nine months, finding out, and also finding out that Kelly was aware of. Our conversations did not include business.

As I've already indicated, I'm saddened and offended by Mr. Lepine's thought. I wish I understood why he thought that, but there's certainly nothing in my experience or understanding that should have led him to think that. I have nothing—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If you've finished your answer we'll move to the opposition.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees?

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me, Mr. Chair. May I inquire whether you have in mind a short break at all this morning?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We have just 35 minutes left till noon, and you have an hour break then, as long as Dr. Mazza is doing okay. Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Roger Yachetti: We can proceed.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. I'd like to deal with the issue of government oversight of Ornge. We referred earlier to the performance agreement under which Ornge was mandated to deliver the air ambulance service, and we discussed the extensive references and very prescriptive requirements that Ornge had to maintain quality assurance, to report to the ministry, to ensure that proper training was in place and to ensure that the proper communication system was in place. You would agree with me that that was really the cornerstone of that agreement, because at the end of the day, that quality delivery of emergency services was paramount. Do you agree with that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: When the Auditor General tabled his report on March 21 of this year, he said this: “Ornge is a textbook example of what happens when the government doesn’t get the information it needs to properly do its job.” Again, I’m quoting from the Auditor General’s statement when he said that seeking cabinet approval for the transfer of Ontario’s air ambulance service to a corporate service provider—the ministry said that an essential part of its oversight responsibilities would be to obtain and evaluate performance information from Ornge. You would agree with that. That was understood, I think, by all parties to the agreement. Do you agree with that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: The Auditor General went on to say, “We concluded that the ministry did not meet these oversight commitments.” Would you agree with the Auditor General?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sir, I think I’ve answered that I feel that the ministry worked to the best of their ability to provide oversight according to the performance agreement.

I think that what is often missing in this analysis is that in 2006, when Ornge took on management of the system, there was no management information system. There were no metrics. The data was antiquated. Much of the work that Ornge was, and continues to be, engaging in is trying to find the appropriate means of capturing the right metrics and evaluating said metrics, such that the organization can more strategically manage its future.

I think that, given the state of data and the state of data capture and the ongoing work in that, the ministry and the performance agreement were managing to the best of what existed.

Mr. Frank Klees: But establishing that information database was part of the requirement of the performance agreement. You received millions of dollars, transferred to Ornge, for the very purpose of establishing—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir, and we were in the process of establishing it. We were working extremely hard on establishing it.

We had already replaced the communications systems from analog to digital in the communications centre, which went a long way. We had introduced software in the company, SAP software, that was trying to tie in to the communications centre and finance data that would be accumulated there as flights were dispatched. We were attempting to introduce optimization in linear programming to better allow us to strategically manage flights as opposed to just hand-manage the flights or paper-manage the flights.

We were in the process of introducing electronic, in-the-field, direct capture, which is an exceedingly difficult task, but one that pays huge dividends in terms of capturing the right information and allowing strategic decisions to be made. All of these projects were under way and were requiring inordinate time and effort on our part.

Mr. Frank Klees: Since 2005—it’s now 2012.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sir, actually Ornge did not take over services until January 2006, and in January 2006 we were dealing with green screens and DOS-based programming in the communications centre. We were also dealing with server systems that had 2% memory remaining and crashed. We were dealing with server systems that actually didn’t have any schematics associated with what they were connected to. We were dealing with an antiquated physical plant and the entire IT infrastructure.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was the investment that Ornge made in that communications system?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don’t have that data in front of me, nor do I have access to that anymore. I cannot recall.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you give us an estimate?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir, I cannot.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Are you asking for dollars, Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I can’t recall. It was a substantive project. It was a significant, multi-year project and it was a huge part of Ornge’s strategic planning to increase and improve that backbone.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, sir, I would have thought, given the central importance of the communication and dispatch system, that as the CEO, you would have known what the status of that project was on a week-by-week basis and certainly would have known how much was allocated to it. However, we’ll move on.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think, sir, I would have known eight or nine months ago when I was receiving regular reports from my staff and when I was still involved at Ornge and still very much a CEO of Ornge. It’s been nine—

Mr. Frank Klees: What was the number eight or nine months ago?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Again, having been in hospital, having had a substantive impact to my health, I’m not able to recall those facts, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Since day one of these hearings, we’ve heard from the minister, we’ve heard from deputies, assistant deputy ministers and directors who have told us, all from the same hymn book, that the leadership team at Ornge that was solely responsible for the things that went wrong is to be blamed for the things that went wrong.

Here’s what health minister Deb Matthews had to say when she was confronted about the lack of oversight: “We found...very serious problems at Ornge. When those problems came to light, we took decisive action. What have we done? We have replaced the leadership at Ornge. We have a new CEO in place.”

And again, before this committee on March 28, she assured us that “Ornge is now on the right path...but there were serious problems under the former leadership.”

Here's what the Premier had to say: "We've replaced the CEO; we replaced the board."

Sir, how did it come about that you and your leadership team could get away with all of these mismanagements of our system and that now, in retrospect, the health minister and the Premier condemn your leadership? How did that happen?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know the answer to that, sir. I do know that the Premier—I would assume—but certainly the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care and the minister were aware and informed at all times of the various things that we were doing, always.

I am not clear at all as to how, suddenly, the leadership at Ornge is at fault when during my requests for meetings with the minister to introduce myself and to introduce my concepts, the board's concepts, Ornge's issues, I was told there was no need because there was confidence and comfort in what we were doing based on how they were continually informed. So I don't know the answer to your question, how, suddenly, a leadership team that as recently as spring of 2011 and even as recently as my chairman's meeting in early November—we were informed that they were still supportive of everything we were doing and our leadership team's activities. I do not have an answer.

Mr. Frank Klees: You're aware of the fact that when questions were raised based on information that we received—in fact, I recall well when I raised the first questions in the Legislature. The minister's response was that all is well. When I asked her to look into it, she assured us that all was well.

As those questions continued to be raised in the Legislature, we then started to hear from the minister that she was lied to by the leadership at Ornge. When we challenged the minister to step in and intervene, she told us that she could not intervene, that because of registrations, because of incorporations, because of a failure of the performance agreement that we've just discussed, she didn't have the authority, she didn't have the ability, to intervene.

I'd like to ask you this question—and I refer back to a comment that you made earlier. I believe you said that had you received a call from the minister or anyone in the ministry to say, "What you're doing is wrong, and we don't like the direction that you're going," you would have complied with that, because, at the end of the day, as you say, they are your primary customer.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not only were they our primary customer, Mr. Klees, but they were our entire motivation for doing everything that we were doing. There was no other motivation. That was my adult life's work. I wanted to fix what I saw that was broken. I wanted to fix it for a long time. It had nothing to do with other things; it had to do with wanting to make it right and make it work for patients.

So if they had said to me at any time, "No"—"Yes, ma'am," or, "Yes, sir," and it would have changed. That is my absolute truth at my core.

In addition, I am not aware that at any time anybody lied to the minister. I never had any conversations with the minister. I certainly cannot imagine for the life of me that my chairman would have lied or that Mr. Lepine would have lied. That is not in their core.

I would also challenge the issue of not being able to intervene, even in a simple phone call. There's this issue of legal and the performance agreement, and you've heard from Ms. Golding and others that this actually was a robust document. There is an ethical-moral issue at stake, which says that of course they could say, "Stop," and you would stop. But I would also say that when people decided to stop, it certainly stopped fast. So I don't understand, really.

Mr. Frank Klees: We have a difficult time understanding that in this committee as well. Having been a former cabinet minister, there have been a number of occasions, I can tell you, when I as minister picked up the phone, spoke to a stakeholder and said, "Look, we don't like the direction this is going." There was never a circumstance where that stakeholder did not agree to sit down, have a discussion and work out a reasonable resolution.

So our frustration here as well has been that, having allowed Ornge to go down a certain path with full knowledge and full information, now that there are issues revealed that are questionable, it's very apparent that this government has circled the wagons and is throwing everyone else under the bus, including you, sir.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I have been naive in my understanding of how big the bus is that rolled over me, sir. I assure this committee that at all times in my efforts, I have only ever tried to do my very best for the patients and people of Ontario, and up until recently, it was my understanding that the ministers and the Premier—the government—supported me 100% and supported us 100% and were proud of what we were doing.

Mr. Frank Klees: When you called the minister and asked for an opportunity to speak with her, you were not accommodated with a meeting. I'd like you take the opportunity now and tell us what you would like to say to the minister today.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Which minister?

Mr. Frank Klees: Deb Matthews.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Thank you.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't think I'd like to say what I'd like to say today, sir, but if I were to say what I would have said back when I was offered an opportunity, I would have done what I did with Minister Smitherman and with Minister Caplan. I would have gone through the history. I would have talked about the context. I would have said, "Here is where air transport medicine was. Here is what was wrong with it. Here are the challenges facing it now as we move into an even more disseminated population that is aging. Here is the massive challenge facing you now that we have a pure centre of excellence health care model, which means that we deliver patients to focuses. The patients don't get their angioplasty in Parry Sound nor do they get it in many other communities around the province. We have a centre of excellence model.”

I would have said, “Minister, we have a massive challenge ahead of us. It is my belief, based on my study, that there are at least 8,000 persons—that study is further corroborated by a study that we had the Hay Group do. Yes, there are multiple challenges in the Hay Group study. The data was difficult to get, and data in health care now, particularly with PHIPA—privacy in health information—is extremely difficult to put together, but the empirical experience of this transport medicine physician and this front-line physician is that we’ve got triage going on every day, that we’re going to have more of it, and that, if I understand correctly what is happening, you don’t have a lot of money left.

“In fact, I understand that you have a deficit and that you’re struggling to deal with that deficit without cutting services. I respect everything you’re doing and I’m not going to come and put my hand out, Minister, and say, ‘Give me more.’ I’m actually going to say, ‘Here, I think I’ve got an idea.’ We can do this out there, and we can do this because we’re first movers in this, and people don’t understand that.

“We’re the only group on a global basis that understands that transport medicine is an economic efficiency for health care. It’s not a richness. It actually improves the economic analysis. It definitely improves morbidity and mortality of patients, and it improves the quality of care while at the same time decreasing the cost. We’re the only ones who have had the ability to get our heads around that because in this province, despite all that we want to complain about, in this country, we are blessed with the ability to have a single-payer system where we can bring a focus like Ornge, rather than in many places that I have worked, where it is multiple hospitals and multiple carriers.”

Those are things I would say.

I would go on, sir, but I understand I’m in your time.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me ask—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: One last question for you: Had the minister said to you in that conversation, “Dr. Mazza, we have serious concerns about some of the issues at Ornge. For example, we have a serious concern about the level of your compensation, and we think that that compensation should be brought in line. I think we need to do some things that are going to clean up those areas that we have serious concerns about,” what would your response have been?

Dr. Chris Mazza: “Yes, ma’am.”

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We’ll move to the NDP then. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I just want to ask you—I know that you’ve been sitting there for close to three hours. I have another 20 minutes coming—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Feels like six.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes; six days, I suppose. If you promise me that you will be back after lunch, we could break for lunch early or I can go on with my 20 minutes, whatever you want.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Please, go ahead.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You’re good to go?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma’am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. I think I will pick up where my colleague just left off. You felt that the ministry knew exactly what you were doing—more than “felt”; you knew that the ministry was fully briefed on what you were doing. They were supportive and frankly were proud of what was going on at Ornge. Had they asked you to change anything—your answer was quite telling: “Yes, ma’am.” That’s what you would have done. How can you explain that there was never a reach-out to you to try to save something that we should all be proud of?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I can’t explain that. I’ve never understood that. I didn’t understand when it started. I don’t understand. I cannot explain.

M^{me} France Gélinas: If you put yourself back in December, when the Toronto Star and Mr. Donovan started talking about your organization, the things that came out were on compensation. My colleague asked you about compensation. Had the ministry or anybody within the ministry’s office asked you to review compensation, you said yourself that you would have been open to this. Would your board have been open to that as well?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I believe so, ma’am. I say this because there is, aside from the ethical and moral issues that my board felt strongly about with relation to its work for the ministry—I think the board and the executives were also very aware of the unbelievable power of persuasion. It’s not like you would have—I don’t know how to explain it. They’re your principal customer, your principal focus. So if they don’t like this or want that done or any number of other things that they feel quite strongly about and after discussing it it’s very clear that they feel quite strongly about it, then you say, “Okay.” May I share an example?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sure.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don’t remember when this is, so I apologize again, but on or around the time that we were going to the corporate bond markets, the issue of consolidation within the Ministry of Finance came up. The Ornge board, Ornge finance staff and experts that Ornge brought to the table to assist Ornge felt strongly—and I underline “strongly”—that this was not an appropriate decision. They voiced that issue with the Ministry of Finance and the controller’s office and had meetings with them and tried very hard to debate this issue. In the end, the Ministry of Finance decided that that was what they were doing. Ornge accepted that and then complied. I just use it as an example for something that was felt very strongly about and yet, after attempting to discuss, to debate and to find a solution that Ornge felt was more appropriate, complied with what the government decided they wanted.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I would say that this is kind of a good example, actually, that you've given, because we have lots of written material between Ornge and the Ministry of Finance that shows how vigorously you opposed the consolidation and how it happened anyway.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes. I don't think there's anything wrong with vigorously opposing or bringing your opinion to the table, but at the end of the day, as I indicated to Mr. Klees, "Yes, sir" or, "Yes, ma'am" would have been the response.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You would have complied. So, compensation could have been resolved?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The other issues that are still lingering out there are the price that was paid by Ornge for the helicopters and the issue of, did you have to pay extra for some of the weight etc.? Everybody has pointed to you as the person who paid more for the helicopters than should have been paid.

Dr. Chris Mazza: The helicopter itself?

M^{me} France Gélinas: The helicopters.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Or the upgrades?

M^{me} France Gélinas: For the upgrades of the helicopters.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Because I had nothing to do with the—well, very little to do with the actual negotiation of the pricing in the helicopter. It was far too complex a process.

The upgrades issue—I need to put some context around this, if may.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sure.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I was not aware that there was any need for upgrades, and that's not unusual. I'm not an aviator. I depended on the aviation department to find such things.

The aviation department came to me quite some time after the negotiation of the helicopter contract; actually, things were in production and we were getting close to delivery. It's important to understand that, because this entire issue of bringing a new fleet in and changing a new fleet out had an entire room covered in a Gantt chart in terms of timelines that needed to be met. So it was a particularly stressful time.

What was brought to my attention initially was, okay, we need these upgrades. Fine. But they're included in the contract. We already negotiated them as part of the contract. I didn't pay any more attention to it.

I then became aware, through phone calls to me, and also I was made aware of it by some of the executives, that there was tremendous acrimony now developing between AgustaWestland and the aviation team. This acrimony surrounded a fairly harsh position that the team had taken with AgustaWestland, which was that this was in fact part of the original contract and we're not paying for it, and that's it. That was certainly not consistent with the style of negotiation that AgustaWestland sought out and dealt with on a global basis. I was then made aware that the position that we had, that these were part of the contract, was in fact incorrect and that legally they were not part of the contract. We didn't have the upgrades in the contract. I was told that we were wrong.

I was now put in an extremely awkward position where a relationship was being damaged on an almost daily basis. There was significant acrimony developing. These were people we were going to need to work with for 15 to 20 years and they were very, very important to how we were going to do what we were going to do here in Ontario.

One of the aviation executives then indicated to me, yes, that they're not part of the contracts—he doesn't agree, but he understands they're not part of the contract—but he can get it for significantly less than $12 million. That was offered as an opinion. He said $12 million because that was what was on the table. That was the price that was being required.

That was offered as an opinion. There was certainly absolutely no negotiated, mutually agreed upon settlement that I was aware of, nor was I made aware of nor was offered to me. That opinion was offered to me, and it was the same opinion of the fairly harsh negotiating, tactician who had led me into believing that it was part of the contract in the first place.

At that point, I indicated that I would speak to Agusta. I was interested in trying to get through this. Our delivery dates were approaching and I was extremely anxious, as I've indicated, about the relationship.

In that discussion with Agusta, I acquiesced to the position that, "We now understand that they are not part of the contract. That is the advice and position that we've now been given. So, we agree with you, but your position of $12 million: We can't afford that. That is too much. What can you offer?" I believe a 50% discount figure was put on the table. I indicated in that conversation that I could neither accept nor deny—it seemed reasonable to me—but that I needed to pass that over to my financial staff, my legal staff, my accounting staff, to ensure that this was appropriate from all of those perspectives. Not of least importance was a fair market value for what was being received. I didn't have the ability or expertise to do that. I passed it over to finance and they worked on that process from that point forward and I was not involved. It was my understanding that eventually the fair market value was defined using the appropriate means, that all legal and accounting efforts were accomplished. That agreement was then brought forward, with all of those caveats, to the board of directors for approval.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We had Tom Rothfels and Rick Potter testify in front of this committee, who both said that the weight upgrades were part of the contract. Who were the people who told you they were not?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Well, legal at Ornge specifically indicated to us that our position was wrong, was inaccurate. Aviation had been pursuing that position. That had been the position that they'd been pursuing. But certainly, I'm sure that your testimony from finance and from legal would have indicated that they were not part of the contracts. There's a difference here. We need to be careful. It's not just weight upgrades. There are weight upgrades and then there's a whole lot of other things that the aviators needed on board the helicopters that they hadn't negotiated in the first place. I don't recall what those things were. I don't want to be crass, but they were things like extra lights. There were a number of things.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We have Mr. Potter's testimony that basically he went to you and said that he was successful in convincing Agusta that the weight upgrades and the others were part of the contract. He expected a "Congratulations, well done, well negotiated," and none of that happened.

Dr. Chris Mazza: That is not my recollection of events. My recollection of events was that I was offered an opinion—and I was never told that it was part of the contract—that he would be able to get it significantly down from $12 million. I don't remember the actual number he used. Actually, as I recall the conversation, it was more about how he still didn't agree that it wasn't in the contract, but he understood that, from a legal perspective, it wasn't. As far as I understand, legal testimony here has supported that, and that was certainly the advice that was given to me. It was not part of the contract. That was always Agusta's position, from a legal perspective. I'm not a lawyer. I accepted that position. That was the advice I was given.

M^{me} France Gélinas: This amount of money happens to be very close to the amount of money that was paid for a marketing service agreement from Ornge to Agusta-Westland. Agusta is a global company that has knowledge and skills and resources far beyond—you're not on the same number of zeros when we talk about the budget of Ornge and when we talk about Agusta. Why would Agusta ever come to Ornge for a marketing service agreement?

Dr. Chris Mazza: After the completion of the helicopter purchase agreement etc., I began spending a fair bit of time selling Ornge's ability, what Ornge was capable of. I think it's very sad to me, often, that people don't realize that, yes, this global monster of a player, part of Finmeccanica—why would they think little Ornge was so—because we were doing something nobody else in the world was doing. Nobody else was looking at transport medicine the way we were, and that was critical to them to try to understand how they could position that.

I had spent a fair bit of time trying to make them aware of how we could be advantageous to them in penetrating a marketplace that they were having difficulty penetrating, particularly in the United States.

I've lost track of your question.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Why would Agusta ever come to Ornge?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Why would they, yes. I think I'm answering it in that we had tremendous ability. They had tremendous respect for our vision, for our strategy and for the way we made things happen. But they also had tremendous respect for a transport medicine organization that was doing upwards of 18,000 patient movements per year. I mean, that's massive. Just like anything else, when you have a volume of experience like that, you actually get very good at it, and they had never encountered that before. So they were receptive to the marketing services agreement in trying to better understand places in the world and ways that they might engage those places in the world to move towards systems like what we were doing.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): It now being noon, we are finished for the morning, but I just wanted to point out that the government has circulated an email with "Ruth Hawkins, Ministry of Health," on the top that they plan on asking you questions about this afternoon. We'll make sure that you do have a copy of that particular email.

This afternoon, we'll start with three minutes left with the NDP.

We are now recessed until 1 o'clock.

The committee recessed from 1202 to 1300.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I call this meeting to order. Just before I start, it was a long morning. Dr. Mazza, if at some point you need a five-minute break to use the washroom or—please just let me know and we'll recess at that time.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The NDP has three minutes left in their questioning. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I will use my three minutes wisely.

Just before lunch, I was asking you about the marketing agreement. I'm curious for you to explain to me: How did this come to be? Who reached out to who? Who negotiated it? How would they come to see you about this: you as in Ornge or you as in Dr. Mazza, whoever they reached out to?

Dr. Chris Mazza: As I think I started to talk about, after the helicopters were purchased, we certainly—let me just back up. Going back to from our inception, and with a mandate—we always had a mandate and a belief that we were to go forward and generate revenue to supplement the tax base and improve the system in Ontario.

So now, just to come forward, we've completed the acquisition of the helicopters and we have for sure a partner for the next 15 to 20 years just in operating those helicopters that necessitates an ongoing interaction. There's no way around that. It's a very complex operation. This is a major multinational organization with connectivity all over the world into all sorts of areas that Ornge would love to be exploring.

One of my jobs was to begin to impress upon them how unique we were on a global basis and, certainly from our feeling, how important a relationship that could be for them and how we had value to bring to them. So I spent a lot of time impressing that upon them. They were—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who would you talk to?

Dr. Chris Mazza: A variety of different executives. The CEO of AgustaWestland, who eventually became the CEO of Finmeccanica, the vice-president of North American sales, the executive vice-president of Global, one of the business strategic folks—a number of different people. At any rate, they became receptive to the idea and I was very excited. I was pleased that they could see the value that we could bring.

We began to talk about two things. The first one was about marketing services and how we might begin to show them different parts of the world that we thought were valuable and different ways that we thought we could get into those parts of the world, along those lines. This was, in our mind, leading to what we hoped would become a joint venture marketing opportunity, an opportunity for us to utilize the considerable person power that was at their disposal in a joint venture. In fact, that was proving true.

In the fall of 2011, I was already starting to be in conversations with folks from India who were meeting us through introductions. We were carrying our own weight but we would never have met those folks. We were meeting folks from the UAE. We had met and were starting to work with folks from Brazil.

I think I got a little off track on your question.

In terms of the negotiation of the agreement, I negotiated the principle; in other words, the concept that we could have a marketing services agreement. But then I passed that off to my finance staff because, quite frankly, ma'am, I wasn't sure what structure—I didn't know how that would look. I knew I had an agreement in principle. I didn't know how it could be fitted into our structure and into our process, so I asked my finance staff to evaluate how that agreement would look.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you have an idea of the size, money-wise? When you talk about the principle of the thing, did you also have an idea if we were talking $1,000 or $1 million?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, I was certainly thinking in terms of longer term and in millions. That was just my thought process. But let me be clear: Passing it over was not—it was to define what that would be. I mean, I was going to my finance and legal and saying, "How can we structure this? How can this work for us? Does this work within the charitable component, or does it work within—how do we do this?" My finance people went off to evaluate the deal and to evaluate how it would work for us. They were very clear: They had to do the same.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sorry. Continue.

Dr. Chris Mazza: They had to do the same and evaluate how they wanted it to look.

Subsequently, those two minds, if you will, came back together in the form of negotiating an agreement that took—I don't know—somewhere between four and six months to negotiate the details, the deliverables, the payment schedules, expectations, review process, all of that.

At the end of the day, not only did this have to pass muster in our finance department and in our legal department, who had to agree that it was important to do what was appropriate and what was within our regulatory framework, and it had to be accepted by the Ornge board of directors, but it also had to be accepted by the oversight processes of not only AgustaWestland but Finmeccanica.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. We'll move on to the government now.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I hope I answered your question.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Dr. Mazza, you've maintained throughout your testimony this morning that the Ministry of Health was briefed regularly and kept up to date. You have denied that the Ministry of Health or the Auditor General were stonewalled; in fact, quite the opposite. In response to questions from my colleagues opposite, you stated, "We were proud of what was going on" and had no reason to stonewall, and that the Ministry of Health was your prime motivation and you would never have lied to or misled the Ministry of Health.

You've also maintained that the province was behind you all the way, and had the provincial government felt otherwise, you would have changed course absolutely. You even went so far as to say that if the government had ever called you up and said there was something wrong or something you should change, you would say, "Yes, ma'am," in reference to Minister Matthews.

I'd like to turn everyone's attention to an actual example of the relationship between yourself and the Ministry of Health. To put this in context, I believe this is probably one of the emails that were produced in response to Mr. Klees's request for information from the Ministry of Health. It's an email from yourself, Dr. Mazza. It's to Malcolm Bates, who was the director of emergency health services. It's copied to Ruth Hawkins, who was the ADM at the time; and then Alf Apps, Rainer Beltzner, and Maria Renzella, from Ornge, are copied. It is dated November 1, 2007. This actually goes quite a way back in the relationship; this isn't just the early relationship.

It's an email in which you vigorously oppose the province's attempt to consolidate Ornge onto the books of the province. Again, by way of context, this would be coming out of conversations between—a request of the provincial controller and in discussion with the Auditor General of the province of Ontario. So this request did not come from some minor bureaucrat. This request to consolidate came from the most senior levels of both the government of Ontario and the Auditor General as the representative of the Legislature of Ontario.

Dr. Mazza, I wonder—and you are clearly in opposition here to this consolidation, if I can summarize, because in your opinion the government had no control over Ornge—if you could read the first paragraph to us, which begins, "Further to our telephone conversation." This is your email to Malcolm Bates and Ruth Hawkins.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Let me clarify for the members of the committee: My knowledge does not allow me to have written an email to this degree, or to this degree of understanding of fiscal and accounting process and legal process—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Your name is on it; it says “from Chris Mazza.”

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma’am, if I may finish—if I may just finish—it comes from my office and from my email; yes, ma’am. I am familiar with the contents. I can absolutely clarify, though, that this was a matter that was written with the chairman of the board, PricewaterhouseCoopers, as well as corporate counsel. There is far more understanding in this letter than I had then or have today.

I am fine reading this—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: If I may comment, however, from the point of the view of the recipient, it came from Chris Mazza, CEO of Ornge. So if you could proceed with reading the first paragraph, that would be helpful.

Interjections.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This is part of the public record now because it was disclosed by the Ministry of Health.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes. That’s fine, ma’am. I’m merely pointing out to the committee that this is not my style of writing, nor is it my tone, nor is it the way that I normally communicate. I would urge you to look at the way I communicate as a means of backing that up.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Very well. It is from you—

Dr. Chris Mazza: “Further to our telephone conversation yesterday, I am deeply concerned by, and opposed to, the sudden and overreaching proposal of the Office of the Provincial Controller to include Ornge in the government’s consolidated financial reporting exercise which I became aware of only yesterday. This notion makes absolutely no sense having regard to (a) the actual structure and business of Ornge, including its relationship to the government (b) the original and continuing intent and objectives of the government in separating air ambulance services from government in 2005 as communicated by the minister and the Premier and (c) the strategic and business plans of Ornge as it seeks to change the model for funding and delivering medical air transport in Ontario in accordance with those broader policy objectives. More importantly, given the public service accounting policies that are supposed to govern the question of consolidation, I believe a serious error has been made based on a fundamental misapprehension of the basic facts governing the question.”

Mrs. Liz Sandals: If I could carry on down in what are represented to be your comments in paragraph (a), “the government has no authority whatsoever to appoint or remove these directors”—refers to the board of directors.

What purport to be your comments under paragraph (b): “The government has no ongoing access to the assets of the organization whatsoever and has never asserted such a right. The only right the government has is, in the event of default and termination of the performance agreement, which is only triggered by a material breach or a bankruptcy, insolvency or liquidation ..., is to recover only what remains ... of those assets that have been acquired with funds provided pursuant to the performance agreement....”

Dr. Chris Mazza: If I may add some context—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: If I could please carry on? Again, purportedly your comments at paragraph (c): “The government has no responsibility whatsoever for Ornge’s losses.” Further in that same paragraph: “Furthermore, the government has no jurisdiction whatsoever to direct the ongoing use of our assets. That is entirely the province of the board of directors and the management accountable to it. We have complete autonomy to decide how to deploy our assets. We have a contractual obligation to the government to deliver certain services within Ontario and we are funded to deliver those services. How we choose to deliver those services most effectively and efficiently is in our discretion. How we choose to deploy our assets—both for our contracted responsibilities under the performance agreement and otherwise—is in our discretion. Whether we use leased or owned assets, whether we in-source or outsource certain delivery functions (e.g., aircraft maintenance, aircraft operations) is in our discretion.”

If you go on down to paragraph (e), purportedly your comments: “The government has no power to dissolve Ornge whatsoever. Ornge’s continuing existence is completely independent of government. The only thing that the government can do—and this is only in the circumstances of default—is terminate the performance agreement, in which case it can only recover those assets which were given to Ornge by the government or acquired by Ornge with funding under the performance agreement.”

That’s what you purportedly say. I wonder if you could go to the bottom of page 3, the last two paragraphs, and read what is purportedly your conclusion, the paragraphs beginning, “Given that....”

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Chairman, I’ve lost track of all of the issues that the honourable committee member has brought up.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That’s why we gave you the memo in advance.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I’ve lost track. If I can start dealing with some of the issues that the honourable member has brought forward—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: The honourable member hasn’t asked a question yet.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I will do that, if you would just finish reading the memo, please: “Given that ...” at the bottom of page 3, the last few paragraphs, please.

Dr. Chris Mazza: “We trust that you will immediately withdraw this proposal”—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That’s fine. Just carry on.

Dr. Chris Mazza: —“which completely” flies—it says “files”—“in the face of the public policy of Ontario in relation to its formation by this government in 2005. The fact that there is not one single indicia of control or even possible control that applies to Ornge should be sufficient to persuade you that there has been a profound misapprehension of the facts in this case by your office. We would like this matter resolved promptly and will be pleased to meet to discuss this matter further at the first mutually convenient opportunity.”

Mrs. Liz Sandals: If I may, I’m actually not quibbling over whether you wrote this or whether a lawyer wrote it. It’s quite clear that a lawyer wrote it. However, it was the official correspondence that was received by the ministry on a very serious issue.

Does it sound, from what the Ministry of Health received, like this is an organization that’s working co-operatively and would never stonewall a government initiative?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think I brought this issue up myself with Madame G  linas. Clearly, I am of the position that this is an example of healthy interaction and debate, or I wouldn’t have brought it up. I didn’t know that you were going to bring this up, ma’am. I brought it up myself as an example of how I felt that Ornge could have a difference of opinion and could enter into a healthy academic or otherwise debate and discussion. But in the end, the conclusion in this matter was that the consolidation occurred.

If I could give some background to this issue to the committee, when this first—and I maintain absolutely, and I am aware that I am under oath, that I did not write this, because I don’t have the knowledge to write this. This was a combined writing of the senior accounting financial authorities, both at Ornge and the consultants at PwC, as well as corporate counsel, as well as the chairman of the board and the chairman of the finance committee.

Having said that, the context and background of this issue was that when it first came to Ornge’s attention, there was great surprise and a lack of understanding. When we pursued this issue with the emergency health services branch on a verbal, interactive basis—which was our tendency, to pick up the phone and to engage in conversation—they too were mystified as to why we were being consolidated this year when previously we weren’t. They could not understand—and this is their accounting staff—why this was being applied. I’m not an accountant; I don’t purport to be one. I am merely relating that our finance and accounting staff couldn’t understand; the ministry’s finance and accounting staff within the branch couldn’t understand.

When my senior finance staff as well as counsel went to meet—I do not remember the name—one of the senior accountants with the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, they indicated that in general, the controller’s office would pass around a list of companies or a list of agencies or organizations, whatever, I don’t know, and that they would have to decide within health whether they would have to be consolidated or not. Previously, it had been their opinion that Ornge should not be consolidated. The controller’s office had taken a new position and one that these accountants did not understand either.

In the spirit of those conflicting sets of information, the organization wrote this communication as a means of opening the door to discussion. I think the points in this email were set out the way they are because, as I understand it—and this was what I was advised—these points are the points by which one tests control and therefore tests whether consolidation ought to occur. So they were written in that way to identify that in fact it didn’t meet the accounting tests of control.

The only other thing I would add, ma’am, is that if there was significant concern over the issues that were brought forward and the position that Ornge had with regard to these various issues, I can tell you that nobody ever said, “That’s not acceptable. We’re not going to engage in this. We’re not going to have this type of relationship. We need to go backwards now and redraw the performance agreement.” This was consistent with the performance agreement, and certainly it was a clear identification of how Ornge understood.

This document, by the way, preceded the audit by the Ministry of Finance. So again, there was plenty of opportunity at that point to say, “If this is your interpretation of policy, we’re not sure we agree with it. We’d like it to be another way.” Those conversations never occurred, ma’am—not to my knowledge.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The question I asked you wasn’t, “Why did you write the memo?” It wasn’t, “Who advised you to make these points?” It was, “You have asserted that if the ministry or finance or anybody else came to you, that you were instantly co-operative and did whatever was being requested.” Is this a “Yes, ma’am” sort of response, in your view? I’d hate to see a “No, ma’am” response.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think that what I have said is that in the end, the organization said yes to consolidation and they ceased and desisted in all further disagreement on this issue. So in fact, yes, it was a “Yes, ma’am.” It is an informed “Yes, ma’am.” I think, again, to my point, if the government was concerned that there was not co-operation or there was stonewalling, they never made that clear to us. As a matter of fact, conversations with the emergency health services branch were always cordial and positive, and with the Ministry of Health in general. We never had any relationship with the controller’s office and had no idea who these folks were. So I—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: At any rate, I’m sorry; I don’t read, “We trust that you will immediately withdraw this proposal” as “Yes, ma’am.” But let’s now go to the substance. Why, leaving the—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please let him respond.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Actually, it says, “We will be pleased to meet to discuss this matter at the first mutually convenient opportunity,” which we did. We went on to meet formally with them, and in that meeting they indicated that they were going to have Deloitte evaluate the issue and give a more informed third party opinion. My chairman will testify to that, as will corporate counsel, as will my finance executives who were in the room at the time. I was not there.

Interjection.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm sorry, ma'am, if I could just finish. The issue was left. We were waiting for a statement that Deloitte would be looking at this issue, and we instead received a letter that, "We have changed our mind. We will not involve Deloitte. You are consolidated." That was the end of it. We never spoke of it again. We said, "Yes, sir."

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I wonder if we could have a bit of a look at—not the legal, because I agree with you; this is obviously accountants and lawyers who are writing. Why were you corporately so vigorously opposed to consolidation? As a government member who sits on treasury board—and the auditor will probably agree with me—consolidation is actually, in some ways, to the disadvantage of the government, because what it ends up doing is putting more debt on the government's books. It makes no difference to the normal operations, to the entity being consolidated, that they had been consolidated. It's normally really not of any interest to the entity being consolidated; it's just an internal conversation with the government. Is that correct, Auditor?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I think essentially what the consolidation would deal with would probably be right on the accounts of Ornge, and especially—they may have got wind that they were going to be borrowing $300 million. That could have been part of it. But generally, it wouldn't be health that would kind of drive the bus on this one; it would have been the provincial controller's office that would basically drive that decision. They would come up with their assessment. Typically, then, they would come to us and say, "This is what we think on this new entity, Auditor. Are you onside with this?"

Dr. Chris Mazza: In fact, I, at a personal level, never had an issue with this. It was an accounting exercise for me. I had a chairman who was an accountant. I had a chairman of the finance committee who was an accountant. They had an academic issue with this because they didn't understand it.

At the end of the day, as I've indicated, they agreed to consolidation. But you asked why there was an issue. I believe it was an academic issue.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And it had absolutely nothing to do with the future plan of spinning off various corporations and having a closer tracking of that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: The various corporations—that did not exist at that time, ma'am. Those were not even—they had not been contemplated. We were still busy trying to figure out how we were going to replace the antiquated infrastructure, assets, how we were going to—we were still in the process of trying to take on a former government union—take on the CAW, how we were going to—by "take on," I mean bring them into the organization. We had a myriad of issues that we were struggling with. We certainly were not looking ahead at the more detailed elements that we eventually got to in terms of revenue generation.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you're on your last minute.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You've said that you weren't trying to stonewall the Auditor General. If I could quote from the auditor's press conference of March 21, when he released his report, he said Ornge was not all that co-operative in providing information to the ministry. The auditor said, "Ornge deliberately did not give us what I would call a straight and fulsome answer all the time, and they really made it difficult for us to get all the information."

That's what the auditor has told us. Do you disagree with the auditor?

Dr. Chris Mazza: From my knowledge and my perspective, yes, I disagree with the auditor. I never met the audit team. I was never interviewed by the audit team. I met the—pardon me, Auditor—associate deputy, I believe—

Mr. Jim McCarter: I think we had a draft report discussion. I think you met with Gary, the deputy auditor, and Susan, the director—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

Mr. Jim McCarter:—and I think you popped in one day and had a bit of a chat, maybe, just to one of the staff, just to say hello—

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. It was a, "Hello, I'm Dr. Mazza. How are you?"

Mr. Jim McCarter: Then we had a bit of an email discussion—

Dr. Chris Mazza: On the phone.

Mr. Jim McCarter: We had a phone call discussion at the start of the audit, kind of talking about the timing.

Dr. Chris Mazza: That's correct. But I was—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But you never—any information the auditor asked for, it was all given to the auditor?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ma'am, I actually convened a committee, a team. That team was led by my chairman of the board. On that team was the chairman of the board as well as the chairman of the finance committee as well as a number of other folks. Always, the chairman of the board was—you see, Ornge always knew that the auditor would be coming someday. That is a reality. The chairman was particularly focused on making sure that any and all necessary information was supplied in a timely and efficient fashion.

I read what the auditor's report said. I was in the hospital at the release. I did not see teleconferences or anything. Certainly, my direction would have been to be co-operative in supply. My understanding was that they were provided with scads of paper and material.

I am not able to answer your question as to why there is that perception. I do not understand it myself. Again, we had a team. The chairman of the board and the board in general were very focused on being co-operative. Somehow, I guess that got lost.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We are out of time, so we'll move to—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It's your position that the—you can take a few seconds off my next round. It's your position, then, that the chairman of the board—that is, Mr.

Beltzner—who would be the same person who apparently wrote this memo that says that “the government has no jurisdiction whatsoever to direct the ongoing use of our assets,” was totally co-operative in turning over everything that the auditor asked for, even though the auditor says that that isn’t the case.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Just to make a correction, Mr. Chairman, I did not say that the chairman of the board wrote that; I said that a team wrote that particular email, and that team was comprised of lawyers, accountants and the chairman.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And the auditor would like to clarify a point.

Mr. Jim McCarter: I just thought I might clarify the co-operation. On one hand, I’d have to say that we eventually got almost all the information that we asked for. The difficulty was, it just took a long time. It was a very arduous process. What would normally take a couple of days often took weeks; often they had to go back with a lawyer. It just took a long time.

On the other hand, at the end of the day, we did get virtually all the information we asked for, except we did have a scope limitation where we couldn’t see anything on the right-hand side—all the for-profit companies.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for that clarification.

We’ll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: I would like to just continue briefly on the consolidation file while we’re there. Can you tell me why the consolidation issue was such a contentious one if in fact, as you’ve ultimately concluded, it was academic; it was not a big deal for you? Why was it such a contentious issue?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don’t have anything further to add to the answer I already made, Mr. Klees. I think there was consternation over the—it didn’t make sense; it was not a logical issue. I think, to be honest, Mr. Klees, after the initial meeting with—I don’t know if it was finance or the controller’s office—we did have a meeting at Ornge, and it was clear that the controller’s position was quite assertive. They were very focused on their position. There was a meeting at Ornge and the decision was made that, “It’s not in our best interests to pursue this. Let’s just leave this alone. This is an academic issue. It doesn’t make any sense. Let it go,” at which point we just waited, because the conclusion of that meeting was that there would be a Deloitte and Touche review. That didn’t happen and, we were informed, wouldn’t happen. Nothing was ever done about that again.

Mr. Frank Klees: But it is a fact that Ornge—or someone at Ornge, if it wasn’t you—felt very strongly about it, to the point where they hired Don Guy to lobby the government over this very issue. Isn’t that true?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I am not aware that Mr. Guy was hired as a lobbyist. I know that Mr. Guy did work for us on community issues. I am not aware of his engagement at that level; no, sir. The issues regarding this in particular were actually well within the bailiwick and capabilities of the chairman and the chairman of finance. They were also well within the bailiwick of corporate counsel and PwC. I remember Mr. Guy doing some work for us for a brief time but I do not recall the details of that work.

Mr. Frank Klees: We have it on pretty good authority that he did get involved in this file and he did make calls to the government to attempt to resolve this in Ornge’s interest, and obviously the rest is history.

Speaking of letters, can you tell me who was really in charge at Ornge? There is correspondence that is signed by someone who didn’t write it; there are people like Mr. Navas, who signed letters as the chief operating officer. Ms. Long thought that she was working for him, and while she was here she testified that he was the COO. He came here and told us he never was the COO; all he did was—in fact, I don’t think he remembered the letter that I showed him that he did sign.

Who was really in charge? Who wrote whose letters? What can we rely on? I mean, it sounds like Keystone Kops when you look at it from a distance. Who knew what was going on? Who was in charge of what? You tell us you don’t remember, and I don’t mean to be insensitive—I understand you’ve gone through a difficult time—but we’re discussing serious issues in a very major agency that, yes, was independent, but had the responsibility to deliver essential emergency health services in our province, and we have nothing but contradictory stories about what went on. And you, sir, don’t remember. How do we get a handle on what is going on here?

Dr. Chris Mazza: As I’ve said over and over again, I am, to the best of my ability, trying to recall and provide you with as much information, Mr. Klees, as I can. We are going back many years in some of these things. Regardless of my recent health history, I think it’s difficult for many of us to remember back that far. In addition, I have no access to any material that I would normally have had access to.

In answer to your question, Mr. Klees, I was in charge. I was the CEO. I’m accountable for that. But I was also accountable to the board of directors. I worked for the board of directors. And so, inevitably—the board held the overall authority at Ornge. I am accountable for the actions and endeavours that we went forward on. As I’ve said to the committee, I believed that we were doing excellent work. I believed that we were doing good work in the interests of the province. I believed that we had the support of the province. But I guess my answer to your question is that I was in charge.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

I had a letter handed to you that all the committee members already have in their files. It’s the now-famous January 19, 2011, stakeholder briefing letter that was sent to Minister Deb Matthews and that was subsequently followed up with an in-person briefing. It was copied to you, Tom Lepine, your board of directors and 11 key government players, including the Premier’s principal secretary and a who’s who of finance, health and economic development. You have that in front of you?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: No one remembers reading this letter. We've examined people here over the last number of months. We show them the letter and they recognize their name as being copied, but no one has read it. The letter was signed by Rainer Beltzner. My question to you is, who wrote it?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Again, this would have been a team effort, sir. It's quite a lengthy letter. It would have been written by Mr. Beltzner as well as—counsel would have been involved. It would have been a team production, sir. It was signed by the chairman as the overall authority of the organization.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. The letter makes some very bold statements. One of those statements is, "Ornge is seeking nothing from the government except to make it aware of what it has done and is intending to do"—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me. Could you give us a page number, Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: You know, actually, that's not a very relevant part of my question, but I will give you page 19, which is where I'm going with this. On page 19, the letter informs the government of the new business ventures and how those are going to be financed.

I'm going to help you, sir. I'll read this into the record myself. It starts with the development of the new business ventures. I'm quoting now: "over the period from April 1, 2010, to December 31, 2010, at an estimated cost of $2.7 million, was accomplished entirely through the use of proceeds of a marketing/business development agreement with Agusta Aerospace Corporation ('AAC') pursuant to which total funding of almost $5 million has been provided for business development purposes, including the creation of a business plan. This agreement was entered into in 2010 in recognition of (i) Ornge's expertise in aeromedical transport generally, including the intellectual property associated with its design of the medical interiors for the new rotary-wing aircraft acquired from AAC, and (ii) in consideration of Ornge's agreement to allow that expertise to be used in assisting AAC in penetrating a larger share of the global aeromedical rotary-wing transportation market."

I wanted that on the record because this is a briefing of government. It is directly referring to the Agusta marketing agreement, and it's saying that the $5 million that had already been paid by that time was as a result of Ornge's expertise and intellectual property associated with the design of the medical interiors of those new helicopters.

What we know is that those medical interiors were a disaster. They didn't work. In fact, it was only a matter of time, very shortly after they were installed and those helicopters were delivered, that paramedics started to complain about the fact that they couldn't even perform CPR.

Now we're told by Ornge that there's a temporary fix on those medical interiors and they have to spend millions to retrofit those helicopters.

My question is this: Apparently, Agusta felt that they could pay the $5 million, or whatever—it says $5 million here—to that point, and they're relying on Ornge's expertise for designing medical interiors, which, quite frankly, you couldn't sell to a cabinetmaker today. I'd be interested in your observation.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I would just point out that "Ornge's expertise in aeromedical transport generally, including"—aeromedical interiors was one aspect. The letter is taking a whole raft of aspects under "generally" that it's not mentioning in here. There is a tremendous number of issues. I'll speak to the interiors in a moment.

I think that if it's acceptable to the committee, I'd just like to provide some context on medical interiors in general. It seems to have been a bit of a hot topic here.

Mr. Frank Klees: Actually, if I might, with your permission, we can work together on this. I will come back to the medical interiors in my next round. I would like to pursue the marketing agreement at this point, if you don't mind.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Okay.

Mr. Frank Klees: I just found it somewhat passing strange that the expertise of Ornge would be focused on the medical interiors, which I think we all admit today is really not the fact. But on the marketing agreement—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sorry, I don't actually acknowledge that the interiors are terrible.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Dr. Chris Mazza: If we're going to discuss that, I'll just leave that on the record.

Mr. Frank Klees: With all due respect, Transport Canada has made this statement. It's not my statement. Transport Canada forced Ornge to retrofit. Transport Canada is saying that they will not approve those helicopters for air ambulance service unless they get it fixed. So whether you think there's something wrong with it or not is really quite irrelevant.

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir, I didn't say that there's nothing wrong. What I said was that they are not completely terrible and not fit for a cabinetmaker.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay; well—

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think that they have a number of positive aspects associated with them. I think that there are some challenges. If you want me to wait until your next round, I'm pleased to do so.

Mr. Frank Klees: How much did we pay for those, while we're on the topic anyway—$6.2 million?

Dr. Chris Mazza: You're going to tell me that—I don't recall again, but—sir, I don't recall. It has been a long time.

Mr. Frank Klees: I think it was around $6.2 million.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think it was—

Mr. Frank Klees: I think when you're paying $6.2 million for a medical interior of a helicopter that should be able to allow a paramedic to do CPR, we would expect it not to be partially okay; we'd expect it to be perfect.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Chair, if I could just respond?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You can take the time to respond to that question.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes. I mean, I can't leave that.

I need to provide context first, and the context is of the previous interiors on the Sikorsky 76, where, Mr. Klees, you couldn't intubate a patient. So in my medical opinion and as an expert in transport medicine, I would suggest that the control of an airway and the intervention on an airway is actually far, far more critical than the issue you speak of. It's not to say that CPR on board a helicopter isn't critical; obviously it is. But the other interiors with which we had survived for many, many years had an inordinate number of problems associated with them.

One of my greatest concerns as a transport medicine physician was that I couldn't put the patient on board the helicopter if I even suspected that they might get into airway trouble because I knew that there were no effective means to intubate them. What's more important is that, in order to care for the patient on board the old helicopters, paramedics pretty much had to take off their seat belts, get out of their chairs and completely avoid all safety precautions in order to care for the patient.

What I also know is that as we went forward into new interiors, we were focused intensely on making what we felt to be a world-class interior that would allow for the transport of the critically ill safely and effectively. We engaged a committee, a multidisciplinary group. We asked the union to nominate two members from the union in rotor and in fixed. We asked the medical advisory committee to bring a doctor to the table who would go. We had the aviation department put an aviation expert on the team. We had an administrator as well as an operations person. This team went to the manufacturers and worked with the manufacturers on trying to design a safe, effective and appropriate interior using mock-ups. They didn't just draw it and come up with it. They actually came up with initial thoughts, concepts. The engineers put them together in mock-ups. Then they went through scenarios—scenario after scenario after scenario. When they came back, the engineers then put all the changes into place, and the team then went back again. This process took the better part of a year just to get the design. They then made the changes that the team felt were necessary, and eventually the team signed off on the interior, saying that they were happy with it.

I became aware of a problem with the interior only after the introduction of the London helicopter. At that point, a scenario had come up that indicated that there was a problem. The scenario was—I don't recall what exactly, but the paramedics were concerned. I made the issue known to the chief operating officer at the time, Mr. Lepine, and I was assured that this was an educational issue, that the paramedics were just learning how to use the interior appropriately.

I then had a board member who was doing educational work in London hear the same thing from medics. At this point, I indicated to the chief operating officer that I needed him to convene a focused committee to address this problem urgently. I believe that the chief operating officer did so. He did so in concert with aviation, and they began to work very diligently on trying to fix the issue.

Acknowledged, there is an issue with the interior, but I'd like to be very clear with the committee that it was certainly not through lack of effort in trying to get the right design.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I'd like you to ascribe that amount of time to yourself, please.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm sorry; I didn't hear what you said.

Mr. Frank Klees: Oh, no; that's nothing to do with you.

I'd like to follow up on the marketing agreement and an issue that was raised earlier with regard to a conversation between Rick Potter and this committee in which Mr. Potter made it very clear that he, in fact, had negotiated down some $10 million in costs that Agusta wanted to assess, and he made it very clear to this committee that he came back thrilled with his success. To quote him, he said—this was following his meeting with you, where he told you that he had been so successful in negotiating down this additional cost: "What I said to Chris, and I'll paraphrase for this committee, was, 'Are you freaking crazy?'" That was his opinion of you, as the CEO, saying, "Thanks for negotiating down $10 million. There are things you're not aware of. Leave it to me."

The next thing you know, Maria Renzella was given instructions to paper what was subsequently referred to as a marketing agreement, of which we all have copies. It's ironic that the amount of that marketing agreement was very similar to the amount that Mr. Potter had negotiated down. You seem surprised. That is a fact. For many of us who have some experience in business, it seems passing strange that one of our employees would come into our office and say, "Guess what, boss? I've been able to save the company $10 million," and the boss turns around and says, "Thanks but no thanks. I'd prefer to pay this." A matter of weeks later, a number of the executive at Ornge are in conversation about how odd this is, and Maria Renzella is challenged with the responsibility to paper that deal.

I've heard your explanation, but I frankly don't accept it because there are far too many facts that align here, not the least of which is that Finmeccanica, which is the parent company of Agusta, has been caught in negotiations of bribery, of kickbacks, on the purchase of aircraft. One example of that that is widely reported in the media was the sale of 12 helicopters to India. You should know about that. Can you tell me where the former chairman of Finmeccanica is today?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Klees, I don't know where the former chairman of Finmeccanica is, no. I do not know. I don't know who he is. I've never met him. I don't know where he is.

Mr. Frank Klees: The media reports are far and wide in terms of the bribery charges, in terms of the kickback charges of this company, and they are quoted as saying that they do business this way all the time. Was it ever a concern for you that if it came to light that one of your employees was able to save Ornge $10 million and you refused that, that would be an embarrassment to you?

Dr. Chris Mazza: First of all, if I may start, the word “kickbacks” has been thrown around a lot, and I want to immediately refute that issue. In my person, I have never—nor would I ever receive such a thing. I am not, nor was I, aware of Agusta’s history which you refer to. I did not, do not, know about that. From my perspective, Agusta was and always has been an honourable company that I worked with. That is my opinion. That is what I observed. That is what I saw.

Comments that you made about Mr. Potter—you quoted, “Are you freaking kidding me?” That actually sounds very much like Mr. Potter: a very good executive but a very challenging, somewhat harsh, negotiator. It was my understanding, as I indicated, that the initial position by the aviation department was actually wrong. As an executive, I was now placed in a very difficult position, where I had tremendous acrimony going between these two sides, to solve it. Mr. Potter never once told me that he had a formalized, negotiated settlement. He told me that he had an opinion; he told me that he could do substantively better than $12 million, but at that point, in all honesty, he had exhausted his credibility with me because the situation was deteriorating in terms of moving forward.

I thought I did a pretty good job of getting a discount of 50%. Having said that, I passed that over to finance to ensure that they had fair market value, fair market assessments, and that legal and finance did the appropriate evaluations, as are necessary, to go through that deal.

You say that I called to “paper.” No. My senior executive in finance was away. Many, many things happened in a week at Ornge. She was coming back; I was going somewhere. I needed to download a variety of things that had come up, and one of them was, “I need to figure out how to put this marketing services agreement together,” not “paper it.” The agreement was an agreement. I did not know how it would look.

Mr. Frank Klees: Whose idea was the agreement?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I answered that question already in saying that this was something that we had been pursuing for some time. It’s an idea that came up after the helicopter purchases were completed when we looked at our relationship with a major multinational and hoped to be able to utilize that relationship to further our business initiatives, as well as providing value to them to further theirs. We felt that we could do that for them. It was a mutual interest and integration.

There is one other item, though, and that is the following: In all of these agreements, in all of these issues, finance, counsel, accountants, consultants and the board of directors were all involved. If you think for one second that if anybody had said that there was something wrong with these agreements I would have gone ahead, then that is absolutely incorrect.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If you’re just about done that answer, we’ll move on to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Thank you. Just to close up on the marketing service agreement, you described Agusta and their mother company as—you trusted them. You found that they were a good partner to have and saw opportunity to leverage that partnership for the good of all. They never offered anything that could have been seen as illegal? They never offered or talked to you about the possibility of giving money someplace, somewhere, somehow?

Dr. Chris Mazza: The only conversations we had about money with Agusta were about paying for the original helicopters, creating a marketing services agreement, creating a joint venture in marketing, and a donation to the foundation. Those were the only conversations that I certainly ever had or was aware of. Yes, that is, to the best of my knowledge, entirely accurate.

Again, I emphasize that I am not aware of any negativity surrounding that company’s aura. I did not know.

Interjection.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sorry. I missed the upgrades as well.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When was the last time you talked to anybody from Agusta?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not since maybe the beginning of the new year, after I left Ornge, just in an email saying that I was on medical leave.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Dr. Mazza, there have been some concerns raised—

Dr. Chris Mazza: January.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Pardon?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sorry, at the beginning of January, I had already left on medical leave and had sent an email out in general format that I was away. There was no reply.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Doctor, there have been some concerns raised about a culture surrounding those who come forward with concerns or issues—whistle-blowers. There have been some issues that people noted some problems with Ornge and wanted to raise those concerns but were not treated properly. Do you have any comments about that or do you have any knowledge you can share about that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think, simply—no. I believed I had an open-door policy. I know that my chairman of the board had an open door. I know other directors—the chairman of the board had an open door; other directors had open doors. I know that, for example, in medicine, the chairman would ask the chairman of the MAC at every board meeting, “Do you have any issues that management is not wanting you to talk about?” I have heard that said, Mr. Singh; I’m not able to explain it.

I’ve also heard said that there was a culture of fear. I don’t have any explanation for that either, sir. I know that we had a high-performance culture. I know that the culture was driven and obsessed about goals and focused on deliverables, and perhaps that's frightening for some folks.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you for that. Jacob Blum testified. I'm not sure: Were you able to hear or read some of his testimony?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: He testified, in one part of his testimony, that there were some concerns that he started seeing in Ornge, and he raised those concerns with people from the ministry. Did he raise any concerns with you about the direction that Ornge was headed? Were you aware of any conversation he had with the ministry about concerns that he had about the direction that Ornge was going in?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. When you indicated that you wanted to internalize the fleet, the aircraft in Ornge, as a new direction, the ministry was aware of that new direction that you wanted to go in. Is that correct?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, sir.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And when you told the ministry of your decision or your desire as an organization to move toward owning your own fixed-wing and rotary-wing aircraft, did the ministry approve that decision?

Dr. Chris Mazza: They had no concerns.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: No concerns were raised?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. They were supportive. I don't know—I don't want to—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: No, go on.

Dr. Chris Mazza: There is some context behind this in-sourcing of aviation that might be helpful.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: We'll go into that. I think some of the context that you've brought up in terms of the lack of quality aircraft and the third party and other issues—

Dr. Chris Mazza: There's a number of issues.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: There's a number of issues.

Specifically with the helicopters, when you advised the ministry that you were going to purchase helicopters, did the ministry say, "Listen, we can provide you with some expertise. The Ministry of Natural Resources has had some experience purchasing helicopters"? Was that ever provided to you?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir. The ministry was very supportive of our decision to acquire helicopters. In fact, the director said, "That's fantastic. This is a good example of why we did this in the first place. We could never have done this within government. This would be too difficult. We would never have been able to get this." And, no, the Ministry of Natural Resources was never offered.

In the design, the requirements for the helicopters and the scoresheets etc., Canadian Helicopters' expert staff were involved, as well as some consulting folks that we brought in.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just changing tracks somewhat, were you aware—

Interjection.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes, go ahead.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm interested by the comment you just made that, "This is fantastic. This is why we went the way we went with Ornge at arm's length and setting up the for-profit"—

Dr. Chris Mazza: The not-for-profit.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —at arm's length, and, "We would have never been able to do this within government." Who made those kinds of comments and when were they made?

Dr. Chris Mazza: It was Malcolm Bates, and it was on and around when we were going forward. They had also been very frustrated with their inability to replace an antiquated infrastructure, and he was referring not so much that it wouldn't be something that would eventually be done, but rather that the process involved would be so exceedingly difficult that this is why you had an arm's-length organization.

Probably more importantly, what he was referring to, Madame Gélinas, was that in his organization he was forced to short-term plan. You can't short-term-plan in transport medicine. It can't be done. That's how you end up with antiquated infrastructure and no capital asset replacement plan. I think that was what he was referring to in his comments.

M^{me} France Gélinas: My colleague asked you about Jacob Blum and if there was any concern that he had brought to you. When Mr. Blum was here, he related to us the story of going to visit the speedboat that had been purchased and how he thought that was inappropriate. He certainly shared with us that he had shared that with you that he thought that this purchase was not appropriate. Do you recall anything regarding a disagreement on that issue?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I recall that Jacob was not supportive of the boat that was purchased, but that was not—I thought you were referring to directions in general. But that was never a reason for his change in his career direction. That was not a major issue, is what I'm saying.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you did have this conversation with him.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think he mentioned it; yes, he did. I acknowledged it. The board was supportive of the decisions that we were engaged in, and the other executive team, and finance. I had one individual who was not supportive, but the board of directors was supportive and it was a board-directed movement.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When you came to decisions, it didn't matter if it was Ornge that received funding from the government or one of the subsidiaries or the foundation or any of the other entities; the decisions were always from the same board.

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. There were different boards. In this particular case, there was—at that time, yes, it would have been the same board because this was early in development and there was only, I believe, in existence at that time Ornge and Ornge Peel, and they were the same boards.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, but the boat, I thought, was purchased by the foundation.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I actually don't recall how that happened anymore. The boat was purchased with an interest-bearing loan by J Smarts, but I don't recall the details anymore, Madame Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But at the beginning, when you started, the board of the foundation, the board of Ornge, the board of Ornge Peel and the management executives that you had decisions with—because, like you said, finance was okay and counsel was okay and the board was okay, but Jacob was not—

Dr. Chris Mazza: They were the same in those companies, yes. There were a limited number of human resources at the time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And they were all the same. When did we start having different teams, and the different teams were for what?

Dr. Chris Mazza: When we started to have aviation, this thing started to become more disparate at that point as we created different organizations for different structural functions—sorry, different operational functions.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Your testimony this morning and this afternoon: When you refer to your board, you always refer to the board of Ornge as in—

Dr. Chris Mazza: In all of these decisions, the board of—any of these other entities were subsidiary, and so the board of Ornge always had to approve. That's what I mean.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you always reported to one board, and that was the board of Ornge, the way we know it, and—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Until much later in the evolution, when they moved me. Yes, at the time, and in answer to your question, I reported to the board of Ornge, and any subsidiaries were reporting up. The board of Ornge required approval. It was required.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. I am still a bit confused, because you seem to be talking about—let's bring it as far forward as we can. We're now in 2011. We have the corporate structure that Mr. Apps has drawn for us; we can all see what it looks like. Did any of those corporate structures have a board?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Which one did?

Dr. Chris Mazza: They all had boards.

M^{me} France Gélinas: They all had boards?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Dr. Chris Mazza: So on the Ornge board—well, there was the Ornge board. All of the other entities had boards. They were made up of different people. You have to understand that some of this was just in evolution, so they weren't entirely comprised at that point. Anything that was functioning or operating had a board.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And were you the CEO, the executive director, for each and every one of those boards? You were? Okay. Were you also on any of those boards?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. I was CEO. But on the Ornge board, no, I never was on the Ornge board as a voting member because it was a charity, so I had no vote. On Ornge Global, I provided information but I was not on the board because it was a general partnership. And on any of the subsidiaries underneath, I had no votes on those either. The only thing that I was on a board of was when the corporate structure created the OGMI management holding company.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you were on the board of that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I was on the board of that. But it was a holding company; it had no operational and/or governance capability.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you recall who Keith Walmsley is?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm sorry?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Keith Walmsley.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I know the name. He worked at Ornge. I only know the name. I confess I don't remember meeting him. I don't really know anything about him other than the fact that I became aware that his work was concerning to Maria and that she had gone through significant mediation processes and continued to have challenges. That forced her to dismiss him.

Then I became aware of him later because a phone call was made to me by Ruth Hawkins that an individual had brought an issue, I thought to the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care—I don't know where it came in—and that she needed to speak to the chairman. I connected her to the chairman. I was never privy to the conversation. Other than the fact that it had been a concern raised by Mr. Walmsley, I was never privy to the content of the concern.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. So at any point even after the fact, do you now know what the concern was that he raised?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I became aware much later that it was regarding salaries and that Mr. Beltzner had a conversation with Ruth Hawkins. Mr. Beltzner and the chair of the compensation committee met with Ruth Hawkins and—I don't remember his name, but he was the director of the internal audit group for health, which is part of the Ministry of Finance. They met privately.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And when was this, roughly? Just roughly the year. I know it's tough to say—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Maybe 2008?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: In 2008? And do you know what happened, what became of that meeting with Ruth Hawkins and Mr. Beltzner and—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Well, now I know that Mr. Beltzner and the chair of comp worked with the ministry.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: They worked together?

Dr. Chris Mazza: To address whatever the issue was and the concern, but I wasn't privy to that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Was there any follow-up that the ministry expressed, any sort of concern that they didn't get the follow-up that they needed?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, absolutely not.

M^{me} France G  linas: I'd like to ask you: Do you remember Mr. Don Guy?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: How did you meet him and how did you come to hire him?

Dr. Chris Mazza: We didn't hire him. I came to meet him through Catherine Rosebrugh, who had come to me after Jacob had moved on. She was hired to work in a combination of legal and regulatory affairs. Again, I do not recall the details of why, but there were a number of challenges that we were trying to communicate and figure out how to communicate. For a very short period of time, Don provided some consulting expertise to Catherine's group. I've only met Don on maybe one or two occasions. It was a brief time.

M^{me} France G  linas: So Catherine already knew of Mr. Guy?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, I believe so.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. Did you know the position that Mr. Guy had within the Liberal Party?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Afterwards I knew.

M^{me} France G  linas: Do you know what it is?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know today. I knew it was that he was previous chief of staff to the Premier.

M^{me} France G  linas: And do you know what services he provided for Ornge and to Catherine's group?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't recall, no. As I said, I think it was—there were a number of projects and trying to find ways to communicate some of the challenges that we were facing at the time, but I don't recall, Madame G  linas.

M^{me} France G  linas: Mr. Guy was prepaid for his services. Would you know if that was standard practice at Ornge, that people would be prepaid?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No; actually, I would suggest that that's counter to what Ornge would normally do. You would provide the services, and you'd be paid afterwards.

M^{me} France G  linas: Would you know if Mr. Guy ever helped Ornge get the ear of the government in one way or another?

Dr. Chris Mazza: You know, it's certainly not my—I never reached out to Mr. Guy. So from my own personal perspective, I would have to answer the question in the negative. I am not aware that—I know that I did not. "Getting the ear": I guess I don't really know what that means. Sometimes in finding the right department or who to talk to in the bureaucracy, people like Mr. Guy, I'm sure, can help. But in terms of getting to an actual elected official, no, I'm not aware of that.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. When was the last time you communicated with Mr. Guy?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Years.

M^{me} France G  linas: Years ago?

Dr. Chris Mazza: On a personal basis?

M^{me} France G  linas: On any basis. When was the last time you talked to him?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, that's what I'm saying: I haven't talked to Mr. Guy in I don't remember—quite some time.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay, no problem.

You explained to us that it was Fasken's who recommended that you start doing business with Mr. Apps regarding your corporate structure.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: Can you explain a little bit more to us as to how Mr. Apps started working for Ornge, with Ornge?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Well, we had a charitable entity, Ornge, and then we had the for-profit entity, Ornge Peel. You know, as we were moving forward, we were very, very aware that we were not to use grant funding in any business development, and yet we were to develop businesses that would generate revenue. So our structures were definitely challenging. We were moving forward to try to attract—we thought we would try to move forward and try to attract institutional investors. Our corporate counsel at the time, who was always our principal corporate counsel then, Cindy, said that Alfred might help us both with structural and trying to understand the institutional investor world. That's how that introduction came about: Cindy brought Alfred in to fulfill that role while she continued to be our primary corporate counsel.

M^{me} France G  linas: All right. About when did you find out that Mr. Apps had been president of the Liberal Party?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I actually don't recall when. I think it was, quite honestly, when I was trying to get hold of him about an issue, and he was always back and forth between Ottawa, and I asked why. That's when I became aware.

M^{me} France G  linas: When was the last time you communicated with Mr. Apps?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not since I left Ornge.

Interjection.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, except I did read his report, which was sent to my counsel. But I have not communicated with Mr. Apps since the beginning of January 2011.

M^{me} France G  linas: You've told me that it was not the practice of Ornge to prepay for services. Any idea why it would have happened in the case of Mr. Guy?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, I don't.

M^{me} France G  linas: No? We don't really know why?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I'm just going to turn your attention to the Meyers Norris Penny audit that was done. The report took some time to come out in its entirety. Did ministry officials come to meet with you or anyone at Ornge to discuss some of the findings of that report and say, "Listen, there are some issues that the auditors have found. Let's work on fixing those"?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Oh, yes. There was a committee that was formed to address the issues. The ministry emergency health services branch and Ornge were working on those issues.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Can you give me perhaps one example that was raised and one way that it was fixed—any example you can think of?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Okay. One of the concerns that they had was that our communications were informal. Although we had regular, almost daily—and that's absolutely accurate—conversations with multiple persons at the branch, we weren't diligent about a formal communications process. That was instituted immediately, actually, in the form of a set of quarterly meetings, with minutes being taken. It initially wasn't attended by senior staff, but eventually was attended by an assistant deputy minister.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's very helpful. Do you know if all or a majority of the recommendations that were made were actually implemented or followed through on?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'd have to answer that I don't know. I haven't seen the report in a long time and I don't remember.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: It looks like the Auditor General, in his report, found some of the same problems that the MNP report found and commented on the ministry's responsibility to obtain certain information. I'm just going to read from his report. The Auditor General said in his report that they should ensure compliance and "the end result will be improved care, improved access to service, increasing effectiveness and efficiency of the delivery of service, and the assurance of greater fiscal and medical accountability." Did the ministry, on a regular basis, obtain even basic operational information about what Ornge was doing on a day-to-day basis, on an operational level, in terms of the aircraft, the rotary wing and fixed-wing, and what was going on?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Lepine dealt with all the reporting aspects of the performance agreement, and those reporting aspects were followed diligently. Everything that is outlined in the performance agreement we reported on. Items outside the performance agreement I'm not aware we would have reported on or were reporting on on a formal basis. We would have, if asked, reported on any number of issues—in terms of flight volumes, I believe the auditor made mention of—or a number of specific operational variables, but I am not aware of being asked for that, ever.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute left.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Mr. Chair, through you to Mr. Singh, please, may I know the page you are reading from, sir?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Oh, it's not a page of anything. It's just some of my own notes.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Oh, I'm sorry. I thought it was the actual report.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: No.

Given the fact that the MNP report indicated certain things that the ministry could have done, the Auditor

General also commented on the ministry's failure to fulfill their obligations under the performance agreement. In your opinion, why do you think the government is arguing that the performance agreement itself is faulty, given the fact that the ministry itself is responsible for not fulfilling their oversight goal?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's fair. I don't know either.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move on to the government. Ms. Sandals.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Mr. Chairman, would this be an appropriate time for a short break, please?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, it would be. We'll take a five-minute recess.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Thank you.

The committee recessed from 1425 to 1438.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll call the committee back to order. It's time for the government's questioning. Who would like to do that?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you, Chair. I did just want to note, before we move on, a couple of things that the Auditor General said—one at his press conference, which was that the performance agreement was weak and it was not adequate and it needed to be significantly strengthened. In the actual report, the auditor says that the performance agreement "does not entitle the ministry to access the books and records of any of the entities that Ornge directly controls," and that's no doubt what has led to the difficulty which the ministry reported in terms of trying to get certain information from Ornge.

In particular, when Mr. Malcolm Bates appeared before us, he spoke about the ministry's attempt to have Ornge disclose your salary, Dr. Mazza. Mr. Bates, as part of that testimony, explained that he had called Tom Lepine to discuss your salary. Not surprisingly, given that, when Mr. Lepine was here, we did ask him about accessing salary and that information. I'd like to read you bits and pieces of the exchange that Mr. Lepine and my colleague Mr. McNeely had around your salary.

"Mr. Phil McNeely: When you heard about Dr. Mazza's salary ... what did you think of the $1.4 million a year?

"Mr. Tom Lepine: I thought it was ridiculous and what I really felt is the same as I think most Ontarians felt, which is betrayed.

"I'm sure we'll get to the discussion later about some of the operational decisions that I had to make. To find out that I was being asked to make those types of decisions, up to and including the potential to have to close bases, in order to stay within budget, and to find out that he had a salary of that and, more particularly, the loans,"—which we referenced earlier—"I felt betrayed and angry."

And then, further in the exchange between Mr. McNeely and Mr. Lepine, they discussed the actual process of Mr. Lepine and others putting together the report for Minister Matthews, finally, on your compensation.

Mr. Lepine said, "He"—referring to you, Dr. Mazza—"walked into my office shortly before he went off and asked what we were doing. I told him what we were doing, and he said, 'Well, Lepine, you know what my salary is.' I said, 'I don't, Chris. We're pulling it all together.' He said, 'Well, it's $500,000,' and I said, 'Well, it's not $500,000, because we've already got documentation here that it's up over a million now and we're trying to include the rest,' and he said,"—that is, you said, Dr. Mazza—"Well, the rest of it goes to my private corporation." I said, 'But it's paid through taxpayers' dollars, Chris. That's your medical stipends and we're including that.'"

So the question is, Dr. Mazza, given this exchange, is it true that you were still telling Tom Lepine not to disclose all of your compensation even when Minister Matthews explicitly asked for it?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Ms. Sandals, in fact the conversation is inaccurate in some degrees. My salary was $500,000. That is an accurate statement, and it is correct. What Mr. Lepine failed to disclose in that set of comments was that my chairman was in charge of that entire process, which was why I was unaware as to what anyone was doing in that office at that time. Nothing I said or did had any bearing on what Mr. Beltzner decided to disclose. I had nothing to do with it. What Mr. Lepine refers to, when he refers to "private corporation"—my confusion was what was being disclosed. Was it salary? Was it stipend? What was it? Again, it didn't really matter what I thought, Ms. Sandals, because my opinion wasn't going to have any bearing on what was done. Mr. Beltzner was in charge of that situation, as he had always been, and I left the room.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So we've already had the discussion about what was bonus and what was performance and what was this and what was that—

Dr. Chris Mazza: The private corporation that I referred to had to do with my medical stipend, my medical corporation. That was my confusion with Mr. Lepine but—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you; because it sounds like you're still trying to park money even though the minister has explicitly asked for your total compensation.

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. No, ma'am. I was trying to understand what he was doing. At the end of the day, whatever I understood didn't matter anyway because Mr. Beltzner was in charge of that circumstance in that situation, and it was his dealing with the minister on this. I had nothing to involve myself in.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you, and I'm going to turn it over to my colleague Mr. Moridi.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Moridi.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you, Dr. Mazza, for appearing before this committee.

Dr. Mazza, it has been said that the idea to create a province-wide air ambulance service was your idea. Is that accurate?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think that I had a vision of a system of transport medicine that would benefit this province and its people, particularly since what was happening in health care was the regionalization of highly technical, very demanding and very expert services. They were being regionalized, and yet there was no means for the people to be accessing those regional centres in an efficient and effective manner. I had a vision that, instead of a fragmented and disparate very dysfunctional system, we should move towards a consolidated single transport system that would be able to connect the various places in the province with the regional centres of excellence that were being designed.

Mr. Reza Moridi: When did you come up with this idea, Dr. Mazza?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I trained in emergency medicine from 1989 through 1994-95. In 1995-96, I began to be increasingly exposed to transport systems and transport medicine. I fell in love with the idea that you could bring the hospital to the patient, that you could improve care and allow systems of health care to evolve that would be able to get better for less through volume principles.

The idea evolved over the years, and I didn't really come to a clear assessment of what it could be, provincially, until well into 2004.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Did you ever talk about your idea to the Minister of Health at that time? Did you talk to the Minister of Health about your idea of creating such an organization?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, I spoke to the Minister of Health at the time, Minister Clement, and I presented the ideas to Minister Clement in 2003, I think—it might have been 2002—early. Those ideas were met favourably. He understood the centre-of-excellence models, he understood how health care was regionalizing, and he understood the rapidly increasing costs that were difficult to contain. He urged me to proceed to delineate a way that this could be done, and I began to move forward, working with the bureaucracy, I think as I indicated earlier.

SARS occurred in Toronto, and I was immediately pulled into an executive group that was trying to deal with SARS. Really, nothing happened after that. An election was called shortly after SARS, and I then met a new minister and began the process again.

Mr. Reza Moridi: At that time, you were working at Sunnybrook hospital, I guess. You were employed by Sunnybrook.

Dr. Chris Mazza: As a doctor, I was not employed. I was self-employed.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You worked at—

Dr. Chris Mazza: I worked there. I was self-employed.

Mr. Reza Moridi: At that time, Fasken Martineau was legal counsel for Sunnybrook hospital. Is that correct?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes. That is how I met them.

Mr. Reza Moridi: During this time, who were your main contacts at Fasken's?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I already had met with—that was, I think, when I first met Cindy Heinz; I also first met Lynne Golding and I first met Guy Giorno. Lynne was counsel to Sunnybrook.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Were you working closely with some well-connected Conservatives at Fasken Martineau, people including Guy Giorno, former chief of staff for Premier Harris and the future chief of staff for Prime Minister Harper? You worked with Kevin McCarthy, who is the current chief of staff to Minister Flaherty?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know that person.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You don't know that person. You worked for Lynne Golding, the wife of then-Minister Tony Clement, the Minister of Health at that time?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes. The only correction I would make, sir, is that I didn't work closely with these people. Specifically, Lynne was Sunnybrook's counsel already, so I was introduced to her through—I don't remember his title, but he was the senior financial officer at Sunnybrook.

Mr. Reza Moridi: From the information, Dr. Mazza, that Fasken's has provided us, you were working with these well-connected Conservatives to lobby officials in the offices of Premier Eves, Minister Clement and the Red Tape Commission. What were you lobbying for?

Dr. Chris Mazza: The term "lobbying" confuses me. It's one that is often used. I'm not sure what that means.

At the time, as I said, I was working for Sunnybrook. I didn't know who to talk to or who we could talk to. Lynne made introductions. First of all, the Sunnybrook CEO and senior staff listened to the concepts, were supportive of the concepts and thought they were good ideas and good for the system and good for Ontario, so they introduced me to their counsel, whom I then proceeded to go through things with. She seemed to think it was a very positive and very good idea as well. The next introduction was to Mr. Giorno.

Most of this was not, by my recollection, to lobby; it was more to tell us how we could have anybody listen to this. The Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care is a $40-odd-billion corporation; it's pretty hard to figure out who to call or who to talk to sometimes.

I don't know when the McGuinty government introduced the anti-lobbying legislation; I believe it was in the second term. But certainly at that time hospitals had, and specifically Sunnybrook had, people in their employ who were designed to try to find their way through government. In our case, that is not what we were trying to do with Mr. Giorno or Ms. Golding. We were trying to understand how we could structurally and from a regulatory perspective present an idea that we felt from a functional and operational perspective was excellent, but how that could fit into the system that is government.

Mr. Reza Moridi: In 2003, Dr. Mazza, did you ever discuss with Mr. Giorno, Mr. McCarthy and Ms. Golding—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Did I ever—

Mr. Reza Moridi: Did you ever discuss with these people—Mr. Giorno, Mr. McCarthy or Ms. Golding—that you were looking to establish a corporation that could generate revenue from outside sources?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know Mr. McCarthy. I don't recall that name. I may know him, but I do not recall the name.

We were discussing the concept of transport medicine as a system perspective. We were discussing how the system had deteriorated to such an extent. We were discussing the antiquated infrastructure. We were discussing the unbelievable operational difficulties that were in the system at the time. We were discussing how the entire health care system was moving towards this regionalization element. We were also discussing, quite frankly, some of the very difficult things that were occurring in health care because of the new—pardon me, it's not a word, but—the municipalization of land ambulance and how movement now was significantly restricted and compromised. So we were talking about a systems design issue. In addition, we were talking about the growth of health care, the growth of cost of health care, and how generating revenue outside of that taxpayer base could be extremely beneficial to eventually sustaining an operation.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Was the government made aware of those discussions you had with these people?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm not sure I understand the question. The government as in the minister? The government as in—

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes, the Ministry of Health or other ministries within the government.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Certainly the emergency health services branch was made aware that we were having conversations with, eventually, Minister Clement and also that we'd been in conversation with Fasken's, and these were things that we were very intrigued with and interested in, yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Was there any policy decision made by government authorities to go ahead with this proposition?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. As I related, we were in process when SARS happened, and everything came to a grinding halt across the Ministry of Health and government in general.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Are you aware that the cabinet was made aware of this conversation or this decision?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. Not aware of that.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you tell to the committee, Dr. Mazza, how closely you worked with Mr. Guy Giorno?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not very closely. In fact, Jacob Blum pretty much worked with Guy Giorno. I had a few meetings with Guy—on the order of less than four. Shortly after SARS, I really had no contact with Guy ever again.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you tell us what was the nature of the work Mr. Giorno did for—

Dr. Chris Mazza: As I said earlier, Mr. Giorno was trying to assist us in how we might structure and build out the concepts that would fit into changing the system from what it was.

Mr. Reza Moridi: What was the nature of the work Mr. Giorno did after the creation of Ornge in terms of operational and other matters?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I'm not aware.

Mr. Reza Moridi: I have one last question with respect to Mr. Giorno. Did you and Mr. Giorno ever discuss AgustaWestland?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not that I recall, at the time.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You didn't discuss—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Not that I recall. At the time I, to be honest, didn't know who AgustaWestland was.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would it be a fair statement to make that Ornge was originally conceived during the Harris-Eves governments?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think it's a fair statement to make that—well, Harris, I believe was gone. Mr. Eves was the Premier, I believe, at the time. I think it is a reasonable statement to say that the concept of a unified transport medicine system with revenue-generating activities was conceived at that time, yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would you say that it was the Harris-Eves government that planted the seed of what is now known to have become Ornge?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I wouldn't disagree with that statement.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you, Dr. Mazza.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer?

Mr. David Zimmer: How much time, Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): About 10 minutes—nine minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you. Did you have any input into the decision to fund Ms. Long's MBA studies at Western to the tune of $90,000?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Chair, if it's appropriate, I'd like to comment on the MBAs in general so it will provide you some context. It's important to understand the process that was involved. The board of directors was very anxious and concerned about succession at Ornge. They were concerned about their dependence on certain key personnel and they were concerned that there was significant difficulty in finding the right folks that would fit the culture and the high performance that was required. I tell you that background because they asked that I have our organizational development team work on a succession plan, and that succession plan had associated with it a number of activities to identify staff that could be groomed for future executive roles.

Amongst them, this plan that came forward from organizational development had, at its heart, what was called the leadership academy. The leadership academy was Ornge's attempt and the board of directors' strong endorsement to identify staff from around the organization—the front lines, all the different departments—that could go to leadership and be exposed to something that they quite possibly had not had. The leadership academy would take place over a year, and staff would actually be separated from their work to go to a location where they would go through a course load. It was something that we were in fact very proud of. That entire program was run by human resources and organizational development.

In the board presentation to put this together, it was defined at that board that we would offer postgraduate education to the top graduates of that program. Those persons would be scored by a scoring system used in schooling, and the top graduates would be offered postgraduate education. The postgraduate education that was chosen would be based on what the organizational development team and the human resources team felt was most appropriate for that particular individual and their skill set.

Ms. Long was nominated by her director, as were many others nominated by their directors. Each department had a certain number of slots, and she filled one of the slots from her department. She had an exemplary performance, as I was aware, at the course, scored very highly, in the top of the class. I don't remember whether it was one, two or three. Accordingly, then, organizational development brought her forward as a candidate for postgraduate training in accordance with the board of directors program. Money had been set aside for this entire succession initiative.

This was something that was not unusual. It was something Ornge was trying to do to build from within and it was something that we had seen being done in the hospital system. I myself was provided with MBA background—I was funded, supported, to get my MBA by Sunnybrook.

So I guess that's a long-winded answer to your question, Mr. Zimmer, but I had no direct input into whether Ms. Long was selected for leadership, nor, obviously, could I have had input into her scoring so highly and so well in her leadership program that led to them offering a—

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you, and just a follow-up question: Earlier in your evidence, you mentioned that you received a medical stipend, I guess, to practise medicine. Were you seeing patients, or what was the medical stipend for?

Dr. Chris Mazza: So this is historical and went through—from when the program started, you had a role in a medical director capacity, so therefore you had obligations as a medical director or then further obligations: exams, evaluation, ride-outs, that sort of thing. Effectively, Mr. Zimmer, as a transport medicine physician, when you are delegating, you are seeing patients in accordance with the College of Physicians and Surgeons, but you're not billing through OHIP.

Mr. David Zimmer: And what sort of figure was that? What dollar value was it?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I actually don't recall, sir.

Mr. David Zimmer: A large amount, a small amount?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I can't recall, sir.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right.

I have some questions about Mr. Blum. Mr. Blum appeared before the committee, and, as a result of his evidence, I understand that the two of you met in 2002 or thereabouts, when you were both at Sunnybrook. I understand that's correct?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, I did not meet him at Sunnybrook. We had moved to—I don't remember the date, sir, but we had moved off-site from Sunnybrook. The air base hospital program had moved off-site because Sunnybrook had no more room and we were renting space somewhere just north of Toronto EMS's location. I can't remember the address. I apologize. And—

Mr. David Zimmer: But you met in a Sunnybrook context?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Pardon me?

Mr. David Zimmer: You met in a Sunnybrook context?

Dr. Chris Mazza: We were the Sunnybrook base hospital but he was brought to me by a headhunter who said, "You should meet this guy. You might be interested in him."

Mr. David Zimmer: And about what year was that, roughly?

Dr. Chris Mazza: It was 2001 or 2002—2001.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right, thank you.

In your earlier evidence you referred to Jacob Blum's departure from Ornge, and I'm quoting you maybe half an hour ago: "after Jacob had moved on." That's what you said. When Mr. Blum was here, and indeed some other witnesses—there are some conflicting stories or interpretation about why he left Ornge in 2007. So Mr. Blum unequivocally told this committee that he resigned. Tom Lepine, however, told the committee that Blum had been fired by the board. When I examined Mr. Blum myself, he equivocated as to whether he was fired or resigned, and then the answer was, "I departed," and it was unclear.

So, in your view, did Mr. Blum resign or—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Blum did not resign.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. Was Mr. Blum fired?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If you can answer in about a minute, that would be great.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Blum was encouraged to move on in his career, and effectively, then, I suppose, he was fired. Yes, sir.

Mr. David Zimmer: I'll stop there, Chair, but I do want to pick this up in the next round.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. In our last round of questioning, you have about 16 minutes each. Mr. Klees, you have the floor.

Mr. Frank Klees: I was not going to pursue this, but I will, given Mr. Zimmer's questioning. Mr. Blum tabled with the committee his severance agreement, which was very rich: one-year continuation of salary, bonuses, $20,000 for education and so on. That's a pretty strong severance package for someone who was fired. What was he fired for?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Mr. Blum had some substantive personal challenges that he was dealing with at the time, and they had been going on for some time. Those personal challenges were affecting his productivity. I had been urged repeatedly by my board chair to take some definitive action on this issue. I was concerned about Mr. Blum's health. I was concerned about his personal challenges. I probably delayed longer than I should have, as his productivity was falling.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Blum disclosed some time ago—in fact, very publicly—that he suffered tremendous stress. That seems to be something that's common to people who work at Ornge. He also admitted very publicly that he developed a dependency on drugs. He himself admitted that there was a point in his life when he was dependent on cocaine. He testifies today that he has struggled with that but, through the support of friends, through the support of Bellwood, he is free and clean and is moving on with his life. Can you tell us if at any time you yourself supported Mr. Blum in his drug dependency?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Oh, my God.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me, just a moment. Can we understand the question? Supported him in what sense?

Mr. Frank Klees: Why don't you let your client answer the question?

Mr. Roger Yachetti: I don't understand the question. I don't—

Mr. Frank Klees: You don't have to. I'm sure your client does, because he was there.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Do you understand the question?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, I don't. Supported him in his drug dependency?

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you issue personal cheques to the pharmacy that was frequented by Mr. Blum, where those cheques were cashed by the pharmacy and where the cash was given to Mr. Blum, which he could use to purchase on-street drugs?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I—

Mr. Frank Klees: Be careful in your response.

Dr. Chris Mazza: —provided support for what I believed were his pharmaceuticals to control his mental illness. If I had ever known that he was using that to use illicit drugs—I provided him with support because he had nobody that would help him, and I believed that he was ill. I believed he had a mental illness. I believed he needed help. I didn't want him to suicide. He would call me frequently, text me, telling me how he was on the verge of suicide. He was seeking mental assistance, he was seeking mental help, and he couldn't afford his medications. He was on Seroquel, he was on a number of medications, and I tried to help. If for any second, ever, I thought that he would use that money for drugs, not only would I have been devastated, but I would have been livid.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why did you refuse his wife's appeal to you and his rabbi's appeal to you to join in a community group to support him and to help him through his drug problem?

Mr. Frank Klees: Including prescribing Percocet to him?

1510

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir—

Mr. Frank Klees: You never prescribed Percocet—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sir, Mr. Blum's private health records: Are they the matter of this committee? Because I saw Mr. Blum once as a patient who had severe back pain.

Mr. Frank Klees: Sir—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Are you asking me as a physician to reveal the confidences of my patient?

Mr. Frank Klees: I have the permission of Mr. Blum—

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't have the permission.

Mr. Frank Klees: He's here. He's willing to give it to you.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I can't accept it.

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let's deal with this. I want to know this: Did you at any time while you were the CEO of Ornge prescribe Percocet to one of your employees named Jacob Blum? Yes or no?

Dr. Chris Mazza: To the best of my recollection, I saw Jacob Blum as a patient for severe back pain, which was incapacitating him, and I provided him with a very limited prescription—no repeats—for Oxycodone, otherwise known as Percocet, and urged him to follow up with his family doctor. I had no knowledge at any time of his dependence on said substance at that time. I had no awareness that this was anything other than an individual coming to me for assistance and help. I believed I was helping him.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you make it a practice to provide prescriptions to employees?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sir, I only prescribed to patients or individuals with whom I had completed an exam, had an appropriate medical diagnosis and felt appropriate about that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was Jacob Blum registered as a patient of yours?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sir, I saw him in that capacity, and that is why, in my testimony here, you heard me not wishing to speak about these issues. I saw him in that particular moment as a patient, and I tried to help him as a patient. Later, when I provided cheques to his pharmacy, I provided it that way because, quite frankly, sir, I believed that was the safest way to make sure that he was not going to use it any other way. I understood it was for drugs that he was prescribed by his physicians.

Mr. Frank Klees: Perhaps you could have been a little more cautious as a physician. As a physician—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sir, to the best of my ability, this was a patient in need. He was a patient in severe pain. He didn't have anywhere else to go at that time. And, as it was typical, I would only prescribe a very limited prescription, perhaps 10 or 12 tablets, and that was standard, to restrict the individual from abusing the situation. I urged the individual to then follow up with their family doctor.

Mr. Frank Klees: You didn't think that was a conflict—you were the employer—for you to prescribe Percocet to an employee who was struggling? There was a lot of—

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sir, I had no idea that the employee was struggling. At the time that I prescribed Percocet, this was a productive employee; this was an employee who was functioning. He had a back problem. As a matter of fact, he came to me with a back problem and asked me to try to find him a surgeon. He asked me to try to find him a doctor that could help him. I actually connected him to doctors at the hospital in order to help him as well, sir.

So I went out of my way to try to help an individual, and that's what I've always done as a doctor: to try to help someone. Did I see it as a conflict? No, I did not, because I was treating him, at that point, as a patient in need. In fact, he went on a leave shortly thereafter to deal with his back surgery and back problems.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. I'd like to move on to the document that was provided to you earlier entitled Investigations Concerning Air Ambulance and Related Services. It starts with page 9—there were some cabinet covers on here. On page 10, at the top of the page, there's a note.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Do we have that document?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, you do. I gave it to you earlier today.

The note reads as follows—keeping in mind that this is a confidential cabinet document and was prepared by the emergency health services branch—I believe that's it, that you have in your hands there.

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes. If you would look at the second page, which is actually numbered page 10. The top note: "Please note that Ornge's chief operating officer indicated that a 'method of counting patients was mandated by the CEO with the intention of demonstrating an increase in activity associated with the transition of air ambulance from the Ministry of Health to Ornge.' The result is that Ornge has transported an annual average of 8.9% fewer patients since 2006-07 than it previously reported (this equates to more than 2,100 fewer patients transported in 2010-11)."

According to this document, the direction that you gave your chief operating officer was to fudge the numbers. Why did you do that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I have no recollection of any statements of that kind whatsoever, nor do I understand why I would ever do that. Any funding that we received had nothing to do with the numbers of patients transported. Moreover, my motivation, focus and interest was on why we couldn't get to all the people. I was desperately trying to ascertain what the number was that we couldn't get to. I needed to try to understand it. There were no numbers that were in existence. Most of what I was trying to do was figure out what that number was. Part of my original study was to try to figure it out. That was not a very complete method. We tried to bring the Hay Group in to try to figure it out. The data was poor and difficult.

We actually were in the process of trying to use surveys and physicians' assessments in the field to try and assess demand that was out there that didn't even make it to our communications centre. Our focus was always to try to assume what the number was.

Mr. Frank Klees: I think the conclusion that everyone reached about that is that you wanted to make things look better than they were. I'd like to go on—

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, that's not the conclusion at all. I believed that at all times the data and the statistics I was receiving were an accurate reflection of what was going on.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, how much time do I have, if you wouldn't mind adding in all of that other time—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have five minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Five minutes.

I'd like to go through a couple of these references in this investigation report, because at the end it really is all about patient care. That's why we're here. We're here because the Auditor General's report gave us serious concern that Ontario patients' needs were not being met.

This document in front of us itemizes some 27 investigations in which Ornge was the primary subject and 10 other investigations that were supplementary to that. There are an additional 45 events that happened subsequent to January 1 of this year. These are incidents that refer to operational issues at Ornge, where paramedics were not able to take a patient on board because of the interiors. You dispute that, but that is what is in these reports. These reports refer to patients not being airlifted because there were not enough pilots. There are other incidents where patients were not able to be airlifted because there were not enough paramedics. There is a policy that had been put in place by Ornge to downstaff to save money.

At the end of the day, this report, I believe, is a condemnation of how business was being done at Ornge. I hear your defence of your vision and I would be the first one to support a restructuring of an organization and modernizing an organization and ensuring that it is efficient. I can tell you that what has happened here and the question that I would ask you is, given the initial vision that you had to restructure this air ambulance service and to make it more efficient, how did we get to the point where that vision became so clouded that we ended up essentially wasting multi-millions of dollars and we ended up frustrating front-line paramedics, front-line pilots?

I'm going to share an email that just came in at 2 o'clock this afternoon on my BlackBerry—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: With the greatest of respect, I'm sorry to interrupt you, sir, but is there a question there that he can answer?

Mr. Frank Klees: I will get to it. I have five minutes left and you're eating into my time. If you'll allow me to do this, I'm glad—I'm absolutely glad—to do that.

Here is the email that just came in at 2 o'clock. As I said, there are people watching. This is from a medic with 20 years' experience: "We still cannot intubate a patient in the new interior. We also cannot do something as basic as sit a patient upright if they are short of breath. Our biggest ongoing issue is trying to load and unload our patients. It takes two to three times longer to do this simple act.

"As well, when the first aircraft came online in Sudbury, he was advised of all the issues with the new interior. He"—referring to Dr. Mazza—"made direct threats to a medic to shut up or face the consequences.

"I'm a medic with 20 years of experience, and I would honestly rather be on the old aircraft.

"Please contact me if you have any questions."

I'm sharing this with the committee and with Dr. Mazza for this reason: because, at the end of the day, what we want to do is restore confidence in our air ambulance service. We want to ensure that we do have the best air ambulance service in this province. But something is wrong with the way this organization has been managed. Something is wrong with the structure, and we need to fix it.

Rather than have the current government continue to try to make something into what it is not, what we need to know from our witnesses—and I'll include you, Dr. Mazza, in this—is, what will it take to restore confidence in our air ambulance service? I'd like your opinion on that.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Is that the question, Mr. Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): That is the question, so I'll let—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: We haven't seen that email. Who wrote it, may I ask?

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me tell you: I can't tell you, and the reason I can't is—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Wait a minute, now. Wait a minute.

Mr. Frank Klees: No, no. I can't tell you because this is an employee of Ornge—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: You're trying to impugn this man—

Mr. Frank Klees: —who is concerned about his job—

Mr. Roger Yachetti: —on the basis of an email that you won't tell us who wrote?

Mr. Frank Klees: That's right. You know why? Because there's no whistle-blower protection at Ornge, which was recommended by the very report that was referred to by Dr. Mazza.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, let's—

Mr. Frank Klees: That's why.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): There was a question there. Do you want to respond, Dr. Mazza? Otherwise, we shall move on to the NDP.

Dr. Chris Mazza: To be honest, Mr. Klees, there is so much that you have said, I'm not sure how to respond. Some of the things that have come out in your discussion have been very wounding for me personally. I'm sure that's not your intent.

I believed, and I still believe, in what we were doing. I thought that the interiors were designed with tremendous input from paramedics. I asked the union to bring forward the two paramedics. I asked the doctors to bring forward a doctor. I had no input myself, sir, into the design. I was not involved at all, nor did I demand that I change anything. When the design came back, I brought it to the board of directors and got it approved.

I already indicated I was not aware of the design challenges, particularly regarding airway and CPR. I became aware, actually, through front-line staff informing me. This was late, and it was after the London introduction. I knew there were some vibration challenges. I was told by the aviation department that that was being dealt with. Any and all issues that came forward, I was told they were either educational issues and/or minor issues that could be dealt with and improved.

When I became aware that there were more significant concerns, I immediately asked my chief operating officer to focus his utmost attention on this issue, which I believe he did.

I would counter the individual who is writing you that email. The system is never perfect, and, Mr. Klees, I'm sure you'd tell me it's far from that now. But that is certainly what I was working towards, to try to improve it. I have done the best I can.

The only other thing I would say is that an organization that I worked with for some time in the west actually took four years before they could even get their helicopters in operation, due to interior challenges. It is not an easy solution.

I thought that we had done a very good job. I thought that my operational people had informed me that they had ways to deal with the shortcomings. I thought that the future looked brighter because the shortcomings had been identified and we were going forward. I believed that the issue of continually taking feedback and trying to improve on something was what I was dedicated to do. It's what I believed in, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move on to the NDP.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Mr. Chair, may I say something? First of all, I want to apologize to you and to Mr. Klees for my outburst. But in a court of law, that kind of cross-examination is not permissible. You cannot cross-examine a witness on a document you will not identify. With the greatest of respect, if that line of questioning is going to form any part of this committee's decision, I insist on receiving a copy of it on behalf of Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Frank Klees: Sure.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for your comment. We'll move on to the NDP. Go ahead, Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I have a couple of loose ends, as I think this will be our last rotation. You're okay, Dr. Mazza?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You're good? Okay.

You've mentioned that after the audit was done, you formalized quarterly meetings.

Do you want a minute?

Dr. Chris Mazza: It's okay, ma'am. Go ahead.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You formalized your meetings and you started meeting more formally on a quarterly basis.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you remember if minutes were kept of those meetings?

Dr. Chris Mazza: It's my recollection that minutes were kept of those meetings.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. I will ask the clerk to make sure that we get a copy, please, of those minutes.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I was not present at those meetings.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You were not present?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Who would attend?

Dr. Chris Mazza: My chief operating officer, Mr. Lepine; I believe Ms. Renzella; I think that often Mr. Farquhar; I'm not sure of others. Sometimes it depended on what the various issues were.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay; no problem.

If we follow your budget from the time the air ambulance got divested and started, and through Ornge and all this, you were quite successful at being able to increase your budget a little bit year to year. In one particular instance, you were successful in getting a $2.5-million increase to your annual budget based on the needs for salaries. Was the negotiation of your budget and your yearly agreement—was this something that you negotiated yourself, or—

Dr. Chris Mazza: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No. The ministry has a fairly rigid process involved in that that involves a rolling five-year plan. Budgets would be built by finance beginning pretty much in the fall leading up to presentations to the ministry.

In the beginning, the budgets were always brought forward, but there was a consumer pricing index-based increase or an escalator that was in the original performance agreement. Thereafter, it became a year-by-year.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you have any dealings yourself with the ministry trying to get resources for Ornge?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Of course, when budgets were looking even worse and were difficult, then it would always—not with the emergency health services branch. In one particular occasion—and I only really remember the one—trying to convince the ministry that the HST was a substantive impact on us because of our aviation exposure and was there a way for us to deal with that since it was sort of a, "Here's the funding envelope but we're going to take it back with the other hand." That's the extent of it.

I suppose the only other time I was involved was with the critical care land transport system, but that wasn't about funding; that was just about a system.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And did the ministry refuse to co-operate with Ornge, or what happened?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Regarding what, ma'am?

M^{me} France Gélinas: That particular example.

Dr. Chris Mazza: The HST?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Well, sure. With the HST, how did that settle?

Dr. Chris Mazza: It didn't.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You had to pay, just like everybody else?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Yes, there was no—yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you remember, in your relationship with the ministry, either asking for permission or asking for resources? How did that go in general?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think the emergency health services branch always worked to its best ability, in my opinion, to try to get us what we needed, but the reality was, there really weren't any resources. Resources were extremely constrained, so usually that didn't meet with any success, or not much.

M^{me} France Gélinas: If we look at it the other way around, if the emergency health services branch came to Ornge to gain access to program services data, would they have had difficulty getting this?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, not that I'm aware of. We would have provided whatever they asked for.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did they ever come to you requesting information, or was it always to Mr. Lepine or Ms. Renzella?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, I don't recall them coming to me. I think in the very beginning, Malcolm and others would work through me, but I would inevitably be directing them to the executives, so that just became how that went on. They didn't come to me.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When you started putting forward—we'll talk about Ornge Peel as the first for-profit that was set up. Did the government ever follow this process? Did they ever ask for a golden chair or anything like this as you developed the for-profit?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would they have had an opportunity to ask?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Sure; they had an opportunity to ask whatever they wanted.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But they never came forward?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I realize you're guessing, but how do you figure it would have been received if the government wanted a seat on the board of your for-profit company?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know that I have an answer to that. It's hypothetical. I'm not sure how my board would respond.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No? It was never discussed?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, it was never brought up as an issue that anybody was interested in, so that's why I don't really have an opinion on it. For me to form an opinion here, right now, I think is not appropriate.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Fair enough.

It's hard for me to understand. You're the CEO of Ornge. Your main funder is the Ministry of Health. You decide to go with what I will call this "blast" briefing in January 2011, and yet yourself, as the CEO, don't attend. You send counsel; you send the board chair. I would absolutely see the board chair there. How come the CEO did not attend?

Dr. Chris Mazza: The only answer I have is it was determined by the chairman that he wanted to lead the interaction, and Mr. Lepine was there for operational support and counsel. I don't know.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Does it sound like your board was taking away some of your power? As a CEO, you should be the one representing your agency, especially to your main funder.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Well, I suppose, ma'am, this is something that I've been painted with, as if I wanted power. That's actually not who I am. I was never concerned about my board taking—the board, the chairman; I just refer to it as "my" as you were saying that. You were saying that the board was very close to me on everything. I would bounce ideas off the chairman consistently and constantly, and others.

Another good example of not being concerned about my—you used the word—"power" being eroded was that the chairman of the finance committee interacted directly and often with the CFO. I was not present at that either, frequently. It wasn't a concern for me, either.

I understand your point, but I did not feel eroded and I did not feel challenged. I felt that the chairman had the best interests of Ornge at heart, and so did I. I felt that Mr. Lepine also had the best interests of Ornge at heart.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Then why would you send a lawyer to talk to the government?

Dr. Chris Mazza: This was purely educational. It was to explain the structure, to explain the issues—I learned a long time ago that probably the brightest physicist on the planet can explain what a black hole is to my 13-year-old. I can't. Sending counsel in: Since they knew the situation so well—the structure, the issues, questions that might come up—they would be the best ones to explain it in a very in-depth manner. It was in an effort to provide as much and as much appropriate information as could possibly be provided.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It didn't worry you that here you were, the CEO of what was becoming a more and more complex organization—certainly, the corporate structure is very complex. I still don't fully understand some of it, and I've been dealing with this file for it seems like a very long time. Here you are, the CEO of this organization that has this complex corporate structure, and there are people who understand the structure better than the CEO.

Dr. Chris Mazza: There are people in the organization who understood a lot of things better than the CEO. It was the nexus of medicine and aviation, and I understood medicine very well and I had a reasonable background in understanding business, but I would never put myself as an expert in strategic finance. I didn't understand accounting as well as the accountants did. I certainly didn't understand law or legal issues as well as the lawyers did. Importantly, I didn't understand operational aviation specifics the way that the aviators did. So I relied on a team of experts, and I saw my job principally as trying to lead that team, inspire that team, encourage that team and move us towards the goal that we saw, which was improving the system and improving the benefit to Ontario.

M^{me} France G  linas: Had things turned out differently, do you figure you would have drawn the line at some point and said, "This is too complex for nothing. What we want to do is provide good medical transport, try to generate some profit, and what we've got going here is way too complex for nothing"? If a reasonable person spending quite a bit of time cannot understand what's going on, why is it so complex?

Dr. Chris Mazza: So the question is?

M^{me} France G  linas: Would you have drawn the line at some point or would you have continued?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think my vision was and the ideas that the board believed in were that we would be successful in generating revenue globally, bringing that back and improving the systems and services in Ontario. That was what we believed. If that was not panning out, we wouldn't have continued down that path.

It's kind of a roundabout way of answering you.

M^{me} France G  linas: Good enough. Jagmeet.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you. In retrospect now—hindsight's 20/20—looking back, in Ornge, what are some of the key things you recognize now that could have been fixed or could have been improved?

Dr. Chris Mazza: With Ornge or with—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: With all of it, yes.

1540

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think, in hindsight, I would be much more focused on ensuring that I had a written set of statements, that there were no concerns, no questions and no issues. What I mean by that is that in briefings etc. I would probably demand in my future that I see somebody signing off on that and saying, "I agree that I understand," and not just depend on words. I think that's probably number one.

I think number two is that I'm aware that some of the executives felt that we moved too fast. I can only say that if any of them had told me that they couldn't cope or that they were unable to perform their duties to the best of their ability then I would have tried to find a way to slow down, but nobody told me that. I was driven by a focus on people who weren't getting the service that they needed because we didn't have a system that could meet all of their needs. I was driven by the numbers of what we had seen in the gap and what we believed was a gap in service. I was very focused on that. If I had to say, I wish that I could have seen more clearly, perhaps, that even though they weren't telling me that they were overwhelmed, that they perhaps were—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Who do you mean by "they"?

Dr. Chris Mazza: The executives.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

Dr. Chris Mazza: Even if they weren't telling me—because they never told me that they couldn't do more or that we were moving too fast—I wish I could have seen it. I wish I could have perceived that and slowed things down. I regret that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll now move to the government for your last 16 minutes. Go ahead, Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you, Chair. Very briefly, I just want to finish up on a question about Mr. Blum. I listened to your testimony. You talked about—that you genuinely wanted to help and were trying to help Mr. Blum with his issues that he was dealing with. Then, eventually the relationship deteriorated, because you did earlier, in answer to my questions, say that eventually Mr. Blum was fired. What caused your attitude to change from one of "I want to help you, Mr. Blum," to "I'm sorry, we've got to fire you"?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, the timing is wrong. None of us really understood the depth of the problem. We didn't understand that the issue was as grave. We understood that there were a lot of personal challenges—a lot—but we didn't understand the substance issue at all at the time. There was some productivity challenges. We thought that we could work, in a mediated process, to try to change workload, to alter workload and to move forward, and we did all those things but it wasn't helping. HR tried a number of ways of encouraging or helping. As I said, I was under a fair bit of pressure from the executives, who were increasingly frustrated, and the board. So, we then moved to Mr. Blum's moving on.

The issue around me wanting to continue to help is: I did. I tried to stay in touch. I tried to stay supportive to the best of my ability, and that included trying to help, as Mr. Klees described, pay for what I thought were legitimate pharmaceuticals at a pharmacy. I even had the cheque brought to the pharmacy and given to the pharmacist so that it was appropriately utilized.

Mr. David Zimmer: What motivated you to continue with your efforts to try and help?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Because I care about people, and I was sad that—I said that we didn't know the issues were as deep as they were, but it became clear in his departure that those issues were extremely deep. They concerned me greatly, and I saw another human being in trouble. My tendency is and has always been to try to reach out, to try to help.

Mr. David Zimmer: Mr. Blum gave some evidence here before the committee recently. In his opening remarks, he complimented you. He said, "Dr. Mazza had the necessary personality to drive the breakthrough of inertia that the air ambulance"—the old air ambulance system—"program found itself in at that time." That was his position a few weeks ago here.

Yet Mr. Blum's position in a story that appeared February 7, 2012, in the Toronto Star—reporter Kevin Donovan quotes Mr. Blum as saying this about you, sort of the extreme opposite: that he saw you use "public money ... for private gain" and called you a "monster."

Can you offer any insight into what was going on in Mr. Blum's mind here?

Dr. Chris Mazza: No, sir. I was deeply hurt by what was written. I was deeply injured and surprised. I was not aware. I thought I had helped him. I thought I had done the best I could to help him when even my human resources vice-president told me to stop trying to help.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you. My last question is, looking back on this whole exercise, there are probably lots of things that you would do differently, but what do you think is the single most important or significant thing that you would do differently if you could wind the clock back?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I think that I would be more aware of the difficulties of institutional history within government and, as I said to Mr. Singh, I would ensure that individuals gave more than their verbal and tacit approval or their lack of concern.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Thank you, Dr. Mazza, for being here today.

I was a senior officer in my own company for about 35 years, so I've had some business perspective. I'm trying to think of what has happened here with that background. I had a legal firm that I consulted with and my board consulted with very often. I had a chief financial officer who was a chartered accountant, as I believe Ornge's was as well. We made major decisions with the input of partners. I started as a sole practitioner, but I did have approximately 20 shareholders at the height, over 100 people, and we were quite successful over many years.

But I followed the rules and decisions that were taken with the advice of the shareholders, with the advice of the CFO and with the advice of the lawyers. In my case it was 18 or 20 shareholders. In your case it was really 13 million Ontarians.

So you, with the help of your lawyers and the CFO and the board, I believe made decisions which were not fair to the people of Ontario who gave you their trust. You used property that was rented by Ornge to realize a profit that really went into a private company. You accepted payment from Agusta around the purchase of the helicopters. Those dollars ended up being in a private company.

I see that before the private company made profits, you were bonusing out your board. However it happened, you were the CEO. You were bonusing out significant dollars and taking a major salary, a salary which has been described here I think by many witnesses as completely out of a realistic approach to salaries.

I'm just wondering, and I also wondered during this process: What were the corporate lawyers of Ornge doing? What was the CFO for Ornge doing? Where were you when the people of this province were not being represented by Ornge corporate lawyers, accountants and board members? That leadership should have come from you. Instead we find that significant—an over $1-million salary; over approximately $1 million in loans. These are huge dollars. Where were you when these decisions were made and where did you think the 13 million Ontarians—who was protecting them?

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Mr. Chairman, I would instruct Dr. Mazza to not answer that question. It is unintelligible, with the greatest of respect.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Well, it seems to be the direction it's gone. If you don't wish to answer that, that's fine. I'll proceed with another question.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: No, don't give up so easily.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If Dr. Mazza needs clarification, counsel—if you please, ask for clarification, Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: There are about 10 questions in what Mr. McNeely said. I don't know which one he wants him to answer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please let Dr. Mazza respond.

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't know which question you want me to answer, sir.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Where was the CEO, yourself, when the taxpayers of Ontario were being not considered in the process?

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Excuse me for a moment. Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. One of the things you said, one of the premises you said in your lengthy dissertation was that his salary was over $1 million. He has already testified under oath that his salary was $500,000. It's an incorrect premise, and there are a number of incorrect premises in the question.

I'm not trying to obfuscate here. I want this member to have his questions answered, but could he put them serially?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We're just about done the day, so we'll give Mr. McNeely a chance to get the questions a little more specific, then, please.

Mr. Phil McNeely: I do not believe that the people of Ontario were well represented by professionals in the corporation, by the board, and by the CEO, Dr. Mazza. Can you respond to that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I poured my heart and soul and everything I had into building Ornge to be responsive and something good for the people of Ontario. It was my primary motivation. It continues to be. I understand you disagree with me on that, sir, but I did everything I knew to try to improve the system and to deliver better care and to do a better job and to save lives. I had tremendous motivation to do so.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Normally in private corporations, at least certainly my experience over 35 years, was that when you make profits you then can take them out. It appears that the profits were being taken out before there was any money other than taxpayers' money in this process. Can you respond to that?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I don't understand the question. I understand that the board of directors gave me a mandate, gave me a set of obligations, goals, deliverables. They set a salary; they paid that salary. There were any number of business initiatives that were going on and we were on the verge of moving forward with, so I don't know how to answer your question, sir. I've spoken to salary before. My salary was defined with third party compensation advisers. It was defined looking at data in an exhaustive approach. It was determined by the board of directors. I had no input into that. I accepted it.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes left, Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: I'll just take one, then. We know that you were the CEO of Ornge and that you were a board member and shareholder for some of the for-profit entities. Would you agree that you had an obligation to act in the best interests of each company for which you were either a member of the management or a board member?

Dr. Chris Mazza: I am confused by the number of questions that just came out there. Again, I apologize. I'm exhausted.

I was not on the boards as a voting member other than one, OGMI. I did not have shares in anything other than OGMI, and that was a holding company. That was a determination that was also made by the board of directors with counsel and third party compensation advisers.

I'm not sure if I answered your question or not, sir.

Mr. Phil McNeely: I think I will leave it at that. I just end up with that when you're on for-profit and not-for-profit and you're wearing those different hats, that's a problem. But I will go now to—Ms. Sandals would like to have the last two minutes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. Let me take a crack at this the other way around. You've testified many times over the course of the day that your primary motivator, your primary focus, was on serving the people of Ontario. I'm wondering, with everything that's happened, with everything that's come to light through the Auditor General's report, through the media, through the committee's hearings, with the benefit of hindsight, do you think you owe an apology to the people of Ontario?

Dr. Chris Mazza: Well, ma'am, I did the best that I could for the people of Ontario. I worked my absolute best. I poured my heart and soul into what I was doing. I did the best I could, and that was all I think anybody could ask.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. We're done.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much, and we're done this afternoon's proceedings. If the committee is interested in having you back at a future time, the clerk will contact you about that.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Mr. Chairman, may I make a statement, please?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You may make a brief statement if you wish, yes.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Much has been made of the Auditor General's report, and he's here with us. I don't mean to embarrass him, but I urge you to read the report of Alfred Apps in which he deals with the shoddiness, I'll call it—I don't know that he used that word—of the Auditor General's report. If the Auditor General's report is going to be used to somehow impugn Dr. Mazza, I ask that Mr. Apps's report be studied. It's 88 pages long—

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, that's fine. I'm not going to allow you to attack the Auditor General. Mr. Apps's report has been delivered to us and all committee members will have an opportunity to read Mr. Apps's report. I appreciate you making the comment.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: Just one other thing I want to say—

Mr. Frank Klees: We're talking about perjury first.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: There was a reference made by Mr. Klees to a note on page 10 of this document here, Investigations Concerning Air Ambulance and so on. It reads as follows: "Please note that Ornge's chief operating officer," not Dr. Mazza, "indicated that a 'method of counting patients was mandated by the CEO with the intention of demonstrating an increase in activity associated with the transition of air ambulance from the Ministry of Health to Ornge.' The result is that Ornge has transported an annual average of 8.9% fewer patients since 2006-07 than it previously reported." I won't read the rest of it, but somehow this was interpreted by Mr. Klees as a suggestion that Dr. Mazza asked someone to fudge the numbers.

Mr. Frank Klees: He did.

Mr. Roger Yachetti: There's no such thing in here, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: There sure is. Read the rest of—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We're not going to go through the testimony place by—

Interjections.

Dr. Chris Mazza: May I just speak?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes. Go ahead, Dr. Mazza.

Dr. Chris Mazza: The data inherent in this industry is difficult and challenging and the points of capture are difficult and challenging. I never knowingly, wilfully or otherwise asked anyone to change data for some kind of benefit. I have spent a career trying to figure out what the correct data is and how to capture it.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. If the committee is interested in having you back, you will hear from the clerk. Thank you very much for coming before the committee. It was a long day.

The committee is adjourned.

The committee adjourned at 1601.

*The committee met at 0901 in room 151.*SPECIAL REPORT, AUDITOR GENERAL:
ORNGE AIR AMBULANCE
AND RELATED SERVICES

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'd like to call this committee to order and just point out, to begin with, that there is some information for the members in front of you. There is some research information from our research officer, Ray McLellan. Also—there's one for each caucus—there's the seventh volume of information requested from Fasken Martineau.

ORNGE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): This morning, our first witness is Brandon Doneff, critical care flight paramedic. Brandon, if you could please come forward to confirm that you've received the information about a witness coming before the committee.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. I understand we have an affirmation for you, which our clerk will do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Mr. Doneff, do you solemnly affirm that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I understand you have a brief opening statement you'd like to make. Grab a chair there and make yourself comfortable.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Thank you.

Distinguished members of the committee on public accounts, my name is Brandon R. Doneff, and I am deeply honoured to have been invited to speak in front of you today. I greatly appreciate your time and consideration in the matters that have surfaced at Ornge. I am certain your task is not easy, nor is it one to be desired.

With the documents that I have provided you, you will notice that I have been training and working in the health care field since graduating high school. I can honestly say that there has never been a day that I awoke and dreaded the thought of going to work on the helicopter. I truly believe that I have found my dream career.

Having said that, there has been the odd call or two when I wished I was at home in the pool or anywhere else, for that matter—like the time when a patient's colostomy bag exploded in the back of an enclosed helicopter. That was definitely one of those times. However, even after enduring all those sleepless nights, the missed dance recitals, hockey games, unruly patients, horrific scenes, freezing cold and blistering heat, I still am very happy and proud to be a critical care flight paramedic.

So, without further delay, please feel free to ask me any questions or any concerns that you deem necessary in order to find clarification into the matters surrounding my employer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the official opposition first for their questioning. We'll have 20 minutes for each caucus, and then we'll see how much time is left over. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you for being here. You expressed your appreciation for being invited here today. Can you tell us who invited you to attend here?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Mr. William Short.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you know where that nomination came from?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I do not. I actually asked my managers and such, and they had no idea where it came from. Nonetheless, it's an invitation and I took it.

Mr. Frank Klees: We appreciate you being here.

We've heard a great deal over the last number of months about the challenges that front-line paramedics and pilots are having in terms of carrying out their awesome responsibility, and to this point, what we have heard is that, whether it's a paramedic or whether it's pilots, they have been extremely frustrating experiences for them. There's a litany of records that have been presented to us of a basis that "We're not able to respond to calls because of understaffing, because either there were not enough paramedics available or there were not pilots available." I'd like to just hear from you—you have been employed with Ornge now since when?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Since day one.

Mr. Frank Klees: Since day one.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I worked for Canadian Helicopters—if you refer to the resumé—who was the initial employer, and even prior to that, National Helicopters, which is a private agency that also flew out of London, Ontario.

Mr. Frank Klees: Have you ever been on call when a circumstance arose that you were not able to respond because of a downstaffing, because you didn't have another paramedic with you to fulfill the full complement required? Or were you ever at any base at any time when perhaps the paramedics were ready to go but the pilots weren't available? Can you tell us something about that experience, please?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Of course I can. On my professional experiences, I have never been unable to respond to a call. We do have occurrences where there has been a single medic. We always have to have two pilots in order to fly the machine. I have never been on the job where there has only been one pilot. In the past, if we were short one pilot, the managers would do their best job in order to attain another pilot, and that might be flying them in from Ottawa or even from the north. That's out of my jurisdiction; I have no understanding of how that goes down.

As a paramedic, I have been on calls as a single paramedic due to short-term sick leave, where a medic has actually booked off sick during a call or the night before. Sometimes, you are correct in saying that there's no one else to work, either be their time off—and it is their time off. We are not forced to work extra and above duty hours. If we do, we are paid appropriately. But to my best knowledge, they have always done the best of their job to accommodate that.

Mr. Frank Klees: You are very familiar with the Ambulance Act and the regulations that set out the standards for staffing?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you tell us what the regulations or legislation say about the number of paramedics that must be staffing a particular ambulance, be that ground or be that air ambulance?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Without verbatim, it is two.

Mr. Frank Klees: It is two.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I believe so, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you've found yourself in circumstances where you knew that, essentially, you were breaking the law by attending as a single paramedic. Is that correct?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why would you place yourself into that circumstance?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Because both professionally and personally, I believe that with my amount of training, when with doctor's orders, that I can work up to—I've been told this—a primary care level. Even though I am a certified critical care flight paramedic, if I am single-staffed, I work up to a primary care paramedic.

Mr. Frank Klees: But you know that the legislation requires two paramedics to be on that call, and you have attended as a single paramedic, notwithstanding what the legislation states.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I have never been the type of person to come out and say I am unwilling to help another person because it is, for lack of better words, against the law. If I can help, I will help. I have never been told by my managers not to go on the call. They have never come out and said, "You are a single medic today. You will not be allowed on that helicopter until a second medic is there with you." It's within my personality to do the best that I can with the tools that I have.

Mr. Frank Klees: So your managers knew that they were asking you, or allowing you, to do something that was clearly against the legislation, very clearly proscribed.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: How did you feel about that?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Well, as I stated earlier, there has never been a time that I dreaded going in to work. If I am single-staffed, that has nothing to do with my doing. That is above my pay scale, and I really can't do much about that. I show up for work, for my 12-hour shift, and if it goes on beyond 12 hours, I do my job.

Mr. Frank Klees: You've heard your colleagues come forward, fellow paramedics who expressed serious concern about the environment within which they were being asked to conduct their professional service, to the point where we have incident reports, that you're obviously aware of as well, where on numerous occasions a call was not able to be completed because of that issue, because of a single paramedic, or because of the medical interior of the helicopter—and we'll deal with that in a separate line of questioning.

I understand your commitment to wanting to do the right thing and, obviously, save lives. That's why you're doing what you're doing.

I'd like your opinion in terms of the liability that the management at Ornge placed you and your fellow paramedics into by allowing or encouraging paramedics to go on a single-paramedic call.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Unfortunately, the onus does come down to a paramedic. As you're well aware, there are letters that have been brought forth to management—and when we do not get the appropriate response, we've gone up; when we do not receive the appropriate response, we've gone out. Hence we're here, and hence your questioning.

At the London base, we have had, I believe, over nine or 10 managers for paramedics. The unfortunate part with that is, as you're well aware, it's very difficult to understand the roles and responsibility of a manager if you've only before there for a month and then you have to learn from the beginning, again and again and again. Sometimes, I truly don't believe that they understand what is going on at the real core.

With regard to the onus being on the paramedic and the roles and responsibility as a paramedic, they were well aware, I believe—

Mr. Frank Klees: You made an interesting comment about the management and the constant turnover of management. An organization that's entrusted with delivering an essential emergency service—one would think that foremost would be a focus on ensuring that the people who are managers are well qualified for that job. You've just told us that that was not the case.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I did not say they were not qualified. I wasn't on the HR committee, in the hiring. However, I believe it takes a certain amount of time for them to understand the true essence behind what our actual duties are, and with that, you're very well aware of some of the frustrations from the front-line staff.

Mr. Frank Klees: On August 18 of last year, you were part of a meeting that took place that was headed by Tom Lepine, Rhoda Beecher and Hallie McClelland. Do you recall that meeting?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: In London?

Mr. Frank Klees: In London.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I do.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was the nature of that meeting? What was the agenda at that meeting?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Basically, some of the agendas were with regard to money at Ornge, with regard to staffing at Ornge. Actually, there was even a comment made because of the lack of money at Ornge and that there was a possibility—that if the paramedics continued to utilize their sick time and utilize their vacation time, there may be the possibility of a base closing. I remember quite clearly the individual stating, "Which base shall we close first? I don't want to close bases, but which one shall I close first?"

Mr. Frank Klees: This was in August of last year.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: And you, as staff, were being told that Ornge was actually contemplating closing bases.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: And they said, specifically, the reason for that was that the Ministry of Health had advised them that there would be no more money for them. Is that correct?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I don't remember them stating "Ministry of Health," but I do remember them stating that there was no more money.

Mr. Frank Klees: At that meeting, do you recall any discussions about the for-profit activities that Ornge was engaging in, in terms of generating additional private funds?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: There was a lot of talk about going outside of Ontario. That's what got a lot of us front-line staff very nervous and also, on the flip side, from my personal and professional opinion, very excited, because that meant more staff, that meant a broader range of our care, that we could go outside of Ontario and do more things with our job and career.

Having said that, if I was told that Ontario is giving money to keep in Ontario, and yet Ornge is going outside of Ontario to get money—we all raised an eyebrow with that. When we questioned that, they basically said that what they were trying to do was create a business, Ornge in a box. When we spoke about that, we asked, "What does that mean?" They said they wanted Ornge to become a household name—like Tide, like Nike, whatever—around the world. So the intent was good. We had no idea where the money was going or where it was coming from. There was a foundation that you are all well aware of. I know they were going out on their own accord and attempting to get money from persons, but we weren't privy to all that information.

Mr. Frank Klees: So on the one hand you were being told—these are front-line paramedics—"Look, we don't have any more money. The ministry has told us there is no more money. We may have to close some bases; it's just a matter of determining which one." Yet, at the same meeting, they're telling you that they've got this elaborate plan to go outside of Ontario when they can't even look after the core business of ensuring that paramedics and pilots and the resources within Ontario are in place to do the job that you're mandated to do. Is that right?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Consternation?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I believe I stated that the foundation seems to be cracked.

Mr. Frank Klees: I have copies of the minutes of that meeting in front of me here. Mr. Chair, I have copies for members of the committee as well, if we could have that distributed. And sir, we'll give you a copy so that you can refer to it.

On page 8 of 9 of these minutes, there's a very interesting reference here. This is coming from Mr. Lepine, who I understand was leading the discussion:

"I, along with the chairman of the board, provided details of Ornge Global to the deputy ministers of finance, health, and infrastructure, all of whom supported the initiatives.

"Performance agreement negotiations included revenue generation outside of Ontario for benefit of Ontarians."

So we have Mr. Lepine reassuring front-line staff of Ornge that while they may be closing a base or two here in Ontario, they fully briefed the Ministry of Health—and finance, and infrastructure—of their plans to expand beyond Ontario, and they're fully supportive. Do you recall that discussion?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I do recall that. As front-line staff, we didn't know how to respond to that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you feel betrayed?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: We felt something was afoot, and, yes, most definitely betrayed.

Mr. Frank Klees: And yet, during the same time, you must have been aware, because you're perceived as a leader—you have, I think, some of the longest-term experience of any of the paramedics on the front lines. Am I correct in that?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you would have been fully aware of all of these incident reports that we, now, are privy to because of a confidential document; that is, a briefing to the Minister of Health on a regular basis where patients died; and patients died, perhaps not directly because of a paramedic not being able to take them into a helicopter, but what we don't know is, if, in fact, that patient could have been taken to the hospital by air and had treatment sooner, whether that patient may well have lived. Isn't that correct?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes left.

Mr. Frank Klees: I want to thank you for helping us with this because at the end of the day our objective, I think, is very similar to yours: We want to ensure that our air ambulance service is competent, is properly resourced, and that every dollar of tax-funded health care dollars goes to the front line so that you can do your job.

Here we had an organization that was essentially saying, "We're actually willing to cut back on the service that we're providing here because we have this vision of going internationally with our little 'Ornge in a box'"—as you put it—"and we're willing to compromise patient care in Ontario." We want to get beyond that, and we want to restore and ensure that we do it the right way. We want to ensure that we can restore confidence in our air ambulance service, and we're going to do it through people like yourself who are dedicated to the front line. But we need straightforward, honest answers from you so that we can go about making the recommendations that need to be made to get it right. Thank you.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Thank you.

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, through you to Mr. Klees: I got the minutes. Thank you very much. They start at page—well; there's an introductory page, and then it starts on page 3 of 9. Do we have the other two pages, just to make it complete?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If Mr. Klees has it, you should have it; otherwise, we'll move on to the NDP for their questioning.

Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'd like to thank you for coming to Queen's Park. It can be a little bit intimidating at first, but you're doing very well this morning.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Thank you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You have talked about some of the problems that you have shared with Mr. Klees about your work. You want to do good for people, and when it is within your purview to make decisions, you make the right decisions: to go and help people in need, which is the career that you choose to do, and you seem quite happy with it.

During the time when you did have to make decisions that went against the law, did you ever try to tell someone that, "Hey, guys. I'm alone here. There needs to be two of us"? And who did you have those conversations with?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: So, yes, on multiple occasions, myself personally and other front-line staff did voice their concerns—and once again, first and foremost, we have to speak to our managers. Some of the responses from our management were, "There just are no staff." Once again, with regard to last year in August with these meetings, they were basically saying, "We have no more money to fill the seat with other paramedics." We found that extremely disappointing, and we found that it was a sacrifice for our patients and for ourselves, because you cannot lift a patient—I mean, I'm a healthy guy; I could probably lift all of you, but, by myself, it's very dangerous at times, and we get into some very unorthodox situations.

When we found out what management was saying to us, and even with Mr. Tom Lepine, when they spoke—as you're well aware, we have a union. It was brought forth to them as well and we said, "There are some times when it is unsafe for us to practice like that." There have been times when we spoke to the physicians, and the physicians did what they could as well. It felt like you were just meeting a brick wall at times. Basically, the response was, "There was no more money; we cannot fill that seat."

Now, I found it very unusual and very unorthodox, once our CEO was removed, that things changed—they changed dramatically. All of a sudden, we had another paramedic in that seat. All of a sudden, there was up-staffing with regard to vacation time and sick time and such. Some of the troubles just seemed to disappear.

There were some rules and regulations that were brought down, and I know that this was—we were told—to save money with delaying launch times. From day one, even from my college days, we were told, "You have X amount of time to get out of your seat, stop whatever you're doing, get out that door, get in the ambulance." It doesn't matter if it's a fixed-wing, a helicopter, a land ambulance, you have eight to 10 minutes. Now, in a helicopter, that's pretty quick. The pilots and the paramedics and the engineers worked in unison to do that. We were extremely frustrated and very disappointed once we found out that we were being told, "No, now what you're going to be doing is you're going to have a pre-alert, and once there is a primary care or advanced care, it doesn't matter who is on-scene"—these are only for on-scenes, mind you, and that means that it's an accident—"you will wait to hear if you are required."

Mr. Klees, you spoke about patients dying. We wrote care reports about some very, very key components with regard to that, and it was months and months and months before we heard anything back.

We're very connected on land and in the air. We have friends who work in the industry, and they came back and told us, "Unfortunately that individual died. They didn't make it to the hospital. We could have really used you. What happened?" That was very disappointing—very disappointing—to hear that stuff.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You referred back to the meeting that you had in August. How long before this did it start? How long before this did you see that providing top-quality care was not the top mandate anymore?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I do believe it was the beginning of that summer, because that's essentially when a lot of the trauma calls start to come in. People are a lot more busy in the summer and such. Forgive me for saying, but I'm guessing it was May, June. There was a policy that was brought out, and it was a very confusing policy because it was never explained to us 100%, it was just sort of brought out. I do not have that policy in front of me. I'm almost certain you can talk to a manager somewhere and they'll be able to reproduce it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So we're talking May, June 2010?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Before that meeting, correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So from May, June 2010, you can see that decisions are being made, a policy has been put in place that does not lead to top-quality care.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Quite the opposite.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Top-quality care—you still had the paramedics and pilots; however, we were not allowed to do our job, in my opinion, like we were doing it prior to that. So you still had the same care, unfortunately—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Once you got there.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That's correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right, and if there were two of you to do what you needed to do—

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So that's May 2010. We fast-forward to January 2012. The resources did not change but all of a sudden there are enough resources to do a good job. Is it a big stretch to think that if the ministry had acted in August 2010 things could have gotten better a whole lot sooner?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. We actually had a very nice visit with Deb Matthews and one of the questions was, "What took so long? How come things take so long?" I have no idea what goes on in these closed-door meetings and such. Once again, I have no desire to sit here, but that's exactly what we asked.

Time and time again, there were questions and eyebrows being raised with regard to all of these matters. We just came right out and said, "We, as front-line staff, have noticed a significant change, and we fear for our patients in Ontario because of these changes." We were furious. We were very disappointed. We felt betrayed.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you said that you raised this with your union, you raised it with some of the physicians who work with you, you raised it with management. Is there any evidence that all of this was hidden away from the ministry?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That's an excellent question. I was never invited to a meeting where it was going to be presented to the minister or anyone with that significant importance with regard to those matters, so I can't honestly say yes, it was hidden, or no, it was not. We did feel as though our voice was not being heard by the proper persons.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So the voice coming from the ministry was a voice of, "This is the money you have. You have to make do," but you didn't feel that there was ever a voice back to the ministry saying, "Listen, things are not good here." The only part you heard was the part telling you, "There's no more money."

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Correct. Perhaps they left a voice mail, I don't know; I just didn't get the message, unfortunately.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Could you name some of the managers with whom you raised those issues?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Okay. There was Hallie McClelland. Prior to her, we didn't have a manager for a year at the London base. What we had were our sister bases, for lack of a better term, such as Ottawa and Toronto, managing their base as well as our base. We did have a lot of issues.

Now, we're all grown adults and medical professionals, so we pretty much ran the base on our own—other than being paid, or else we'd all be rich by now, but it's not going to happen. But we had many issues with regard to stocking of medical supplies and just simple things that make your job easier. We were without a manager for a year. There was a Mr. Jeff Carss as well, who was the Ottawa manager who assisted us. A lot of these issues were raised to them personally. Hallie McClelland was post that one year; she was hired post the one year.

M^{me} France Gélinas: From May 2010, who was your manager at the time?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That was Hallie McClelland, I believe.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It would have been.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. You'll have to forgive me; we've had a couple.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, that's okay. We're all the same. Some things you remember very well, others not so good. Garbage on Tuesday morning is very important in my family.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: My brain is only so big, so I have to keep the important stuff in.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. The changes that you saw—once there was a change of CEO, a change of board—were they drastic? Were they more like going back to what you had before?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Correct. They were not drastic; they were going back to the way we were being run prior to Ornge taking over, so to speak, when we were run by Canadian Helicopters. Now, don't get me wrong, both companies are doing a fantastic job in various departments. However, I believe that when we were being run by Canadian Helicopters, it was more medical and in Ontario—100% Ontario. We had our key components—and Dr. Mazza himself, I honestly believe that if it were not for his passion to get me to become a critical care flight paramedic, I don't think I would be the same medic I am today. So for that, I thank him and his organization.

However, we noticed a shift, as Mr. Klees stated, that right here, they decided to go out of Ontario. That's when we really noticed a huge shift. There were talks of having planes in Florida. There were talks of having planes in other various locations and stuff. I believe that their plan was good, but where the money was coming from, none of us really had any idea—and we didn't really want to know, honestly. We just knew things were not good on the front line and, as stated before, the foundation was cracking.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So, here we have not a change in the budget, and the only change that happened were the people at the top and the focus being brought back to Ontario. Would you say that things are good again?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes, they're better, most definitely better. It's more of a rare occasion that we have a single medic. Now, granted, I see some empty seats here. It's not any different than mine. So if there's only two of us, and you're not scheduled, I'm not going to have my laptop or my cellphone—I'm not going to have it on my hip, because, let's face it, I have a life outside of my job. Some people don't want to take the extra shifts.

If someone books off sick, say, at 0100 in the morning for an 0700 shift, maybe there is nobody, but now things have changed where they'll be calling in Toronto and they'll be driving a medic from Toronto to come down, as opposed to just going in to London.

Also, with regard to staffing issues, there have been a couple more paramedics being hired at the London base as well, which we have asked for on multiple occasions. Once again, it's easy for us to beg and plead for something, but we really have no idea, because I'm not the one writing the cheque and doing everything else.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you say that the way things are now, they're as good as they were before they started to go bad?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: They're getting better. There was a mention of medical interior. They are getting better.

M^{me} France Gélinas: As in, they work or they don't work?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: The medical interior is new, and as with anything that is new, there are hiccups. I was not on that part of that committee—I don't know if I really wished I was on that part of the committee. Having worked in multiple configurations of helicopters since 1996-97, I believe, this one is almost like an ICU room for us to load patients into in a hurry, and it's taking us longer to do our job in the back because of the electronics involved.

It's different. Is it safer? I would say, once everything is strapped down and secured, it's more safe, because of the testing that the equipment had to go through. I don't like saying this, but in the event of a hard landing or a crash, they state that things will stay placed, without becoming projectiles and causing undue damage to us and the patient. They will stay in place, whereas in the old helicopter, I don't believe that there was ever the same testing. It was never brought to us that way. They were really, really pushing this as safer. They were stating that in the event of a hard landing, it can withstand, I think, a 12g or 15g landing. I don't think I can withstand a 12g or 15g landing—

M^{me} France Gélinas: I wouldn't want to try it, anyway.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: No, no, most definitely not. I mean, in that essence, yes, it is better. But there are still some hiccups we're working with, with regard to the medical interior.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you know if every time you go, you have to log your flight?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Does Ornge keep an independent log, or is it only the log that they give to Nav Canada?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: In a nutshell, as a paramedic, if I transport a patient, I have to fill out an air ambulance call report. That computer—the information from that goes to a server, I believe, to Ornge, because we have our own IT department. As well, our pilots also have to log numbers and flight times and such. I even believe now, with the new helicopters, that they have to download data via some server, and it takes about half an hour or such, and I think that's what they're doing, as engineers. I don't know if Ornge keeps its separate log. That's above my pay scale, unfortunately. But I do know that we are triplicating almost every call.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Just quickly, then: Have you ever seen any oversight from the government, as in a government person coming over to see how you're doing?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: They were from EMS, or—

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: No, it was Deb Matthews, who came—when was that?—June or July. She popped in to say hello. I was very impressed. I was very, very honoured and humbled to have an MPP come into my work. I was happy. I was very, very happy to see someone come in there and say, "How are you, guys? I understand you guys are getting a lot of mud thrown at you. Are you okay?" We were—

M^{me} France Gélinas: That was this year?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes, it was.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I meant on an ongoing basis, except for—I'm happy Minister Matthews came and saw you, but before this, have you ever had any type of oversight coming from the government?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Other than base audits and such, no, but base audits are a norm for us; they should be coming. Other than a quick pop-in, no, but I mean, we're just one base. There are so many ambulance bases. If all of a sudden you were to hire me and say, "That's your job"—oh, boy, there are only so many days in a year, correct?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, thank you.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, thank you. We'll move on to the government. Ms. Sandals?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, thank you very much. Before I move on, there are just a couple of clarifications I wanted to make. The meeting that we've got the notes for, that Mr. Klees handed out, refers to "18 August 2011." You talked about things sort of going negative a few months before that, so that would have been May or June 2011. Is that correct?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I believe so, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Not 2010.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It would have been spring 2011.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. Thank you for that clarification. It is a little bit of a blur. I must admit, when things became a little bit negative, if you go into work with that negativity, we all know what happens. Most of us did our best to steer clear of that stuff—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, I was just trying to sort it out in my own mind, because I was getting this date disconnected.

I don't know who took these notes, but on page 8, when whoever it is is taking notes about Ornge Global and moving out of Ontario, it talks about "Funds can only flow into Ontario—cannot flow out. No public funds are being used on Global." This was the message that you received. You might have been skeptical, but it was what you were told by management. Is that correct?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: On multiple occasions we were told that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I just wanted to get that bit of clarification and to say thank you so much, because it's wonderful to see somebody who's on the front lines here. We've had so many witnesses and so many hours of testimony. We've been grilling politicians, chairs, CEOs, executives, lobbyists and lawyers, and it's really nice that we actually have somebody who's doing the front-line work. Maybe that's where we should actually have started and found out what it was like for you on the front lines. It's great to see you here. Thank you so much for coming this morning—

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: You're very welcome.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —because we really do appreciate somebody with your experience. Just reading your CV, it's very impressive. Somewhere in your spare time you've actually written a handbook for other paramedics.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I have, yes. As I was explaining to Mr. Klees earlier—he said the same thing—and I said, "Basically, in a nutshell, what it was is a compilation of all my notes"—because every year we have to recertify with our doctors, and it's basically their licence. If we don't meet their standards, we do not work at that level, so these were study notes, sort of like cheat notes, so to speak.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Great, great. I wonder if you could talk a little bit about what an average shift is like. When you come in and you're doing a 12-hour shift, what's a typical 12-hour shift like for you? Can you take us through the day, or the night, as the case may be?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Certainly, yes. So we work in London 0700 to 1900, or vice versa, 1900 to 0700. At the beginning of the shift, we will go out and check our machine. We'll get a briefing from the crew prior to and state, "How is the back of the helicopter? What sort of medical equipment did you use, not use? Are there any problems?" We also have a journey log, so to speak. If there was difficulty with any equipment, we can pass that on to the—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So this is the hand-off from shift to shift?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Correct; yes. We also have to count narcotics, because we have those in triple-lock boxes and such. And then, once that is completed, we basically wait for a phone call, which can be anything and everything. For example, it takes us about 40 minutes to get to Owen Sound, 45 minutes to Windsor, Pelee Island 50 minutes, give or take. Another base is Toronto, and as you're well aware, they have two helicopters. So we'll sort of criss-cross.

With regard to patient care, there are essentially three types of calls that we do. There's the trauma on-scene, where we'll land on—where you see us on Citytv and such. Then also, the modified on-scene, where if we were called to an on-scene by land ambulance or the OPP or even a fire department—we never say, "Stay there and wait for us." We always say, "Get them to a doctor." The closest hospital is what's best for the patient.

Then, if they still require us, we'll land at a helipad or an airport, get a land ambulance in. We'll go in and we'll work in conjunction with the paramedics or the medical physician that is there. What we'll do is, in a timely manner, get out of there and get them to a level 1 trauma centre, if need be.

Last but not least is the ICU/CCU transport, where a person has had a recent stroke or cardiac event or post surgery and they need to go to a higher, tertiary level of care.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Could you sort of walk us through what happens on a trauma on-scene call, how the details of that work from the time you get to the call till you hopefully get the patient to hospital?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Certainly. It's my understanding that virtually anyone can call 911 and request a helicopter. Usually what happens is a call will come in to 911 for a local—let's say it's Kitchener. It's about 15, 20 minutes for us to fly there. Once they deem it necessary for us—there are a bunch of trauma triage codes: If the patient's life is in peril, then, of course, call the helicopter because of level of care and also distance. We can get there much faster.

In that event, once we receive a call via our dispatch—so it goes from the paramedics on-scene, for example, to their dispatch. Their dispatch would phone our dispatch. The appropriate measures are done and then they would phone the appropriate base.

Due to weather and other jurisdictions that are out of my scope, pilots would then have to accept the call, and then, upon accepting the call, we have eight to 10 minutes for wheels up. That's all documented.

When we get the call details, in flight, then we land at the scene, and that might be on a highway or a farm, wherever. As soon as the area is safe and secured that is deemed by our captain, we land. Most of the time we'll keep the helicopter rotors going, and we'll go out and, as a team, work with the paramedics, police, fire, and bring the patient back to the hospital—to appropriate hospitals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And at what point during this would you be in contact with a doctor? You mentioned earlier being in contact with the base doctor.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. If we knew that the patient was trapped for X amount of minutes or such and their vital signs were in dire need of, say, fluids or intravenous or blood products, we could patch ahead and say, "Hello, Doctor," our BHP, "could you please get the OPP to bring out some blood products, because we have a lengthy extrication?"

We also have a standing order/medical directives book, which I have with me, and it's about that thick. It's a little bit heavy, but nonetheless, we have to know that. That is our job to know that. Once we get on-scene, we do our job. We do the initial physical assessment and we can utilize standing orders and medical directives that are taught to us by the physicians, apply the appropriate care for life-saving measures, and then en route or while on-scene, if we deem that we need more orders that are outside of that scope, then we will patch in to the physician.

Now, all this takes time, so, as a critical care flight medic, we have to weigh the good with the bad with that. Most of the time, when we're working, we can have the land crew stabilize the patient by doing something that we request that's within their scope of practice, and while we're walking to the helicopter, we can be on the satellite phone or the cellphone.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And because you are a critical care paramedic, your scope of practice is much broader, and there's a whole range of things that you can do that a primary care paramedic wouldn't be able to do independently?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes, it is much broader.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. I'm going to turn it over to my colleague.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you very much, Mr. Doneff, for appearing before this committee. I have no doubt that you have experienced some extremely gratifying moments and some, of course, genuine tragedies in your time at Ornge. Perhaps you can start with a happy story. What has been your most gratifying moment as a critical care flight paramedic at Ornge?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Assisted delivery. Actually, my partner at the time, Matthew, and myself, had a young baby take our names. The mother sent us a very, very nice thank-you letter and said, "I'd like you to meet Brandon Matthew"—I cannot recall the last name. But we had our names taken for their baby, which was very, very humbling.

There have been many, many good times, many excellent times, where we've been very gratified and proud to do the job that we do.

As stated earlier, unfortunately there have been times when people just don't make it, no matter what we do. Just recently, within the last two weeks, I believe—I don't know if you heard about some of the drownings around here—Port Burwell. We flew in there, and there was an eight-year-old and a 10-year-old brother and sister who had drowned. Unfortunately, there wasn't anything we could do medically to bring their lives back.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would you consider that as the most tragic experience you ever had at Ornge, or are there others? You can tell us at least one of the most tragic ones.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: There are multiple occasions. I don't want to say it, but, as an adult, if you're injured, usually it's because of your own demise, to a certain extent. But it's with the children that it really tears at you. We've had burn patients, where the child somehow got a hold of flammable fluids; firearms. We've had multiple occurrences where there are just very, very unusual, unorthodox and untimely deaths.

Mr. Reza Moridi: There was a recent article about you in the London Free Press. I'm sure you have seen that article. The article refers to you as "elite in the world of emergency responders." It goes on to say that there are less than 100 paramedics in Canada with your level of experience and qualifications. Something which really struck me in that article was a quote from you where you said, "It's all about speed for us...." Can you elaborate on what you mean by "speed" as a key factor in your line of work?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. By speed, I also mean efficiency with regard to that. I don't know if I actually spoke of that in there. Efficiency: That means having the best and most efficient training, and being able to apply that any time and anywhere. That also means, with speed, with regard to utilizing the helicopter. So from that first 911 call, be it whoever calls the dispatch, it has to be speed because it's the time—that is the true essence that will save a life. Sometimes we've gone on to on-scenes, and they are literally getting pulled out of the wreckage. We don't waste time sitting there looking for cameras and trying to get into movies and such. We're gone within minutes. If they're ready to go, we stabilize, do the best of our capability at that time and we go, because we're not surgeons. We're not the doctors who can open them up and clamp that artery. We don't do that. We do what we do within our scope of practice. That's what I mean by the speed.

Mr. Reza Moridi: The article also makes reference to the fact that you often have to land in terrible terrain and also terrible weather. It mentions that one time you had to rappel down a ravine. Can you tell us about that experience?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Sure. Well, there was one time when we landed in a cattle field and I got my boots quite dirty; that was terrible. But there have been times, because people—not so much around here. I mean, we could land virtually anywhere. Within five minutes, we can get a pizza and a Tim Hortons, correct? But up north, people hike, people bike, and they get into MVCs and such.

Sometimes you can't get there by land ambulance or such. We've been put into the back of a truck and we get there with our backpacks. I've hiked in to a logging community—and this could be in the middle of the night. We could land in an airport and then be taken to a remote area. I've even known that some of my colleagues up north, because of weather—the helicopter was able to land, but the distance to get the patient back to the helicopter was too great, so they had to leave because of thunderstorms and such, or freezing rain. Sometimes it's just unsafe for the helicopter to fly. They had to spend the night with the patient in the bush.

We do training. We do underwater survival training, which we simulate in a pool. We're basically in chairs like this, buckled in, and they flip us upside down in the pool. We're trained in how to get out of that safely, by undoing our seat belt and such. We're also trained in how to survive in the wilderness. For the greater part—like I said earlier—with a phone call, you can get a Timmy's, right? But we have that training as well.

Mr. Reza Moridi: I also took note of the fact that you were involved in the airlifting of patients during the Walkerton water tragedy. Perhaps you can explain that experience to the committee as well.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. I think that was a pivotal point for us, because initially, our base was 12-hour day shifts and then 12-hour on-call night shifts. Then they deemed it necessary for us to go 24 hours, seven days a week, all year long.

With regard to that, I remember being stationed up there and waiting for patients, because there was basically a lineup. "Which one do you want to take first?" We had to triage with the doctors and such. A lot of them were in full-on renal failure. I know that a lot of them didn't make it, because of that tragedy.

Mr. Reza Moridi: I have to tell you, Mr. Doneff, that over the past number of months, we have heard some troubling stories in this committee about Ornge, in particular with respect to some of the things that were going on at the upper level of the organization, as you know. I assume you have followed the stories in the media and at the Legislature, presumably closely. As a critical care flight paramedic who was clearly dedicated to his work before this all happened, and clearly continues to be dedicated to this mission of helping critically injured people in Ontario, what are your thoughts on what has transpired at Ornge over the past number of months?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I think it's even before the past number of months. I think this was something—it was a brainchild. It was a deep-rooted desire to move above and beyond, outside of Ontario. I remember quite clearly our upper management stating, "There is no money in Ontario." Now, I found that very troubling, when you're front-line staff and it's like, "Well, why do we need more money? We're being funded." Our previous employer, actually, I think did quite all right. I don't know what's really changed.

But I do know that all of a sudden, we had a couple of land ambulances show up. I understand that because of change in money and government and such, and with the interest rates and so forth, things changed, so I believe that stopped, yet they were still in service—so that started to bleed off.

Then all of a sudden, we notice that there is a great deal of hiring going on for persons who weren't doing the same work or aiding and guiding us as front-line staff. When we were introduced to them, we were like, "Hello. How are you? Who are you? How do you help us help the community?" And they were like, "Oh. Well, I'm so-and-so, and we don't really do that. I'm with this." And we're like, "Okay."

And then, as stated earlier with regard to this and the closing of bases, I'm like—I'm pretty certain, if we decided to get rid of our sort of upside-down pyramid, with all the management up top and stuff, that we'd probably be doing much better than we were at that time. I believe that the monies were allocated to different agencies, perhaps, for lack of better words—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. If you're finished the question, we're done with this round of questioning. We'll move on. We have 10 minutes for each party in the third round. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Mr. Doneff, you referred to scope of practice.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: I want to just get back to my questioning of you earlier about the single medic issue, which is a very serious issue and has serious patient care implications. I'd like to ask you this question: As a single medic, can you respond to all calls or only certain calls due to medical requirements?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: With regard to that, what normally happens is if an on-scene comes, as a single medic, we are told we are to go. We have never been told to stand down because we're a single medic. In the event that I would require assistance, be it verbally or physically, I can phone my patch physician, whose licence I am under. They have given me orders under their licence to administer medications and such.

Mr. Frank Klees: So who has directed you to go as a single medic, notwithstanding what the medical requirements are?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Management.

Mr. Frank Klees: And you're aware that that is contrary to provincial legislation, and so your current management is actually breaking provincial legislation standards? You're aware of that?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: When you put it that way, that is correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: That is correct. Thank you.

The question was asked about on-scene investigations. You mentioned that the minister was very gracious in making a public relations visit to the London base.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you get a sense that she had any knowledge about what to look for to see if things were what they should be in that base, or was it just basically a “Hello, nice to see you. Thank you for what you do”? Was there an official function that she was carrying out?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I don’t believe so. I honestly believe that she came to us as a human being. She came to us because she knew what we were going through and she heard the rumours. Also, she asked us, “Do you think I did the right thing about having your CEO removed?” Things changed, and we all agreed, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I’d like to ask you this. My understanding is that there have been no quality-care drop-in inspections from the Ministry of Health, there have been no Ministry of Health audits of the London base since Mr. McKerlie was installed. Is that correct?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Unfortunately I cannot answer that because I have no knowledge of—I’m not management, so I wouldn’t be privy to that information. I would only be in that knowledge if it was hearsay, like, “Oh, yesterday we had a visit from so-and-so from the Ministry of Health” and such.

Mr. Frank Klees: One would have thought, particularly given your experience and your senior position, that if there was a visit like that, an audit from the Ministry of Health, you would be made aware of that. Would you agree with that? I mean, these are not secrets.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: No, and we’re a very small community.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right. But you’ve heard of no visits from the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I have not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Would you think that, given the history, that might be one of the priorities, to ensure that bases are properly inspected to ensure that all of the things that have gone wrong in the past—that there might be an inspection rather than just a public relations visit?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Well, I found it rather odd because I just spent a night at the Delta Chelsea, and in every bathroom, there’s a little card, and it has a signature, a time, a date and “Inspected by.” That’s a bathroom at a local hotel.

Mr. Frank Klees: Interesting. You’re familiar with Canadian Helicopters. You actually were employed by them previously, is that right?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: And you indicated in your testimony previously that things were not that bad when it was under Canadian Helicopters and Voyageur for the fixed-wing, right?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Are you aware that, when both of these companies were providing service to our air ambulance services, the dispatch reliability of those two companies was registered, tracked very carefully, and it stood at 98% response? Are you aware of that?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I didn’t know it was that high—and I was also aware that there were penalties if we did not have a second pilot, a second medic—

Mr. Frank Klees: So under that previous system, if Canadian Helicopters or Voyageur allowed to have happen what is happening consistently under Ornge, there was a financial penalty that they had to pay to the Ministry of Health. Correct?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That is correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is there a financial penalty now that you know of?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. Frank Klees: Of course not, because it’s inside baseball. There’s no accountability to anyone.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I believe they say that’s the fox guarding the henhouse.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes. Actually, perhaps that’s part of that Ornge box that they were referring to.

I have one other question for you—I wish we had more time, because it affects you and your front-line colleagues. The AW139s, as I understand it—there’s a very negative impact of a generator failure. Are you aware of that?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I have never been on a flight and had a generator fail.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank God.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me give you the summary here of what I understand the technical issue is. The AW139, as I understand it, is equipped with two generators, one on each engine. The redundancy built into twin-engine helicopters, or other helicopters, allows for the essential electrical systems to continue, even in spite of the failure of one of those generators. There’s a redundancy built in from the other generator. I’m told that the Ornge 139 medical systems are designed to shut down on the loss of a single generator. The implication of that is this: You’re in flight, and all of the systems built into the helicopter for patient care cease to function—all of them; that includes medical oxygen, suction, compressed air, satellite communications. Where does that leave you as a paramedic with your patient?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That leaves me with my experiences and my medical training alone.

Mr. Frank Klees: This information was given to Mr. McKerlie within weeks of him coming onside. Has anything been done to address that issue?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: To the best of my understanding, no. Even with the medical interior, when it first was launched to us, there were a lot of questions, and more so concerns, about that.

Mr. Frank Klees: To that end, I have minutes here of a meeting that took place February 23, 2011, with the London flight paramedics. I’m sure you were there.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Do we have copies for other members?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, we do, as a matter of fact.

There are 20 flight paramedic occupational health and safety issues listed here that relate to the AW139. There are eight specific public and patient safety issues listed in these minutes, and 24 miscellaneous issues. I appreciate your courage in continuing to carry on what you do, but I'm going to ask you this question: What is your perception in terms of the relationship between you and the job that you do and the Ministry of Health of the province of Ontario?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That's got some teeth, that question. I don't really know how to answer that. I believe that when Ornge was given the job and the duty to complete their task—and that's to provide an air ambulance service to all of Ontario—that it was with faith. I believe the faith was sugar-coated, so to speak. I don't know at what point in time things went wrong. I don't know who's to blame. I can't point a finger.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is it fair to say—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're on your last minute, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is it fair to say that as a front-line paramedic, providing important emergency services in the province of Ontario, that you believe, and all of your colleagues believe, that they are working for the province of Ontario? Is that fair?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes, 100% fair.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you think that it would be expected from your colleagues and everyone else in this province that the Ministry of Health would exercise proper accountability and oversight of that air ambulance system to ensure that they're properly resourced, to ensure that they're doing their job appropriately, that all of the conditions are being met? Is that a fair expectation that you would have and that your colleagues would have and that every person in this province would have?

1010

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you believe that the Ministry of Health has exercised that accountability?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I am uncertain.

Mr. Frank Klees: How can you be uncertain, knowing what you've seen and telling us today all of the things that have gone wrong, all of the faults, all of the failures? Please—to this point you have been very forthright; I'd like to hear from your gut in terms of what you believe the Ministry of Health has done. Have they exercised their responsibility of oversight of Ornge?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I think to err is to be human. I want to believe that when people are doing a job, they do the best of their capabilities at that point in time.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the NDP.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Point of order: Can we find out where these documents are? This is the second document Mr. Klees has tabled, and there's no indication whose meeting notes they are. There's no indication whose health and safety document this purports to be. We just have no idea where these are coming from.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, Mr. Chair—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Quickly, please, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: —the names are at the very top of the document.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, the c.c.s are there. I know who it got copied to. I don't know who it's to or who it's from. I don't know who wrote the documents.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, let's look into all of the documents we've received from the Ministry of Health—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, let's not cut into the NDP's time, please. Go ahead, Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you. I want to bring you back to the summer where you had your meeting and where you felt that, "Things are not good here. We have more and more one medic rather than two. We have issues of delayed departures. We're going in the wrong direction." Were you the only one feeling that way?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Definitely not. It was unanimous. We as the front-line staff knew something changed, and it didn't change for the better. Change is good, but not this time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But not this time. Did you actually formally speak as staff? Did you have a union meeting about it or just talk between yourselves during—

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: No. It was raised to our management. I firmly believe that individuals that were involved at the time basically stated, "This is what we're doing, and this is why. This is for the best interest of Ornge," because there were money issues. They always routed back to the money. We just found that so disheartening: that there's no more money, yet our previous employer didn't have any problems with money. They never once said to you, "You're not allowed to take sick time anymore," "You're not allowed to downstaff that helicopter," or "Which base shall we close?" We'd never heard that before.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But then you were hearing it, and the answer was that it was because of the money, and it was better for Ornge to go down that route.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. Or close a base and cut jobs.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Hmm.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That's what we said.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's a heck of a choice.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The medics talked between themselves, and you formally talked to management, and this is the kind of feedback that you got back. Did your union ever file grievances?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I am unaware if they did. I think it's safe to assume they did, but I didn't see physical grievances. That was the hugest buzz around the whole base—across the whole province, every single base we were [inaudible].

M^{me} France Gélinas: And would you say that every single base did the same: went to their manager and were told pretty much the same thing?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I can only speak on behalf of what I know at the London base. I know for a fact that Ottawa did and Toronto did as well, because we were closer communities. I'm not certain about the north. I think it's safe to assume, for a lack of better words, that they did as well.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who did you feel had the responsibility to put you back on the right track?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I felt it was upper management, our CEO and COO at the time. I felt that it was their role and responsibility as leaders in our transport medicine and of Ornge to provide a service that was safe and effective and efficient for our fellow people in Ontario.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Coming back to some of the comments you were making to Mr. Klees, you really saw the relationship was—you were working for the province of Ontario, you were working for Ontarians to help us in times of need, and the province, the way it was explained to you, was not giving you enough money to do a good job?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That's correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's the way it was explained to you.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That's correct. They said the money was gone.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you thought that the province didn't care if we didn't provide a good service?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: No, not once. We felt it was because, as the management team, and especially—had there been no Ornge Air, Ornge Global and all this talk—there was so much emphasis on everything else. They said, "Ornge is fine. Ontario is good," and we were like, "We're not good. Things have changed. We're worried. We're concerned about our fellow paramedics, our pilots. We're concerned, more importantly, about the patients that we're transporting. This is, at times, unsafe for them." I know there were some medics questioning their integrity at work. They wanted to quit. And that's not what we wanted.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That bad, eh?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know if any of them actually left Ornge?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I believe some did, yes—not at London. Some were fed up with it. They had enough. It was breaking their moral and ethical code, their code of honour, so to speak.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you figured the only one who could fix that was upper management, and upper management was busy someplace else, in Brazil, and everywhere else but in Ontario?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So at no point did you see that the government could help put that agency on the right track?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That's a good question. In hindsight, perhaps we could have come to the government and said, "Look, as medics, this is what we're finding." But it's funny how you always say something and expect someone else to do something. So that's a good lesson.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We were talking about base audits. The base audits, I take it, were done by people from the ministry.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Correct. Actually, some of them were paramedics, and it is their job to come around and do certain audits and such.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you ever talk to them?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What did they say?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: They said, "We're aware of it."

M^{me} France Gélinas: They were aware of it.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. Actually, on one shift in particular, we received—there was an investigations officer, and he took me aside, and I actually closed the door on my manager at the time when we went into the helicopter because he attempted to come in and out. I said, "There's no room in here. You're well aware of that. There are only two seats on this side." I think he took the hint so that we could have a private conversation. We basically stated that there were concerns, and he said, "Yes, that's why I'm here." He was there because there were concerns raised with regard to the CPR issue, which raised eyebrows once again with regard to why we have Transport Canada's allowance on certain occasions to drop the stretcher. I don't know if you're aware of the medical interior within the AW139, but—

M^{me} France Gélinas: A temporary fix, yes.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. So is that the best? With what we have to work with, it's sufficient.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So the people who were doing the base audit became aware of the issue. They would tell you, "We know about it," but they would not come forward with solutions?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I don't know. They never got back to us and phoned me up and said, "Brandon, this is what I've done. These are the individuals who are now involved, and here are their names and emails and contact information. You can contact them at your leisure."

I had never received an email or any response from any of them. It was all pretty much in passing, so to speak: "Oh, things are very rough at Ornge. I'm very understanding about what's going on. It's bad, it's very bad." And that was it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And that was it.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: That was it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Everybody knew, but nobody acted.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And that went on for months.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: It did, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It must have been really discouraging.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: It was. But I have my family. It's a career. I mean, I love my career, but if it came down to it, I'd find something else.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It was at that point where, if it kept going that way and your moral compass couldn't take it anymore, you would have just walked away?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: No, I'm not the type of man to walk away. I think I probably would have gathered the troops, so to speak, and done something else. I probably would have marched to the Minister of Health and said, "Look, we have to do something about this."

At the same time, when the bubble was beginning to burst within a lot of people, things were starting to change; investigations were starting to occur. That was like a breath of fresh air, so to speak, and we were like, "Finally."

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you know that the Auditor General was auditing Ornge?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: We heard rumours, yes, and we smiled. We really did. As front-line staff, we were not concerned; we were relieved. There was a heavy weight being lifted from our shoulders.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Because you knew that things could only get better?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're out of time, so we'll move to the government. Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just a quick comment: I want to apologize for what seems to be an attack on your integrity, for going out and being a single staff and making sure the patient gets cared for. I'm sure if we had a fire truck that was one man short, nobody would be critical of the firefighters for going into the burning building when they're one man short. So thank you for your dedication in doing what you do.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Thank you.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Mr. Moridi.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you, again, Mr. Doneff. Mr. Doneff, there are those people around who use this Ornge controversy to question the quality and qualifications of Ornge pilots and paramedics. They have questioned the skills of pilots and paramedics. They have questioned their level of training. What would you say to those who have been critical of the quality of front-line workers at Ornge?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Sorry, there was a bit of a noise. The last—

Mr. Reza Moridi: There has been some criticism on the quality and qualifications of the front-line workers at Ornge by some people. What would you say to those people?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I say those are all wrong. I say that the roles and responsibilities of front-line staff have not changed. We are still tested annually, sometimes biannually. We have continuing medical training, where I, myself, am side by side with doctors, and they train us. If we're not up to par, we do not pass. So I have never, ever doubted certification levels within our organization for front-line staff. That goes across the board, that goes across from paramedics, all levels—we have to meet certification—all pilots and all engineers. So I feel safe there.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Over the past few months—eight or nine months in the past—as you know, there has been a remarkable amount of media coverage about the Ornge controversy. Most of it has been negative. How has this situation affected the morale of you and your colleagues at Ornge?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Well, there have been some choice words, forked tongues, towards us, but for the most part, we know it's not us. But it is very disheartening when you hear the public saying, "Hey, how's that motorbike? How's that boat? Hope you're enjoying it." It's like, "Really? You really think I'm enjoying that motorcycle and that boat?" I have never laid eyes on either, other than up at head office. I've never been invited to a cottage to use that stuff. I'm a front-line staff. I'm not privy to that information.

The morale: Once again, it's whichever you feed. If you allow the negativity to fester inside of you, then that's all it is, and it's going to grow; it's like a cancer, so to speak. I don't allow it.

Mr. Reza Moridi: So would you think that it didn't affect the morale of the staff, of the front-line workers?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I think it affected some of the front-line staff more than others. I saw a great deal of depression amongst some of my colleagues. But, for the most part, we've all come back to work. We still enjoy the time off, but maybe not as much—some individuals—enjoy the time at work as they did prior to.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Some people have come to me and said, "Enough already." They have said, "It's time to move forward." They have said, "We have heard all we are going to hear; let's go back to what matters, which is basically delivering the best emergency health service to Ontarians." What do you think about these kinds of comments, which sometimes I hear from people?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: I like that comment. Let's turn it into something positive. Unfortunately, an atrocity was committed. Once again, as stated, we, as the front-line staff, had nothing to do with it. Were we aware of it? We heard rumours of it, but rumours are rumours, and we know what happens with rumours. It's just talk.

But now, when it has come into the light, it's disgusting to know that people would do that and then lie to your face and say, "We have to close bases because we have no money." Yet here it is now, in black and white, and it's being proven that there were some key individuals who were very unethical in their doings and dealings.

We don't want any part of that. We want our hands to be washed clean of it. We don't want to be known as "Ornge: the individuals who stole money from the government," because that's not what we're about.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Mr. Doneff, as you know, late last year, and earlier this year, actually, our government took a number of steps to address some of the problems at Ornge. That was based on the recommendations of the Auditor General. Working with Ornge, we have taken a number of steps to address some of those points which the auditor mentioned in his report. Have you noticed a difference in the organization in recent months as a result of these steps our government has taken?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. Yes, I have. For example, the delayed launching: There was a pre-alert, which I stated earlier. That's null and void now. It was almost the day of, when certain individuals were removed, it was no longer "set precedents." It was now, "Go back to the way you were, and when that phone rings, you go." That is 100% better.

With regard to the staffing, it's changed. Like I said, once again, all of a sudden, black and white. Key individuals were removed, and now we're doing our job with the partner in that seat, to the best of their capability. If someone is able to come in and fill that seat, or if there is an extra medic within the province—like, in Toronto and stuff, we have land crews as well. We'll pick them up and staff that machine to its capability. So that has changed, yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: So that has a great impact on the morale of the staff and also on the operation of the organization?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: As I can see or hear from you, that organization is working in a perfect situation, or in an ideal situation, as you would expect it to operate?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes. Change is good. There are still some issues, such as the medical interior, but it's my understanding that there is a committee with regard to that. I haven't heard anything within the last—I think since summer; for some unusual reason, things have sort of ceased. But I'm told that a legacy interior—that's what they're calling it—is coming down the pipe, and there are some changes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: What major impact has the change of leadership had on the front-line workers at Ornge?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: As stated, we were relieved, very relieved, because we saw that we were going down a road that we didn't like. We knew it was going to be detrimental to patients' care, and we didn't like that. That's not our job. Once you started tying the hands that provided care to the patients, it became dangerous and, once again, unethical.

Mr. Reza Moridi: There have been a number of changes with respect to patient safety and related issues at Ornge. For example, I understand there have been some interim modifications to the medical interiors of AW139s, and there have been some changes with respect to the dispatch policies at Ornge. What policy changes have made the biggest difference, in your view, at Ornge?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: As stated, the policy that was removed, with us delaying our launch times—100%, a hundredfold. We would wait anywhere from 20 to 30 minutes. We would be there already. Within our radius of the London base, 30 minutes—that's a lifesaver.

They speak of a golden hour for patients. There's not a lot of validity within it, but it's still spoken of. Basically, once you're injured—in order to get an individual who is a traumatic patient to a surgeon within that hour really, really increases their odds of survival. When you delay us by an extra 10, 20, 30 minutes, just because of—and I understand because of money; I do, I truly do. But how much is a life worth? That's the biggest thing.

1030

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're on your last minute.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Okay, thank you. Mr. Doneff, I understand that recently you have authored a book entitled Medics Little Helper. Could you tell us a bit about your book?

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: Yes, I can. Actually, I think I have a copy in my bag as well. Basically, what it was is because of all of our training as paramedics—and prior to this career, I was a registered nurse in the emergency room at St. Joseph's in London. As stated, there's just so much information out there that is required upon us every year for our teachings and our certifications, so it's a study guide that basically documents medical information as a pocketbook, while you're on call, for a quick reference guide. It's a study tool for students, or even graduates.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The time is up. Thank you very much for coming before the committee this morning, Mr. Doneff.

Mr. Brandon R. Doneff: The pleasure is mine.

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, just while we're getting ready for the minister, could we have a three- or four-minute break?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We have limited time, so I think we'll just keep going. Thank you.

MINISTRY OF HEALTH AND LONG-TERM CARE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our next presenter is the Minister of Health. I invite the minister forward. Welcome, Minister. You have time to make a statement—up to 10 minutes—if you wish, then we'll go with questioning from the various parties. Thank you for coming back to the committee.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: It's my pleasure to be here. I want to begin by thanking the committee for the second chance to be here with you. The work you've undertaken is very important, and I'm pleased to participate in it.

We've come a long way over the last few months. Ornge is now under new management, and the mandate of the new organization is clear. While much has been accomplished, there is much more work ahead.

I feel very honoured to follow Brandon Doneff this morning. I've had the opportunity to meet many of the front-line staff at Ornge bases across Ontario, and I do want to thank them again—the employees at Ornge who have never, ever wavered in their dedication to the people and patients of Ontario. They deserve nothing but our highest praise and deepest gratitude.

Our front-line staff and our new management team are supported by our new volunteer board of directors, who stepped up on behalf of Ontario patients. Members of our volunteer board of directors are very busy, accomplished people, and yet each one of them said yes, without hesitation, to accepting this challenging task. The board's commitment is already showing results. I am, and Ontarians are, indebted to them.

Much has been accomplished at Ornge. Perhaps most important is the change in culture since the old leadership was replaced. You heard about that from the previous witness, as he said things changed dramatically. The culture of fear and intimidation has been replaced with a culture of continuous quality improvement. I cannot stress the importance of this change enough.

As a government, we're also working diligently to implement reforms and act on all of the Auditor General's advice. There are six areas of reform I wish to highlight.

(1) We now have a stronger performance agreement in place that reflects the rigorous oversight advised by the Auditor General.

(2) The number of front-line staff has been increased to ensure more patients have access to this life-saving service.

(3) Patients are now unquestionably the number one priority of the management team. A patient declaration of values has already been established.

(4) A patient advocate position is being created that will provide a dedicated professional to advocate on behalf of patients and their families, and resolve any concerns they may have.

(5) There is a new quality-improvement program in place for air ambulance dispatchers, which is helping to improve communication and provide more timely care to those who need it.

(6) In recognition that staff must always feel empowered to speak up and speak out, Ornge is developing a whistle-blower policy. Entrenching that policy as a matter of law is one of the reasons why it's so important that we pass Bill 50. We heard from Brandon Doneff how important it is that front-line staff can speak up without fear.

Bill 50 would also allow us to appoint a supervisor in extraordinary circumstances and would give the government the flexibility to change the performance agreement with Ornge at any time.

Is this progress? I hope you would agree that the answer is yes. Do we have positive momentum? I believe so. But is the job finished? Absolutely not. There is more to accomplish. As minister, I am dedicated to finishing the job of identifying and implementing the changes required on behalf of patients and taxpayer, because they deserve the highest standard of quality and excellence in their air ambulance service.

I am asking for the help of this committee. By the end of this week, you will have sat for 75 hours, you will have heard from 54 witnesses and received tens of thousands of pages of documents. Your work has been extensive and thorough. Once again, I thank you for the efforts you have made.

If we are to best serve the needs of patients, we need to be focused on solutions. I'll happily answer your questions today for a second time. I'll come back again if you need me to, and again after that. But at some point, on behalf of Ontario patients, I need your best advice. With that in mind, and respecting that the committee sets its own schedule and acts with full independence, my hope is that this committee will be in a position to table its report at the earliest available opportunity. A timely committee report, focused on solutions, would help to maintain momentum and would mean patients would benefit sooner.

There are a couple of additional matters I wish to address directly. First and foremost, I want to repeat what I've said many times in the past: We should have done better. As the Auditor General has indicated, the original performance agreement was clearly inadequate. We have recognized that, and we have remedied that. We must be ever-vigilant. Many of us share responsibility for what transpired at Ornge. As minister, I take my full share of responsibility. I have acted quickly to fix the problems identified.

Second, I want to respond to the testimony of Dr. Chris Mazza and the specific suggestion that he had always been willing to co-operate; that had he been asked to make any changes of any kind at any time, his answer would have been, "Yes, ma'am." Pure nonsense.

I know it's pure nonsense by the fact that he rejected a request to have his salary publicly disclosed while other senior management voluntarily complied. I know it's pure nonsense by his stonewalling of the Auditor General, who, after nine years of completing such audits, described Mazza's Ornge as "one of the most difficult auditees we have ever encountered." I know it's pure nonsense by his manipulation of patient transfer numbers in reports to my ministry. And I know it's pure nonsense by the fact that there were at least two occasions when Chris Mazza avoided meetings with me, as a minister, and then claimed I would not meet with him. The first was when I visited the Ornge base in London. I expected he would be there, but he did not show up. Later, I sought a meeting with Ornge after learning that he was stonewalling the Auditor General and my ministry officials on a number of issues, not least of which was salary disclosure. Not only did I expect him to attend the meeting, I expected an explicit accounting from him as CEO. Again, he did not show. I think we can agree, that was not a "Yes, ma'am," but it was a message received loud and clear, and it led directly down a path that ended with the complete overhaul of leadership at Ornge.

I operate under no illusion that, had Chris Mazza met with me, he would have been forthcoming about his actions. Indeed, as recently as his appearance here, he refuses to acknowledge that he has done anything wrong. His actions are perhaps most disappointing because I meet real health care leaders every day. I meet them in our hospitals, in our long-term-care homes, in our community health centres, across our entire health care system. Thousands of health care leaders in Ontario understand their responsibility to the people of Ontario. Every day, they go above and beyond for the patients of Ontario.

So when I see Chris Mazza walk into this room and suggest that all we had to do was ask, I do not and I will not accept it.

As Minister of Health and Long-Term Care, I feel passionately about the efforts we're making to transform our health care system, and at the heart of that effort is a simple recognition that the system excels when we put patients first. It is their health care system, and it should be organized around their needs, not those of the minister or public servants or MPPs, not of providers or administrators. Collectively, we must all be here to serve patients first, last and always.

I'm talking about an ethic of trust, a genuinely sacred trust between those who lead our health care system and the patients who depend upon it.

There is no room for greed in Ontario's health care system.

So the task now falls to all of us, and to me in particular, as minister, to put things right. I've described to you how we're already restoring integrity to the operations of our air ambulance service. We're on track to implementing all of the Auditor General's recommendations. Still, there is much work ahead of us, and I can assure you that my ministry is committed to that effort. I believe that a timely, constructive report from this committee, with a focus on practical reforms and future-oriented solutions, will only help to strengthen that cause.

I want to thank the committee again for this opportunity to appear. I'm very happy to take your questions.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for that opening statement.

The NDP will go first. We will have about 25 minutes for each caucus, which I'll do in one slot, if that is fine with committee members.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. Flag me after 15.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Go ahead.

M^{me} France G  linas: Thank you.

Good morning.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Good morning.

M^{me} France G  linas: Thank you for your opening remarks. It's still puzzling to me that we're still here this morning and still wondering what happened. At the core of it are basically testimonies that are so diametrically opposed that it's really hard to believe that they can be part of the same story.

So I will start with this question: When did you find out that things were wrong at Ornge?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: When I was reappointed as Minister of Health in October 2011, after the election campaign, there were a number of issues that I needed to be briefed on. One of them was Ornge. So I think within a week of my reappointment, I was briefed on the issues. I learned that the Auditor General was having difficulty getting answers to his questions, that he was met with legalistic responses. I learned that my own ministry officials also were not getting answers to questions they thought they should be getting from Ornge.

One thing led to another, but in December, I had a meeting with—the meeting I referred to in my statement, where Chris Mazza did not show up, but the COO, Tom Lepine, and Chair Rainer Beltzner did. At that meeting, I made it very, very clear to them that I expected them to be forthright, to answer whatever questions the Auditor General had, whatever questions my ministry had, and to reveal the salaries that they had been hiding of their senior management.

Shortly after that, they did in fact release that information, and that was when the house of cards started to tumble. When I saw the outrageous compensation being paid to Dr. Mazza, I knew there was a whole lot more that needed investigation. It was then that I sent in the forensic audit team, which ultimately has led to a referral to the Ontario Provincial Police. We replaced the CEO. The board resigned, and we put in a completely new board, a very high-calibre board, a board that is doing a superb job in getting Ornge back on track.

So, to answer your question, I became aware of these issues—serious issues—at Ornge shortly after I was reappointed as minister. I acted immediately, and I acted aggressively.

M^{me} France G  linas: As you said, we've had 54 witnesses come before us. I would say at least 45 of them have told us that they rang the alarm bell about Ornge to you directly, to other ministers, to many people within your ministry, for the last two years.

Minister, we have you on tape saying that when the corporate structure was presented to your ministry in January 2011, red flags went up. You knew then that something was wrong. You go on to say, "We tried to get answers but we were stonewalled." What happened from January 2011 till what you say happened in the fall?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Just to be clear, the January 2011 meeting that you're talking about was to brief members of my staff and ministry officials on restructuring, or the creation of a different corporate structure, at Ornge, much of which had already happened. I believe that your party was also briefed, and the Conservative Party was also briefed, on that change, so we all had that information.

That wasn't the problem. The problem was that numbers were being fudged; the number of patients being transported was being fudged. We did not have access to information that we now have access to—

M^{me} France G  linas: So the corporate structure was never an issue for you? You saw the web of for-profit companies and that was not the problem?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The corporate structure was not the problem. The problem was, the leadership at Ornge was more interested in what Ornge could do for them than what they could do for the patients of this province. It was an issue of the culture in that organization, and that is evidenced by their reluctance to cooperate, except through their lawyers in a very legalistic way, with the Auditor General, with myself.

We were told at that time that they had based this corporate structure on the Alberta model, STARS, where they do have a robust charity affiliated with the air ambulance service, that actually generates revenue back. We were told that up to $200 million would flow back to Ontario's air ambulance system from that structure.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But having a transfer payment agency have a charity is something you see in your ministry all the time. Having a web of for-profits, to the scale that was in that briefing, is something that I'm sure none of your bureaucrats had ever seen before, you had never seen before—and I certainly had never seen this before.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: We had very probing questions asked of Ornge about the relationship between the for-profits and the not-for-profits, and we were given very explicit assurances—as I suspect you were, and as I suspect the Progressive Conservatives were when they were briefed—that public money would not flow into supporting the for-profits. In fact, it was the other way around; the direction of money would be from those other entities into the publicly funded system. That was how it was explained. As we know, thanks to the work of the Auditor General and others, that may not have been the way it actually happened.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Minister Matthews, what it shows, though, is that, systematically, through Ornge's inception to present, all the way along, there were briefings conducted with the ministry, apprising the ministry about what was going on. And all the way, the ministry never said, "We don't like the direction you're going. We don't like what you're doing. We don't like this web of corporate for-profit entities." Nowhere along the way did the ministry ever say, "Stop what you're doing. We don't like the direction you're taking." Do you agree with that?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The ministry met, and continues to meet, with Ornge senior management quarterly. They go through various issues and get reports back from Ornge. That work happened then, and it continues to happen. There was an ongoing relationship between the ministry and Ornge dealing with the service to Ontarians. That was the issue: the service to Ontarians. We contract with Ornge to provide air ambulance service. That was the relationship. We now, of course, have wound down, or are in the process of winding down, all of the other entities that were created.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But if that was not the problem, why are we winding them down? They were part of the problem, Minister, and they still are.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: We want Ornge to focus solely on providing excellent air ambulance service to the people of Ontario.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Why didn't you want this back in January 2011? Why didn't you want this back in 2006, when your government set this up that way? Why now?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What I can tell you is that our focus has been on and continues to be on providing excellent care to the people of Ontario. It was thanks to the work of the Auditor General—

M^{me} France Gélinas: But that's what you promised to do. I mean, the Auditor General says, and we all know, in February 2006 you were supposed—"The ministry committed to set standards and monitor performance against those standards ... the 'end result will be improved care, improved access,'" increased efficiency, increased effectiveness etc. This is what you were supposed to do from the start.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The original—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And could I just say, please let the minister answer the questions. Don't cut her off.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The original performance agreement, we all recognize, in hindsight, was not strong enough. The performance indicators did not go as far as, in hindsight, they should have, which is why we have a new performance agreement, with much stronger oversight. We now can track, for example, how many calls come into Ornge but are refused; they are not completed—what's the cause? Why weren't they responded to? We just have far more information now that—in hindsight, of course we would have strengthened that performance agreement. But we have taken the advice—

M^{me} France Gélinas: But you never tried to strengthen it. There are 54 witnesses who have come, and none of them ever said, "Oh, yes, the ministry came to us and they wanted changes." None of this ever happened. It was like this agency was running amok. Everybody was coming to your ministry, to yourself, to other ministers, to tell you that this agency was running amok, and nothing got done.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I have to take issue with some of the characterization of what was happening. Ornge air ambulance provides excellent care to the people of Ontario, and it is getting better and better. You heard from Brandon Doneff this morning about the changes he has seen at Ornge—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, but I've heard about $1.4-million salaries and I've heard about—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Excuse me, please allow the minister to answer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, I'll do that. I'll be the Chair.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We've heard about for-profit entities, and we've heard about—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Chair, she's cut her off again. She isn't getting to answer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead, France.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We've heard about a lot of things that were wrong at Ornge: the salary, the loans that were done, the marketing agreements that were done, the decrease in quality of care—all of this was being fed to you and your ministry.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Oh, excuse me, none of that information was made available—none of that information. I learned about Dr. Mazza's exorbitant salary in December of this past year—on December 22, I think it was. On December 23, a forensic audit team was—

M^{me} France Gélinas: But why didn't you ask before?

Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please let her answer. Please let her answer.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I am the Chair.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: We did ask.

M^{me} France G  linas: We filed a freedom of access to information for his salary two and a half years ago.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Yes, and you heard from Patricia Li that we did not have that information. There was no information provided to the government that outlined the income Chris Mazza was getting from anything but the not-for-profit Ornge air ambulance service. All of the other income he was hiding. It was only after explicit, clear instructions from me that we needed that information that that information was revealed. You heard Dr. Mazza when he testified. He still claims that his compensation was a fraction of what we know it is to be. We did not have that information. Trust me—had we had that information, we would have acted immediately, and that's what we did. When we got the information, we acted immediately.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: The issue isn't that you didn't have the information; the issue is that when you were alerted with a freedom-of-information request, when you were alerted that that was something that the parties wanted—the NDP wanted—you didn't take any steps at that point. Later on, I'm sure you took steps, and we all see that steps were taken. But when you were alerted back in 2010, why weren't steps taken then? Why wasn't it put as clearly as this: "Listen, disclose your salary or we'll withhold payments. Disclose your salary or there will be some severe repercussions"? Why weren't those steps taken back in 2010, when you were given this red flag, when you were given this warning on behalf of the NDP?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: With the benefit of hindsight, of course, we all would have done things differently—with the benefit of hindsight. If I had known then what I know now, of course I would have acted then.

What I can tell you is that the Auditor General was doing his audit. He always has done an excellent job. I had confidence in the work of the Auditor General. I can tell you, as soon as I had known that salary, I would have acted immediately, as I did act immediately. But I can tell you that—

M^{me} France G  linas: But there were also 47 questions from my leader—

Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Once again, with this committee, if we can have—

Mr. Reza Moridi: Mr. Chair, we expect you to chair the meeting properly.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): —if we can keep it as civil as possible—

M^{me} France G  linas: My colleague said you had an opportunity to ask for the salary. Howard Hampton sat here and questioned—47 questions about Ornge in 2010. Not one of them were answered till March 2012. When there are 47 questions asked in estimates that have no answers till March 2012, and then we were told, "See what's happening"—those were also warning signs. Why didn't you look?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I've answered your question. I acted as soon as I became aware. And I'm grateful to the Auditor General because the Auditor General is the one who raised these issues, who informed my ministry. I had a conversation with the Auditor General. I confirmed with him that salary disclosure was part of what he was looking at as the Auditor General.

We've been through this. I'll continue to answer if you wish, but I really am looking for your best advice as we move forward. That is what it is time to do. We have to say, what lessons have we learned and how are we going to make sure this doesn't happen again. We are implementing all of the recommendations of the Auditor General. We have a very strong new board in place. They are driving significant change. You've heard about that.

From this committee—I'm very much looking forward to hearing from you what you think could have happened. What do we have to put in place to make sure it never happens again? We owe that to the people of this province.

M^{me} France G  linas: The point is, Minister, that you had the power to act all along but you chose to act after it hit the front page of the paper. This is why we're still here today, because the warning signs were coming from all sides. They were coming from the NDP, they were coming from the PCs, they were coming from medics coming to you; they were coming from the EMS branch, which was doing an audit and saying things are bad here, things are bad at Ornge. But yet, all of these warning signs, it didn't matter how loud it rang. It didn't seem to leave an impression on you. It kept on going.

Once it hit the front page of the paper, you had all of the power necessary to act and you did, and you acted big time. That shows to me that you had the power all along. Why did it take so long?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Let's put things into perspective here.

M^{me} France G  linas: Sure.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: There were questions asked, I believe, in the spring session of 2011. There were 600 question period questions, three of them from the Conservatives related to Ornge. So let's not inflate the focus—

M^{me} France G  linas: Forty-seven from the NDP during estimates.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Not during question period. I wouldn't overstate your laser-like focus on this issue, nor would I overstate the laser-like focus of the official opposition. It was the Auditor General who, through the diligence of his staff, revealed information, and frankly, it was also the work of some very good journalists in this province who revealed information. It was when that information came to my attention that I acted immediately. I think you would agree that the actions that I took were the right actions, the appropriate actions, but I still very much look forward to your advice on what we still need to do to make it better and to make it stronger.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Minister Matthews, I want to paint a bit of a picture here and I'll ask you this question. My colleague's concerns are that, as a part of your obligation as a minister, oversight should occur throughout your tenure, not just when the Auditor General does great, diligent work, or not when Star reporters or other reporters do great and amazing work.

You were appointed as the minister in October 2009. From October 2009 to October 2011, there were repeated briefings throughout those two years where Ornge met with ministry officials and briefed the ministry about what they were doing. They briefed them about the direction they were taking. They briefed the ministry about the purchase of aircraft. They briefed the ministry about the overall structure that they were implementing. All of these briefings took place; never in those two years did the ministry ever say, "We don't like what you're doing. We want you to do something differently. Stop what you're doing."

Why did the ministry and why did you as minister not take any action to oversee what was happening in Ornge for those two years, when there were numerous red flags brought up by people who were employees, by opposition members? There were a number of red flags set off, and you were being briefed regularly. Why did none of those briefings result in any action by the ministry?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The very clear answer is because Ornge was not giving us that information. You know they did not give us information on salary disclosure. You know they did not give us correct information on the number of patient transfers. You know they withheld information on some issues, on incidents that should have been reported to the ministry. You know they withheld information.

It did get to the point where we were able, with the help of the Auditor General and the forensic audit team and the new leadership at Ornge, to expose these practices. That is where we are now: We are fixing the problems that were created.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'll save my last seven minutes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move on to the government. Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Chair, I'd like to ask the Auditor General a couple of questions to start with.

Mr. Jim McCarter: Of course, Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: When did you start your audit?

Mr. Jim McCarter: We would have started our fieldwork probably in January 2011. I think I phoned Dr. Mazza in the late fall to give him the good news that the auditors were coming in. We had a lengthy chat over the phone, mostly talking about timing and what we would look at and that sort of thing. I think my field staff ended up getting in there in late December or early January, and we would have wrapped up our fieldwork towards the end of May. But as I've indicated previously, we did have some difficulties getting information and documents. I can give you more chronology if you'd like.

Mr. Phil McNeely: When did you report to the government?

Mr. Jim McCarter: The way a value-for-money audit works is, we have an oral debriefing, and then we go to a draft report. We had an oral debriefing with Ornge and with the ministry in June, but there wouldn't have been anything that I would call a hard-copy document. We outlined some of the issues and the concerns, some of which we've discussed today, and then we provided Ornge and the ministry with a draft report in mid- to late December.

By way of background—I think the minister referred to the nine years I've been doing this—I've probably had about 135 value-for-money audits; this was the only audit out of 135 that we just could not get wrapped up in time to get into the annual report. We report all of our value-for-money work and all of our other work in one annual report. On this particular one, as the minister has indicated, we had difficulties getting reliable information. We decided that we could not make the translation deadline, which for us is basically late October, so at that point, quite frankly, we put it on the back burner for a few months while we got the rest of our stuff done. We ended up tabling it as a special report, as you know, Mr. McNeely, in March.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Did the minister help you get the information?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I think what I testified the last time, when Dr. Mazza was here, is that we eventually got most of the information, but it took an abnormally long length of time. We discussed with the ministry that we were having some issues in September, but we really felt it was our job to get the information and deal with Ornge. So it would be unfair to say we went to the ministry and they didn't do anything. We felt it was more an issue with us.

Our main issue in September with the draft report was saying to the ministry—and really, the issue has been raised where there were a lot of changes from the initial draft report to what you had in March. I'd have to say we did make some changes in wording, and we changed some of the facts. But the major issues that we had with respect to—we really felt the ministry needed to get more information to properly oversee Ornge. We indicated that part of that was due to the limitations of the performance agreement. But we also did say we think the ministry should be pushing harder in some of the areas to get more reliable information. But many of the areas that we kind of set out in September ended up in our final report in March, Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Thank you.

Minister, thank you very much for being here today. I know that you've put in a lot of work towards restoring confidence in Ontario's air ambulance system, and that includes—and we heard that from a critical care paramedic this morning—that included visiting, and this was something that impressed him, up in Thunder Bay, I believe.

So you have gone to Ornge bases, and you've met the front-line staff. Can you tell this committee about what you have learned from Ornge's front-line staff?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Well, first and foremost, I have learned that these are extraordinarily dedicated, highly skilled people. We are extremely blessed to have the front-line staff at Ornge that we have.

I talked to them about why they got into this field. I talked to them about the changes they were seeing at Ornge. I asked them for their advice on what more we needed to do.

I can tell you that some of our front-line paramedics and pilots and engineers and others have been very hurt by some of the allegations that have been made in the Legislature, in this committee, about their dedication and their professionalism.

These are extraordinary people, and we see them in action on the news from time to time. They go into situations that—I tell you, there aren't too many people I know who could do the work they do. These are very highly skilled, dedicated professionals. They want to do the very best they can for the patients they serve—and you heard Mr. Doneff this morning expressing that. He is driven by a desire to help people on the worst day of their life. That's what drives these people.

We have remarkable staff on the front lines, staff who were let down by the old leadership at Ornge. I can tell you, I heard many, many stories about how attempts to make things better were shut down. They weren't just ignored; they were actually threatened. I think you heard today about a threat to fire a whole base—to shut down a whole base. It was a management style that when I hear about it, I am embarrassed. I just find it beyond understanding why anyone would attack their own front-line staff the way that I heard Dr. Mazza do—I heard stories of Dr. Mazza doing that.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Just yesterday, everyone on this committee received a letter from a member of the front-line staff in Thunder Bay, Poul-Erik Binderup, who is a senior pilot for the fixed-wing operations. I would like to read part of this letter into the record. We'll table the entire document. It's here, Mr. Clerk, if people want it, for distribution.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Apparently it has been distributed already.

Mr. Phil McNeely: It has been distributed?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes.

Mr. Phil McNeely: So I'll just go and read that letter.

"My name is Poul-Erik Binderup and I am the senior pilot for the fixed-wing operations at Ornge Global Air. I am one of 45 professional pilots that serve the province of Ontario flying the Pilatus PC-12NG aircraft, and I am writing this letter in the hope that the voices of those professional men and women can be heard....

"The Honourable Deb Matthews's installation of Mr. Ron McKerlie as interim CEO, and the major corporate restructuring that followed, gave us a sense of hope that we would be able to continue to serve the people of Ontario as medevac pilots....

"What we were not prepared for was the way the media and some members of the provincial government portrayed the operation and what we do. We were portrayed as a burden on the system, called a safety hazard, an accident waiting to happen. We have been misrepresented by the press, and have even been jeered publicly, and there have been many other derogatory statements made about the operation or the aircraft....

"While this has been unsettling and frustrating to say the least, we were perhaps most unprepared for how some of our colleagues, paramedics and helicopter pilots, gathered and presented information that was biased or flawed with the seeming intent on shutting down the operation. Some of that information has been heard by the committee. I cannot state emphatically enough that these individuals do not speak for me or the fixed-wing pilot group, nor do they have our support....

"But the intent of this letter is not to dwell on the negative, unfounded opinions of a few misinformed individuals. To the contrary, we have been overwhelmed by the support we have received from individuals like the Honourable Deb Matthews and interim CEO Ron McKerlie. And I wish for the rest of the standing committee, and indeed the people of Ontario, to understand the pride that we take every day in serving as medevac pilots.

"We operate 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year. The aircraft that we fly, the Pilatus PC-12NG, is one of the most state-of-the-art aircraft in its class. With this aircraft, we have more technology and safety features at our fingertips than many of the airliners in operation at the major airlines today. Our maintenance department is second to none, and keeps these aircraft in top condition....

"In closing, I want to reiterate that not only are we proud of the service we provide to the people of Ontario as medevac pilots, we are also proud to be a part of something special. Many of us have been with Ornge from the very beginning of the fixed-wing operation. We have had many challenges to overcome as a brand new air operator, and we have met every challenge head-on. We continue to grow in our operation and we all understand what it means to be a part of the solution, not a part of the problem. For this reason we stand behind people like Ms. Matthews who are committed to making a difference in the lives of Ontarians, not by shutting down Ornge, but by picking up the pieces, solving the problems and creating a world-class medevac operation that not only we the pilots can be proud of, but the people of Ontario can be proud of as well. Thank you for your time and consideration....

"Poul-Erik Binderup

"Ornge PC-12 captain"

Minister, I know that you have also spent some time at Ornge's head office. Can you tell this committee about what you have discussed with the new leadership at Ornge?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: There's a very clear mandate with the new leadership and they are embracing that mandate. Number one, the issue of patient safety—that, first and foremost, was the issue that I wanted them to focus on immediately. They've made tremendous progress.

You've heard about the interiors of the aircraft. We had been assured that that was not a problem, that that problem had been rectified. Well, in fact, that was not the case, but I'm happy to report that the interiors are now—they're moving into the second phase of the appropriate configuration of the interior of those helicopters. I am delighted that Barry McLellan, who is the CEO at Sunnybrook hospital, a former chief coroner of the province of Ontario, a very highly respected individual, is leading up their quality-improvement work. So on the issue of patient safety, there is significant progress that is being made.

I also instructed them to wind down the for-profits, and that work is under way. Many have already been wound up and the others are in process. It is a complicated arrangement but they are making progress on winding down those for-profits.

I have learned about the commitment of those board members. I also had an opportunity to visit the communications centre where—I think all of us as MPPs learn more when you go and actually have a site visit. I was able to talk to those people who work in the communications centre, better understand how they triage patients, how they follow aircraft, how they ensure that people get the care they need as quickly as possible.

Air ambulance is a very complicated business because there are a lot of different components that need to be coordinated for the benefit of an individual patient at a specific moment. I was able to see, when I went to the Ornge head office, what happens in that communications centre. I was able to tour the building, and saw the extravagances of the previous leadership. But most importantly, I was able to meet with the board and get a report on how they are moving forward on the issues that had been raised.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Chair, how much more time have I got?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about 13 minutes.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Okay, thank you.

I would like to read into the record part of a letter from John Cunnane, the chief of Niagara EMS, to the interim CEO of Ornge, Ron McKerlie. I will table the entire letter to the committee. You already have a copy. I will just read parts of Mr. Cunnane's letter. This has to do with a very unfortunate accident at the Niagara Gorge—

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If you could provide a copy, then, for the—

Mr. Phil McNeely: We have a copy here. Can I continue?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes.

Mr. Phil McNeely: This is on the scene of that accident.

"After an on-scene assessment ... and once our paramedic crew/s knew what they were faced with they requested air ambulance at approximately 18:11; after doing weather check air accepted with an ETA of 20 minutes. From 18:46 to 19:04 there was constant communication between our Niagara ambulance dispatch (NACS) and 799, and our ground ops supervisors to confirm a landing site. Together, 799, our ops supervisor and NACS coordinated an appropriate landing site at a nearby park, the flight medics were then transported by Niagara EMS to the scene at the top of the Niagara Gorge. On arrival at the scene the 799 medics received a scene and patient update and began interacting with other responders at the scene (NEMS, fire, Niagara Parks Police and NRPS) as well as one patient's family member to describe the plan for patient treatment and transport, and provided leadership on patient care from this point forward. Once the patient was extricated from the gorge, responders, under the direction of the flight crew, assisted the 799 medics in properly immobilizing the patient and moving him to our ambulance for transport to the landing site. According to my senior manager on-site this was a seamless and well-coordinated effort on the part of all responders, resulting in timely and effective care for the patient....

"I believe this is a classic example"—this is John Cunnane, chief, Niagara EMS—"of how an integrated land and air system should operate, in this case the patient received the very best care possible by all responding agencies."

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Chair, we'll save the rest of our round till next time.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well, in which case we will move on to the official opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Minister, I want to make it very clear that no one around this table or anyone in the Legislature has ever, over the last number of months since this Ornge issue became an issue, called into question the dedication of our front-line staff, be they paramedics or be they pilots. What we have called into question is your leadership and what is clearly the failed oversight of your ministry of our air ambulance service.

We've heard your excuses as to why you didn't intervene sooner. You tell us that you were not aware, that you were lied to, that you weren't given proper information. I'd like to ask you, with regard to a letter that you received dated May 4, 2011, from the Ontario Air Transport Association—members of the committee have copies of that letter—do you recall the letter I'm referring to?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I am aware of it, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: We can distribute this, Clerk, if you like.

In that letter, there was specific reference made to a number of concerns that the Ontario Air Transport Association raised, and they deal extensively with issues that relate to matters of patient care, conflicts of interest.

I'd like to ask you this question: Did you ever acknowledge that letter?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What I would like to do first is take issue with your first statement, Mr. Klees. I would like to read back to you some statements you have made that undermine confidence—

Mr. Frank Klees: This is not a debate. I'm asking—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: —undermine confidence in the front-line staff.

Mr. Frank Klees: I am asking you a specific question—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: You have made a statement, Mr. Klees, and it is—

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Let's keep this civilised, please. So—

Mr. Frank Klees: We are asking the questions here, Minister—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you may not like her answer, but we have to let her answer.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, what we don't have to do, Chair, is allow the minister to deflect a very specific question about a very important stakeholder group.

I'm asking the minister very specifically, did you ever acknowledge the letter from the Ontario Air Transport Association? Yes or no?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And we'll let the minister answer.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: As you prefaced your question with a comment, I will preface my answer with a comment. You, Mr. Klees, have made some very damaging comments. Let me just refresh your memory.

"I would not want to be a pilot, I would not want to be a paramedic and I would not want to be a patient. Knowing the track record of these helicopters, I would take my chances getting from point A to point B with some other means."

You don't consider that to be an insult to the staff at Ornge who are responsible for the maintenance of those aircraft?

Mr. Frank Klees: No, I do not, Minister. What it is is an insult of the management and of your lack of oversight in ensuring that we have the proper equipment and the proper resources.

We heard from a paramedic just before you came here, who continues to tell us that they were desperate to be assured of proper resources. They were told that because of the lack of funding, a base was going to be cut down. That is the concern of front-line paramedics.

Now, if you're finished with your preamble, would you answer my question? Did you ever acknowledge the letter from the Ontario Air Transport Association or not?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I would also like to remind you of the time—

Mr. Frank Klees: What are you hiding?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I am hiding nothing.

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, point of order, pursuant to standing order 23(k)—I'm entitled to make a point of order pursuant to a standing order.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Let the minister answer.

Mr. David Zimmer: No, Chair, I want to—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You don't have the floor.

Minister, please answer.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Minister.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead, Minister.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Mr. Klees, you said on March 6, "An Ornge-contracted PC-12 medevac Pilatus fixed-wing aircraft crash-landed at the Timmins airport on January 13 of this year. The reason: Its single engine failed." Do you recall asking me that question?

Mr. Frank Klees: I do, indeed.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Well, in fact, we now have the truth of what happened there. We have a letter that has been delivered to this committee stating that your comments completely misrepresent our operation, and especially the level of safety we work so hard to maintain.

The only point that I'm making is that you have heard from front-line staff who are doing their very, very best. Our job now is to make the kind of changes, continue to make the changes that we've been making, to ensure that patients get the best possible care. That goal is not supported by you continuing to make completely erroneous statements about the safety of care at Ornge.

So on behalf of the front-line staff, on behalf of the paramedics, the pilots, the doctors, the engineers, all of the people who work at the communications centre, all of the people at Ornge, 600 staff, would you stop running down the organization and start being part of the solution?

We are looking to this committee—I am hungry for this committee to finish its work, to write its report, to give me your recommendations on what we need to do to continue to strengthen air ambulance in this province. It is not supported—

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, Minister—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: —when you go off—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead with the question.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Finally.

Minister, let me give you that recommendation.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I would like the recommendation of the committee. Your personal recommendations are interesting, but it is the committee's work that I am—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Minister, let him ask the questions.

Mr. Frank Klees: Because you know my recommendation would be, first of all, start with your resignation, put some qualified people into a management position, so that we can restore confidence in our air ambulance service.

You didn't listen to stakeholders. I'll answer the question for you. The stakeholders said you didn't acknowledge that letter; you didn't acknowledge repeated calls from stakeholders. Why did you not, then, listen, at least, to your own ministry advice?

I'm going to distribute—Chair, if you would. There was an email that was distributed, and attached to it is a confidential advice to the minister. Once again, I'm going to ask you, when you see that document: Did you ever see this confidential advice to the minister?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I'm sorry; what are you referring to here?

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm referring to an email that starts off from Malcolm Bates, who is a director of the emergency health services branch, to Joy Stevenson, at the Ministry of Health, asking her to arrange for an analysis of the consolidated statements of Ornge. Attached to it is the response, entitled Emergency Health Services Request Re: Ornge Financial Statements.

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, it's a several-page document. Give the minister a chance to read over the email and the attached document—

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I'll gladly take the minister through this document, and Mr. Zimmer can watch.

This document, that's marked "Confidential Advice to Minister," was issued in response to an email from Malcolm Bates. Mr. Bates refers in his email to Patricia having requested the analysis. Who would that be?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I suspect that would be Patricia Li.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did she ever discuss this document with you?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I don't recall that, no.

Mr. Frank Klees: So apparently Ms. Li asked the Ministry of Finance to review the Ornge financial statements. The response was given in a confidential advice to the minister, and Ms. Li never shared that with the minister. Is that what you're telling me?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I think I will take a minute to review—if it would be possible to come back to this, perhaps—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes. If you want to take a minute to look it over, go ahead.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Thank you. I will need some advice. Perhaps—

Mr. David Zimmer: It's got detailed annotations from somebody on it, underlining—

Mr. Frank Klees: Those are mine. I'm sharing my document with you, Mr. Zimmer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Minister, did you want your staff to look at it?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I would like to give you an appropriate answer, and I will—

Mr. David Zimmer: I propose a recess—

Mr. Frank Klees: Let's have a recess. I don't want this to—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll have a five-minute recess for you—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Sure. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay.

The committee recessed from 1127 to 1133.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'll call the committee back to order, then, and go to Mr. Klees. Minister, are you ready to answer, or do you need anything further from Mr. Klees?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Sure, I'd be happy to.

First of all, this is a very complex document. I have not seen this document before. I do think that it is of a detailed nature, and I would need some advice—in fact, better to get the author of the document to testify as to what's in this document.

I know that Peter Wallace, who is a former Deputy Minister of Finance, did testify already and he has spoken to the issue of the bonds. I can read from Hansard. You have been through this territory before, but let's go there again.

On April 18, 2012, he—

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, this is ridiculous.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Let the minister answer, and then you'll get a chance.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Peter Wallace, when he was asked about exposure—and I assume that's what this is about, exposure of the taxpayer—he was clear that “bondholders do not have direct access back into the provincial credit.”

He said, “From a government of Ontario perspective, with respect, we were assured—we understand factually—that there is adequate insulation from the province's credit.”

Mr. Frank Klees: Speaker, given the minister's conduct here in wanting to simply chew away our time, I will change my format. I will simply make the points that I believe need to be on the record.

First of all, this is a “Confidential Advice to Minister” document. I find it passing strange and quite frightening, actually, that the minister would receive a document like this and wouldn't know of its existence. I question seriously—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: With respect, Mr. Klees, you have been a minister. You understand the protocols.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, with all respect—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: The reality is that this document, which was presented to you—and if you didn't receive it, certainly it was presented to Ms. Li in July of last year.

The first item on this document refers to a loan receivable. This comes right out of the documents, the financial statements, of Ornge: “There is a loan receivable of $4.3 million in 2010-11. This is a concern as Ornge is not in the business of advancing monies and, these are taxpayer dollars that have been lent. Are you aware of the details of the loan? Note 2 does not provide” any “information to properly assess the risk. We understand that a vendor provided seed money to Ornge to prepare the business plan for the new ... ventures.... We hope that this is not linked to that transaction. If the transaction was with a related party, this would have needed to be included in the note disclosure.”

The next item, restricted cash: “This balance has declined”—this is restricted cash of Ornge—“significantly from the prior year ($113 million down to $11.8 million). Most of the balance was internally restricted funds in Ornge Issuer Trust related to acquisition of aircraft and infrastructure. Again this flags the issue of the province’s funds being used to secure assets. We need to ensure that we still have title to the assets in the event of financial issues with Ornge as we may need to step in to assume the debt if there were issues.”

The next item, capital assets: “The balance has significantly increased this year from $94.6 million to $264.4 million.” In part, this relates to the “sale and leaseback transaction on Ornge’s building. If this has occurred, then we need to ensure that the terms are at fair market value and that if the transaction was used to unlock value for the” new business venture, “that the value has not been transferred to other profit-oriented ventures within the Ornge group.”

Number 5, bonds payable: “The bond payable has increased from $272.5 million to $295.7 million. This is due to the issuance of a first mortgage series A bond on January 31, 2011, for ‘general corporate and investment purposes.’ We are concerned with the note disclosure which states: ‘The bond is secured by a first fixed and specific mortgage, pledge, charge, assignment and security interest in and to the organization’s corporate building, the related land and fixtures, and all benefits to be derived from these assets, including the lease of these assets.’ If legal services has not reviewed this bond, we recommend that they should....”

Next is revenue, in item number 7: “The ministry accounts for $149.3 million of Ornge’s total revenue....” It goes on to say the transfer agency rules require that transfer partner recipients “deposit all funding from the province in an interest-bearing account and remit this money back to the consolidated revenue fund. If this is investment income, it should be reviewed to ensure it is compliant with the performance agreement” and the transfer partner agreement.

Number 9 refers to foreign exchange and derivatives. Referring to the bond, which was issued in US funds, which is against the performance agreement, “This is an issue fully discussed in the past ... initially unhedged bond and the risk that this had to Ornge and to the province in consuming expenses that could otherwise have been spent in Ornge’s core business”—a specific warning about that bond issue.

It goes on in number 10: “In 2010, nine entities were included in the audited financial statements: Ornge, Ornge Peel,” a numbered company, “Orngeco, Ornge Global R/E, Ornge Real Estate, Ornge Foundation, J Smarts, Ornge Issuer Trust. However, in 2011, only six entities are included....”

Question 12: “There are significant commitments for principal payments on the bond and for lease commitments on the building, pursuant to the sale and leaseback....”

It goes on to refer to the fact that the province will be on the hook for the additional payments that are coming due. Here, in note 6 of this document—and I quote from the document that was sent to you, Minister, as confidential advice: “In particular, Ornge appears to have substantial principal payments on its loan(s) coming due in several years which could impact upon its financial status.”

Note 8 of the audited financial statements of Ornge discloses the principal payments on the bonds payable: in 2012—December of this year—an additional $83,000, increasing next year to $3,285,000; in 2014, increasing to $6,764,000.

Minister, this is disclosure to you by your own ministry that Ornge is obligated, in addition to the interest payments on those bonds, to begin paying principal back. My question to you is this: Given the fact that Ornge has no income other than the transfer payments from the Ministry of Health of $150 million, where are all of these payments coming from that Ornge is obligated to pay, if not from the province of Ontario? And if, as you say, you’re not on the hook for this, who is?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you have seven minutes. You wanted to be told about your time.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. I’ll pass for the next time, after the minister answers this question.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What I can do is refer you back to the testimony of Peter Wallace, the then Deputy Minister of Finance, who made it—

Mr. Frank Klees: He did not answer any of these questions.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: He made it very clear that the taxpayers of Ontario are not on the hook.

Mr. Frank Klees: This document—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: This is a document that—

Mr. Frank Klees: This document belies that testimony.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I heard a lot of “ifs” in there. This is a document dated June 2011. I obviously would be happy to take a further look at it and get an answer to you.

But I can tell you, Mr. Klees, you have many, many times made statements that, upon further examination, turned out to be simply not true.

Let me give you another example. You claimed that people were dying as a result of Ornge. Well, the chief coroner said—the chief coroner, and I take his word over yours, I’m afraid, on issues related to fatalities. The chief coroner said, “Of our completed investigations, there have been no cases”—

Mr. Frank Klees: Of the completed investigations.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: You claim people are dying. You do not have the qualifications to be a chief coroner. You do not—

Mr. Frank Klees: I suggest you don't either.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I do not, but I rely on someone who does have those credentials, and the team of people. They do thorough investigations. You made allegations; they were not true allegations.

You claimed in question period on March 5, 2012, that the tail rotors fall off these helicopters. Well, in fact, we now know, because we always look into whatever allegations you make, that the memorandum that Mr. Klees was referring to did not apply to Ornge's helicopters. You have time and time—

Mr. Frank Klees: They were AW139s. Of course not. Minister, you can't be serious.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Time and time again, you have made allegations that have turned out, after investigation—

Mr. Frank Klees: You can't be serious.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: —to be completely erroneous.

Mr. Frank Klees: You really think that excuses you.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: So I fully expected that you would drop something today.

Mr. Frank Klees: Unbelievable.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I will undertake to investigate here, Speaker.

Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'm going to have some order in this committee, please—

Mr. Frank Klees: Unbelievable.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): —just so I can hear the answer of the minister.

Continue, Minister.

Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, we'll move on to the NDP, then. Go ahead. Ms. Gélinas? Mr. Singh.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you very much. Minister, you indicated, when I asked you the question regarding your tenure from October 2009 to October 2011—you indicated a number of things that you didn't know, that Ornge hadn't told you. I accept that there are certain things that Ornge didn't tell you, but there are certain things you did know that you didn't mention.

You did know that in 2009, Dr. Mazza's salary was off of the sunshine list; you were aware of that. Your ministry was also briefed that the changes—that the ministry did not have any issue with—would allow his salary to come off. The structure changes that allowed his salary to not be disclosed were disclosed to you, that there would be certain changes. That, you were aware of.

You were also aware of, in 2010, an audit—the audit was conducted previously, the results of which were released in November 2010. That audit released a number of recommendations. Those were also given to you, in addition to our prior comments regarding the questions asked in estimates and the freedom-of-information requests. You had all of that from October 2009 to October 2011, yet you didn't take any action with respect to any of those items, and you were tacitly agreeing without saying anything in opposition to those.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I just want to correct your characterization of the—I think you're talking about the MNP report.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Right.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The report states that, overall, "our review indicated that Ornge is using provincial grant funding economically, efficiently and for the purposes intended in providing air ambulance and related services" for the province. I can tell you that this report was handed over to the Auditor General to provide whatever information it might to the work in his office. So this report did give us this confidence. We later found out that further digging would have resulted in perhaps a different outcome.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Just to keep to what Mr. Klees was saying, there are now millions of precious health care dollars that have been wasted at Ornge. We now have news reports claiming that AgustaWestland wants to recoup $1.8 million from Ornge. Minister, will the taxpayers be on the hook for this? And if not the taxpayers, who will pay?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What I can tell you is that my understanding is that that is of a company that has now gone bankrupt, so one of the for-profit entities that no longer exists. I can tell you that is not of concern to taxpayers.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right.

The Auditor General made five recommendations; all recommendations required actions from your ministry. He said there were some problems at Ornge but he also pointed to huge problems within your ministry. I want you to tell us: Do you acknowledge that by failing to conduct proper oversight, by failing to listen to whistleblowers that tried to blow the whistle, by failing to act on some of the recommendations from the audit and basically by taking the word of Mr. Apps, the president of the federal Liberal Party, you are, if not completely, in part responsible for the scandal at Ornge?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What I can tell you is that as soon as I became aware of problems I took decisive and immediate action. When the Auditor General told me he was having trouble getting information—the same story that my ministry officials were telling me. When I called Chris Mazza—but he didn't come—into my office for a conversation about, "You need to be accountable. You need to answer questions of the Auditor General. The Auditor General is not getting answers to questions he's asking?" They needed to release that information. They subsequently started to release some of it. It was the issue around salaries that was just outrageous that triggered the forensic audit, that has triggered an OPP investigation.

It is very clear that the leadership at Ornge hid information from us, fudged information, did not provide us with the information we needed. It's also very clear, and the Auditor General has pointed out, that the information that we were mandated to receive through the performance agreement simply was not adequate.

So now it's time. We are making appropriate changes, and it is time that we pass Bill 50 because we must entrench further oversight into legislation, we must protect whistle-blowers in legislation, we must give the minister the power to appoint a supervisor in legislation. So I look forward to the advice this committee can offer in order to strengthen air ambulance service. That's what this is all about. We have a collective duty to the patients of Ontario.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If you're done with your answer, we'll move to the government.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: How much time do I have left, Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Nine minutes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you very much.

First of all, if we could just clarify this document. First of all, Minister, for the benefit of everybody who isn't yourself, a minister, or Mr. Klees, who is a past minister, does every document that says "Confidential Advice to Minister" end up on the minister's desk?

1150

Hon. Deborah Matthews: No, it does not.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So when one asks the question, "Did you receive this document?", just because it says "Confidential Advice to Minister," that is not necessarily related to, did you actually see it?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Absolutely. And any past minister or current minister would know that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Exactly. In fact, even parliamentary assistants have generally figured it out.

This particular document, going back to the exchange that we had earlier with the auditor, is a request from Ministry of Health staff at the end of June. So this may have been a follow-up to the preliminary verbal conversation—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Excuse me, I just want to interrupt for a second and ask the cameras to give a bit of space to the—please.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In response to that, the Ministry of Health staff asked the Ministry of Finance staff to provide some financial analysis based on the consolidated statements, which would be information that the Ministry of Finance would be responsible for preparing. On July 22, that analysis was returned. That document is what has been tabled, and all the people who are copied on the returned document and have this document distributed to them are in fact all bureaucrats. None of them are political staffers. None of them are you. They're all bureaucrats. They're all ministry staff.

Did any of the people who had a copy of this document ever share it with you?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: No, they did not.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So while it may contain interesting information, and I think it is worth a read, it's not information of which you were aware in the summer of 2011.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: That is absolutely correct. I have not seen that document before it was provided to me just a few minutes ago.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. Now, if we could just follow up on Madame Gélinas's question. She referenced the recommendations that were eventually made by the Auditor General. Could you give us an indication of what has already been done in response to those recommendations by the AG?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I would be very pleased to do that. I think it's important that this committee knows that significant action has been taken. In fact, we estimate we're about halfway there in implementing the recommendations from the auditor. We're on track to have all recommendations fully implemented by the fall of 2013.

Recommendation number 1: The auditor recommended that we review whether the amount the ministry pays for air ambulance is reasonable for the level of service provided by renegotiating the performance agreement to provide direct access to Ornge's affiliated organizations; evaluating the cost and delivery compared to previous years; establishing additional performance indicators with more frequent and more informative reports on the extent to which performance expectations are being met.

I'm very happy to report on the progress on that recommendation. We do have a new performance agreement. You've heard about that. It requires approval for changes to the corporate structure and requires compliance with the Broader Public Sector Accountability Act and the Public Sector Salary Disclosure Act. So we have fixed that problem. We will now have full reporting of compensation for those at Ornge.

The second: An interjurisdictional scan examining provision of air ambulance services across Ontario is currently under way. It is on track to be completed by the end of this year.

Under the new PA, Ornge is required to report to the ministry on a number of key performance indicators, according to a pre-set timeline. This is also on track to be completed by the end of this calendar year.

Recommendation number 2: The auditor recommended that we conduct a formal program evaluation of critical care land ambulance that would assess total demand; assess capacity at the municipal land ambulances instead of having Ornge do it; and comparing the cost of different service options.

I can tell you that that is currently under way. It is including an assessment of need for inter-facility patient transfers. The review is to be completed in this fiscal year, with implementation of the review's findings in 2013-14.

Recommendation number 3: changes to ensure patients' needs are met in the most cost-efficient manner. I can tell you the progress on that recommendation.

Ornge is now better tracking how often hospital staff must accompany a patient because appropriately trained paramedics are not available. We are also beginning to review the reasons for flight cancellations after takeoff.

The ministry and Ornge are reviewing the feasibility of linking the land and air ambulance dispatch systems. Ornge is also undertaking the substantive work of ensuring the most appropriate aircraft are routed to pick up and deliver patients requiring transport.

Recommendation number 4: to enable air ambulance response times to be assessed against performance standards and for reasonableness, including the tracking of key times in the call-handling process, while expanding the provisions in the performance agreement requirements to include indicators on response times for the key stages of a patient transport, from the time a call is received, to the time when Ornge is on site, to the time the patient reaches his or her destination.

I'm very pleased to report that the amended performance agreement requires Ornge to report on key reaction and response time indicators; that Ornge is undertaking system upgrades to meet this enhanced reporting requirement; that Ornge is undertaking a review and developing a plan to ensure all times in the call-handling process are properly recorded.

Recommendation number 5, the final recommendation: that the ministry should conduct unannounced service reviews of Ornge; that Ornge should identify systemic issues from improved complaint tracking; and Ornge should review its quality assessment evaluation measures to ensure they reflect key elements of good patient care—again, significant progress.

Ornge has established an operations quality committee to evaluate and address quality assessment evaluation measures, and they're developing a quality improvement plan like our hospitals do. The ministry continues to conduct regular unannounced service reviews. Ornge is using an improved complaints tracking system to identify any systemic issues. The ministry's investigation unit has reviewed what complaints, incidents and resulting investigations at Ornge should be forwarded to the ministry and has worked with Ornge, including providing training to designated staff to ensure the reporting requirements on incidents are clear.

You can see from this that we took the Auditor General's report very, very seriously. We are implementing every single one of the recommendations. I want to supplement that with the findings of this committee. You have had a very thorough focus on this issue of Ornge. You have heard from, I think, 54 witnesses—hours and hours of testimony. You will have very good advice for us, and I'm very much looking forward to receiving that advice so we can integrate that into the strengthening of Ornge.

As I say, Ontario patients are counting on us to do what's right. None of us ever want to be a patient, but, I tell you, if ever someone we love needs an air ambulance, we have a collective responsibility to ensure that it's as good as it can be. That work is under way, and I look forward to the results of this committee.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We're out of time there. We have five minutes left for Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Point number 13, the final point on that document, Minister, that I handed you, that you've never seen, that six of your bureaucrats, including your assistant deputy minister Ms. Li, saw and failed to bring to your attention, is this: If "Ornge is unsuccessful and the ministry may have increased expenditures with limited value having been extracted and may need to pay twice for the same assets—by being morally if not legally obligated to assume liabilities. These are both significant risks and Ornge should obtain advice from legal services on this."

Apparently, you neither saw this, it wasn't brought to your attention and neither did you get the legal advice, and that's why we're in the mess that we're in today.

My advice to you: Those six bureaucrats who failed to bring such sensitive information and high-risk information to your attention should be given their walking papers.

I'd also suggest to you that you should be very careful when you talk about how co-operative you and your ministry have been. I have here a stack of freedom-of-information requests that were submitted to your ministry in February of this year. We have yet to hear from them; what we did get has most of the information redacted. I would ask you, and I'll leave this with you, if you would at least undertake to ensure that we get all of this information.

Given the fact that we're running out of time—we did have three hours scheduled for Chris Mazza, who has refused to appear—given the fact that we have so much information and have yet to get to the bottom of your contradictions, I'm asking you now: Will you agree to come and testify in that period of time that we had set aside for Mr. Mazza so that we can continue to pursue this with you?

Finally, I will say this to you, Minister: You asked for our advice. For someone who it took two years and six months to get any information about a situation that was brewing under your watch and not to have sufficient initiative to ensure that you get the information that you need, not to pick up the phone and call a man who was responsible for overseeing 150 million of taxpayers' dollars and not making it your business—notwithstanding what a performance agreement said or didn't say—and do what you did in December, as you testified, that you picked up the phone, that you took the initiative, regardless of what was in the performance agreement, and you said, "I want that information," you failed miserably in exercising your oversight responsibility.

You said you believe the Auditor General, and we did too, and you know what he said. The Auditor General made it very clear: You and your ministry failed in your oversight responsibilities of Ornge. That is in his report. Those are his words, not mine.

Based on that and based on the fact that you continue to deny any responsibility, continue to lay off all kinds of excuses on people within your ministry, Mazza and the board of directors, I'm suggesting to you: The honourable thing for you to do is to admit your failure and offer to step aside as Minister of Health.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Was there a question there? I'm not sure there was. But I would like to say: If you want to do the honourable thing, Mr. Klees, you will stop running down the front-line staff at Ornge. You have repeatedly made allegations that, upon further reflection, turned out to be erroneous. That is having a negative impact on the front-line staff. We've heard—

Mr. Frank Klees: Will you agree to come back in Mr. Mazza's place to testify?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I said earlier that I will happily come back. We will work out the schedules—

Mr. Frank Klees: Then we will schedule you in Dr. Mazza's place. Is that an agreement?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I don't know when Dr. Mazza was scheduled.

Mr. Frank Klees: Dr. Mazza was scheduled to be here on Thursday—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What I say: There's a process—

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: —on Wednesday, tomorrow.

Interjection.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: There's a process by which we schedule these things—

Mr. Frank Klees: We'll accommodate.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I told you I will come back. I can't right now commit to those specific times, but of course I will. I said that before. I stand by that. I'd be more than happy to come back—

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: I would think this would be a priority.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: —but what I do—

Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): On that note, we are out of time. I would thank the minister for coming before the committee this morning.

We are recessed until this afternoon at 1 o'clock.

The committee recessed from 1204 to 1301.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, I'd like to call this committee to order for this afternoon's proceedings.

Just as we start, I would like to clarify that Dr. Chris Mazza was invited to come before the committee this afternoon from 4:30 until 7. Just to clarify: It is not that he has refused to come before the committee. He has a letter from his doctor, citing a lack of fitness to attend the hearing. I just wanted to clarify that point.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: If I might: My understanding is that we had scheduled three days. We have the ability—I realize it's short notice today. We have Mr. Beltzner coming tomorrow. We have a last day of hearings scheduled, authorized by the Legislature. The minister did say that she would agree to come back. I would ask that we direct the clerk to invite her to come during that slot on Thursday afternoon from 4 to 7.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But we agreed that France has a flight to catch at 4:30.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I think if it's between getting the minister again or getting a flight, I'll get the minister.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. Very good. We'll see about that invitation. We'll put the invitation forward.

MS. RHODA BEECHER

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our first person for this afternoon is Rhoda Beecher. If I could ask you to come forward, please. Just to confirm that you've received the letter for a witness coming before the committee?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I have.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Also, are you going to swear an affirmation, then?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, please.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Ms. Beecher, do you solemnly affirm that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Who is that that you have with you?

Ms. Beth Symes: I'm Beth Symes. I'm counsel to Ms. Beecher.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. And it's time for the government to go first, so who would like to go? Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes, thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sorry. Did you want to make an opening statement?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, I don't. That's fine. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, then we'll go to Mr. Zimmer, and we'll go in 20-minute rotations.

Mr. David Zimmer: Twenty minutes? Thank you, Chair. I don't expect I'll use the 20 minutes.

Ms. Beecher, my information is that you are a human resources professional.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: I have your resumé. You've been doing HR work since the early 1980s, I guess?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: Could you just briefly walk me through the highlights of your career, the four or five different positions that you've had.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Certainly. I started at Toronto Hydro in—the early 1970s?

Mr. David Zimmer: I don't need it detailed—just so I get a quick overview.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Okay—many years ago—and worked in a bargaining unit position at Hydro for the first number of years. I was the first woman to work a shift job at Toronto Hydro.

I was then promoted through to the human resources department. I worked in the human resources department as a generalist, and then worked my way up eventually to the director of the department and then to the vice-president of human resources at Toronto Hydro, responsible for, effectively, labour relations and industrial relations. I did all the bargaining for the CUPE local on management's behalf. I dealt with labour relations grievances, those kinds of things. I was heavily involved in the municipal integration of utilities.

At that time, the Centre—

Mr. David Zimmer: I just need the positions, not the—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Okay, the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health: I was recruited to be the vice-president of human resources there as well. I was there for about 10 years doing more or less the same thing. I then left the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health and opened a small consulting business and have been doing that since.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you first enter into a relationship with Ornge or any of the Ornge entities?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It was Ontario Air Ambulance at the time, and it was in early 2006.

Mr. David Zimmer: What were your duties at the air ambulance?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was a part-time consultant. I worked three days a week to assist in the human resources department.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you then become associated with Ornge?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: When it became Ornge. I stayed, as a consultant, with Ontario Air Ambulance as it moved to Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: That was the Ornge not-for-profit?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: Then I understand at some point you moved from the Ornge not-for-profit to the other Ornge for-profit entities.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct. Late in 2011 or mid-2011, when Ornge Global was created, I was moved to Ornge Global.

Mr. David Zimmer: Who moved you to Ornge Global?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Dr. Mazza.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you first meet Dr. Mazza?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: About six weeks after I started at Ontario Air Ambulance. I did not have an opportunity to meet him for the first almost two months; he was away. I met him shortly thereafter at a Toronto hospital where he was working an emergency shift. He asked me to meet him there. That was the first time.

Mr. David Zimmer: Is it fair to say that Dr. Mazza was instrumental in your joining the Ornge organization and then eventually the Ornge for-profits?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was Dr. Mazza's salary when you first got to know him at Ornge? That is the Ornge not-for-profit.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: As I recall, somewhere in the $200,000 range—between $200,000 and $300,000.

Mr. David Zimmer: Then when you moved over to the Ornge for-profits, were you aware that Dr. Mazza's salary was considerably higher, something in the order of $1.4 million?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Not at that point, no.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you become aware that Dr. Mazza's salary was in the order of $1.4 million?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: In December 2011, when the Ministry of Health required the salaries, the list was put together of all of Dr. Mazza's financial receivings. That's the first time I saw it together as the total amount of money.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just so I understand the sequence: When Dr. Mazza was at Ornge not-for-profit, his salary was in the order a few hundred thousand dollars.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: Dr. Mazza moved over, or his salary did, to Ornge for-profit. Did you move over to Ornge for-profit at about the same time?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I believe so.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why did you move from Ornge not-for-profit to Ornge for-profit?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I wasn't given a choice; I was moved. Dr. Mazza moved those people he wanted to move.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you report directly to Dr. Mazza?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, I did not.

Mr. David Zimmer: Who did you report to?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Maria Renzella.

Mr. David Zimmer: And she reported directly to Dr. Mazza, I understand.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you have any role in the discussions or the strategies or the decisions about whether Dr. Mazza, after he moved from Ornge not-for-profit to Ornge for-profit, should or should not—or whether there was an obligation of any sort to—report his salary?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, I was not part of the discussions. I was told by Ms. Renzella that there was a legal opinion that said we did not have to report. On that basis, I then gave the instructions to remove from the sunshine list all of those people who we no longer had to report.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you agree with that legal opinion, given your background of 25 years as an HR person in government or quasi-government organizations?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I wasn't asked my opinion. If I would have been asked, I would have said no, it was not a good idea.

Mr. David Zimmer: That remains your opinion today?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why would that have been your opinion at the time and why does it remain your opinion today?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Because the intent is for public disclosure, and I think that any entity that receives government funding has an obligation to that public disclosure as long as that law is there.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you make your concerns or objections known at the time?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I did raise it with Ms. Renzella.

Mr. David Zimmer: And how did you raise it with her?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: In discussion.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer, do you mind pulling the mike up a little, please?

Mr. David Zimmer: Oh, I'm sorry. And how did you raise it with her?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: In discussion.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you raise it in the nature of a concern or an objection or a caution?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, just a concern. Yes, a concern.

Mr. David Zimmer: You worked with Dr. Mazza for a few years.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: You must have formed an opinion of his management style.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: How would you characterize his management personality style.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Dr. Mazza is a brilliant visionary. He is incredibly passionate, committed and energetic. He just moves very, very quickly. He also is exceedingly compassionate. If an employee at any level in the organization was ill or had a family member that was ill, he would never hesitate to pick up a phone and say, "Do you understand what's going on? Can I help to explain it?"

He also had, however, the ability to explode, and he did explode on occasion to rank-and-file staff, to front-line staff, to management staff, to senior staff. A lot of my job—and the other senior executives—was to pick up the pieces after that event, or in fact, in my case, to try to mitigate that at the front end, to be proactive. So if I knew he was going somewhere where in fact he might lose his temper, I would run him first through a process of, "What are you going to say? How are you going to say it?"—those kinds of counselling, if you will, to try to mitigate some of that.

Mr. David Zimmer: And that's based on your 25 years as an HR professional?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Exactly.

Mr. David Zimmer: Tom Lepine was a colleague of yours at the time?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: He was.

Mr. David Zimmer: And what was his office position?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: He was the chief operating officer of Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: So Tom Lepine said in his evidence before this committee some weeks ago, and I'm quoting from Hansard, "Other people within the organization felt that they were eligible for promotion prior to her,"—he's referring to Kelly Long—"so it created a great deal of tension and angst within the organization"—that is referencing her hire. Do you agree with that statement?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I think there was a fair bit of angst in the organization, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Over her hiring?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Over her promotion.

Mr. David Zimmer: And also aspects of her relationship with Dr. Mazza?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Once that relationship was known, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Mr. Lepine went on to say, "I think Kelly"—again, referring to Long—"had more of a direct route into his office than any of the other executives. In other words, if anybody said something contrary to what Kelly believed, chances are, you wouldn't be with Ornge for very long." Would you agree with that statement?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, I don't. I was the person, unfortunately, who did almost all of the terminations at Ornge over the period of time. No one was ever terminated because Ms. Long didn't like them.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you have to intervene from time to time with Dr. Mazza, as you said, in your attempt to be proactive to soothe his relationship with employees at Ornge?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: And I appreciate your reference to trying to be proactive and head off a crisis or an uncomfortable situation or whatever.

In that regard, what is your view of the propriety of Dr. Mazza, first, arranging for a consulting firm, Pathway—you know that—to take Ms. Long on as a consultant and have Mazza, in effect, pay her salary in the amount of $58,000 by paying consulting fees in that amount, and subsequently, Dr. Mazza, after some six months or the better part of a year, formally moving Ms. Long over to Ornge as a vice-president of communications, given that they had a personal relationship?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: If I could put it into a context for you: I was asked, along with Steve Farquhar of operations, to interview a Pathway employee to come and do some health care stakeholder work at Ornge. I was told by Dr. Mazza that this was a family friend. Mr. Farquhar and I went and we met with her. This was not an in-depth interview because she was working for another entity. We felt that she was bright, eager to learn; came back and said that as far as we were concerned, she was working for Pathway, that was fine. I was not aware, until this series of hearings, that Pathway was not paying her salary. I didn't know that.

Once in the organization, she, a period of time later—and I can't tell exactly how long but certainly at least about six to eight months—applied as an external candidate for a posted vacancy. I believe that that was a stakeholder relations person. It was not a director or a—just a stakeholder person job. She went through the normal recruitment process as an external candidate—would have competed against anybody else who would have applied as an external candidate, and then she was successful on that position.

Mr. David Zimmer: But you did know at the time that it was a family friend of Dr. Mazza because Dr. Mazza put the plug in, put the word in for her.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you find out that they had a personal relationship?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: About two years later Dr. Mazza told me that he had separated, and that he and Ms. Long had started a personal relationship.

Mr. David Zimmer: Rainer Beltzner, who was the chair of the board—his daughter, Carrie Anne, was taken on by Ornge to work with Ms. Long to do a marketing services agreement.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Actually, her first position was an administrative position, I believe, in operations.

Mr. David Zimmer: At Ornge.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: At Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: And did you know that she was the daughter of the chairman of the board?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was asked by Dr. Mazza to interview a young woman that he knew for an entry-level administrative position, if and when they became available. That was not unique. I was asked often to just have a chat with people who might be interested in coming in.

I interviewed Carrie Anne Brunet. She was exceedingly bright, very articulate, and I felt a good candidate for Ornge, if there were a vacancy. I told Dr. Mazza that. Subsequent to that, she did apply, again, as an external candidate for a position, and she got that position.

Mr. David Zimmer: What did you think of the propriety thus far? First, we have Dr. Mazza's family friend, later personal relationship person, joining Ornge; when she moved over to Ornge the salary was $120,000. And then we have Dr. Mazza, who put the word in on behalf of the chair of the board to hire his daughter to do the infamous marketing services agreement, along with Ms. Long. Did you start to think this was a touch of nepotism here?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I did not know that Carrie Anne was Mr. Beltzner's daughter until after she had been hired.

Mr. David Zimmer: And how did you find that out?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Dr. Mazza told me. After she was several months in, he did tell me that she was Mr. Beltzner's daughter.

Mr. David Zimmer: Were you surprised that you hadn't been told before?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did it strike you as odd now that we have the CEO's friend—girlfriend—working there, and we have the daughter of the chair of the board working there, and they're both working on the marketing services agreement?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Neither at that time. When they came in to the organization, they were not working on the marketing agreement. There was no Ornge Global at that time. They both came in to Ornge—the public entity—through a process that human resources had, that defined a very tight process for selection of the best candidate. They both went through that process.

Mr. David Zimmer: So you know about the marketing services agreement—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you have about three minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. I understand that, at some point, your daughter joined Ornge.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did your daughter join Ornge?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: My daughter applied for a vacancy for the base manager in London about—I think it was in 2010.

Mr. David Zimmer: Anyway, she was hired.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: She went through the same process. I had nothing to do with that.

Mr. David Zimmer: But she was hired.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: She was, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Have a look at this from a third party view, outside the organization. We have an organization that now hires the CEO's girlfriend to do a major project, that hires the daughter of the chairman of the board to work on that major project, for which there are millions of dollars paid for the marketing services agreement, although it's unclear whether they had the skill set to do that. You're the director, or the head, of HR. The final piece is that the daughter of the person in charge of HR ends up with a job at Ornge also. Would you not agree that, for a reasonable person from the outside, that looks a bit like some pretty heavy-duty nepotism? The senior managers—the CEO, the chair of the board, the vice-president of HR for Ornge—have all got their girlfriends or children working there, at a publicly funded organization.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: These young women went through a process of selection for those vacancies. They were successful on those vacancies. There is a rigorous process for that selection, and they were successful.

It is not unique at Ornge for people who work there to bring family and friends as potential applicants. It in fact was encouraged.

Mr. David Zimmer: Well, perhaps that was one of the problems at Ornge.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did I hear you correctly, that you were hired by Dr. Mazza to the Ontario air ambulance service? Is that right?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I'm sorry, Mr. Klees. I can't hear you.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do I understand correctly that you were hired by Dr. Mazza into the Ontario air ambulance service? Is that correct?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was hired as a consultant by Dr. Mazza, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: By Dr. Mazza. As a consultant, what was the nature of your contract? Was it annually renewable? Was it a competitive contract? Was it put out to public tender? Can you tell us about that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It was not put out to public tender. It was renewable yearly. It was a personal services contract that allowed me to service other clients as well. I had, when I left CAMH, established a consulting business, so the intent of coming to Ornge on a consulting basis was to be able to continue to service those clients. The nature of the contract allowed for that, as long as there was no conflict of interest, and with Dr. Mazza's approval. The contract would be renewed on a yearly basis.

Mr. Frank Klees: How many years was it renewed?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was there—so it would have been renewed—six years.

Mr. Frank Klees: Six times. And at any point in time was that contract put out for public tender?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, it was not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there a procurement policy at Ornge for consulting contracts like this?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, there was.

Mr. Frank Klees: And did that procurement policy require public tender?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: For certain contracts, yes, it did. I'm not exactly sure of what the requirements are.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why was yours excluded from public tendering?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I don't know.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you have anything to do with that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: So who made the decision that your contract would be renewed?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how would he handle that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: He would give me a new contract.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever question, as the head of HR, the person I understand from others was totally responsible for employment contracts and signed off on all of those contracts—I understand your signature—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: —is on all of those employment contracts. As the individual entrusted with that responsibility, did it ever cross your mind that perhaps there should be an open process and that even your contract should be put up in a transparent way for tendering?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, it didn't.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It never occurred to me. It just didn't.

Mr. Frank Klees: Your first contract: How much were you getting paid under that contract?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was invoicing $22,540 a month.

Mr. Frank Klees: And for those of us who don't have a calculator, that translates into how much a year?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I don't have a calculator either. It's $270,480.

Mr. Frank Klees: And six years later, what was the value of your consulting agreement on an annual basis?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Well, okay, I invoiced, monthly, for $26,000—$265,000.

Mr. Frank Klees: Were there any additional benefits that you received in addition to your consulting agreement?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I received no benefits. I did receive a contingency fee based on performance.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how much would that amount to?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: In the first contract, it was $58,800. In the second contract, from April 2008 until January 2012, it was $30,900.

Mr. Frank Klees: So your total compensation in the last year, which would have been last year—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —including, all in—what would your reportable earnings have been?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I don't know the total amount. I'm sorry; I have—

Mr. Frank Klees: What did you file for taxes last year?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Well, I have a consulting business, so I file business taxes. I would think it's around $320,000; something to that effect.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me rephrase this. I understand you have a business, and you bill through that.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was your gross revenue in your consulting business last year that you reported?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I don't know. I don't have the figures.

Mr. Frank Klees: Ms. Beecher, I have a hard time believing that.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I understand that, but I don't have the figures.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you pay your taxes last year?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: You have no idea what you reported by way of gross revenue—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Not in gross, no.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. This is not helpful.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I'm sorry.

Mr. Frank Klees: You know, we come up against this quite often. Whenever there are sensitive questions that we ask, there is this selective memory loss, and it must have been something in the water at Ornge because it's quite consistent. It starts with the CEO and flows down through the board. And now we have you. Can your counsel help you with the answer? You have documents in front of you. You must have prepared.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I do, but I don't have the annual gross. I have the yearly, I have what I earned when I came to Ornge and what I was invoicing.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. I'd like to ask you about how terminations were handled at Ornge. I understand that you were the one tasked with the responsibility of drafting the termination agreements, making recommendations in terms of what the termination settlements should be. Is that right?

1330

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: With advice from counsel, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right. Can you give us a sense, in the time that you were responsible for that, of how many employees were terminated from Ornge? It doesn't have to be exact.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: There were a lot. Prior to the last round, where all of the Ornge Global people were terminated, and that was about 40, there were probably 40 in the six years that I was there.

Mr. Frank Klees: Forty? And these would have been relatively senior people, I'm assuming.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, that was 40 across the board. We had bargaining unit employees as well, and we had mid-level employees, but across the board.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you give me an idea of what the total severance payments would have been, that the taxpayers had to foot the bill for, for those 40 employees?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, I can't, but I do know that that was accounted for separately, so it should be available to you.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you give us just a guesstimate?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I couldn't, because each one was different. I had bargaining unit employees who would receive, with the agreement of the union, $50,000, and I had senior executives who went with a year's salary.

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand that those settlements were quite rich—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —and amounted into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, for which obviously taxpayers received no benefit. Clearly, those severance payments were being made out of cash flow that came from the Ministry of Health into Ornge that was intended for front-line emergency ambulance service. Is that right?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: There were no other sources of income for Ornge, were there?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: This morning, we had an interesting presentation from a paramedic from the London base. I shared with him a set of minutes from a meeting that took place at the London base. Attending that meeting were Tom Lepine and yourself.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who else from the base?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: From management, the manager of the base; that was Hallie McClelland.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Tom and I came from head office, and we had someone from communications who did the minutes. I'm not 100% sure who it was, but we always had someone from the communications department to do the minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who is Hallie McClelland?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Hallie McClelland was the manager and is my daughter.

Mr. Frank Klees: How long had she been with Ornge before she was appointed—was it manager of that London base?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: She wasn't—

Mr. Frank Klees: What was her title there?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: She was the manager, base operations, for London, and she applied as an external candidate for that position. She was not with Ornge prior to that.

Mr. Frank Klees: What experience did she have in managing an air ambulance hospital base at the time?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was not part of that selection committee, as I have said. At that time, however, generally, for managers of the bases, we were looking for leadership ability, for ability to be advocates for our paramedics and our front-line staff. We were not necessarily looking for either paramedic experience or for experience in an EMS service. So if you look across the bases over the period of time, you will see that there are some where their paramedics, in fact, did become the managers; in some cases, they did not.

Mr. Frank Klees: You heard from Mr. Brandon Doneff this morning that one of the consternations that paramedics and pilots alike had when they were introduced to managers, who were going to now look after their bases—first of all, they didn't recognize them. They were very concerned when they realized that these people had no experience in operating an air ambulance base. I would be interested to know, as the director of human relations, how one could possibly put a search together for the manager of an air ambulance base without having a key component of the qualifications being previous experience. How did that come about?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: The experience that we had had with paramedic managers—that's to say, we had paramedics who were excellent paramedics, who then applied for and became managers—was not a stellar experience, which is one of the reasons we began a leadership academy, to try to teach our front-line staff and/or emergent leaders around leadership. The issue for us was, how do you run a base as a leader? How are you an advocate for those paramedics? How can you help them get what they need in an expedient way? How can you support them? Not necessarily we had many people in operations who could deal with both the clinical side of the issue—and we had physicians who could deal with the medical.

Mr. Frank Klees: Ms. Beecher, you will forgive me, will you, if, for just a second, I will be speechless at that response, because something as important as managing an air ambulance base surely is not an entry-level position for someone who wants to practise leadership or motivation.

I'm going to ask you this question: Do you think it would be possible, if there was a public posting for the position of manager of an air ambulance base, that you would have a number of applicants, who may not be paramedics, who may not be pilots, because they may not want to be managers—but certainly people who have an experience in managing an air ambulance base?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I think Mr. Doneff said it this morning, that there had been one full year with no base manager. We had looked unbelievably hard across the province for a base manager for London.

Mr. Frank Klees: And during that same time, people from Ornge Global were flying around the world—to Brazil, to the Far East, to all kinds of places, to Miami—looking to open up new branches that had nothing to do with the core business of operating an air ambulance service in the province of Ontario. Is that right?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Correct. You know, I'd like to ask you another question, that deals with this for-profit side, which causes many of us a great deal of consternation about the siphoning-off of tax dollars. Were you ever a shareholder in any of those for-profit entities?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I believe that I was a shareholder in the Global piece. I believe there was an agreement. There was never any money in that shareholder agreement, and certainly none of the people who were in there ever received any money.

Mr. Frank Klees: So when you say you believe—you're the contract person at Ornge. Why would you just "believe"? You either were or you weren't. You must know—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: My contract itself, in the last year, was with Ornge Global.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: When Ornge Global was terminated, my contract terminated, so I actually was with Ornge Global at that time.

Mr. Frank Klees: My question was, were you a shareholder of Ornge Global?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, I was—

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, you were.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: —in Global GP, one of the companies.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what did that company do?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Nothing.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Why was it there, if it did nothing?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It had been set up along with a number of other companies. There were, I think, 17 in that structure, which was inordinately complicated and one that I didn't quite understand. But it was set up to ultimately—when the private sector side of the business began to earn money, it was set up to allow us to flow money back to the province of Ontario and for some shareholder money to stay with the shareholders.

We had been told over and over that the public money was staying on the public side, that there would be no flow of money from the Ontario side—so from the public entity, the $150 million—to the private side of the business. We had been told that by Dr. Mazza, by Maria Renzella, by Tom Lepine. We clearly were told that there was a very clear dividing line—it was called North Korea and South Korea—and that there was no flow of money from the public to the private, but there ultimately would be money to flow from the private to the public. That never got started; there was never any money.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes left.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can I borrow five minutes from my next round, please?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: So this entity of which you were a shareholder, you're telling me, is now dissolved?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Have you signed any documents to that effect, or do you have any evidence that that has been—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I have received trustee information, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what did that trustee information tell you?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It said that the entity was bankrupt.

Mr. Frank Klees: And are there any claims against that entity?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: How much in claims?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I don't know. I have no idea how much I have a claim in—

Mr. Frank Klees: That would have been in the trustee information.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No. I have no idea how much—what the claims are in total.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you know who is claiming against the company?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: You're a party to—you're a shareholder.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I'm a claimant.

Mr. Frank Klees: You're a claimant as well?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how much are you claiming?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It's $50,000.

Mr. Frank Klees: And that is for what?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: For my contract, which was terminated without fulfilling its obligation.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who do you think is going to pay that, by the way, if you've got a claim? There's no revenue. You've got a $50,000 claim against a bankrupt company. Where's that money coming from, in your mind?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I expect not to get it.

Mr. Frank Klees: I see. When you put the claim in, you must have—you went through an exercise in futility.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Actually, yes. I knew I wasn't going to get it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. In your opinion, the termination that was given to you by Ornge—let me put it this way: When you were terminated, what were you told? What was the reason for the termination?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was told that the contract with Global—Mr. McKerlie was the person who told me. He said that the my contract was with Global, it had been assigned to Global, and that given that Global was going out of business, my contract would terminate. He then asked me to stay on to do transition work on a separate contract with the new entity, Ornge, which I did.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how much were you paid under that separate—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It was $2,500 a day.

Mr. Frank Klees: It was $2,500 a day.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And your role for that—what were you doing?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Transition work to help transition to the new team.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what are you doing today?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I'm doing consulting work.

Mr. Frank Klees: What type of consulting work are you—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I'm doing a lot of Bill 168, bullying investigations, harassment investigations, compensations, all those kinds of—

Mr. Frank Klees: And your billings for that work are what?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: To date?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, on a daily basis. You mentioned that you were getting paid $2,500 a day.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It will depend. It runs from $2,500 to $3,500. If it's a not-for-profit, it's less.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. I'd like to just finish up with one other question here. When you hired your daughter—because it would have been you who hired her—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I did not hire my daughter.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. When your daughter was hired, who hired her?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It was the operations department that hired her. I believe the director of operations did the interview. At that time, it would have been Randy L'Heureux, who would have taken it through to Steve Farquhar and Tom Lepine.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was that a public posting?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, absolutely.

Mr. Frank Klees: How many applicants were there?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It had been a year, and we reposted it. I have no idea. I was not involved in that opportunity at all. Once I knew that she was going to be involved, I was not involved at all. I have no idea who applied, but there are records for every posted vacancy at Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is she still there?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did she leave of her own accord?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No. When the foundation ceased to exist—at that time she was executive director of the foundation—her job ceased to exist, so she was let go as well.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. And where is she working now?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: She's back in the fundraising department.

Mr. Frank Klees: With what organization?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: With the York School.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Have you ever made donations to the Liberal Party?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And do you consider yourself—are you a member of the Liberal Party?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Absolutely not. I have also made donations to the Progressive Conservative Party and to the NDP.

Mr. Frank Klees: Which one of those do you feel better about?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: None today; absolutely none.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: You're welcome.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It is rather interesting that you made the switch from Ornge the not-for-profit to Ornge Global knowing full well that Ornge Global was a for-profit company. You explained to us that you know that the Ministry of Health was the only source of funding for Ornge, so where did you think your contract money was coming from?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: In retrospect, I never even thought about it. We had been told that the public money was staying on the public side and that we were courting private investors and that we were looking for seed money to begin to look at the not-for-profit side. I know there were many meetings with the CEO and private investors, so my assumption at the time was that that was the seed money that was going to seed the private sector side and that that was paying my salary and everybody else who was on the Global side.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But there again, why would a private company offer HR services to a not-for-profit entity?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: When we started to create Global, there was a fair hiring piece. We hired a marketing department; we hired sales people; we hired research people to work on offshore stuff. So a piece of the human resource time—not only mine—was charged back to Global. There was a fair bit of activity in the first six to eight months in the HR area on Global. There was a tremendous amount of research into the American laws: how you hire people there, what kind of benefits you have to pay, what the comparators are—those kinds of things. The HR group was, in fact, doing work for Global.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. But you were still doing work for the not-for-profit?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So you had a three-day-a-week, $576,600-a-year salary—I'm strong in math—to do work for the not-for-profit Ornge, but you worked for the for-profit. Even if part of it got charged back to Global because you did work for Global, the fact remains that here you are in a private entity providing HR services to a not-for-profit entity.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct. Just one clarification: At that point, I was not working three days a week; I was working five. But yes, I was. I was working for Ornge Global, and I was providing advice and services to Ornge Ontario.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. But being paid by Ornge Global?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was only paid by Ornge Global in the last six or seven months. My contract until then had been with Ornge. Then it changed. About six months before, I was told to change the contract to Ornge Global and that my invoices would be paid by Ornge Global.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So for the time before this, when Ornge Global was being set up, you would bill Ornge not-for-profit—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —do work for Ornge Global, and then some money would—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes. I believe that there was a formula for chargebacks. I didn't know exactly what it was, but we were asked from time to time, probably on a quarterly basis, "How much time are you spending on Ornge and how much time are you spending on Ornge Global?" That was put into some kind of a formula that I never saw.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who asked you that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Maria Renzella.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Maria asked you that, and she asked that of many other—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Of everybody who worked, of the—you said there were 40 positions with Ornge Global?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: At the end, there were probably 40, yes. In the end, when we terminated everybody, I think it was about 40. We had, by that time, salespeople, marketing people, research people.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So here we have a for-profit entity that really wants to leverage what Ornge has. You're setting up the full team—marketing and research—and getting ready to hire people. Did you hire people outside of Canada ever?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, once.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you mind sharing who that was and what for?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: We brought a VP of sales to Canada. He was a Canadian who had gone to California to work for a company. He knew Dr. Mazza. We posted that position, he applied for it, and we did bring him back to Canada. We did not pay anything in terms of his transition, but he was leaving his job in California anyway. He came here, and then within maybe three or four months was terminated.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So all of those people really believed that they were working on basically taking what Ornge had developed here in Ontario and bringing this abroad, to bring money back to Ontario.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But everybody knew that, so far, no money was coming in.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So all of those 40 people, with half-a-million-dollars-a-year salaries, were being paid from what again?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I don't know. I don't know how they were being paid.

The assumption, because we had been told over and over again that no use of public money was ever going to be allowed in the private side, was that there were private investors who were giving seed money so that we could begin to run this entity.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And those private investors would have been the shareholders, or—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, no. They were people who were interested in Ornge that Dr. Mazza had courted quite heavily to help fund the entity.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Mr. Klees mentioned that people were flying all over the place. You mentioned the Middle East, Brazil etc. You said "correct." Who do you know who did that, who went and represented Ornge abroad?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Luis Navas went to Brazil. Actually, I think the only person who represented Ornge, other than Dr. Mazza, on a global basis was Luis Navas. I think both Mr. Navas and Dr. Mazza would go to Brazil or to—they were in Florida a lot. They were in Nashville, Atlanta—those kinds of places.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How do you know that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Because I was there when they were making arrangements to go. They would be talking about, "We're going to talk to this company in Nashville to see if we can do a partnership," or "We're going to Brazil to see if we can do the"—if you will—"Ornge in a box"—as Brandon spoke of this morning—"in Brazil." Those were very open discussions about looking for business offshore.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In your tasks for human resources—I read in your bio that you did do the bargaining for people who were under the collective agreement.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: A lot of people under the collective agreement were really unhappy with the turn of events that was happening. How did they report that to you, and what did you do with that information?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: We had a labour management meeting. We had three agreements, actually, at that time.

There was an OPSEU agreement, there was a CAW agreement, and there was an OPEIU agreement. OPSEU covered the Ornge communications centre individuals, the CAW covered the medics, and the OPEIU covered the pilots. We would have regular labour-management meetings with both OPSEU and the CAW. We would have them at least on a quarterly basis and sometimes much more often than that.

The union made it very clear to me that they were exceedingly unhappy with a lot of things: the aircraft interiors, the single medic—all of the things that you have heard. In each and every case, I took that back to the operations department and had the discussion with them. Then, at the next meeting—and sometimes, if it was important enough, as it was with single medic, we would schedule a special meeting, and I would bring operations with me to have the discussion about that issue. I was the spokesperson, if you will, but the intermediary. I couldn't resolve the problem, but I certainly could ride on the back of operations to get it done.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Did you feel that things were being done?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Was it common at Ornge that serious problems would be brought to you, and nobody took action to resolve them?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It's difficult to say nobody did. In the case of the interiors of the aircraft, it's difficult—it's a time process; it takes time to fix it. It was not moving fast enough for the medics; there's no question. So we continued to say to operations and to the physicians, "You've got to put some intermediate steps in. You've got to do something on that basis."

It wasn't always; there were many times that we were able to resolve an issue very quickly. There were many times that we were able to listen and clear it up. But there were some major—the single medic was another one that went on and on and on.

There was no question: They told me. I know they've talked about not having conversations with other people, but individual medics would come and see me and talk about it. I would go out to the bases, and they would talk about it. And they would certainly bring it in in labour management. I brought it right to my colleagues. So we knew that there were problems.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The single medic: That got worse and worse. In what period of time would you say that those people started to come to your office and tell you—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: About a year. We went to London in August, so it would have been the spring of 2011 that it was—it had always been an issue; there was always a single medic. But this issue became more of a problem, as I understand operations had changed some of the rules around launching or sick time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Some of your colleagues at Ornge had quarterly meetings with the ministry. Were any of those problems ever shared?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was not part of the ministry meetings. I never met a ministry person. I didn't go to any of those meetings. What I was asked for on a regular basis was information: How many medics do we have? Have we had any terminations? What's the status of numbers of people in particular bases? I don't know what was discussed at those meetings, but based on the information they were asking for, I do believe it was raised.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, but you knew that those meetings were taking place—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Absolutely, because we would be asked for tonnes of information just before those meetings.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. You are probably aware that the New Democrats filed a freedom of access of information to get salary information about Dr. Mazza. Did anybody from the ministry ever ask you about that freedom-of-access-of-information request?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I did not know there was a freedom of information until this process, and no one ever asked me, from the ministry or anywhere else, about Dr. Mazza's salary.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you have been able to figure it out, to put it together, if anybody had asked you?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I would have to put it together, but until December 2011, no one asked us—no one asked me directly to do that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But if, two years ago, when we filed the freedom of access of information, had the government gone and asked you, you would have been able to put it together—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —and share it with the ministry?

1400

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Just nobody bothered to ask.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Right.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So now you have medics coming to you telling you, "Things are not good. Some of the policies internally have been changed and we have more and more single medics. We have the issue with the interior." Did you see it coming, that doom and gloom was about to happen here?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When did you see it coming?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I guess when medics began to feel that they were not getting adequate responses from inside and started to go outside.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And when would you say that happened?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: That was last spring as well, I would think—the spring/summerish of 2011.

M^{me} France Gélinas: From 2011, the alarm bells inside were loud enough that you could hear them?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You knew that medics had started to go outside of the organization, saying that they were not happy?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you share that information with anyone?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, everyone.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Could you name me a few and—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Oh, all—Dr. Mazza, Mr. Lepine, Ms. Renzella. We all—I don't think I was the only one, but I certainly made everyone aware of it. There was a great deal of discussion about what to do and what we should do and we shouldn't. The meeting that Brandon Doneff spoke of this morning was a result of that beginning—we had set up what we called an around-the-world tour, where we would go to all the bases and say, "What are your issues? Talk to us. Let us talk to you."

There were three that were done last spring. London was the one Brandon spoke of this morning. There was one done in Ottawa and then there was a third that I wasn't at in Toronto. They had started, if you will, the dialogue with Mr. Lepine as the COO of Ornge operations and the front-line staff.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So I'm guessing by then the pressure is mounting. We got the minutes of the meeting that was held in London. I'm guessing Ottawa and Toronto must have been very similar.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The pressure is mounting. Was there a reaction from within to try to change the course and correct, or address the concerns?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I can't answer to the "change the course," because that would have been operations and, as best I understand, they didn't. I think there was a great deal of communication. I think there was a real sense that we weren't communicating, and so the intent was for Mr. Lepine to go out and tell people what we were doing and why were doing it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What Mr.—I forgot his name now, from this morning—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Doneff.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What he told us was really that they were told things were like this because Ornge was out of money. Was that all that was communicated to them: "Things had to change because we're out of money"?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No. At that meeting, there were really three intents. One was to talk—we had been hearing a lot that nobody understood what Global was all about and there were all the rumours, so one of them was to go and talk about Global, what we were intending to do, why were intending to do it, and Mr. Lepine did that.

We then did a conversation about finances. In May and June of last year, across the board, not only in the operations department but across the board, there was a real sense of crisis around finances for Ornge. We were told to turn the lights down, we were told to reuse—I mean, there was a real sense that money was going to be an issue. So that became part of the conversation as well, that yes, the system is not sustainable as it is and that we have some major financial issues.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you have one minute left.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you were going to sell "Ornge in a box." That was being described as a system that is not sustainable. A bit of a tough sell?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: That's exactly what the medics were saying: "How can you be selling this if in fact we can't get it right here?"

M^{me} France Gélinas: And the answer to that was?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I don't think that there was an answer. I think we were saying we needed to do this so we could mitigate some of the financial need from the province. If we could bring money back into the province, we would be able to then fund Ornge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'll borrow a few minutes just to finish this. Now that you know that funds that were supposed to go to Ornge public were being used for Ornge Global, do you understand a little bit better why things were so tough on the Ornge public side?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: If what you're telling me is that Ornge public money did flow to the private side, then yes, absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, it did, and the Auditor General is there, if you have a doubt.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: To the day that Global ceased to exist, I continued to believe what I was told, which was that there was absolutely no cross-funding.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Well, thank you, and we'll move to—

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sorry; the Auditor General would like to make a comment.

Mr. Jim McCarter: I would have to say we had no access whatsoever to the records on the for-profit side, so I can't really comment one way or the other as to, quite frankly, how they were funded. We just were not permitted access.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: You were a member of the senior executive team, along with CEO Mazza and the chairman of the board, Beltzner. I want to come back to this business of the CEO's girlfriend, Beltzner's daughter and your daughter all ending up as employees. I tie that back to your remarks earlier in the afternoon, where you said you felt that one of your responsibilities was to be a proactive HR person and hit off issues that might cause problems later down the road and so on. It strikes me as passing strange that someone with almost 30 years of experience in very senior HR roles, with a stated ambition to be proactive, did not tweak to this idea that in a company that's depending on public dollars, no matter what the organization's structural chart is, there's something that is going to look odd here when the CEO, the chairman of the board and a senior member of the executive team responsible for hiring and firing—human resources—all have their partner and/or daughters getting jobs at Ornge. Did that not strike you as odd?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Just to be clear, first of all, I was not part of an executive committee with Mr. Beltzner. He was the governance side of the house.

As I said, the organization encouraged family members and friends to be considered. That is what happened with those three young women. Clearly there's a law in the province around family status. Once you learn about a family status, in the case of Dr. Mazza, there is an Ontario human rights law that says neither person is going to be terminated. So that's the counsel that I gave him at the time when I found out, which was two years later, that in fact he had a relationship with Ms. Long.

Mr. David Zimmer: With respect to your own daughter, did you not think it was passing strange that the head of HR's daughter ends up with a good job, in addition to the daughter of the chair—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, yes—it was not what I would have chosen.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Because I didn't want my daughter to be working at the same place as I was working.

Mr. David Zimmer: Well, did you discourage her and say, "Don't take the job"?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, I discouraged her. As you probably are aware, children don't necessarily listen to everything you say.

Mr. David Zimmer: Who was on the selection committee?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Randy L'Heureux; for operations, it may have been Steve Farquhar; and I don't know who else. I do know that Randy was involved as the director.

Mr. David Zimmer: But the people on the selection committee would ultimately report to you?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No. The selection committee in operations reported through to Tom Lepine. And there was a disclosure at the front end.

Mr. David Zimmer: And at the end of the day, you signed the contract to hire your daughter?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, I did not. I would not have anything to do with that selection. Someone else in human resources signed it.

Mr. David Zimmer: I got a tweet just now from somebody who has been watching and said this whole thing of the daughters of the HR vice-president and the chairman of the board, and the girlfriend of the CEO—they used the expression, "It just doesn't pass the smell test."

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: There were a lot of other family members in the organization. In one base of, I think, 20 paramedics, there were eight married couples. Again, in the organization, this was not unique. There were husbands and wives, many sisters and brothers, and there were cousins.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer, can you pull your microphone forward?

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes. Sorry, Chair.

So, the company that provided services to Ornge—Rhonda Beecher resource consulting ltd.—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Rhoda Beecher Human Resource Consulting Ltd.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes. In answer to some questions that Mr. Klees raised, would you be prepared to file with this committee—and if you want, file it in camera—your personal tax returns for the last couple of years and the returns of your consulting company?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Absolutely.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. Thank you. The clerk will be in touch with you on that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes. Just one second, Chair. I'm sorry; I missed your daughter's surname.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: McClelland.

Mr. David Zimmer: How did she find out about the job at Ornge?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It was posted in the newspaper.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you do anything to direct her to the posting?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, I did not.

Mr. David Zimmer: You've said that you would have provided salary information and other information—the salary amounts—if you'd been asked by the ministry. If that's the case, that you would have provided it to the ministry, what was the problem that the auditor had in that he could not access any of that information? The only information that he could get was the total, the gross salary amount. The auditor made it quite clear he could not get anybody else's salary information. So I'm conflicted here. On the one hand, you said, "Well, I would have given it if asked." The auditor asked, and the ministry asked. The information on salaries only came out after there was a tough face-to-face meeting with the minister and the chair.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I was not asked. I was not part of the committee that dealt with the Auditor General's requests. I did dialogue some with the Auditor General's staff in terms of information that they wanted from me. It was not about salaries. It was about what was in the files and how things were done in HR. But I did not take part in that discussion. I was not part of it until mid-December, when the ministry made it clear that we would supply it, and Ms. Renzella was putting it together. That was the first time I saw it together.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The auditor would like to make a comment.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Jim McCarter: In fairness, Mr. Zimmer, I should mention that Ms. Beecher is correct. Normally, you might say, as head of HR, that's who we would go to. It was made very clear to us: "You will deal with Ms. Renzella with respect to any salary requests." So we attempted to get the information, basically, through Maria Renzella as opposed to Ms. Beecher. I just wanted to clarify that.

Mr. David Zimmer: Can I have a follow-up? Do I have a minute left?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, you have time for another question.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay, so, given what the auditor said, did you walk into Renzella's office and say, "Look, I'm telling you, as an HR person: Release the information. That's my advice as an HR professional."

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: "I'm the vice-president, and my advice is release the information and get on with it." Did you ever do that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: And what—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It obviously wasn't released.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): All done? Okay. We'll move on to Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Just for the record, when I questioned you about severance and so on, I too got a little tweet here from someone who apparently has some information. I'd like to know if you would dispute this: The number of employees terminated was 62, and the amount of severances was in excess of $6 million.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I wouldn't be able to say yes or no, but if they've got it, they've got it. I didn't.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. It's a lot of public money going to pay people to leave.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to ask you about the AgustaWestland consulting agreement. When did you first become aware of that marketing agreement?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I became aware that there was a marketing agreement probably in the fall of 2011. I did not see the agreement; I still have not seen the agreement. But I heard there was a marketing agreement where we were going to provide assistance to AgustaWestland on their aircraft that we had just purchased. That was my involvement.

Mr. Frank Klees: Were you made aware of the value of that agreement?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Have you had any contact with AgustaWestland—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Never?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I had a dinner with all of the senior executives and AgustaWestland shortly after the purchase agreement was signed here in Toronto. Other than that, I have never met anybody from AgustaWestland or had any meetings with them.

Mr. Frank Klees: And can you tell us who from the government was at that dinner?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Nobody; no government person.

Mr. Frank Klees: No government person?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. I'd like to just ask you about these MBA entitlements that we heard so much about.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Okay.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you confirm that your daughter received funds from Ornge to enrol in an MBA program?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: She did not.

Mr. Frank Klees: You were aware that former chairman Rainer Beltzner's daughter, Carrie Anne Brunet, did receive $90,000 to study?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: As the director of human resources, I'm imagining that you would have to sign off on that. Is that right?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was your rationale? How did you justify signing off on that for someone who, frankly, did not have very much experience in that position? What justification did you have for that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Ornge had established something called a leadership academy. There was concern from the board around succession. There was concern internally about our ability to promote people who had the experience we needed to be management people. So we established a leadership academy which was, in fact, a three-week course over the year. We had a faculty. We had people who taught about leadership style, your own style, how you deal with people and then how you deal with difficult decisions—over the period of a year.

Each department elected their emergent leaders; those people were approved to go to this in-house class. There were exams, there were projects and there was testing. At the end of that year, a hierarchy of people was established: those who were the top of the class and the bottom of the class. We would then take that to the executive team for agreement and then to Dr. Mazza for discussion.

In some cases, people were offered assistance in undergraduate. If they were top of that class and were considered to be an emergent leader, sometimes they were given the underwriting for the master's. We had one in education; we had one in aviation. It was not just the MBAs.

Mr. Frank Klees: So given the fact that at the same time there were financial stresses within this organization, so much so that a paramedic from London told us that at that meeting in London, they were told a base may have to close down because of a lack of funding, how did you justify spending $90,000 to pay for an MBA for an emerging so-called leader? By the way, she's no longer there, right?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, none of them are there. They're all terminated.

Mr. Frank Klees: So that $90,000 really didn't do much to help the succession at Ornge, did it?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Just to be clear, each of those people who did get any kind of underwriting did sign an agreement to remain for five years, which is not unique in the business world. If they did leave before the five years, they would have to refund or the entity to which they were going would have to refund the piece of that money. When we terminated those people—we terminated them, and, yes, you're right, that $90,000 went. The—

Mr. Frank Klees: So when you terminated them, did you also cancel that requirement to pay back those funds?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why did that happen?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Because our understanding legally was that we were terminating them. As I understood the agreement, if they left voluntarily, they would be required to pay it back. If they were terminated, they did not.

Mr. Frank Klees: In retrospect, was that a good policy of Ornge, to spend those funds, given the fiscal circumstances of our air ambulance service?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: We had two years where it seemed to be fine. In the final year, we did go to Dr. Mazza and say, "Do you want to do this again? Do you want to run the class again? Do you want to consider anybody for post-secondary education?" We were told—because we were concerned about spending the money on the individuals and on the classes. We were told that the money had been allocated and that we could go ahead and run it. We did check each time.

Mr. Frank Klees: And yet, while this was going on, the training for paramedics was going nowhere. We're told by paramedics that in all of those years, there were only three critical care paramedics that received training. Were you aware of this imbalance of allocation of resources, that these young people in the head office, who were brought with no world experience whatsoever into this organization, were being actually given priority over the front-line paramedics and pilots within this organization? Were you aware of that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: From my perspective, the paramedics were, in fact, receiving the training. It is mandated; they must.

Mr. Frank Klees: According to them, they weren't getting it.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: They were getting the training. Was it quick enough for them? Was it efficient enough for them? Was it the kind of training they wanted? I would have to agree; they all said no. It wasn't fast enough; it wasn't what they wanted. But we ran both CCP and ACP courses each year that they were required.

The medics were never happy with the speed that we did it, but they, in fact, were run at the same time. The paramedic academy never suffered because there was funding that had been pre-allocated to the education.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you, and if we can move to the NDP.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So what you're saying is that the paramedic academy was separate from the leadership academy.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct. The ATM, the Academy of Transport Medicine, had been running for a number of years where they trained paramedics from level to level. That's the same entity that does their recertification training that Mr. Doneff was talking about this morning. So that continued all the way through.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. But what Mr. Klees was talking about was for the leadership academy. Very few of them had access to that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: To be clear, the leadership academy did not include unionized people. In the last year, we set up a separate entity for unionized people and ran a modified leadership course only for unionized people. We had both pilots and paramedics in that class, and it was the same sort of leadership development class, but it was separate and distinct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you remember what the salary scale was for paramedics, roughly?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I think a CCP, a critical care paramedic, was about—I know that a number of them are on the sunshine list with overtime, so I think it's close to $100,000.

M^{me} France Gélinas: For critical care?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct. And then it would be a little less for advanced care, and, again, a little less for primary care, but I don't have the numbers.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. And would you have an idea what the salary scales were in the pilot collective agreement?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Well, it would depend. The fixed-wing pilots were running somewhere at $60,000. The rotary-wing pilots, who are fairly unique and scarce, were higher. They were switching from CHL to us at the time that I left, and I actually don't know where that ended up. But they would be close to the $100,000 as well, I would think.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just some questions with respect to some of the positions. Luis Navas—were you aware of what his official position was at Ornge or at one of the entities?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes. My perspective is that Mr. Navas was the chief operating officer of Ornge Global.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. And what do you base that on?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I helped, with an immigration lawyer, to get him to the United States, and that was the title on the visa application.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's a really good answer.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, I thought so.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you. Just with respect to your earlier answer you provided, if you were asked directly, "Could you provide the salary for Dr. Mazza?"—and you indicated that you could do that—how would you piece that together, and what information would you be able to access?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I would have to actually sit down and take—it was made up of a number of pieces: base salary, performance pay, long-term incentive pay, clinical; he was a medical director, so that pay. It came through on various times. Each time it would have a minute from the board of directors. So it would say, "Pay Dr. Mazza X and say what it was for." So I would have to have gone back over those, pulled them together, and then added it up. It was not brain surgery, but I would have had to have taken some time to do it.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And those various points, those minutes, which indicated, "Pay Dr. Mazza X salary," those were all kept in a record that you could access?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Absolutely. Every minute that came from the board was kept in a human resource file of his own, locked.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And those minutes, were they from the board as a whole, or from a subcommittee that dealt with HR issues?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: It depended. When it came to sort of yearly changes, it probably would come from the whole board as a board minute. Sometimes it would come from the compensation committee of the board. So it depended on the issue, but each one had a very distinct minute. It would come from the corporate secretary to me and it would be very clear.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So the corporate secretary was the person who took the board minutes and then actioned them off?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And who was that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Lynne Taylor.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Let's say we talk about the compensation subcommittee, I think you called it, or the—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would Dr. Mazza ever sit on those board meetings and those committee meetings? When you saw the minutes, could you see who attended?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I only got the minute that would be specific to me. So, no, I wouldn't see who the attendees were or what the discussion was. It would be very simply, "Please pay this much to X." So I don't know whether he was on it or not.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did the recommendations or the decisions that were made by the compensation committee have to be approved by the board as a whole? Or sometimes would they come directly from the compensation committee of the board without the full board knowledge?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I'm not sure, but I believe that all of the compensation committee work went through the board ultimately.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It would have gone through the board ultimately.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I believe so.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But as you've just testified, sometimes you would get a motion coming from the compensation committee that had to do with the base salary, the performance pay, the long-term pay or the clinical directive?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Correct. It would be more about the sort of stipends, not the salary. It would be sort of, "Pay him X amount"—no, actually it would come from the board. I may be incorrect in that it all came from the board.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. When you talk about stipend, is this on top and above what made up his compensation?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, but there were, as I said, a number of pieces. There was one year where there was an additional performance pay. There were a number of elements, if you will, to his overall salary.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Was that common to other people within the executive of Ornge, to have a compensation made out of the base salary, performance pay, long-term pay and—clinical director, I guess, only applies to people in the—

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No. The rest of the senior team had base salary and performance pay—full stop.

1430

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Were you aware that Dr. Mazza also had loans from his employer?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Yes, I was.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How did you become aware of that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: I received a minute, again, from the board on more than one occasion, so it wasn't all at once, that said, "Please arrange"—or—"The board approves a loan of X amount of dollars to Dr. Mazza."

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you remember the first time you saw that?

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: No, I don't. They seemed to be within the last year.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And we are out of time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Really?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, we are.

Thank you very much for coming before the committee this afternoon.

Ms. Rhoda Beecher: Thank you.

MR. BRUCE WADE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our next presenter is Mr. Bruce Wade. Would you like to come forward? Welcome, Mr. Wade, and just to confirm that you have received the letter for a witness appearing before the committee?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I did.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Would you like to do an oath or an affirmation?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I'll take an oath.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. The clerk will have you swear an oath.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): There's a Bible in front of you. Mr. Wade, do you solemnly swear the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have time for an opening statement, and then we'll go to questioning from the various parties.

Mr. Bruce Wade: First, before I begin my opening statement, I have to apologize. I'm under medication for a throat problem with an ENT right now, so if my voice fades in and out—I can barely speak. But I'm here.

Mr. Chair, members of the committee, thank you for your interest in the truth. My name, as you know, is Bruce Wade. When I was notified that I was called to testify, I emailed Ron McKerlie, CEO of Ornge, to inform him and see if he had objection. We had a very good phone call where he let me know he did not have objection.

Right from the start, I want you all to know I believe the rotor air ambulance can be fixed.

At this committee you've heard testimony about missing millions, multiple shell companies, hiring of persons into positions they were not qualified to hold, alleged kickbacks, alleged political interference and other nefarious dealings. You heard Mazza claim "black spots" in his memory when asked how a speedboat came to be purchased, yet go into incredible details about communications centre computer servers with less than 2% memory left.

You heard straight from Mazza himself that, in his words, he always did what was in the best interests of Ornge. That statement alone, in my opinion, shows he and his sycophant executives—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Excuse me, could you just pull that mike down a little closer there? That's great.

Mr. Bruce Wade: —that he and his executives were not working for the best interests of patients and taxpayers. Thankfully, they're gone.

Across our system we rejoiced when the auditor delved further into Ornge. It was then we thought reasonable people would step in and stop all helicopter pilot and engineer transfers into Ornge once it became evident just how bad things really were.

Many of us read the Auditor General's report and understood the serious content. I'd like to personally thank our auditor for the excellent work that he and his dedicated staff did in their audit of Ornge while under Mazza's reign. I don't see him in the room, unfortunately, but I'd also like to thank him for clearly reporting the management culture of fear and intimidation that was rampant in the Ornge system.

To give the committee a sense of the front-line reality, I want to quote some of my colleagues. From a medic: "Give 'em hell at the committee about Thunder Bay. We in northwestern Ontario are tired of being treated like the red-headed stepchild."

From a helicopter pilot: "Rotary-wing aircraft service communities that do not have airports, backcountry bush, highway accidents, plane crashes and all locations in between—places no plane can service. We respond to every possible type of medical emergency that can come up. In my 20-plus years as an EMS pilot in Ontario, I can assure you that we have saved lives and reduced a lot of suffering. This is what the public expects of us and counts on us to do when called upon. When we do not have paramedics, we cannot do our job. If you didn't have any house fires, would you remove the firemen from the fire trucks?"

From a medic: "We have more staff we don't need, more complaints of managerial incompetence and malevolence, and less ability to tell others what is going on. We have a management structure blaming us for the fiscal woes of a company, a company that couriered apples across the province for PR campaigns."

From a helicopter engineer: "This whole system is beyond ridiculous."

From a pilot and medic during lunch one day—when I say pilot, I'm referring to rotary side: "If he didn't waste $600,000 on MBAs for his friends, we'd have more trained medics to properly crew our Thunder Bay helicopter."

From another helicopter pilot: "I used to be proud of what I did flying medevac, now I don't tell anyone."

Mr. Chair, honourable members of the committee, I'm not here as a disgraced former executive of Ornge or a recipient of one of their MBAs or a public servant called upon to offer insight from their perspective or a high-priced lawyer who worked for Ornge, nor any other person who has lined their pockets at the expense of the air ambulance system. I'm a front-line helicopter pilot. I fly medevac. I have worked as a helicopter pilot in the service of the public and Ontario's air ambulance system since the fall of 2001. I'm based on the Thunder Bay trauma helicopter, which has faithfully served the taxpayers of northwestern Ontario for decades.

Today, my focus will be on the operations on the front lines of northwestern Ontario. For us, this is not a business case, it's not a get-rich-quick scheme, it's not a political issue, it's not a game; it's lives at stake. That's what this focus is on: It's lives at stake, folks.

Across this province on a daily basis, pilots fly our ambulance helicopters into challenging situations. Paramedics treat seriously injured accident victims, and the engineers do their utmost to maintain the helicopters. We are the air ambulance system. We need the resources to do our jobs.

If you're not familiar with the vastness of northern Ontario, consider this: If you got in your car here at the provincial Legislature today, it would take you 17½ hours of driving to get to Thunder Bay. It takes about 13 hours to drive from Sudbury to Thunder Bay. It's about 1,000 kilometres on the two-lane Trans-Canada Highway. It takes about six hours to drive from Thunder Bay to Kenora, another 500 kilometres on the two-lane Trans-Canada Highway. In that drive, you cross a time zone and still have at least another hour past Kenora just to get to the Manitoba border.

For almost three years, since the very first fixed-wing was added to the Thunder Bay base, Ornge has stripped the medics from the only trauma helicopter between Sudbury and Kenora, a distance of approximately 1,500 kilometres. All of us have raised this issue with Ornge management, old and new. Some have gone to their MPPs; some went to the press. I went to the Minister of Health. All of us had a high hope that, once this story got out about a routinely grounded medevac helicopter, we would see a resumption in proper medic staffing. It still hasn't happened.

A trauma helicopter continually grounded without medics is unconscionable and, some could argue, negligent. When the first plane was put into service in Thunder Bay to support the cardiac care unit at Thunder Bay Regional Health Sciences Centre, we were told it would be three days a week and our medics would only be on standby—not removed from the helicopter. After a period of time, Ornge changed the rules for inter-facility transfers with standing offer agreement air carriers, claiming those medics were not trained to a high enough standard on Ornge aircraft to conduct those transfers. Since Ornge trains all air medics in the province, that argument was invalid. In my opinion, that move at that time was solely designed as a money transfer from one Ornge company into another Ornge company.

Eventually, a second plane was put into service in Thunder Bay, but only one additional medic crew was upstaffed. Each of you can do the math on this. There are two airplanes, one trauma helicopter, two crews of paramedics, and that's it. This unconscionable staffing decision was made by persons who are no longer with Ornge. The new leadership is aware of this ongoing situation, and still, nothing has been done.

I'd like to read into the record some of the locations only a helicopter can service quickly, thus saving lives and reducing suffering, but that would take up the rest of my opening time. I do have a sheet of paper with those names on it. If you live, work or travel through any of these areas, you've got no hope of a golden hour for your medical airlift.

The problem with removing the medics from the Thunder Bay trauma helicopter is actually greater than it first appears. Not only do taxpayers of a region or travelers on our highways have no medevac airlift in time of need, but the dominoes cascade into the Kenora region as well. The crews in Kenora are called upon almost daily to dispatch on flights into the Thunder Bay region, thus leaving their area with no coverage. As a sample of the massive lack of proper medevac coverage in northwestern Ontario, I've got approximately the last two months of calls Kenora has received to dispatch into the Thunder Bay region. I have copies.

We need medics. In the last 12 months, as the transition date from Canadian Helicopters into Ornge for each new rotor base drew closer, more pilots left. Approximately 20 of the most highly trained, experienced rotor pilots in Canada left the system. This represents the single-largest exodus of aviation professionals in the entire 30-plus-year history of the air ambulance program in Ontario. More are going to leave. About 11 helicopter engineers also left. I and others have chosen to stay and help restore the helicopter EMS system to its proper service levels.

We've never seen such high levels of medic understaffing or downstaffing of helicopters ever in the entire history of the air ambulance program. In front of me, and available for your perusal, are the last eight years' worth of daily pilot journals from the Thunder Bay helicopter base alone. In those journals, day by day, shift by shift, it tells you who was flying, what calls they did, what medics were on, if we were in or out of service and if there was any staff there. It's all here, folks—eight years' worth.

Years ago, Mazza insisted on starting his own helicopter operation, claiming that he could do it cheaper. As a matter of fact, part of the sales pitch for the bond offering was an outline that principal and interest would be paid through cost savings by operating and maintaining their own helicopters.

No. It was recently testified to by an Ornge executive that the current cost of operation of the helicopter system is "no more than the previous vendor." By that testimony, it isn't cheaper. From our first-hand experience, helicopters aren't staffed properly, shifts go unfilled and aircraft sit grounded.

From Thunder Bay, we used to be able to airlift cardiac patients to St. Luke's Hospital in the US, because we had all the appropriate operating certificates from the FAA. Ornge still does not have approvals for the rotary-wing aircraft. It was recently announced that three bases—Thunder Bay, Kenora and Moosonee—will continue to operate the S-76s for the foreseeable future, but we don't have GPS operations certificates from Transport Canada to conduct GPS approaches for this equipment. We used to.

As you all know, the previous vendor was Canadian Helicopters, one of the top aviation firms in the world. They properly staffed the aircraft, retained dedicated pilots, had highly dedicated engineering and enjoyed excellent labour relations with their crews and their union. All necessary international operations approvals were in place; all necessary Canadian operations approvals were in place; and I believe they maintained a 97%-plus dispatch availability rate for decades.

In spite of the problems—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Are you almost done the intro?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I've got four paragraphs.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, go ahead.

Mr. Bruce Wade: In spite of the problems, I firmly believe the helicopter air ambulance can be fixed. We want our voices heard, our recommendations enacted and our helicopter EMS system working as it should.

Recently, an associate vice-president of corporate communications emailed our pilot union chairman asking him for a quote to be used in a good-news progress report. Suffice it to say, he declined, stating, "We aren't seeing any progress."

I challenge the members of this committee to unite as one and make the following immediate demands to the Premier and the Minister of Health, to give us the resources we desperately need:

(1) that all EMS helicopters across the province are properly staffed with two paramedics, 24 hours a day, without exception. They used to be, and the Ambulance Act, in fact, might require this;

(2) that allocation of resources be focused on the front lines;

(3) that the performance agreement gets some teeth, with a proper system of financial penalties put in place as a deterrent to downstaffing of medics or pilots.

I'll skip number 4.

I fly medevac for very personal reasons. If even one death occurs because no helicopter can respond, from a lack of proper staffing, and a coroner's inquest is called, I can take comfort in knowing that I tried, for the best interests of Ontario, and my conscience is clear. I'll be able to look myself in the mirror and know I've done everything I possibly can to restore helicopter ambulance service to the northwestern Ontario region. I want to be able to do my job, as do my colleagues on the engineering and the medic side as well.

In closing, Ontario can be proud of the helicopter engineers, the medics, the fixed-wing pilots, the fixed-wing engineers and, of course, my helicopter pilot colleagues across the province. We do make a difference in people's lives. We need your help.

I hope I can answer your questions. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for that opening statement. We'll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees: 20 minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Wade, for being here.

I'd like to just start off by getting some context of your experience as a helicopter pilot. Could you just summarize briefly for us how long you've been a helicopter pilot, when you started with Ornge and how long you've been there?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I started flying in approximately 1995. I was with two other firms prior to moving to Canadian Helicopters on the EMS program in 2001. That was the goal I had when I started flying helicopters, and I was determined to get there. I've always said that, in my opinion, flying medevac in this province is a pinnacle, and it's something I want to be able to do for the remainder of my flying career.

Mr. Frank Klees: Sir, you've been very forthright over the last number of months since these committee hearings have taken place and since the issue of Ornge was in the public domain. You've never hesitated to put your name to an email. I've noticed a number that you have sent to members of the committee and addressed to the Minister of Health.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I want to thank you on behalf of this committee—in fact, on behalf of all members of the Legislature and the public—for doing that. I know a lot of your colleagues have felt intimidated, and that's understandable.

You've made recommendations. You've drawn our attention and the attention of the Minister of Health to the failings. You've also made specific recommendations. I'd like to know from you, what have you heard back from the Minister of Health or Mr. McKelvie to any of those emails that you have sent and recommendations that you've made?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I do have some emails here. Actually, I received a letter back from the Minister of Health herself on April 2. I have copies of it here if anybody wishes to see it. The opening paragraph is, "Thank you for your email about Ornge. I want you to know I share your concerns about what happened at Ornge under its former leadership. Thank you, too, for informing the ministry of your interest in being of assistance. I am particularly interested in your willingness to serve on the board of directors."

It goes on for two pages. It's about some of the organizational changes and things of that nature that have taken place. I appreciate that back from the minister, and Mr. McKelvie was copied on this letter. He is aware of it.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Do members want a copy of that response, of that letter?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, absolutely.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay.

Mr. Bruce Wade: I have copies here if anybody wants them.

As I said before—

Mr. Phil McNeely: Chair, I'm missing the conversation. It's probably not the speaker's fault, but I think if you could get a little bit closer to the mike, I could understand.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Sorry; I'm actually on a medication right now for this.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you have a response from the minister, who thanks you for your offer of help. It's copied to Mr. McKelvie.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: What happened?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I haven't seen a lot happen.

Mr. Frank Klees: Has anything happened?

Mr. Bruce Wade: On the front lines, from our perspective, not really.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm talking specifically about your offer of help. Has Mr. McKelvie been in touch with you or anyone else to say, "Mr. Wade, thank you for your offer of help. Please come in and see us. Tell us what it is that you're recommending"? Has any of that taken place?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Not as an individual, but we have had discussions at the base, with a variety of individuals who have come through. I believe it was around February 9 or 10—I'm not sure of the date—when Mr. McKelvie came to Thunder Bay as his first base visit, along with Patricia Volker, Patrice Merrin and Patricia Lang. They talked to each of the various groups. At that time, we were, of course, still with Canadian Helicopters. We had a very productive hour with them. But since that time, as far as continuing discussion, no.

Mr. Frank Klees: Have you noticed any of the recommendations that were made by yourself or other people on the front line in the meetings—have you noticed any of those recommendations being implemented?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I just want to refer back to an email here just to make sure I have the correct answer, because I don't think so. I don't think we've seen any.

Yes, here it is. Yes, on February 9, I sent Mr. McKerlie an email to summarize the meeting that we had had with him. Let's see. No.

Mr. Frank Klees: So none of the recommendations that were made by the front lines have been implemented by Ornge?

Mr. Bruce Wade: None of the recommendations that we had presented have been implemented; yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. This morning, members of the committee were sent an email. Mr. McNeely took great length to read this into the record. It comes from a Poul-Erik Binderup, who is an Ornge PC-12 captain. In his letter, he makes a point of saying, "We have been overwhelmed by the support we have received from individuals like the Honourable Deb Matthews and interim CEO Ron McKerlie," citing that things are wonderful, that he and his colleagues in the fixed-wing operations at Ornge Global Air are happy men and women, and went out of his way to make the minister look very good. You're on the front line—

Mr. Bruce Wade: I was on the front line of this, I believe, longer than Mr. Binderup.

Mr. Frank Klees: So I would just like some balance here because I'm confused. The minister has castigated me today here in committee as someone who is disparaging of the front lines, as someone who has insulted the front lines of our air ambulance service and as someone who just doesn't seem to care. She said that's what she's hearing from the front lines. You're on the front line; I'd like your opinion first of all if, in fact, that's the case.

Mr. Bruce Wade: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what do paramedics and pilots think about the job that we're doing as a committee here, and specifically, because the minister went at me directly on this, what does the front line think about the job that I'm doing here on their behalf?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, as in any situation, there will be pros and cons, of course. But I can speak for the helicopter side: kudos. I can't speak for the fixed-wing colleagues. There are some tremendous people there; they do some really good work. Unfortunately, we're two different worlds. The rotary-wing side of this is very senior people, very experienced people. This is a pinnacle position, multi-engine IFR helicopters, whether it's in medevac or offshore oil. We see failings in the system, and we think the committee has been doing good work to try and uncover these failings.

Mr. Frank Klees: I want to make the point, Mr. Wade, that while I have been hard on the system, and while I've had a good deal to say about the lack of resources, at no time did I ever impugn individuals on the front line.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Absolutely not.

Mr. Frank Klees: In fact, the reason that we're doing what we're doing is because, out of respect of the work that's being done on the front lines, we want to ensure that they have the proper resources, that they have the respect of the Minister of Health and all those who have an obligation to ensure they're properly supported.

I will just switch a little bit here in terms of an issue that I was discussing previously with Ms. Beecher. That's the whole issue of resourcing and training of paramedics, the whole concept of how Ornge was handed essentially not only the monopoly to deliver air ambulance service in Ontario but also on the training side. What is your assessment of how well Ornge has done in terms of training their paramedics and training their pilots?

Mr. Bruce Wade: The paramedics as a whole, and this is only because I work alongside them daily, have complained for quite some time that the—I think the term is—speed of the training was not adequate. I know of one individual paramedic who spent five years trying to get certified as a critical care paramedic. I don't remember in prior years this ever being a problem, getting people trained. I don't know what the problem is within their training system.

On the pilot side of it, up until just recently, of course, we were all working for Canadian Helicopters on the rotary side, and every single one of us would go to flight safety in Florida. We'd be there for essentially a week and do all your simulator work in level D full-motion simulators, similar to what Air Canada would use for their triple 7s. Now the bulk of the pilots are of course going to New Jersey on the AW139 simulator—again, one of the most complex simulators in the world.

What we have noticed is that on the S-76 side of it, in particular, the training seems to have slowed down. We're hearing rumours that we'll be doing it on the aircraft, which is kind of regressive by about 10 or 15 years, because you can't do the full range of emergency procedures that one would normally expect to anticipate in the air.

On the 139 side, it's all in New Jersey. It's a very extensive program and it's terribly expensive. That is a superior program.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Wade, you made reference to Canadian Helicopters. I referred earlier, when I was having a discussion with Ms. Beecher in terms of the kind of efficiency and response to calls when the service was being provided by Canadian Helicopters and Voyageur, that that rating was 98%. If, in fact, there couldn't be a response, if they couldn't respond either by helicopter or by a fixed-wing aircraft, there would be a financial penalty—

Mr. Bruce Wade: That's my understanding, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —that the carrier had to pay to the Ministry of Health. We now, of course, have a situation where there's no such accountability.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Which is one of my recommendations.

Mr. Frank Klees: My question to you, knowing—and you may have seen the testimony from Mr. Tom Rothfels who, when he was sitting in your chair, said he is convinced that the core competency is simply not there at Ornge to operate the airline side of it, the aircraft side. Is it your opinion that one of the fixes of the problem would be to restore that helicopter operation back into the hands of—whether it's Canadian Helicopters—or at the very least, put that up for a public tender so that we can have some bidding into that contract to ensure we get the core competency to deliver that service?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I would say it is, because a helicopter is an extraordinarily technologically advanced piece of gear. It's not something that an organization with no aviation history in helicopters can just pick up overnight and carry on with. It's being demonstrated daily, unfortunately, and I work there.

Mr. Frank Klees: I just have one last question in this round. It relates to an email that you sent and was addressed to Deb Matthews, Mr. Gravelle and Mr. Mauro, Ms. Gélinas and Mr. Singh. It was in response to a release put out by Ornge in which they say, "Ornge continues to add to its front-line staff team to ensure the best possible patient care. There is now a team of 217 paramedics at Ornge. That's 10 more medics than at this time last year." That was June 7.

You responded to that and you were not very pleased about the spin that was being put on that. In fact, you say, "The actual facts remain: Medics are routinely, chronically and, without regard to proper medevac capability, removed or just not available for the trauma helicopter in Thunder Bay. All of you know this has been going on for nearly two years."

"We are fully grounded without medics. Ornge claims to the press and others the base is staffed 24 hours per day. This statement, while technically correct, is less than honest."

I would like you to just comment on that. Tell me, when people like yourself and other front-line staff see this kind of communication come from the new management team at Ornge, what is it telling you?

Mr. Bruce Wade: In Thunder Bay, it's not met with a great deal of joy, because we've been pushing for years to have proper staffing levels. It's disappointing because the recommendations are there. We know from the front lines what has to be done. It's disappointing. I'm hoping that we do see progress. I'm hoping that by being here today, the message once again gets through to the right people that we do need the support on the front end. We do need these helicopters staffed properly. We'd like to engage in good, honest, open dialogue and build a relationship of trust, but it's not helping.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you for coming down. Welcome to Queen's Park.

I would like you to try to do a little memory exercise there. Feel free to refer to any of your notes, if that helps. When would you say that people started to report problems with staffing in Thunder Bay?

Mr. Bruce Wade: It would have been about three years ago, approximately, when the very first airplane was put into service. I don't have the exact date, but I'm sure with all the journals here, we could probably find it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So the first time that Ornge purchased its own aircraft and put it into service?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So at the same time as they did that, they changed the staffing level?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes. Well, they didn't technically change the staffing level; they added the airplane and the fixed-wing colleagues who fly that. What they didn't do, for a period of time, is increase the number of paramedics on shift. Initially, the aircraft was announced publicly as a support to the cardiac care unit in the Thunder Bay hospital. It was on standby three days a week to bring patients, I'm assuming, to southern Ontario for additional medical care. The medics were on standby for the airplane if the need arose, but they stayed with the helicopter.

Eventually, they moved the paramedics over to another facility, and the focus started shifting to staffing the airplane first and leaving the helicopter as a secondary tool, which essentially is quite useless without paramedics. It was about two and a half to three years ago.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Have things varied since? Did it ever get better?

Mr. Bruce Wade: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It stayed the same.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who was aware of this?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, everybody in Thunder Bay, pilots and paramedics alike. Plus, we all raised issues with—I went to my employer, which at that time, of course, was CHL. I know the paramedics, almost without exception, were raising this issue with Ornge management, and nothing changed.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. I'll stick with who knew about it. Did you ever have an opportunity to go outside of your supervisor and tell upper management at Ornge what was going on and that you didn't agree with the understaffing?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Not really. Ornge didn't really want to hear from us at all.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Ah. And you knew this—

Mr. Bruce Wade: It's changed now, because we're actually there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you knew that they didn't want to hear from you—how did you know that?

Mr. Bruce Wade: We were told in no uncertain terms throughout the system that we were essentially there to fly and not to ask questions. It was nothing in the form of a memo; it was just a very common understanding. They didn't want to hear from us.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Can you compare, in pros and cons, the model initially, which was to outsource the aircraft side completely; and the new model, which was to integrate the aircraft and to have it—pros and cons. If you could just kind of sketch that out really quickly: if there's any benefit to integrating it, or if it was only a con.

Mr. Bruce Wade: I'm trying to be fair. I haven't seen a benefit to integrating it. Maybe the benefit would be that all staff now work for one organization, perhaps. It has never been an issue before as far as relationships go or team co-operation goes. But from the efficiencies side, as a private contractor operating the helicopters, we were staffed, and those helicopters were available 24 hours a day—staffed, not sitting in a hangar with pilots watching a movie upstairs because we don't have any medics. That, to me, is the single-biggest frustration that we're dealing with. Put medics on the helicopters, all of them, 24 hours a day, and most of these problems start going away. It's lives here; it's not a game.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So that's one issue. Are there any other issues still ongoing besides this issue of the staffing with respect to having aircraft available but not having enough staff to actually put them in the air and save lives? Are there other issues that are still ongoing that haven't been rectified?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes. There are things that are starting to happen recently since we all transitioned in.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What are those issues?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, pilots now—and I'm specifically thinking Thunder Bay—have on occasion been picked up by a private charter and flown to Moosonee to fly that helicopter and leave the Thunder Bay base completely uncovered. That shouldn't be happening.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Is that happening on a regular basis systemically, or is it a one-off thing?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, it happened to me personally in May twice. As far as I'm aware, talking to some colleagues yesterday, this happened on one or two occasions just this week.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What is the problem, then? What's going on? Why is that happening?

Mr. Bruce Wade: We think it's understaffing. It has to be. There's just not enough pilots to fly the helicopters.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So now they're outsourcing on a one-off basis to get private companies to fly?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes. One of the SOA carriers was contracted on a few occasions to pick the pilots up at the beginning of a shift, fly us to Moosonee and then bring us home at the end of the shift.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So that the base in Moosonee would have pilots?

Mr. Bruce Wade: For sure, yes. No question.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Otherwise, if you hadn't gone, there wouldn't have been a pilot?

Mr. Bruce Wade: There wouldn't have been pilots there. Moving us from Thunder Bay to Moosonee staffed that helicopter and left this one grounded. This has happened on a number of occasions. I don't recall ever having this situation before. This is because so many people have left, and the people that have recently been hired—I stand to be corrected on this, but I don't think any of the new hires are yet online. Perhaps maybe one or two are; I don't know. But we're very short-staffed as far as front-line operational pilots right now.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You wrote to the minister explaining your concerns, and you received a letter back. Did you ever communicate any of your concerns before, perhaps a year, two years, three years ago?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes, I would have to say I did. To whom, I wouldn't recall. I've been fairly vocal on trying to maintain services in the northwest region for a long time.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Was it someone in the government that you expressed your concern to? In what manner did you express concern?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Honestly, I'm not sure, but I have been very vocal trying to keep the service levels up.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: In terms of your own experience, have you seen ministry folks come to inspect the sites, to do some oversight, to see what's going on, to ensure that the standards are maintained, to ensure the staffing is at the level it should be?

Mr. Bruce Wade: This spring there was an individual on the aviation side—his name escapes me, unfortunately. He used to be with the Ministry of Natural Resources; he may very well still be there. Ken Wong, that was the gentleman's name. He did whatever audit metrics that he does. We didn't talk to him; he just came and did whatever he did and carried on.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And where was that?

Mr. Bruce Wade: That was in Thunder Bay.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thunder Bay?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And that was one time in the spring?

1510

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes. It wasn't too long ago.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: This year?

Mr. Bruce Wade: This year, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. Besides that, are you aware of any other time that ministry officials came to do an audit or to just check up on the standards or what's going on at the base in Thunder Bay?

Mr. Bruce Wade: As a front-line pilot, I wouldn't even pay attention.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You would not?

Mr. Bruce Wade: No. If the ministry people had been through every day, I wouldn't even have realized it.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's fine.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Just because this is—nobody comes and audits locally the pilots?

Mr. Bruce Wade: No. It's the systems that are in place, perhaps their record-keeping, their policies or procedures—things along those lines. But as far as the operational pilots, we're done by Transport Canada every year, separately.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you report to Transport Canada for every time you fly?

Mr. Bruce Wade: No. The pilots after a flight enter the flight data into the Ornge computer system, so they have all the information of start and stop times, where we went to, how many people were on board—things of that nature.

There's also an operational flight plan that's maintained that's a Transport Canada requirement. That's maintained in the offices for a specific period of time. I don't know how long they have to keep them. Transport can take a random sampling of those at any time. But as far as reporting flights to Transport, no, that's not the case.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you report it into the Ornge database.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Has this changed since you went to the Agusta helicopters?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I fly the S-76 still, in Thunder Bay, Moosonee and Kenora. All the other bases are on the AW139, and we all use the same computer software, the same terminals. So I'm going to make the assumption that their flight data entry is exactly the same that we're putting into our system.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And there is not more data that is updated directly from the helicopter from one—you haven't transitioned to the new helicopter.

Mr. Bruce Wade: No. I've done the ground school, but our training was cancelled because it was announced that we're not getting it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you will not be getting the new helicopter?

Mr. Bruce Wade: "For the foreseeable future" was what we were told, and we don't know what that means. We would have to speculate it would be at least a year just because of how busy the simulators are in New Jersey. This is an extensive program of transition, so we can't see it happening in the next 12 months.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And those are the simulators from Agusta.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did we know about this when we planned the transition or did you just find out about this recently?

Mr. Bruce Wade: That's fairly recent. I don't know the exact date, but Mr. Feeley came to Thunder Bay to hold a one-hour meeting with us and tell us and our Kenora colleagues on a conference call that we weren't getting that helicopter for the foreseeable future, which was met, quite frankly, with no surprise from any of us. I think he was somewhat surprised that we weren't upset or shocked—because we didn't expect we'd get it anyway.

Northwestern Ontario, for the last three years, has been substantially neglected, and it's unfortunate.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: To summarize your concerns, putting it bluntly, one is staffing concerns, that there are not adequate medics to put the aircraft in the air?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Number one.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Two is that there's not adequate helicopters to service northern Ontario, and helicopters are necessary because of the terrain and the distances. There are certain places and locations that a fixed-wing just can't be the option; you need to have a helicopter to go in.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Partially. The numbers of helicopters are not an issue. We have more helicopters now than we did before. There are the 10 Agustas and there are six S-76s available. The problem is, we don't have enough pilots to fly them.

I actually have—you can have copies of this as well. This is actually the rotor-wing pilot seniority list, July 10 of this year. There are 75 names on it, and I'm going to guess that—one, two, three, four, five, six—maybe seven probably aren't even online yet. We're short in Thunder Bay. Kenora is critically short. Moosonee is also short because of having to fly pilots around the province to cover. I do not know what the staffing levels are in southern Ontario.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you feel that northern Ontario is being neglected?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes; for sure, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And that the people of northern Ontario are not receiving the quality of service they should be receiving because of staffing decisions related to the north of Ontario?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I want to come back a little bit to the data entry that we were talking about. The ministry said that the data that they were receiving from Ornge was inflated, that Ornge was reporting more flights than actually happened and was reporting more transport than actually happened. Were you ever told to change the way you reported what you did?

Mr. Bruce Wade: No. No; we've always, as far as I can remember, entered the same type of information: the flight number, a patient number, to and from locations. All the flight data records and things are—I'll just pull one out at random; this is the same thing. Oh, here I pulled out a page where there's no medics on staff so we don't do anything. Pilot names—this has never changed, none of this reporting, whether it's this book or the data we enter into the computers, has ever changed. It's just a different name on the system. That's all.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So, how could those reports not be accurate?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I don't know.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You don't know?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I don't know because we enter the data as we finish our flights and paperwork.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Same thing with the medics?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes, yes, same thing with the medics. It's all the same. It has never changed.

M^{me} France G  linas: So, whether it was paper form and has now gone to a computer-based way to enter it—can you imagine why the data is different now than it was before?

Mr. Bruce Wade: No.

M^{me} France G  linas: Have you seen the numbers for your base to see if it's any different than what you remember?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I have not seen any printed reports of the information that we enter, with the exception of aircraft out-of-service reports, which we can't access any longer, which tell you how long an aircraft has been out of service and for what reason.

But as far as the flight data goes, there's no reason it should be any different. The only way to do it would be to take a year's worth of reports, if that could be generated, and compare them with the daily journals because the same stuff that's in here is in the flight data report. It shouldn't be any different.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you have about three minutes.

M^{me} France G  linas: You've talked about the email that you have written to the ministry. You said that you have been fairly vocal for the last three years. Has anybody that you've talked to ever answered back?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I did get a letter back from the minister.

M^{me} France G  linas: That's from this summer, but from before?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Prior to that, not that I can recall. I believe I got an email recently from Michael Gravelle, who thanked me for being a passionate advocate, and he supports what we're trying to do. But, as far as prior to the story breaking, I don't think I did.

M^{me} France G  linas: Were you surprised when you saw what happened at Ornge, when you saw the headlines in the paper? Did you see it coming?

Mr. Bruce Wade: We saw a lot of it coming but, quite frankly, some of the stuff that was reported was so far beyond what any of us were ever anticipating seeing. It was flabbergasting. We had no idea the depth that this was going to go. We saw it from the front lines. We saw a deterioration of service. It was a shock, an absolute shock.

M^{me} France G  linas: When you say that you saw a deterioration of service, are you talking about the deterioration you saw three years ago that stayed the same or was it getting worse and worse before December when it hit the front page of the paper?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes, it was still eroding on the operational side, not the numbers of medics and staffing, because that got to the bottom and it stayed there, but the numbers of pilots—the closer we got to having to move to Ornge, the more and more left. The service erosion really started a downward trend as far as being able to put pilots in seats and keeping aircraft staffed. That compounded the situation.

M^{me} France G  linas: Although you never did the transition to the new aircraft, it was doing the transition from Canadian Helicopters to Ornge that scared a lot of pilots away?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: Although they were not necessarily going to change aircraft, because, as you say, Moosonee, yourself and Kenora have not changed.

Mr. Bruce Wade: It was strictly an operator change that was the impetus for people's departure. A lot of those who left had been trained on the 139, so they took an extraordinarily valuable endorsement with them and have gone international to other operators.

M^{me} France G  linas: They hadn't worked for Ornge yet. How did they know that they were not going to like it?

Mr. Bruce Wade: We have worked alongside Ornge for years. We witnessed the intimidation tactics that they used against the medics, and we witnessed the frustrations they were having. You've got to remember that it doesn't matter if it's XYZ running the medics and ABC running the helicopters; we're one crew. We are a very tight group. We operate in very challenging environments, and we talk to each other. So the frustration level that was evident there and the tactics that were being used—

M^{me} France G  linas: Can you give me an example of an intimidation tactic that you saw or heard of?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I'd rather not, because it would potentially identify an individual who would like to remain anonymous, but there were threats against people's employment from individuals within the old structure.

M^{me} France G  linas: So—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You are out of time, unless you wanted to—

M^{me} France G  linas: I'll borrow a few minutes from my next round.

It would be their supervisor or management that would threaten their own employees?

Mr. Bruce Wade: On occasion, yes. I think that's gone now. I think that's changed. I think that's a very positive step, there.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, very well. We'll move to the government. Ms. Sandals?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Welcome, Mr. Wade, and thank you for coming in here, because it is very helpful for us to get the front-line perspective. Just to be clear, you flew for Canadian Helicopters Ltd. for 11 years?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Approximately, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Then when did you actually start with Ornge?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Our base was transitioned into Ornge on, I believe, March 22 or 23.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, March 2012, so you've been there for three or four months.

Mr. Bruce Wade: But remember, we were working alongside them for years.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You're still flying the S-76, but you started training. When you first arrived in March, then, did you—because you said you'd had some training, the preliminary training for the new helicopters.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Right. Last year, our base was scheduled for the Agusta simulators. That training was cancelled, as was Kenora's. Then they reinstated it again in the fall. Kenora had a ground school, and then we had a ground school. I'm not sure the date of the ground school, but I think it was some time in February.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It was last fall, of 2011.

Mr. Bruce Wade: It was reinstated in 2012, reinstated for the ground school component, which we had, I believe, sometime between February and April.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So in fact, the ground training for the new Agusta helicopters actually was while you were still with Canadian Helicopters Ltd. in anticipation that you would transfer?

Mr. Bruce Wade: No. We had actually transferred into Ornge at that time, and yes, it was after March 22. It was some time in April, May—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it might have been April, then. Early on in your experience with Ornge, you did the preliminary ground school training, and now you're waiting for the simulator. Okay.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes, that's right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It's clear from the conversation that you've written a lot of emails to various people. Unfortunately, my colleagues and I here haven't seen any of those until yesterday because they all went to the opposition; they didn't come to us.

In terms of the committee members, the mailing list was quite selective. None of my colleagues have seen them on this side of the table, so we're just trying to get up to speed.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Sure.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: One of the things that I noticed that you seem to be concerned about, and this is actually one that I think mainly went to the local Liberal MPPs on June 13 of this year and talks about, "On June 24, Ornge is making a huge operations announcement. All indications are the removal of the Thunder Bay trauma helicopter will be among those announcements." Clearly that didn't happen, so I'm wondering—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sorry, do you need time to find that email?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, I don't believe I actually have it with me, but it's okay. Carry on.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, and I wasn't going to read any more of it. But you're not disagreeing with the idea that you were concerned—

Mr. Bruce Wade: Oh, very much so.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —that the trauma helicopter would be cancelled. It didn't get cancelled. Why was it that you were convinced it would be cancelled and you were obviously writing to the minister and local MPPs—

Mr. Bruce Wade: As you well saw, as an advocate to keep the system—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. So what was it that made you think that it was going to be cancelled?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, there was a meeting conducted in Timmins by some senior management where operational discussions had taken place, and it was mentioned in that meeting that there was a possible helicopter being removed, potential helicopter removal. Later on, there was another meeting in Kenora where Mr. McKerlie—I'm getting this second-hand; I was not at the meeting—gave them a hypothetical that, in his opinion, Thunder Bay would probably lose its helicopter and those pilots would be absorbed into other bases in the system. The premise from that was because they were looking at the last two or three years' worth of usage data.

So if I had come in in January or February and had been looking at the last two or three years' worth of usage data, I would probably draw a similar conclusion, but the usage data is completely flawed. We're not used because we don't have medics because they won't staff the helicopter properly. So that's where the alarm bells were raised and that's why the alarm bells were raised.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So, in this case then, it would appear that Mr. McKerlie was meeting with people in Timmins, meeting with people in Kenora, meeting with people at the various bases, and they said, "You need to look at the data that way," and the decision was reconsidered. That sounds to me like listening to the feedback on the ground. What I keep hearing you saying to the others is, "Well, there's no point in talking to people because they won't listen."

Mr. Bruce Wade: At one point there was zero point of talking to anybody. Now, I will always give credit where credit is due. There have been a couple of individuals that have been brought into the system—I have not personally talked with them—that seem to know what is the right thing to do, and they seem to be starting to pay some attention.

However, having said that, you can listen for ages, but until we physically start seeing proper staffing, we might as well be talking to the doorway.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But what I think I just heard you say was that you thought that it was going to be cancelled and in the end in fact it wasn't cancelled, that people seem to have listened and said, "Okay, let's have a re-look at the data"—

Mr. Bruce Wade: I'm hoping that's the case.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —and that there was some action in a way that you would want the action to have gone.

What I'm having a bit of a problem dealing with is we're getting very mixed messages. We've heard from a front-line paramedic today who said that there are more paramedics available—he was talking about a different base than you—and he said, "But we have seen the staffing go up for paramedics." We've heard by email from a Thunder Bay fixed-wing pilot—in fact, a whole bunch of fixed-wing pilots—who are saying, "Gee, it's gotten a whole bunch better,” and I hear you saying “No, it’s gotten worse,” or it hasn’t gotten any better.

Mr. Bruce Wade: It has not gotten better. The fixed-wing aircraft are properly staffed. The medics come in, they’re dispatched on an airplane. The second crew comes in, they’re dispatched on an airplane. There’s no third crew coming in. That helicopter stays grounded.

If you want to look at this book, it shows you every single shift for 2012, and it will show you when there were medics on and when there were no medics for the helicopter. It has not gotten better on the rotary side. The fixed-wing side is great. I think they’re doing a tremendous job; I really do. But we can also do a very admirable job. We can save lives. We can get into places that nobody else can get into.

Just this week, there was a call to a bush scene where it was a co-operative effort with the single medic on the helicopter—a critical care medic by himself—and our two pilots who got that helicopter into a location they should never have been able to go into to get somebody who had an accident and had been out in the bush for hours before being found and got them to a trauma centre. Had that one medic not been turned around on the plane to come back to Thunder Bay, there’s a very strong probability that that individual would have died in the bush.

It’s not gotten better from the rotary perspective. From the fixed-wing side, kudos to my colleagues. They’re doing great work.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Again, what I think I hear you saying is that when it’s appropriate to dispatch a helicopter, people are making an effort to make sure that the helicopter gets dispatched when it’s necessary to get the helicopter in there.

Mr. Bruce Wade: In that one instance, it just happened to be a situation where they were only 10 minutes away and they could turn the plane around. That’s one example. There are many other examples where we go to the hospital on a call and drop a patient off, and the land medics say, “Why weren’t you guys at the accident on such-and-such a highway last Tuesday? We were there.” We didn’t get a call. We had no medics.

The only way that you can guarantee that the only trauma helicopter in 1,500 kilometres is properly operated and properly utilized is to have the paramedics on board all the time. We need a third crew of medics in Thunder Bay. We don’t need to reduce a shift of medics from the airplanes; we need another shift of medics to staff the third aircraft, which is the helicopter.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And this is where I’m getting really confused, because in this email that you—now I’m looking at one that you actually sent on Boxing Day, which is the first one that I’ve seen, but there may have been some before that, I don’t know, because as I say, we weren’t getting them. But the first one I’ve seen is one that you sent on Boxing Day to the minister, and in this case copied the opposition. The request at that point was to immediately stop the transfer of Canadian Helicopters’ EMS pilots to the direct employ of Ornge. Then there are several others that I’ve seen that pick up on that theme. To me, that’s something very much different than what you’re saying today, which is not so much who’s managing the helicopters; it’s, are there enough critical care paramedics being trained and hired, and the need to increase the staffing of paramedics—

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, it’s twofold—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You keep talking about paramedic staffing—I mean, quite frankly, I don’t care who runs the helicopters, but if we’re trying to sort out as a committee what is the critical problem here, it seems to me that what you keep telling us over and over and over again is: You need another paramedic, you need a 24-hour third crew in Thunder Bay, and that would be your recommendation.

Mr. Bruce Wade: No, it’s twofold: (1) We need paramedics on that helicopter, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year. (2) The inability to staff the helicopters with pilots has been exacerbated over the last 12 months as people have left because they don’t want to work for Ornge.

I’m hoping in the long term whatever the committee recommends is listened to on all fronts. I’m hoping that the taxpayer gets the best value. I’m hoping that we are in a situation where, if it’s an outside contractor, they can retain the pilots, and if it’s Ornge, that they can start listening to why people have left. It’s been claimed by one individual that we don’t know why pilots have left us. Well, we’ve been telling them, time and time again.

So I’m not going to sit here and support 100%, Ornge should be operating the helicopters; I’m not going to sit here and support 100%, an outside contractor should employ the helicopters. What I am saying is that it has to be an operator that can engage its staff; it has to be an operator that has an operational history to draw on; it has to be an operator that can maintain, and in fact foster, good relations with its employees.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And again, what we’re getting is a conflict, from what you’re saying and the other information we’ve seen, because the letter from Poul-Erik Binderup—I believe that’s the pronunciation. He talks about—“In December of last year we watched as the fabric of the Ornge machine began to unravel....” So this is as the story unfolds. And then he talks about—

Mr. Bruce Wade: I think that was as shocking to him as everybody else, quite frankly.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. And, “The Honourable Deb Matthews’s installation of Mr. Ron McKerlie as interim CEO, and the major corporate restructuring that followed, gave us a sense of hope that we would be able to continue to serve the people of Ontario as medevac pilots.” Then he expresses some concern. He talks about being very pleased with the Pilatus PC-12 and the job they’re able to do, and talks about being very proud of the work that the medevac pilots can do.

Then today, we’ve got another email, which is other pilots responding to his email. I counted them up, and there must be 30 Ornge pilots—

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes, it would be all the fixed-wing pilots. Sure.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But we've got a whole bunch of happy campers who are pleased that things have turned around, that things have gotten a whole bunch better, and who are willing to sign their name and say so publicly.

This is another Thunder Bay pilot saying, "I ... agree 100% with the above letter written by Captain Poul-Erik Binderup. I would also like to add that I have been involved in aviation since 1989 and I have flown as a medevac pilot on and off since the mid-1990s. It was not better 18 years ago or four years ago. It is better now.

"Ornge fixed-wing has its problems but these problems should not lead to, as some would like, a full shutdown of Ornge Air.

"Going back to the 'good old days' of contract air services would not be better nor safer for the citizens of Ontario."

As I say, there are literally 30 responses here, where pilots, who are agreeing to sign their names, say, "I 100% support this." "I support your letter to the standing committee." "I support what this other pilot is saying about how Ornge has turned around and we're very proud of the work that Ornge does." So if—

Mr. Bruce Wade: You're missing a fundamental point: That's the fixed-wing side. This whole discussion I've been having with you has got nothing to do with the fixed-wing operations. The fixed-wing pilots—not all, but the majority of them—are coming into their perhaps second or third job. They're going to move on somewhere else, into Porter or Jazz or on up the line. The rotor-wing side of the house is a completely different ball game. We've got aircraft that are worth $14 million or $15 million. We have a simulator that's equal in complexity to the aircraft. We have, all totalled, roughly $150 million worth of physical assets sitting there, whether it's the Sikorsky-76s or the AW139s.

We're not entry-level pilots here; we are the other end of the industry. We're top-level pilots. We hold the highest licences in licence categories. We operate complex, multi-engine IFR helicopters in all weather conditions, under all circumstances. For us, there's only one more move, and that's not upwards; it's lateral. It's lateral into the same type of aircraft to another operation.

For us who are there, who are flying these things, we want to be flying medevac. We don't want to fly off-shore; we have the opportunities. It's not an entry-level situation. It's not a second or third job situation; it's a career decision.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute and a half.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Well—

Mr. Bruce Wade: And I applaud my fixed-wing colleagues. I really do.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, but if you are saying that Ornge is—I totally get that flying a fixed-wing and flying a rotary are two different skill sets and that there are way more fixed-wing pilots than there are rotary-wing. I get that. I understand that you're two different skill sets of pilots, but I don't get, if Ornge is a good employer for some kinds of pilots, why is there an automatic presumption that it's a bad employer for another set of pilots?

I understand that when Dr. Mazza was there, he was very hard to work for and bullied people and all those things we've heard, but he's not there now.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Which is a good thing.

I think this, let's call it a friction, comes from the fact that almost all of the structure of Ornge Air is airline- or fixed-wing-operation-related people. There are, to my knowledge, maybe one or two who have any background in helicopters at all, and I don't know of any—again, I stand to be corrected here—who have any medevac background, with the exception of one individual, who's the interim operations manager on the rotary side, who comes from our ranks; he's one of our guys. That's where a lot of this is coming from, because we understand helicopters. Those other folks understand fixed-wing, but they don't understand what a helicopter is all about and how to properly use it in this environment.

Again, I'm not saying anything negative about the fixed-wing side; I'm not. They come from some very, very small operations and very suspect type of equipment into something that's brand new—good equipment. They're good people. They want to be doing what they're doing, but a lot of them are going to move elsewhere eventually. On our side, we just want to do our jobs. We want to get out there and save lives.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very good. Thank you—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But why can't the helicopter pilots transition into new equipment and do their jobs?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move on to the opposition. Mr. Klees, you have nine minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. I appreciate that clarification, Mr. Wade. I think you've been very clear about what the issue is.

I also want to refer to this letter from Mr. Binderup. What is somewhat concerning—in his letter, he makes reference to shutting down, or the fact that someone is suggesting that the operation be shut down. No one has ever suggested that. What's at issue is who manages it and what the competency is of the managers behind the operation.

If somehow there was a message that was spun through the front lines that someone is intent on shutting this operation down, it's simply not the case. What is the case is that we want to ensure that whoever is managing, whether it's the fixed-wing or whether it's the rotor-wing—that it's done with competency, and that the front line, whether they're fixed-wing pilots or helicopter pilots, can have the confidence that the organization behind them is able to protect them, to ensure the resources are there, to ensure the training is there, to ensure the maintenance is there. Quite frankly, I think you've made it very clear, Mr. Rothfels made it very clear and others have made it very clear that there's a lack of confidence in the Ornge organization in being able to do that.

There are people who, in this province, have been in that business for many, many years. They have the core competency. I think the question that we have to address is: Does it make more sense to continue to prop up an organization that has proven they don't have the competency? Or do we go to an organization and offer to have that organization run the operation so that we can get on with delivering the service? I'd just like your reaction to that position.

Mr. Bruce Wade: I agree.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to refer to the minister's letter to you dated April 2, and first of all express a disappointment that once again we have nice words coming from the Minister of Health: "Thank you," Mr. Wade, for "your interest.... I am particularly interested in your willingness to serve on the board...." It's copied to Mr. McKerlie, and that's the end of it. She refers to the commitment of the government to transparency and accountability.

Mr. Wade, I have on my iPad here a very interesting website. It's called Aircraft Out of Service Report by Ornge—there it is. I actually got a password for that, which allowed me, up until recently, to go on on a daily basis and determine which aircraft were out of service. When did this stop getting reported?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Out-of-service reports are still entered. They're entered by shift, daily, by the pilots that are on duty. The information is still going in.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is it available to the public?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I haven't physically been able to search our service reports in the past couple of months—

Mr. Frank Klees: We can't get in this anymore, so someone is obviously blocking us.

Mr. Bruce Wade: We can't see what our downstaff was.

Mr. Frank Klees: Here's my question: Wouldn't it be interesting if Ornge actually agreed to make that aircraft out-of-service report totally transparent and public so that people could see for themselves so that this wouldn't have to be a kind of confidential discussion between backroom people, and we wouldn't have to discuss or debate how many aircraft were out of service because of paramedic shortages or because of pilot shortages? Because all of that should be on that website. Would you agree?

Mr. Bruce Wade: I would agree that it would be very interesting for the committee as a whole to see that information. Whether it should be in the public domain, I would draw hesitation there. I think I mentioned in my opening remarks that recently it was admitted to that they have a 54% availability rate at a cost that's no more than the previous vendor. A 54% availability on the medevac system—we're talking rotary-wing; we're not talking airplanes here—to me is scary.

Mr. Frank Klees: In other words, 54% of the time they're available to respond to calls. The rest of the time, regardless of what those calls are—

Mr. Bruce Wade: They're not available.

Mr. Frank Klees: They're not available.

Mr. Bruce Wade: For whatever reason: no medics, no pilots, perhaps a mechanical issue.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you help us to understand what the implication is? Do you have any examples of times when that availability was not there, and the implication, the risk to the patient? Because we're constantly being told here that patient risk is not an issue, that people—

Mr. Bruce Wade: Quite frankly, if the helicopter is not available because there's no pilot on it or no paramedics on it, that's a risk to somebody.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you have a specific example that you personally are aware of where there was a significant result to a patient, perhaps that a patient died, in terms of your recent experience, because the helicopter was not available?

Mr. Bruce Wade: We would only hear through the land medics that a call that they were on that we were called for—they were asking for our help—went unfilled, because if a call came in to the dispatch centre and we weren't staffed, we'd never get the call. So you find out these things after the fact, when they ask you at the hospital, "Where were you on such-and-such a day? We were down Highway 61. We had a car rolled over; we needed you. Where were you?" We were sitting at the base with no medics.

So from the actual date or day of an occurrence, unless we were privy to the call information coming in, we wouldn't even hear about it.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute and a half.

Mr. Bruce Wade: I'd like to also wrap this up—we did have an incident a number of years ago where there was a plane crash north of Thunder Bay, approximately for us about a 40-minute flight. We were fuelled, ready to go, and they sent us to Ignace to pick up an inter-facility transfer patient. We were begging, "What about the plane crash?" All we got back from the communications centre was, "It's unconfirmed." Well, I'm sorry, but it's not unconfirmed. Thunder Bay is a major airport. In one case, this particular aircraft that went down was actually a Ministry of Natural Resources contractor who flies as an observation plane or a Bird Dog plane for the air tankers. We knew the plane. We knew where it was. We knew when it was down. We couldn't go and help.

Mr. Frank Klees: I want to close with this question, then: As a helicopter pilot, you are serving in a provincial air ambulance service. In your opinion, who at the end of the day has ultimate responsibility to ensure oversight of our air ambulance service?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Oh, that would have to fall with the Minister of Health, whoever the minister of the day would be.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move to the NDP. You have four minutes. That brings everybody up to 25.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure; thank you very much.

Thank you very much for your deputation today. At the tail end of the Liberals' questioning, a proposition was put to you, but you didn't get a chance to respond to it because the time had ended. I'd like you to respond to that, just to clarify the difference between why some of the fixed-wing pilots are happy with their circumstances and why that's not taking into consideration the different circumstances of the rotary-wing pilots. The question was thrown out there in the air, why can't helicopter pilots transition into the new equipment and why is that difficult? And what's the difference between the fixed-wing and the rotary-wing situation?

Mr. Bruce Wade: There isn't a problem transitioning into the new equipment for the pilot. The training is quite comprehensive. It's terribly expensive as well. You've got to realize, these are $125,000 worth of training going into this to transition on to this new aircraft. So it's a ground school component, then two weeks, approximately 48 to 50 hours, in the simulator. So the transition to the new equipment isn't a problem. It's a lot of work, but it should be a lot of work because it's a very technically advanced aircraft. So there isn't a problem there.

Now, of course, our bases aren't going to get it for the foreseeable future, so that has put everything to a grinding halt.

Am I on the wrong—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You're right.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Am I on the wrong track?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You're on the right track, just to answer that question of what's the difference. You've explained some of the difference. One, you're not going to get the helicopter; and two, the training that's required is quite expensive.

Mr. Bruce Wade: It is vastly more than the fixed-wing aircraft.

M^{me} France G  linas: But also if you can focus as—you came all the way down from Thunder Bay. You're pretty motivated to see changes. We get this letter from the fixed-wing that says, "Thank you very much; attaboy; good job; we're so happy." Then we get you, a pilot with years of experience who takes the time to come down here and tell us, "Come and help us. Things are not good." How come it could be so different? You're under the same new management. You're under the same new rules. Why do we have "attaboy" on one side and on the other side we have you coming here saying, "Help me"?

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, a lot of our fixed-wing colleagues come from older equipment, perhaps less capable airplanes, into a pretty nice airplane—technically advanced. But a lot of them are also coming in in very junior positions, building their time, building their experience and moving to other operators like WestJet or Porter or the airlines. It's where most of them want to go—not all; some want to stay with medevac, and kudos for that. So they're very happy to get an opportunity on a new aircraft type, new navigation types of equipment, technologically more advanced equipment so they can move on to the other operators. And they should be happy because it's a good opportunity for them. Those who want to make their career and stay also should be happy.

But on the helicopter side, we're not moving on. We're at the top end of the industry now, and we want to make sure that the culture to operate properly is there. We want to make sure that all the staffing level is there. We don't want to see our training eroded as has been evident lately. We want to make sure that we're using those full-motion simulators. The simulator mentioned in the letter isn't a true simulator; it's a flight-training device. It's a bank of screens; it's a procedures trainer. You're not on full motion. You go and do your training and then you do your check ride in the airplane. For us, we're using simulators that are every bit as complex as a 777 simulator. This is stuff where you could go in and you could train all procedures, all emergencies, all eventualities, right up to the point where you can be certified to fly that aircraft when you come out of the simulator and a full Transport Canada check ride. It's vastly different between the complexity of the helicopter operation and the simplicity of the fixed-wing operation.

Kudos to them. I think my colleagues on the fixed-wing side are doing some good work. But on the helicopter side, it needs work.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you, and we'll move to the government for four minutes of questioning.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just as a sidebar here so all the committee members understand: Mr. Klees had asked earlier if the minister would be able to return on Thursday from 4:30 to 7. Minister Matthews will be out of the country on Thursday. She was headed in the other direction, but she can make her way back and be here at 5:30. She was headed for London, but she is willing to turn around and be back at 5:30 today. So if you would really like to hear more from Minister Matthews, she will make herself available from 5:30 to 7. Obviously, we need to let her know which direction she should be heading in, east or west.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I think that the minister should turn around and come back. We look forward to seeing her.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. She will be here at 5:30, then.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, thank you for that. And we still—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And we still have time.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have another three minutes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Sorry for that little interruption.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Before you start, I'd like to actually invite all the members of the committee and the minister to come to Thunder Bay and talk to us sometime and see what's really going on. Listen to people. It shouldn't be an Ornge propaganda piece. Talk to us on the front lines. Take a random sampling. You'll hear differing opinion. You'll hear impassioned pleas. We want to do our jobs.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I know that Minister Matthews has visited some of the bases, so we will pass that along to her, that she has an invite to Thunder Bay.

You spoke about the concern that helicopter pilots had, which is their expertise at Ornge with respect to helicopters. I take it the majority of the air ambulance helicopter pilots have moved from Canadian Helicopters to Ornge. That sounds to me like that expertise is building. Why this concern that there will be no expertise?

Mr. Bruce Wade: There's no historical operational experience on the infrastructure that you need behind the scenes to make helicopters operate properly.

My engineering colleagues have told me that they're always short of spares. I know for certain there was a helicopter on the ramp in Thunder Bay that had been stripped of tail rotors, rotor blades and other components to put parts in another machine.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This is the old helicopters.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Yes, correct. I'm hearing things from others that—even with the new aircraft, there are some maintenance issues. They don't have enough parts; they don't have enough spares. There doesn't seem to be a supporting infrastructure that has the depth of experience and expertise needed to put all the pieces together. Again, if there is, I don't see it. I stand to be corrected. But it doesn't seem that way. We hope, again, that that kind of a culture is there, but we're just not seeing it.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because I know in something I've seen, it does discuss the issue of spare parts for helicopters, that being a somewhat different issue than spare parts for fixed-wing. I'm sorry; I don't know where that piece of paper went through my head, but it is an issue that I believe has been recognized.

I guess I'm just a little bit frustrated that there's just this, "No, you can't do it. Fixed-wing can do it, but helicopter can't." I'm trying to get a grasp on why—

Mr. Bruce Wade: Well, again, as I said, the bulk of the managerial structure all come from either airline backgrounds or fixed-wing operations of some sort. None of them, except for one individual, perhaps two, come from a helicopter side, and of those one or two individuals, none of them come from the medevac side, so they don't understand that we're not a scheduled airline service. We're not an inter-facility transfer that gets a call to go two hours from now. When we get a call, we go now. We have a 10-minute response time, which we could actually do if we had medics and fuel supply at our base. We don't even have fuel.

So I don't think they understand just what helicopters are all about—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But that's exactly—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And we are out of time.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. I was just going to say that's exactly what the medic that we were talking to this morning was talking about: getting on a helicopter, one of the new helicopters, and just having a few minutes to get out of there, once you got the call.

Mr. Bruce Wade: We're a good team. You should see it work.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What I heard this morning, in fact, was that team of the paramedic and the helicopter people getting out of there.

Mr. Bruce Wade: Sure.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Obviously, in London, there was an understanding of this.

Mr. Bruce Wade: But that doesn't come from the upper echelons of Ornge Air. That comes from the front-line pilots and paramedics who have done this job for years, that are a team, that can get the call, respond, get in the thing and get it airborne and get it to an accident scene in minutes. That's what we do. That's not what the administration does. That's what we do, and that has to be recognized. Whether it's the fixed-wing pilots responding to their calls—they do a good job. Whether it's us responding to our calls—we also do a good job, but we can't do that unless we have proper staffing all the way through, and a supporting cast behind the scenes that understands what we do.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much, Mr. Wade, for taking the time to come down from Thunder Bay to come before the committee. It's very much appreciated.

The committee will be recessed until 5:30 this afternoon.

Mr. Frank Klees: So, 5:30 until 7?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, 5:30 until 7. Thank you.

The committee recessed from 1604 to 1739.

MINISTRY OF HEALTH AND LONG-TERM CARE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, I will call this meeting to order. We have an hour and a half or so for questioning the minister. Thank you, Minister, for coming back. All I would ask this evening is that we respect each other's time so that we don't have to have standing orders that set certain amounts of time for questions and answers. If everyone respects each other, that would be great. The NDP is going first this evening. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you. Long time no see, Minister.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Happy to be back.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'd like to, more or less continue, where I had left off. That has to do with the warning signs that had gone off. I'll start with the freedom of access of information. So on March 25, 2010, the NDP filed a freedom of access of information; we want to know where Dr. Mazza's salary has gone. We get an answer back from your ministry on June 2 that tells us that they have 19 records that were found, responsive to our request, and that they've also gone to the emergency health services branch, and another 13 responsive records were found, but they were not able to grant us access to any of these records.

So we're now at June 22, 2010. This has been done. Nothing can be shared with us. But that information gave Ms. Patricia Li, your assistant deputy minister, and Ms. Janice Crawford, who was director of legal services branch at the time, that information. Did they share that with you?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: No, and I think it's very important that you understand what a responsive record is. A responsive record does not necessarily mean that we have the information that you're looking for. In fact, when Patricia Li was here, she testified. If you review her testimony, you will see that she made it clear: We did not have those numbers; we did not have those numbers until late December 2011.

I have a lot of respect for you. I know you're wanting to get at the truth. The truth is, we did not know how much Chris Mazza was making until we got a reply in late December—I think it was December 22, if I'm correct—following my meeting with the chair and with the COO. We got that number. That number was outrageous. It was twice as much, almost, as the highest-paid hospital CEOs. It was an outrageous number. That was the trigger, and that is when I knew there was something seriously wrong. It was one thing to hide numbers and use lots of legal arguments around why they could do that. It was another thing to have a number that was inexplicable, and then to find out later that, in addition to that, there were personal loans from Ornge to the CEO.

But when I heard how much Chris Mazza was getting paid, that was when I said, "The party is over. Send in a forensic audit team." And the forensic audit team started immediately—I think December 23. That was when we started to get the information that I think this committee is aware of now.

M^{me} France G  linas: But the point I'm making is that, had you asked back then—I mean, we had many people come and testify. Whether it was—Maria came, and Rhoda Beecher came this afternoon, and we asked her, "Did the government ever ask you how much Dr. Mazza was making? Did you ever get a request from the freedom of access to information that the NDP had put forward?" They all said the same thing: She knew exactly how to get the number. Had the government asked, she could have shared that, but the government never asked.

So the question remains. More than two years have passed now. We're in March 2010. This information is asked of your ministry because we have a suspicion as to what his salary is at, yet nobody goes and asks Ornge what the salary is.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: That's not in fact correct. We did ask. Responsive records would indicate that there were questions. We just didn't get answers. You heard Dr. Mazza here when he testified. He was asked—perhaps by you—"How much were you earning?" and he still was using a number that is far, far less than his compensation. So those numbers were kept hidden. Even when other members of the Ornge executive team voluntarily agreed to disclose their salaries—even though technically, they weren't required to do that—Dr. Mazza refused.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: If you agree that the salary was one of the biggest red flags, and if there was a request to disclose that salary and you didn't receive the information at that point, the issue is: Wouldn't that have set off some alarms? We were asking for this information, back in 2010, and we got some responsive records, but they didn't actually give us the information we wanted. The question that my colleague is asking is essentially that, once you received those responsive records that didn't give you the salary, wouldn't it be incumbent on you or officials at the ministry to be like, "Okay, we're paying the entire budget of Ornge. The CEO is not disclosing his salary, for whatever reason. We should do something further," like what you did, which was great, when you called and said, "Listen, I want that salary disclosed now," and you got it disclosed. Why wasn't that done two years ago?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Hindsight is fantastic. I, of course, wish I had then the information I have now. I do think that it's important that we learn whatever lessons can be learned from that. We fixed it for Ornge. We've made it very clear they are subject to salary disclosure now, so we fixed the problem.

I guess my question back to you is, what are your recommendations going forward that will make sure this never happens again?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Well, the recommendation would be that the institution may have people in it that will try to benefit from it financially. Various groups that are outsourced by the ministry may have people who are CEOs that may try to make more money or take more money. That may happen again, but the ministry and the minister will remain the overseers or the oversight mechanism. It's important for the people who are conducting the oversight to remain vigilant because the institutions that we work with may sometimes make mistakes, may do things that are improper, but it's incumbent on the government who's paying the cheque or footing the bill to put the checks and balances in place.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I completely agree, and that is why we have done every step we have taken since the Auditor General's report, since some of these wrongdoings came to light. We have put in place the right oversight.

M^{me} France G  linas: But Minister, let's say another agency shields its salaries, we file another FOI, and you still don't get an answer. Why did it sit there? If you did go and ask, and you didn't get an answer, why didn't you do something at that time to say, "No, you will have to give us that information. That information is information that should be available to the ministry." What assurance do we have that there aren't another two or three Ornges out there?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: As I say, hindsight is 20/20. Yes, when that salary did not show on the list—

M^{me} France G  linas: Will it happen now? Will there be follow-up if there is a request for a salary disclosure, and it doesn't come forward? Will there be—not only from Ornge but from the entire—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I can assure you that we will be ever-vigilant on that issue. I think it's important—

M^{me} France G  linas: But how can you assure us of that? Ministers change; ADMs change.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I think that is one lesson that we have all learned. That was something that, if I could do it again with the benefit of hindsight, I would have pursued further. I suspect that you, as an opposition critic, wish that you had pursued that. I suspect that the Conservative Party, if they could do it again, would have pursued that. We all had access to the same information.

M^{me} France G  linas: No, you had access to some records. We didn't know if you knew or not. We knew that you had 19 records, that you were not willing to share those 19 records. We did not know that, in those 19 records, you never got the answer you wanted. Only you knew that.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: You knew that they weren't on the sunshine list.

M^{me} France G  linas: Absolutely. That's why we filed an FOI.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: You knew they weren't on the sunshine list, so—

M^{me} France G  linas: And that there were 19 records telling you what their salary was going to be.

But I'm going to go to estimates—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I just want to be clear also that the FOI process is completely independent from the minister's office. I am not involved, nor is my office involved, in FOIs.

M^{me} France G  linas: But next time that somebody FOIs a salary from the sunshine list, and they don't get an answer, I'm hoping they'll let you know.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I think that is a very important recommendation that might come out of this committee as a way to move forward. What is the best advice you can give, not just me—

M^{me} France G  linas: If I don't give you the advice, will you do it anyway?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I will absolutely do it anyway. I think you can rest assured.

M^{me} France G  linas: All right.

The next one has to do with estimates. Same scenario: Here we are; the NDP asked 47 questions about Ornge. You couldn't answer those questions. You promised answers. Those answers never came. That leads us to believe years later that you did get the answer, didn't like what you saw and tried working on it or doing something. To think that those questions were out there and they simply went to the garbage—which one is it?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: We've been over this territory before. You asked my deputy, when he appeared, about that very issue. He said that it should've been responded to. It wasn't, and he apologized for that. That's all I can say as well.

M^{me} France G  linas: But here again comes the—are there other Ornges out there? Are there other questions we asked—both opposition parties, actually, by that time were asking questions about Ornge. Both of us were kind of expecting answers to come forward—well, I'll stick with my party. We expect answers to come forward; they didn't. Then I have a deputy who comes and says, "I'm sorry it didn't come." That's not enough. I want him to say, "Well, next time the opposition raises 47 questions, we will follow through. We have changed. We have learned. We've done something different"—because right now, where I sit, it looks like the same thing could be played out by the same players exactly the way it went with Ornge 100 more times.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: We all have a role to play. I mean, there is a role for government, there is a role for opposition, there is a role for the Auditor General; there's a role for the media. In this case, all of us wish this had come to light sooner, but in fact it has come to light. Many, many people are no longer employed at Ornge as a result of that work.

We would all like to have seen that happen sooner, but in the end, we got to where we needed to get to.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just to change track a little bit, Dr. Mazza testified here, and I'm sure you're very familiar with his testimony. One of the issues that came up was that he testified—and actually, not just Dr. Mazza; many other individuals testified, and some bureaucrats also supported this and corroborated—that there was regular communication from Ornge advising what they were doing in terms of things that are not questionable, in terms of corporate restructuring—not numbers that may have been fudged; let's put those aside. We know for certain that the corporate restructuring that resulted in the salary of Dr. Mazza being hidden was disclosed to the ministry. The for-profit entities were all disclosed to the ministry—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: And to the opposition parties.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes—and the new strategy of integrating the aircraft side into Ornge was all disclosed to the ministry. All throughout, every step of the way, Dr. Mazza testified that the minister was apprised of the direction that Ornge was taking and the structure in which they were setting everything up.

First of all, do you agree that you and your ministry were apprised while you were minister, from 2009 to 2011, that during that time period, those two years, you were apprised of what was going on at Ornge in terms of overall structure and strategy?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: There were parts of Ornge's information that we did get, numbers not always accurate, some stuff hidden. But what really went bad at Ornge, the really rotten part of Ornge, were items that were never disclosed.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Which were?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Well, think about this for a second. Do you think that if I had had a conversation with Chris Mazza, he would have said to me, “Now, don’t tell your ministry officials because I’m not telling them and don’t tell the Auditor General, but I pay myself a huge salary”? Do you think he would have said that? Do you think he would have said, “Not only am I getting this huge salary, way bigger than any hospital CEO, but I’ve also got this fantastic agreement where they’re loaning me money to pay for my house renovations.” Do you really think he would have told me that?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Well, what he did tell you, though, is, “I am going to restructure Ornge so that I can hide my salary”—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: No, that is not what he said.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: He very clearly indicated that there would be a new structure that was going to be in place that would shield him from having to disclose his salary. That was presented to the ministry. That new structure was presented to the ministry, which in fact allowed him, gave him the opportunity, to shield his income. That was disclosed. The new strategy of how to purchase the aircraft and integrate that into Ornge, that whole strategy was disclosed. The idea of having the for-profit entities in different countries, going out and seeking business in Brazil and going to Jacksonville and Atlanta—all that was disclosed to the ministry. You had those flags.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I think it’s really important that we distinguish between what their plan was for exporting Ontario’s success to the rest of the world—that was something we were aware of. We were also aware of the establishment of a foundation that would raise money, that would generate money that would be fed back to the Ontario air ambulance service. We were informed of that. It was a fait accompli. We were informed of it and it was made very clear: “This has nothing to do with the contract we have with you to deliver air ambulance services.”

What was completely hidden were all of the other issues that came to light when the forensic audit team went in, when the Auditor General went in. There were some very unsavoury practices, that we’re all very familiar with now, that were never disclosed to the ministry and never disclosed by Chris Mazza. It was after Chris Mazza was ousted that that information—much of that information—came to light.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But we also have, like, a dozen whistle-blowers that have come to committee, that have said that they have gone to your ministry and they told you that Ornge was running amok. But here again, none of that information triggered any action. They’re starting to pile up: an FOI that triggers no action; a pile of questions in estimates that triggers no action; whistle-blowers—at least a dozen of them—that trigger no action.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I can tell you that every time there was a correspondence from an employee at Ornge, it was investigated—every single time. I can also tell you that information was passed on to the Auditor

General. We knew the Auditor General was doing an audit of Ornge, and we passed information on to the Auditor General.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, but we’re now in the spring of 2011 by the time the Auditor General goes in.

Then there’s the briefing that Mr. Klees shared with you this morning. I mean, you’ve now had almost six hours to look at it. Can you place this briefing a little bit better as to if you’ve seen it before or if you know what this is about?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The document that Mr. Klees tabled today?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Correct.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Yes, I can tell you that the ministry prepared these documents as they were preparing for the Auditor General’s report. I can tell you that there are lots of reports in the ministry that I would not see. There’s lots I do see, but there is a lot of information that I do not see. I think any minister of any ministry, no matter what size, would say that they do get information after a lot of work has happened within the ministry.

This document was never intended for me personally, as the minister, to see. It was meant for senior ministry officials as they prepared for the auditor’s report.

I have to say that this is just one more example of Mr. Klees’s fizzled bombshells. He drops a bombshell with great fanfare, all sorts of bluster, but then when we actually look into it, we see that there might be a shred of truth but there is almost never the whole story there. This is just one more example.

What I can tell you is that ministry officials subsequently confirmed that Ornge Issuer Trust is the bond issuer. The ministry is not a guarantor; the government of Ontario is not a guarantor. Taxpayers are protected.

Now, Mr. Klees wanted to, yet again, put information out there that was not true, and we saw that again this morning.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So we have an FOI request that triggers nothing. We have estimates questions that trigger nothing. We have whistle-blowers who trigger nothing. We have top officials working on threats to the ministry regarding Ornge. We have MNP also—the audit did say some good things, but they also said that there needed to be better communication about the obligations under the performance agreement. But we see no evidence that there are actions that were actually put into place after that audit was done.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: So we have made—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you’re on your last minute.

M^{me} France Gélinas: A minute? Okay.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: We have made significant progress. It’s clear that the original performance agreement did not foresee the new structure, and it simply was not adequate. We have rectified that. We have much stronger performance oversight there now.

On the old performance agreement, we had to give them three years’ notice to terminate the agreement. Government now can amend the performance agreement unilaterally. We don't have to negotiate it with Ornge. It is much stronger oversight.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But it still leaves us with the impression that for two years, you didn't know what was going on at Ornge, although lots of red flags were going up. It leaves us with the impression that there were things going on within your ministry that they should have flagged to you and that they did not flag to you. It leaves us with the impression that you did not know what was going on, although your main role is to have oversight.

I don't want you to know every detail; that's not what a minister is there for. But when there are so many red flags going up, I would have liked faster action, faster than December 2011, at least before quality of care started to go downhill to the point where it did.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I would just say we all have got a part to play in this, and that includes members of the opposition. You had information; you did not act on it either. You did not ask questions. You did not pursue it in the Legislature. We all have a part of this; we all have a part of this.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Now we'll move on to the government. Who would like to ask questions? Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you for your quickly scheduled return trip to the committee.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Well, thank you all for being here again.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We're just all sitting here with bated breath.

During your introductory remarks this morning, you highlighted six areas of reform that you are implementing in order to turn the corner at Ornge. I'd like to go and have a bit of a closer look at those six areas of reform, but before we do that I'd like to make a couple of comments.

You really spoke very passionately this morning about your resolve to improve things at Ornge, and I think we all felt that passion. You reflected on the fact that there's much more to do. You called on us as a committee. You pointed out that we've been at this for four months doing public hearings, 70 hours of testimony. I think we're up over 600 pages of transcripts now. It's time that we start to think about looking at solutions.

We've heard from I think pretty much all the major players as of this afternoon. We've got a few more people we'll be hearing from over the next few days, but we've certainly got senior executives past and present; people from the ministry past and present; all the ministers with the exception of Mr. Clement, who set this all in place; legal counsel; lobbyists. You name it; they've been here. I agree with you that we've gotten to the point where we need to start looking forward. The committee needs to start focusing on some of the recommendations that we should be making to the Legislature. I've actually, since you were here this morning, tabled a motion that we'll be debating tomorrow morning bright and early to try and move on to working on just that, working on the report-writing phase of the committee's work.

But before we do that, one of the things that my colleague Phil McNeely introduced today was a letter that we all received yesterday from a pilot from Thunder Bay. I think it reflects, first of all, on recognizing the work that you've done, because he does say, "The Honourable Deb Matthews's installation of Mr. Ron McKerlie as interim CEO, and the major corporate restructuring that followed, gave us a sense of hope that we would be able to continue to serve the people of Ontario as medevac pilots."

But I think he also picked up on the frustration that the front-line workers are feeling at Ornge as we continue to discuss everything negative and seem to be stuck in this negative place, when what we need to do is fix the problem.

In the words of Mr. Binderup, "What we were not prepared for was the way the media and some members of the provincial government portrayed the operation and what we do. We were portrayed as a burden on the system, called a safety hazard, an accident waiting to happen. We have been misrepresented by the press, and have even been jeered publicly, and there have been many other derogatory statements made about the operation or the aircraft. In one case this spring, there was an accident by one of the private ... carriers which prompted an article in a rural newspaper which actually showed one of our aircraft"—that is, the Ornge aircraft—"and stated that an 'Ornge PC-12' was involved in an accident, completely misrepresenting our operation and especially the level of safety we work so hard to maintain. I have read online comments to articles printed about Ornge where the public has commented that we 'all deserve to be fired.' And for the most part we were powerless to defend ourselves."

He goes on later in the letter to talk about the aircraft because one of the things that we've heard repeatedly from Mr. Klees is a criticism of the aircraft themselves. And as one of the pilots of those aircraft, he said, "We operate 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year. The aircraft that we fly, the Pilatus PC-12NG, is one of the most state-of-the-art aircraft in its class. With this aircraft, we have more technology and safety features at our fingertips than many of the airliners in operation at the major airlines today. Our maintenance department is second to none, and keeps these aircraft in top condition. The aircraft is extremely well suited to the types of flying we do. A mission can take us into a northern reserve with its gravel (or in the case of winter, snow-covered) runways one minute, and then major airports like Pearson International the next. And not only is the aircraft top-notch, our flight crews are equally trained to be ready for any mission (we have some of the highest time PC-12 pilots in Canada). To my knowledge we are the only PC-12 operator in Canada that sends all of its flight crew, captains and first officers alike, for simulator training before they even set foot in the actual aircraft. (Transport Canada only requires captains to receive simulator training.) And our crews always keep the highest level of safety at the forefront of everything they do. We fly in many adverse weather conditions all year round that require the best of any pilot. And we do it because that's our job ... we are medevac pilots.

"There have been issues raised that there are not enough paramedics to staff all the aircraft that Ornge operates. While I cannot speak to optimal staffing levels, I can say that there are many, many cases where the weather precludes the helicopters from being able to respond to a call, where the PC-12 aircraft is subsequently dispatched. And yes, in those cases it is often the helicopter medics that are dispatched on the PC-12. For our part, we are there to fly aircraft and respond to the calls of people all over the province of Ontario who may need us. And if we can respond to that call safely, then we do. All you need to do is go to the Ornge website to see how many thousands of miles we fly each and every day serving the needs of the people of Ontario."

What struck me, because often we will get letters from people—obviously, this was a very articulate letter from somebody who really passionately wanted to defend the fixed-wing aircraft pilots out there who are working so hard. What really struck me was this morning, we got a flood of emails from other aircraft pilots saying they agreed with this letter, they supported it. So you could feel that the aircraft pilots wanted to speak out and wanted the committee to know that they have a lot of faith and a lot of pride in the system.

The responses that we got were from—some pilots identified where they were from. We heard from pilots in Thunder Bay, pilots in Sioux Lookout, pilots in Timmins, pilots who didn't necessarily identify where they were from, but it wasn't just pilots at one base. We're clearly hearing, in these responses, from pilots from all over the place.

I quoted one pilot from Thunder Bay earlier this afternoon when you weren't here, but he made a really interesting comment. He said, "I have flown as a medevac pilot on and off since the mid-1990s. It was not better 18 years ago or four years ago. It is better now." So, this idea that we should just go back to the good old days.

Quickly, just going through these, "I 100% support everything that Poul-Erik has stated...." Another one, from Timmins: "I ... support this letter." "I support your letter to the standing committee." It goes on; there are about 25 of them. "I 100% support this letter...." And it goes on and on: "100% support," "fully support," "I want the standing committee to know what I think," "I support," "I support"—page after page of "I support what Captain Binderup has sent to the standing committee."

There was one here that was interesting because we had one witness who talked this afternoon about difficulties: Did pilots want to work for Ornge? This is somebody who says, "After careful deliberation of the pilot letter to the standing committee, in conjunction with transpired events over the past few months, I would like to formally give you my 100% support. In December 2010, I chose to commit my professional skills and abilities to Ornge starting January 2011. This was based on the decision to make a difference in people's lives. The end result was a move from Alberta to Ontario with the wholehearted support of my family.

"Despite the negative publicity, I walk with my head high as I identify myself with Ornge. I am able to operate a state-of-the-art aircraft in a safe and efficient manner impacting people's lives. Often this is accomplished when other Ornge partners are unable to go due to limiting factors.

"I would like to thank the Honourable Deb Matthews for all the support she has given to Ornge despite political and media pressure. It is unfortunate that decisions made by former employees have resulted in the next 'Ontario scandal.' I believe recent managerial changes enacted by Ron McKerlie will continue to improve operational efficiencies. I believe the majority of staff is committed to the Ornge mission. In my opinion, another contributing factor is the current economic state." And then he goes on to talk about economic factors in the province.

I'm not going to read the rest of them because I've got as many pages still to go as I've already read. But you can get a flavour of the support that we've heard for turning things around and the positive way that front-line staff are feeling.

If we could go back to some of the comments you made when you were here earlier in the day, you first made reference to the fact that we now have a stronger performance agreement in place to govern the relationship between the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care and Ornge. I wonder if you can speak to the new provisions that have been added to the performance agreement.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I want to say thank you for reading those comments from pilots into the record. It's very gratifying to know that Ornge pilots know that there are people who are doing everything they can to make Ornge as good as it can be. As I said earlier, we are enormously blessed to have that kind of professionals on our front lines, whether they're paramedics or pilots or the engineers who keep the aircraft running or all of the other people who work in the communication centre and other parts of Ornge. This has been very difficult for them when their reputations have been called into question. So, it's good to know that they're still there, they're still strong, and they are seeing positive change.

So on the performance agreement, I think you've all heard a lot about it. I welcome the opportunity to go a little bit deeper into the details. The old performance agreement had a three-year termination clause. We could not terminate the contract any faster than three years. There is now a one-year termination clause. We did not have access, under the old performance agreement, to vital information: the calls that came in, how many were accepted, how many were refused and why they were refused if they were refused. There was no obligation for Ornge to report all complaints beyond significant adverse events. Now, Ornge must report everything to us so that we've got information, and to speak to France G  linas's point, we've got information faster now. I think we heard from Brandon Doneff this morning that sometimes they didn't get answers, and now we've got a firm process in place.

The previous performance agreement did not give the government adequate control over the sale of Ornge's assets. Now, the new PA gives the government control over the sale of assets above $100,000. The old performance agreement allowed inspections or audits only twice a year. The ministry can now inspect any time. There was no oversight of the for-profit entities. Those entities are being wound down, but in the meantime, we do have oversight. There were no restrictions on assuming debt. There was no patient advocate. There were insufficient indicators and standards. There was simply not enough information that was required to be reported under the old agreement, and it was not coming in a timely basis. There was no public reporting of expenses, and there was no requirement for a quality improvement plan. So we have made a much stronger performance agreement.

The other problems were that there was a culture of confrontation. Both the Auditor General and ministry officials report that when questions were asked, they responded with legal documents of many, many, many pages long. So they took a very legalistic, obstructionist approach to the oversight. To say it was a combative relationship I think is not overstating it. They did not provide accurate financial and operational information.

There were other problems, but I can tell you, there will be a new patient advocate. There will be new public reporting, improved reporting of emergency dispatch information. They are now required to include cancelled flights and declined air and land ambulance calls, so we have the information we need to make judgments about their performance.

There's a quality improvement committee to advise the board. That is being undertaken by Dr. Barry McLellan, who many would say is the international leader on this. We are linking executive compensation to those public performance targets. We're giving the ministry the ability to recover funding based on performance. We're ensuring full compliance with the Broader Public Sector Accountability Act. We're requiring regular, detailed financial reports and creating new financial planning controls.

Now, we do have legislation that is sitting there waiting to be passed. I'm very anxious to get that legislation passed. It protects whistle-blowers, and I think we all now know how important it is that anyone at Ornge can speak freely when they see a problem, without any fear of retribution.

We now have the ability to appoint members—or we will, under the new legislation, have the ability to appoint members to the board. We can change the performance agreement whenever we deem it necessary. We do not have to negotiate that with Ornge. A tool that I don't like to use—I have had to use it a handful of times as minister—is the power to appoint a supervisor when I feel it's in the interests of Ontarians to appoint a supervisor to an organization. I recently had to do it in your area—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Waterloo Wellington CCAC.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: —with the CCAC in Waterloo Wellington. It is not something I like to do, but sometimes that step must be taken. So it would give the minister the power to appoint a supervisor. The Auditor General did identify this as a problem, and we have fixed that problem.

We very much look forward to a new era of accountability at Ornge, because as we all know, this is a service that is of vital importance.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move on to the opposition, then. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Chair. Minister, you became minister in October 2009. Is that correct?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: In those intervening years since then, the Premier's office met with Ornge, the Premier met with Chris Mazza, the Minister of Finance met with Ornge, officials from the Ministry of Finance met with Ornge, officials from the Cabinet Office met with Ornge and officials from your department met with Ornge. It seems the only person in this government who never met with Ornge is the minister, namely yourself. Here we have people from across the government, over a period of nearly two and a half years, meeting with an organization that's responsible for $150 million of taxpayers' money, to oversee and administer our air ambulance service, and you never met. In fact, according to Chris Mazza, you refused to meet him when he called on you for a meeting. Why is that?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: As I said earlier—I think this might be the third time I've been over this, but I'm more than happy to answer the question again—I have no recollection of any requests for meetings from Dr. Mazza.

I do, though, have very clear recollections of two different occasions where I went—on one occasion I went to Ornge; I went to the base in London. I fully expected to meet Dr. Mazza there. He did not show up. On the second occasion, in December 2011, I had a very clear request to meet with Dr. Mazza, because I had some very pointed questions to ask him and some very clear direction to give him. He did not show up at that meeting in my office. So it's a bit disingenuous of Dr. Mazza to suggest that I didn't meet with him. There were two occasions, very clear occasions, where I expected to meet with him.

But let me ask you this: Say I had had a meeting with Dr. Mazza; say we had had that face-to-face meeting—I want to ask you a question. Do you really think—do you really think—that Dr. Mazza would have told me everything that he refused to tell anyone else? Do you really think he would have said to me, "Now, ma'am, don't tell the Auditor General about this, and don't tell your official about this, but just between you and me, I want you to know that I paid more for those aircraft, because I didn't think we were paying enough. My staff—we heard this in testimony—“negotiated a lower price, and I thought we should pay more.” Do you really think he would have told me that?

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me answer that.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Do you really think he would have told me that?

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me answer that. That, Minister, is quite a performance that you've just given. I'll answer it this way: Had you conducted yourself with leadership in that meeting with Dr. Mazza, you would have known what questions to ask him, very specifically. You would not have allowed him to play that game.

Mr. David Zimmer: Frank, he didn't show up.

Mr. Frank Klees: What you should have done, if he didn't show up for a meeting, was get on the phone and say, “Chris Mazza, I'm a minister, and let me tell you something, we have entrusted you with our air ambulance service. I'm not happy about how you're conducting yourself, and I demand a meeting with you and your board of directors tomorrow.” That's what you should have done. You clearly didn't do that, and that means that you did not exercise your leadership responsibilities as the Minister of Health. That's it.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Well, I think once again we have a statement that just does not hold water. On December 15, 2011—that was the date of the meeting that I expected Chris Mazza to show up to—December 15; on December 19, I sent a letter to Ornge, clarifying the purpose of that meeting; on December 21, I directed the forensic auditors into Ornge; on January 11—less than a month later—Chris Mazza was out of work.

I did do exactly what you're advising me to do, so I'm asking you to apologize, please, and withdraw the allegation.

Mr. Frank Klees: No, actually, I won't, Minister, because December 2011 is about two years too late. My point simply is that, under your watch, this scam of Dr. Mazza's was allowed to grow; multi-millions of health care dollars were allowed to be wasted. You should have responded—you should have acted decisively, long before December 2011.

I'd like to go back to a question you refused to answer this morning, and that was my question to you—a very simple question. That was a letter that you received, dated May 4, 2011, from the Ontario Air Transport Association. You did not answer me when I asked if you responded to the Ontario Air Transport Association. Would you try to do that now, please?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I actually did respond. That letter was referred to the Auditor General.

Mr. Frank Klees: To the Auditor General.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Why would you not have responded to that? It was sent to you, not the Auditor General.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: They raised issues that I thought the Auditor General ought to have access to that information, so that was passed on to the Auditor General.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let's talk about some of that information. Apart from the many conflicts of interest that were pointed out in that letter, one of them—this is paragraph 8—states—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Would you give me a moment please to get—do you have another copy of that letter there?

Mr. Frank Klees: We had passed that—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Yes, I know you did. Oh, I've got it now. Thank you.

Mr. Frank Klees: Paragraph 8: “Ornge has structured itself in a manner that is less than transparent. It has created multiple companies that blur financial accountability and hide what the real cost of its service is. Ornge and its affiliated companies need to be audited by the province's auditor as a whole entity. Furthermore given the medical—quality, care—“problems and other service issues, it also needs to have an emergency health services branch ambulance service review as required by the Ambulance Act.”

Minister, if there was nothing else in this letter but that singular paragraph that very clearly, from this organization, is saying to you, as the minister, there are serious problems here in this organization, they are less than transparent—they were talking about multiple companies that have been set up. My question to you is: How can you, as the Minister of Health, not immediately call your deputy into your office and say, “We need a meeting with Mazza and his board immediately. There's something wrong here”? Why did you not do that?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: So let me re-quote to you what you just quoted to me.

Mr. Frank Klees: You don't have to. I know what it says. I quoted to you.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: “Ornge and its affiliated companies need to be audited by the province's auditor as a whole entity.” That's exactly what was going on when this letter was received. It was exactly what was going on. You're trying to make a big deal out of something—

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm trying to make a big deal out of the fact that you, Minister, knew what was going on at Ornge long before December 2011 and you did nothing. That's the point I'm trying to make.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: These allegations were all investigated. Do you think I should have received the letter in May and immediately fired the board?

Mr. Frank Klees: No, I think you should have called Mazza and the board into your boardroom to say, “Look, these are serious allegations.”

Let's go on to the next one, and that is, if we could look at 8(ii): “The air ambulance dispatch centre must be put back under the supervision of the”—Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care—“to ensure that it is not being interfered with and that it is able to book flights in a manner that is in keeping with the best interest of the patient and is economically responsible.”

Surely, Minister, as the Minister of Health, when you read something like that, does it not dawn on you that you should—it’s not a matter of deferring to the Auditor General. His responsibility is not to show leadership; he audits things that are history. What you had an opportunity to do here is to prevent what ultimately the Auditor General had to audit. Why didn’t you pick up the phone at that time and say, “Chris Mazza, bring your board in here. It sounds like we’ve got a serious problem”?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Every one of these allegations, from an organization that represents companies that were losing business to Ornge—let’s be clear about that—every one of these allegations were followed up on. Within months of this letter being received, the entire senior management at Ornge was gone, the entire board had been replaced. We took action when we became aware and when we had facts to back up the allegations.

Hindsight is 20/20, and we all know that. I am looking forward to your advice as a committee. I know you’ll have personal advice for me. I’m looking at your advice from this committee on what we need to do, moving forward. What lessons have we learned? What do we need to do, if anything, in addition to what we have already done, to right the ship at Ornge? How are we going to make sure that this does not repeat itself?

You have made a career of misrepresenting what is actually happening.

Mr. Frank Klees: That is highly offensive, Minister.

Mr. David Zimmer: It’s true.

Mr. Frank Klees: That is highly offensive, Chair—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If I could just say, if we could keep the language parliamentary, it would be appreciated.

1830

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What I can say is, you have put politics over patients time and time and time again. Just today, you issued a press release. In that press release, you write, “Lives have been lost.” You have no foundation for that whatsoever.

The officer of the Legislature who is responsible for making that determination has been very clear. I have never before heard of the coroner having to issue a press release in response to an unfounded allegation from a member of the Legislature, but that’s exactly what our coroner had to do.

Mr. Frank Klees: Under whose direction?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: He acted unilaterally and completely on his own. If you are suggesting that I instructed him, think again, because I would never think to do that—

Mr. Frank Klees: Did your office have anything to do with these letters that were read into the record here from the pilots?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I heard about these letters just today. I’m very pleased that these pilots have—

Mr. Frank Klees: No one in your office had anything to do with that?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I do not know how they originated. I do not know the answer to that. What I do know—

Mr. Frank Klees: Minister, while you’re on the topic of patients—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: —is that the chief coroner was forced to refute an allegation that a member of this Legislature made, a false allegation—

Mr. Frank Klees: Who forced him?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: If you are suggesting—

Mr. Frank Klees: I’m asking you. You said he was forced.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If we could just have one person talk at a time.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: —that I forced the chief coroner to do anything, no. You forced him.

Mr. Frank Klees: Oh, really?

Interjection.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: You forced him, because you said things like, “Lives have been lost.” You said that the coroner had not been involved. You described that as yet another—

Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, if we could have the other members—Minister, if you can just hold it for a second. Other members, please keep the commentary to yourself. It would be appreciated. If we could get back to having one person speaking at a time, that would be appreciated as well.

Mr. Frank Klees: I have a question. I think it’s still my floor. Is it?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): It is, yes. Go ahead.

Mr. Frank Klees: Minister, you raised the issue of patients, and you boast a new management team and that things are working better and more efficiently at Ornge. Mr. Clerk, if we could distribute these documents.

Just today, Mr. Dearman from Killaloe, Ontario, received a letter in the mail. You may recall that the issue of Judy Dearman was raised in the Legislature. She’s the lady who died, and whether it was as a result of a delay of Ornge being able to airlift her or not—what we don’t know is if she would have lived had she had an early response from Ornge. Mr. Dearman opened this letter today addressed to his wife, Judy. And in the letter, signed by Mr. McKerlie, it says:

“Dear Judy Dearman:

“On behalf of Ornge, Ontario’s air and land transport medicine service, I ask for your assistance in evaluating the care and service you recently received during your transport.”

I can tell you that Mr. Dearman was shocked when he received this in the mail today. He received a call from Mr. McKerlie following the incident, in which Mr. McKerlie apologized. Today he receives this document.

Something as fundamental as tracking patients, something as fundamental as being able to keep track of those who are deceased, should be pretty basic for an organization that draws down $150 million of taxpayers’ money.

I'd like to know what you have to say to Mr. Dearman tonight.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: This is extremely unfortunate. This is inexcusable. I will personally apologize to Mr. Dearman for this. I will follow up with Ornge to understand how this possibly could have happened.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Chair, I'll defer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We move on to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Minister, I would like to come back to the corporate structure that was put in place by Ornge. Would you say that your ministry encouraged Ornge to pursue a for-profit business structure?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I can't speak to that because that was created before I became minister. What I do know is that Ontario has some terrific health care innovation, and there is a market for this kind of business internationally. That was the business that Dr. Mazza was pursuing.

Now—I might actually rethink that answer, given a moment—I do recall that Dr. Mazza was pursuing international business perhaps with the knowledge of government.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So if I ask the question again—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Yes. When Ornge was established, that was before I was minister, so I wouldn't know about that. I do believe, subsequently, there may well have been. I would have to get back to you to confirm that, but I want to be clear that it may well be that there was encouragement to do that. I just can't speak to that now.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. If you think it through, in the two years that you were the Minister of Health, if Ornge hadn't run amok like it did—if they had normal salaries, if they did not do irregular practices—is the idea of putting forward a for-profit business structure attached to a not-for-profit something you could support?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I think we have to be very, very careful about that. The intention was that money would flow back into the air ambulance service that serves Ontarians, as is what happens in Alberta. The STARS model, I know, was something that, at the time, was considered to be an innovative model because it did actually have a separate income stream that supported the government-funded operation.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so—

Interjection.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: But what is important—

M^{me} France Gélinas: It looks like you're getting your answer.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What is important is that we have a clear separation of public money and private money. When Ornge did come to brief officials in my ministry on this issue, that was the area that got the most attention in terms of the questions: How are we going to protect taxpayer dollars? How are we going to ensure that money that Ontario taxpayers are spending on Ornge is not spent on any of these other pursuits? That, of course, as you know, is an area that we are not satisfied was respected.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You went in exactly the direction I wanted to go. What kind of answer could Ornge have ever put forward that would have convinced the people who work in your ministry that this corporate structure could, in any way, make sense?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: As I've said before, we have some wonderful health care expertise here for which there is an international market. People from around the world look at parts of our health care system and say "That's exactly what we need" in their jurisdiction. There's an appetite for that internationally. What I would always defend, though, is the separation of the publicly funded service and the for-profit. That's something that—

M^{me} France Gélinas: But how was that done? In January 2011—here you are: your ministry officials are there, your DM is there, a bunch of ADMs are there. They're presented with this spaghetti of a corporate structure, all for-profit, that to this day nobody really can make sense of. How were they ever convinced that what you want—and I believe that you do want to separate the two. How did Ornge ever convince them that they had done that, that they had separated, that your decision and your vision was being carried out?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Once again, we're going over ground that has been gone over before, so let me just remind you of what Peter Wallace said, the then Deputy Minister of Finance, when he was asked about this question. This was on April 18, 2012. He said, "It is not remotely uncommon for broader public sector institutions to create subsidiaries to try and extract value from other areas of public service activity. This is done routinely"—this is Peter Wallace speaking—"by other areas of the broader public sector. So the mere creation of a subsidiary or an entity would not, in the general rule, raise red flags."

So the issue is, where is the public money? What is the separation between the for-profit and the not-for-profit? How would we—and I'm not contemplating this going forward. We'd have a lot of work to do to ensure that the public was being protected.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Those were, of course, the assurances, explicit assurances in writing, verbally, any way you want to do it. Those were the assurances that were given to us. And I suspect—

M^{me} France Gélinas: But you never checked.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: —I suspect, by the NDP, when you received that letter that showed that very same chart—you received the very same information we did. Now, you're saying, "I didn't see it; I didn't see it." Your party received it. The Progressive Conservative Party received the same document that showed the same structure.

So, as I said earlier, I am quite prepared to accept my share of the blame, but there were many people who had the same information who did not raise issues earlier.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So if you accept your share of the blame, can we expect that there will be changes within the ministry? We know that Ornge went bad and mega-changes have been done there. But we also know that the government fell flat, your ministry fell flat on many accounts. When can we expect changes there? When can we expect reassurance that things have changed?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute left.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: We have seen significant change, and you've heard from front-line staff who have talked about that. Brandon Doneff this morning had comments to say about what has changed in terms of coverage of paramedics. He saw that change.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, not at Ornge. I know changes are at Ornge. I'm interested in changes in your ministry.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The ministry now has the performance agreement that they need to provide the proper oversight. They are getting access to information from sources they now trust, and complete information, real information, not inflated or padded information. They get the information that they are asking for so they will be able to provide the oversight now that they never could have before.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Dr. Mazza told us that people within your ministry encouraged him to continue with the for-profit. He felt he was encouraged, that he was understood, and he received encouragement from your ministry to keep on. Who did that? Who encouraged him to continue with the for-profit ventures?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I guess my question to you would be, can you really pick and choose what testimony you believe from someone who, I think, it's pretty well established—it's pretty well established that he was not—

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you're saying he was never encouraged to continue—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: No, I'm not saying that. I'm not saying that because I don't know that. But what I can tell you is, there was enough—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Could you find out who encouraged him to continue?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Sure. I'll do my best to do that. I'll undertake to do that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move on to the government. You have 10 minutes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Ten? Okay, thank you. Minister, I wonder if we could look at an issue that came up today, which was the issue of how many front-line staff there are. Mr. Doneff talked about the fact that once Mr. McKerlie came in, there was a change and that more staff had been added, and a comfort level that things were moving in the right direction. Mr. Wade, who was here later this afternoon, seemed to be quite sure no new staff had been added, from his perspective.

I wonder if you've got some accurate information around what, if any, new staff have been added and what are their roles?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Yes. What I can tell you is that Ornge employs over 600 staff. They're paramedics; they're transport medicine physicians; they're pediatric transport paramedics, which is a specialty of paramedics. There are pilots for the fixed-wings and the rotor helicopters, aircraft maintenance engineers, communications officers and office staff.

When it comes to airplane pilots—and we have heard that there were shortages before—there are 45 airplane pilots. We are now at the full complement of the fixed-wing planes. At helicopter, we have 74 helicopter pilots, which takes us now to 75% of the full complement. So we're making progress, but we've still got some more hiring to do.

Paramedics: There are 217 paramedics working at Ornge, so that is 10 more than we had this time last year.

Of course, we have new expertise at the management level. We've got, of course, the new board of directors; they're a volunteer board of directors, dedicating many, many hours every week to continue the improvement at Ornge. Jim Vair is the new vice-president of human resources. Bruce Farr is a special adviser, operations. People in Toronto probably know the name Bruce Farr, because he has 39 years of experience in EMR. He has a long history of working at Toronto EMS—a very highly respected gentleman. Robert Giguere has recently been hired as a special adviser, aviation. He's a pilot, and he has served in executive positions at both Air Canada and Skyservice Airlines. Wayne Howard is the new vice-president, finance. He has over 30 years of experience in finance in the private and broader public sector.

So there is a very strong new management team in place, and we are adding paramedics and adding pilots.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you very much for that information. That helps us sort it out.

We talked earlier about the whole issue of where the committee's at, and moving on in the report-writing process, and you've certainly indicated your interest in seeing us move forward quickly. I wonder, when the committee does get around to writing a report and, presumably, making recommendations, what areas would you like to see covered and what areas are you looking for recommendations on that we might be able to provide you with?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I would never want to limit the recommendations that would come from this committee, but I am very interested in seeing constructive advice on what needs to be done, in addition to the advice that we got from the Auditor General and in addition to the changes that the board at Ornge is making.

I expect that there will be a lot of overlap, because I think there seems to be a pretty strong consensus that we need to move forward on, for example, quality indicators. We have seen tremendous success in our hospitals, now that we have publicly reported quality improvement metrics in our hospitals. There was a recent report that showed a dramatic decline in C. difficile in our hospitals, in large part because hospitals now have their numbers: They know what their rates are, they know how they compare and they know what they need to do to bring those rates down.

I am a huge believer in transparency when it comes to quality indicators, particularly because people who work in health care are driven to do their very, very best. I've learned that it's part of the DNA of people who work in health care. They went into health care because they want to do well by their patients, and if there's a way to do better, they want to do better.

Having a quality improvement plan in place, where there are clear metrics and progress towards higher quality—we now have, I think, at Ornge and, I think, across the health care sector, we're really building this notion that you have to keep on improving the quality. It's continuous quality improvement involving all of the staff, because this is not something that can be done just by management. Quality improvement, by its very nature, runs throughout the organization. So I would look for advice on quality improvement.

I would also look for advice on what we need to do to really make it clear that this is a service for patients. You know, an observation I have sometimes in health care is that sometimes we lose sight of who's paying for this service and who the service is designed to help. I always say there are only two questions I care about: Is this good for patients? And, is this good for taxpayers; are we getting best value for money? So I really would welcome any advice you have on how to ensure that this is very much a system that is responsive to the needs of the patients and their families.

People interact with Ornge, as someone said in their letter, on the worst day of their lives. Let's make sure that we are there in a way that is respectful of patients, that gets patients to the care they need as quickly as possible on what is the worst day of their life; so, a focus on what patients should be able to expect from their air ambulance service; obviously, any issues, any advice you have when it comes to oversight.

You've got the new performance agreement. Are there changes you would recommend to that performance agreement? I, of course, very much look forward to the legislation, Bill 50, being passed and coming to committee. I will be very interested to see whether there are changes we need to make in that legislation in response to concerns raised by this committee.

I think you've got—you've been very thorough. You've sat for a lot of days, I think four months of hearings—many, many hours of testimony. Everyone has the same goal: They want to make things better for patients. Now, I think your task—and it will be a challenge, I know—is to collect the information, to really give government the very best advice you can. What do we need to do to move forward, to give the people of Ontario the air ambulance service they deserve?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And one of the great ironies of all those days of testimony is it just happens that where the apartment that I rent in Toronto is situated, it's not unusual that while I'm sitting having breakfast on my way to Ornge hearings, I see the helicopter coming in in front of my window and landing on the landing pad on the hospital, and I think, "Okay, there's another person delivered for hospital care in one of the teaching hospitals on University Avenue." So I know it's still out there working.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Exactly.

Mr. David Zimmer: Frank hanging on the running board—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I've never seen him dangling like that.

Anyway, thank you so much. I think that must be about my time.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): It is indeed. Very well. We'll move on to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Minister, I would like to go back to that document that I tabled this morning, the one that you hadn't seen.

I heard what you said in response to Ms. Gélinas's question about that. You said that ministers get many documents; some they see and some they don't. This happened to be one that you said you didn't see, yet six of your senior bureaucrats did see it and it was specifically commissioned by the director of your emergency health services branch in response to your assistant deputy minister.

This document, now that you've had a chance to review it, refers to many specific questions and concerns about Ornge and what was going on there, as reflected in their financial statements. Apart from the loans that it had occur, it spoke specifically to something that—this document contradicts what you have said, what the Minister of Finance has said and what your bureaucrats have said at this committee, and that is that there is no obligation on the part of the government to honour the debt, some $300 million of bond offering, that there is no obligation; there is no requirement. This document here makes reference on a number of occasions to the fact that that bond offering relied heavily and, in fact, exclusively on the fact that the only income that Ornge could demonstrate is the income from the government of Ontario.

Section 13 of this document at the very end, I'm going to read it into the record again. It says this: If "Ornge is unsuccessful"—which we know now that it is, because they're referring to the Ornge plan of generating international revenue, and clearly that is not happening. As you said, you're dismantling the for-profit companies and it's going to be a not-for-profit organization. It says, if "Ornge is unsuccessful and the ministry may have increased expenditures with limited value having been extracted and may need to pay twice for the same assets—by being morally if not legally obligated to assume liabilities. These are both significant risks and Ornge should obtain advice from legal services on this.”

I know what you’ve said. You’re said that legally, contractually, the government of Ontario is not responsible for that debt. We also know, according to this document and according to the public offering, that this coming year, some $3.2 million of capital has to be repaid to the bondholders in addition to the interest. That has to come from somewhere. There’s no other income that Ornge has.

I just want to ask you this question: When you get the budget from the new Ornge board of directors, will the Ministry of Health agree to pay this additional $3.2 million that Ornge is obligated to pay the bondholders? If so, does that mean that you will increase the budget for Ornge by that amount, or will Ornge have to claw that back out of their operational budget?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The first thing I want to say is that this document was an internal working document in preparation for the Auditor General that reviewed a number of issues. I think it demonstrates that officials were looking hard at some of these challenges. It is not a final document. It is a document that was part of the work of the ministry. I can tell you very, very clearly that what was subsequently confirmed is that Ornge Issuer Trust is the bond issuer. The ministry is not a guarantor. The government of Ontario is not a guarantor. Taxpayers are protected.

I want to be very clear that when it comes to the budget at Ornge, this year, we said, “We’re holding the line.” But we are beginning a zero-based budgeting process with Ornge to ensure that we have the right amount of money flowing to Ornge and not a penny more.

I do want to ask you again, please give us your best advice. The time has come. You’ve made lots of allegations, many of which—in fact, I think, virtually all of which—have been proven to be unfounded. You’ve insulted front-line staff. Let me give you another quote: “These incidents are happening on a daily basis. Unqualified and inexperienced people are the reason”—from February 23, 2012. You intentionally insulted every single person who works at Ornge. You’ve had your fun. This has been wonderful, I’m sure, for you. It is time now to put good policy ahead of political ambitions.

I look forward to the recommendations of this committee. I very much want to build on the wisdom that you have all acquired during your many, many hours of testimony. It is time to move forward, and I am asking you to move forward.

Mr. Frank Klees: Minister, that comes from a minister who refuses to accept responsibility for her lack of leadership, her lack of oversight. As the Auditor General said—don’t take it from me—the ministry failed in its oversight responsibilities. You can be personal as much as you want. The public is observing what has happened. People have died as a result of mismanagement. The unqualified—

Hon. Deborah Matthews: You cannot substantiate that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me finish. I let you finish, you let me finish now.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: You simply cannot—you’re making that up once again.

Mr. Frank Klees: The fact of the matter is, Minister—Interjections.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Let him finish.

Mr. Frank Klees: The fact of the matter is, Minister, you failed in your oversight responsibilities. You are blaming this on everyone else, whether it’s Mazza, whether it’s the board—even your own bureaucrats. You are defending the indefensible, and at some point, Minister, you may have the character to fess up to the fact that you failed the people of this province. I hope we’ll see that day; I doubt it very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, Minister; go ahead and respond, please.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I have always said—and I have said it many times here and outside of this room as well—I take my full share of responsibility for this—

Mr. Frank Klees: Then resign. Then you should resign.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please let her respond, Mr. Klees.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I take the full responsibility of making the changes that are necessary to ensure that Ornge is the kind of air ambulance service that the people of this province deserve. We’re moving forward. We’re seeing progress. I know you don’t like it when people say things are getting better, but we’ve heard it over and over and over again. We are on the right path. We need the help of this committee to get the rest of the way there. I look forward to receiving your report.

Mr. Frank Klees: Minister, you fired Mazza, you fired the board; it’s time to fire yourself. You failed the people of Ontario, and you know it. If you would at least own up to that, I think you’d get some applause. In the meantime, your lack of character is very, very obvious by how you’ve conducted yourself in this hearing today.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We don’t need to make personal comments. Minister, do you want to respond at all?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: No.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. I thank you again, Minister, for coming in this evening. I appreciate you making the trip back from Kitchener.

This committee is adjourned until 8:30 tomorrow morning.

The committee adjourned at 1902.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTSCOMITÉ PERMANENT DES COMPTES PUBLICS

Wednesday 1 August 2012

Mercredi 1^{er} août 2012*The committee met at 0833 in room 151.*SPECIAL REPORT, AUDITOR GENERAL:
ORNGE AIR AMBULANCE
AND RELATED SERVICES

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'll call the committee to order, then. I believe we have a motion to be discussed, so I'll look to Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. I'll table the motion.

I move that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, "the committee," shall commence the report-writing phase of its review of the 2012 special report of the Office of the Auditor General of Ontario on Ornge Air Ambulance and Related Services, "the review," during the committee's first meeting of the fall meeting period of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

That the committee shall continue the report-writing phase of the review during the fall meeting period of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

That the committee shall complete its final report on the review by no later than 60 days following the committee's first meeting of the fall meeting period of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Just note that the motion is deliberately worded to take account of the fact that we don't know precisely when this committee will first meet in the fall, so it's worded to accommodate that unknown, if I can put it that way.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Excuse me. I'd like to speak to the motion, if I may, Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. Go ahead, please.

Mr. Frank Klees: If I might, it might be appropriate—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Excuse me. I think I've got the floor, if it's my motion.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): She does have the floor, so go ahead.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This committee has now spent over four months reviewing the Auditor General's special report on Ornge. We've heard over 70 hours of testimony from over 50 witnesses. We've now recalled some witnesses twice, in one case, even three times. The committee has heard from the Auditor General, the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care, deputy ministers and public servants from across government, former Ministers of Health and Long-Term Care, former deputy ministers and public servants from across government, the management and board of Ornge, former management and board of Ornge, front-line Ornge paramedics, former front-line Ornge paramedics, legal counsel, former legal counsel, consultants, former consultants, and many others, in a comprehensive examination of the facts surrounding the events that occurred at Ornge and the recommendations provided by the Auditor General.

We need to play a role in shaping the public policy decisions surrounding how the government and Ornge move forward to improve the province's air ambulance service. That has traditionally been the role of this committee, which is to provide further advice on implementing the recommendations of the Auditor General.

To do that, we have to begin the task, which I agree will be a difficult one, of parsing through the hundreds of pages of testimony we've heard and thousands of pages of documents we've received and putting together some findings and recommendations. As I said, the purpose of this committee's work is to review the Auditor General's report and make further recommendations on how to strengthen oversight and accountability moving forward. We have a responsibility to Ontario taxpayers, given the amount of money that we have spent reviewing this, to provide some value-added to the taxpayers in terms of implementing the auditor's report and implementing and setting a policy path moving forward.

I hope my colleagues will support moving ahead with report writing so that we can be part of the solution when it comes to moving our air ambulance program forward.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll defer to Ms. Gélinas.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Gélinas?

M^{me} France Gélinas: You're deferring to me?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, I'm okay. I have no comments. I'm ready to vote.

Mr. Frank Klees: I have no comments either, other than to say that I find this motion offensive, that the government would choose to shut down these hearings. I think that we have a very long list of witnesses that still have not been called. They are on the list. There are more questions now than there were when we started.

For the government to suggest that we shut down this debate now is shutting down debate—I think the last thing that we should have happen in this committee or anywhere in this Legislature is that we shut down debate when there's much more to be heard. And so, I would ask that you call the question.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Recorded vote.

Ayes

McNeely, Moridi, Sandals, Zimmer.

Nays

Barrett, Gélinas, Klees, Singh.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): It's a tie vote, and as the Chair, I'm not going to make a decision that the committee cannot make on its own, so I will vote against the motion.

I would also point out that this motion is not binding on the committee. It very well may have new members, come the fall. At that time, when the new members, or same members, are on the committee, they can, in sub-committee, decide how they wish to proceed, and that may be very well to proceed, as is suggested in the motion, to report writing.

Yes, Ms. Gélinas?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Subsequent to this, we had directed our very capable researcher to start to do a kind of summary of what we have heard and do those summaries by theme. I was wondering if—I don't mean to put you on the spot, but would you be willing to share how this work is going and if you need any direction in writing this report?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): This would probably be a very good time, if Ray is organized, to be able to give an update on what he has planned—

Mr. Ray McLellan: Accomplished to date. I can do this fairly quickly, so I won't get into a long discussion.

We had a chance yesterday just to briefly touch on where I'm going, slowly. I would say too, just to preface it, to go back to Ms. Sandals's comment, I'm thinking along the lines of a public accounts committee and a public accounts committee report as we've done over the decades, so that format is what I'm working towards, if the committee's in agreement with that.

With respect to—I'll just let France finish off here. I think she wants to hear this.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm listening intensely now.

Mr. Ray McLellan: I tend to approach this in a very kind of a numbers way as to where I am and where I want to be by the end of the process. When we finish off tomorrow, we'll have had 15 days of hearings. I have finished week 10 in terms of the summary. So when we finish tomorrow, I will be turning to week 11 and, hopefully, within the next two weeks have completed that summary.

Now that's the summary that we had talked about, maybe a month ago, of being—we said what we really need to bridge from where we are to where we want to go is a document that really identifies the issues and observations. It's not a report but it's just more of a checklist. As you were saying, France, it's broken down by themes. My first pass at it I think I probably had about 20 items, from cabin safety and patient safety, to the bond, and on and on. All of that information, just very quickly, is gathered up by subject area, and then I'll have a longer report on that. I would use that at the end of the day—not that you're necessarily interested in this part, but I would use that information, which would be a longer document, maybe 150 pages, to actually work on a final report.

What I would give to you when I finish off these 15 days of hearings is a document, as I say, that's compressed; it will probably be about 40 or 50 pages long. At least by that point we can go through and we can look at it and say, "Well, these are the main 15 or 20 areas, and this is what we want to focus on."

As Ms. Sandals was saying this morning, it's important that I frame that in the context of the auditor's report. But I would say, in doing that, there's going to be kind of miscellaneous and overlap; in other words, matters that weren't addressed in the auditor's report that were addressed by the committee. So we'll start off with the auditor's report and run our issues and observations in parallel to that to see where Mr. McCarter finished off and what he recommended and what the committee has heard, and then go into kind of miscellaneous and new materials. That will have to be framed in a different format without the preamble of the auditor's observations or recommendations.

That's where I am. In terms of timeline, as I say, my objective, prior to the discussion that we just had this morning, was to wrap up this issues-and-observations paper in September so that it will go along to committee for its first meeting. At that point, presumably, you would look at it and make decisions as to where we're going to go—and, as I say, not to kind of pre-empt what was discussed this morning. Prior to this discussion, that's where I thought I was going, so I'm in your hands on this. I'm making progress and I think getting to where we want to be as far as an interim document.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): France.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I thank you for the update. Ray and I had talked before, so I already knew what he was going to say, but then you added a few.

The part that I think could have value at this point is if you sort of give us a summary page as to what the themes are that you're going to be writing on. I understand that it will be based on the auditor's report. This is why we're here. But at the same time, I think this discussion within the committee could be useful.

Liz and I were on the select committee for mental health. This is the process that we used there, where our first report was basically what we heard. The work you're doing now is very much along the same lines: What have we heard? Depending on which headers you put on those, it would be, I think, a worthwhile exercise for you to share with us what are going to be the different headers in that "what have we heard" report so we could have a discussion on this to make sure that the work that you do you don't have to redo.

And then my second question is that I would be interested—and I don't know if the other members of the committee would also be interested—in you sharing that with us as soon as it is ready so that, if it's a 40- to 50-page document, we could read it, have a little bit of time to read it and digest it. So rather than wait for the next committee to share, as soon as it would be ready, you would share it with all of us. So I put that on the table.

Mr. Ray McLellan: Certainly that would be the case. In other words, when this document is ready in September, it would go out, well in advance—the minimum we always had was, a week prior to the next meeting, a document would go out for your review. In this case, it would probably be longer than that, so you'll have a chance to kind of wade through it.

With respect to the first question you had raised on the themes and the chapter headings, quite frankly, I'm working on that right now. I don't have it—so, in other words, I don't have it today.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It doesn't matter, but even if you just bring us something really, really broad strokes for tomorrow morning, maybe, when we're all there. I think it is a discussion that will be useful to you, and while the auditor is there also, just so that we all frame it in a way that if we had something in mind—

Mr. Ray McLellan: Right.

M^{me} France Gélinas:—then you have an opportunity to hear this before you put pen to paper.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Auditor General?

Mr. Jim McCarter: The other thing that might be helpful—I know Ray mentioned following the outline of our report, but you might find you want a different outline. I think what you're getting at is almost like a one-pager, really like a table of contents.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes.

Mr. Jim McCarter: You might want to talk about the business model or some of the things that we didn't cover in the report. I think what you're getting at is maybe just almost a one-pager table of contents so we can at least look at the major areas and say, "Yes, I think this is hitting the mark."

M^{me} France Gélinas: Exactly.

Mr. Ray McLellan: I do have that. As I say, it's rough, so I'll see what I can get together.

But as Mr. McCarter said, my list, in addition to what Mr. McCarter has done, gets into more matters of corporate structure, business planning and even, going to one of Mr. Zimmer's points, the corporate culture—whether or not that's a theme you'd want to pursue. But the corporate culture seems to be an important part of this whole discussion and debate. As I say, with the corporate structure—those topics.

I'll so my best to get something down on paper at some point today and we can maybe spend a couple of minutes tomorrow. But I appreciate your time on this.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: France mentioned working on the select committee, but the other thing that public accounts did, where we had more extended hearings than what usually happens at public accounts, was when we did eHealth.

Mr. Ray McLellan: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It was really, really helpful, when we were doing the report writing on that, to have Ray do exactly what he's doing right now, which is to summarize the testimony according to the different themes and strands. It helped us organize and it also brought us back to where it's an issue that the auditor has covered. It helped us bring it back to the auditor's report, because our work is based, certainly as the major piece, on the work that the auditor has done. It was really helpful having the testimony organized for us.

Mr. Ray McLellan: And I spoke with Ms. Sandals yesterday about eHealth. This is the eHealth report, which is a standard kind of public accounts format. I think the response from the ministry was probably about four times the length of our report, but anyway—this is the format for public accounts. As I say, I'm in the committee's hands. If we use this tried-and-true format, that's fine. I'll get back to you ASAP on that table of contents and see what it looks like.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Are the other members of the committee interested in this?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, because I think this is the first step. Regardless of how the vote turns out, somehow we have to figure out—we're only value-added if we can consolidate what we've thought and bring further recommendations around how we can make this work better in the future and how we can avoid the mistakes that happened in the past. If we're going to be value-added, we need to be starting to think. The way we start to think is with Ray's summary of the testimony organized in a way that we can do something useful with it in terms of having an intelligent, thoughtful discussion.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Any other comments?

Mr. Frank Klees: Will we have something, then, by way of an outline tomorrow?

Mr. Ray McLellan: Yes. We're talking about the one-pager.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Absolutely—the table of contents, like what the auditor has suggested?

Mr. Ray McLellan: That's right. As I say, this is going on as we're sitting here, but I do have the table of contents; that's drafted up. I'll just have to get it shaped up a bit over the next six or seven hours if I can.

Would it be all right to have it tomorrow morning first thing, or would you like to have it at 7 p.m. tonight?

M^{me} France Gélinas: If you have it today, sure. Share it today. But what I'm also asking my colleagues is, would you be willing to come in 15 minutes early tomorrow morning, even half an hour early, so we can have a discussion on the table of contents so it is clear that the work that you're doing is work that you won't have to redo?

Mr. Ray McLellan: Any time.

Mr. Frank Klees: In that case, if you could have it for us tonight, it gives us a chance to review that and come back with some feedback tomorrow morning.

Mr. Ray McLellan: Okay.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll start at 8:30 tomorrow morning, and we'll take a five-minute recess before we start the proceedings.

The committee recessed from 0852 to 0902.

MR. RON SAPSFORD

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'll call the committee to order, then, it being after 9 o'clock. Our first witness this morning is Mr. Ron Sapsford. I'd like to call him forward and confirm that you've received the letter for a person testifying before the committee.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes, I did, Mr. Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Our clerk will have you do either an affirmation or an oath.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): The Bible is in front of you there, Mr. Sapsford. Perfect.

Mr. Sapsford, do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes, I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I understand you have an opening statement, so please feel free to do that, and then we'll move to questioning.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Mr. Chair and members of the committee, my name is Ron Sapsford. I was, from March 2005 until December 2009, the Deputy Minister of Health and Long-Term Care for the province.

During that time, there was great change in the health care system but also in the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care itself. One of the key directions pursued was the divestment of a number of direct health services from ministry operation, air ambulance being one of them. Air ambulance was the first in a long list, including drug benefit registration; OHIP registration and card production; public health laboratory services; three psychiatric hospitals, including Oak Ridges, the high security forensic facility; and the closure of six regional offices of the ministry as a result of the introduction of local health integration networks. During this period, the staff of the ministry went from approximately 7,200 full-time-equivalents to 3,800 full-time-equivalents. The objective of these changes was to put the operation and direction of these services under the authority of corporations that could provide more focus and expert leadership, and to focus the core of the ministry's future role.

I offer this context to simply illustrate that the divestment of air ambulance services, while well under way when I arrived at the ministry, was part of a much larger policy agenda. The air ambulance service was divested to the corporation that was to become Ornge, not as a crown agency but as an independent corporation. The ministry designated this corporation as the provider of air ambulance services and treated it as another of its many transfer payment agencies. There were expectations that it would operate in similar fashion to other health agencies, such as hospitals, CCACs or mental health programs.

It was a non-profit corporation providing public services in the public interest and not seen to be operating in private interest, so the apparent movement from operation in the public interest to one of private interest is, for me, the most surprising and concerning.

My direct knowledge of the details of the issues identified in the auditor's report is somewhat limited, and I appear today not as the deputy minister responding on behalf of the ministry to the report, nor having had access to the information of the ministry in answering the many questions that ensue. Nevertheless, I will do my best to answer the committee's questions and to assist you in your inquiries as best I can, Mr. Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much, Mr. Sapsford. We'll move to the opposition for the first questioning. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Chair. Good morning, Mr. Sapsford.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Good morning.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm sure that your life is very busy these days.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes, sir; always.

Mr. Frank Klees: Negotiations with the government—how are things going?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: We're moving slowly.

Mr. Frank Klees: Making progress?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: One hopes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Sir, I'd like to start with a discussion of the performance agreement, which established the basis of the relationship between Ornge—known at that time as the Ontario Air Ambulance Corp., I guess, and subsequently known as Ornge—and the government. I'm assuming that you were involved in the negotiation of that performance agreement. Is that correct?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No, I wasn't involved directly in the negotiation of the agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: But you were the assistant deputy minister at the time that the agreement was signed?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No, I was the deputy minister at that time.

Mr. Frank Klees: The deputy minister.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. And it was signed by George Smitherman and Mr. Mazza.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who led the negotiations for the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, let me explain. The negotiations for the divestment went on over a long period of time, the better part of a year, I would suspect. The first time I became directly aware of it was in the fall of 2005, which was just prior, I think, to the government's decision to finalize the divestment. I had started at the ministry in the spring of that year, and so the negotiations, the details of the agreement and so forth, were well under way when I arrived at the ministry. So the first time I became aware of it was at the final approval, where we were going through a final review and sign-off before it went to cabinet for final approval.

Mr. Frank Klees: So, as the deputy, did you review that document personally?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: In general terms, the way the ministry worked, of course, is that the details of that would be developed through the division of the ministry, in this case emergency services, up through the lawyers who were involved. I'm not aware of all the details of how it came about, but in the final approval I would have reviewed the generalities of the service agreement. I think there were financial transfers. There were regulations that were involved at the time. So a general review of all that package of material.

Mr. Frank Klees: So who would the lead negotiator have been for the ministry in putting that contract together?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I have to say—the lead, I'm not absolutely clear. It would have been through the emergency division.

Mr. Frank Klees: Perhaps Malcolm Bates?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Malcolm would have been involved. The ADM at the time, whether it was—perhaps Hugh MacLeod had some involvement with the details of it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you recall who was involved in that negotiation on the Ornge side?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: When this went to cabinet for approval, I'm assuming that you would have reviewed the MB20 at that time?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes, in general terms. Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Given the nature of this transaction—this was a significant policy decision, to divest the air ambulance service—what, as deputy, were the key issues that you were looking for to give you comfort, that you would sign off on that MB20?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, several things: to make sure that the financial arrangements were in order, so the amounts of money that were being transferred within a budget; that it was being situated under the Ambulance Act and the regulations were appropriate to situate the delivery of the service there; and then the general outline of the service agreement, the general terms of that, the expectations about service delivery.

Mr. Frank Klees: One of the cornerstones of that MB20 was an assurance to cabinet that the Ministry of Health would continue in a strong oversight role, that while the service delivery was being divested, the responsibility of oversight would stay with the Ministry of Health. Do you recall that being raised as an issue by the minister or by others within the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Not specifically. The context for it from my point of view would be a divestment to a transfer payment agency. Many of the relationships that the ministry did have and continues to have would form the same kind of relationship as would be expected with air ambulance: budget allocations, general policy direction, compliance questions in terms of quality and certification, those sorts of things. In a similar vein, the relationship that would exist between the ministry and, say, a hospital would be the expectation in terms of oversight and supervision.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm surprised that the issue of oversight would not have been front and centre in making this decision and in signing off. This is a very important service. I think the agreement, if I read it correctly, said, "We're signing over the assets for $1. We're giving carte blanche to this organization." I would have thought that around the cabinet table, certainly in your office as deputy, there would have been considerable discussion about how the government would ensure that service standards are maintained, that accountability is front and centre. You're suggesting, or at least I'm getting the message from you, that that was not really a big issue, that it was kind of an assumption that that would simply take place.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No; don't misunderstand me.

Mr. Frank Klees: Please clarify.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Clearly, the ministry had oversight responsibilities. I don't deny that. The service agreement—I don't know all the details as I sit here now—explained a number of accountabilities in terms of service provision and standards. The Ambulance Act and its regulations covered issues of service provision and qualifications and all those things. Clearly, the ministry would continue to be responsible for ensuring compliance with all of those parts, and that forms a major part of what I would call oversight.

Mr. Frank Klees: The performance agreement: There has been quite a bit of discussion. If you've been following these hearings, you also know that the Auditor General's report, which I'm assuming you've read, made reference to the lack of oversight on the part of the Ministry of Health which accounted for this organization making a wrong turn. I think we all agree that the original concept in terms of bringing more efficiency to the service and coordinating services was well-intentioned. As you indicate in your opening statement, the apparent movement from operation in the public interest to one of private interest—and I'd actually put it as self-interest—was a surprise to you. It concerns us greatly that that is the direction that it took.

What I'm interested in knowing is how that could happen, given that there was not only the performance agreement but we also had the Ambulance Act. There is other legislation. You yourself indicated that the expectation was that it would operate in a similar fashion to other health facilities such as hospitals, for example. That somehow this well-intentioned policy decision could go so wrong—which department at the Ministry of Health would have been charged with the oversight responsibility of Ornge?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: The emergency services branch.

Mr. Frank Klees: We have had some testimony here from Mr. Malcolm Bates concerning that issue. Apparently there was frustration within that emergency health services branch, which knew full well what its responsibility was. They wanted to carry out that oversight responsibility, but the testimony that we have from Mr. Bates is that he was directed to stand down and to allow Mr. Mazza to carry on because, essentially, Mr. Bates's authority was overridden. Mr. Bates was basically told in no uncertain terms that he should be doing whatever Dr. Mazza instructed him to do.

We now have this new entity out here that was created through the divestment. We had oversight responsibility with the Ministry of Health, but the very department that was charged with exercising that responsibility was told that they are now subservient to that organization—to Mr. Mazza and his organization. How could that come about?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I have no idea. I don't know what Mr. Bates would be referring to in terms of that direction, but certainly, no direction like that ever emanated from my office or from my point of view. The ministry has clear responsibilities that were defined in the service agreement. If the suggestion is that Mr. Bates was directed not to—is that how I understand what you're saying?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Not to live up to the service agreement? Then I don't understand where that direction would have come from.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Bates indicated in his testimony that it came from Hugh MacLeod. He actually tabled emails here that gave very clear direction that Mr. Mazza is now in charge. I was wondering if Mr. MacLeod would have made that decision unilaterally or if, perhaps, that was a direction from somewhere higher up, which I guess would have put it to your office or the minister's office. You're telling us that you have no knowledge of any direction?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Certainly no direction of that sort would have come from me at any time on any matter.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever meet Mr. Mazza?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I met him once for a short meeting, maybe 15 or 20 minutes. I'd never met him before so it was really more of an introductory meeting with him.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was that before or after the deal was signed?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: That was after.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you know him at all prior to that, or know of him? Did you know of his—

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I didn't know him, certainly. I'd certainly heard his name. I've been in the health system a long time, so I knew his name, I knew he was an expert in emergency medicine and worked through Sunnybrook, but that would be the extent of my—

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you recall how the decision was made to entrust Chris Mazza with this responsibility?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Those decisions were made long before I arrived at the ministry. As I said, the discussion about the divestment had been decided long before I got there. The negotiations started over the course of, I guess, 2004 or 2005. When I first became engaged with the file was in the fall of 2005, when they were finalizing the package for cabinet.

Mr. Frank Klees: Knowing what you know about the performance agreement and how that divestment was to roll out, was there ever any discussion that this new organization, Ornge, would end up actually owning helicopters, owning fixed-wing aircraft, operating their own aircraft division? Was that ever contemplated? Do you recall any discussions that that was part of the strategy or that overall plan?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: At that particular time?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: It was never contemplated?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Not to my knowledge. It certainly wasn't drawn to my attention, if there were discussion.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right. Certainly, we've heard other testimony that supports that as well, that that was never contemplated. That may be one of the issues that took things down the wrong path. We have a lot more information, of course, to glean as to how we got to that point.

Can you tell us, in very simple terms, what that divestment was to look like, and why that step was taken to divest the air ambulance service?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: There were, I would say, at least two strong reasons. I think there had been identified problems with the existing service, the way it was organized, in terms of previous audit reports or external reports that had pointed out a number of issues in terms of service and distribution of aircraft and availability. I can't remember all the details, but I think there were some fundamental issues around how the air ambulance service was organized and operated in the first place, and I think that discussion started probably in 2003, a fairly long time ago. So that would be one reason. There were issues around how it was currently operated.

I think the model that was put forward was to create an organization whose specialty would be in this business, and to create an organization that would spend full time focused on air ambulance and not just another service of the Ministry of Health among the many, many responsibilities of the ministry. To me, that was a principal reason to create an agency to spend full time focused on it as a specialty organization.

Then I think the second, which is probably an adjunct, was this more general notion that I referred to, that the Ministry of Health itself needed to move out of direct health operational services, as a general approach to the role of the ministry. So, as I illustrated, over the course of the years I was there, there were several direct services, health care services, that were divested to external corporations, non-profit, much in the same vein as air ambulance.

Those would be the two reasons I would offer for the rationale behind the divestment.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, you have about two and a half minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. As we discussed previously, one of the things that the ministry never contemplated giving up was the oversight responsibility and holding this organization to account. As a deputy minister, you have a great deal of experience within government. In your opinion, if there was a sense that something was going wrong within that organization, what authority does a minister have to intervene with any transfer agency?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I can think of four.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. I'd like to—and I'll borrow some time, because this is—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sure.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: First, legislative provisions: First you'd look to statutory authority. Some of it is specific; some of it is general.

Regulation under legislation—if there are specific regulations conferring authority or abilities to intervene.

The third would be monetary. The government controls the purse strings of every transfer payment agent, and that's a significant authority to require compliance.

Then the fourth, I would argue, would be that the office itself commands respect, in my experience.

Mr. Frank Klees: So if there was an agency—and technically, the legislation, the agreement, the regulation may not give me, as the minister, the authority to intervene directly but, as a minister, to pick up the telephone and to say, "Look, Mr. President or CEO or Chair of the board, we have a problem here. I'd like to have a meeting. I'd like to have a discussion with you. We need to set some things right." That is a very powerful way, a very effective way, to get the attention of the leadership of that organization. I'm assuming that it's your experience that a minister would have a great deal of persuasive power simply by exercising that.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, many ministers use many techniques. I wouldn't presume to advise ministers on how they conduct their own business. In my experience, ministers command attention.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move on to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Good morning, Mr. Sapsford.

M. Ron Sapsford: Madame Gélinas, ça va bien?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Ça va, merci.

Thank you for coming to Queen's Park. You're very familiar with this setting and this room and everything else. I'm going to build a little bit onto the line of questioning that Mr. Klees was doing, but I'm more interested in your experience. How do issues get brought to the attention of the minister for action?

What I've been trying to understand is that, from where I'm sitting, there were many warning signs that something was not right at Ornge. We, in the NDP, filed a freedom of access to information as to why Dr. Mazza's salary was no longer on the sunshine list. We filed this; we got a response back telling us that 19 records had been found but none of them could be shared with us. We consider this as telling the government, "Hey, have a look because we've had whistle-blowers come to us telling us that Mazza is now pocketing close to $1 million. You guys should look into this." So we did; we filed freedom-of-information requests.

Then, estimates comes around—you're very familiar with those; you've attended many. I'm the health critic at that point, but I was subbed out for my leader. My leader comes in—it was Howard Hampton at the time—and Howard spends the entire afternoon asking about one topic. Health care is huge, and we usually query community health centres and hospitals and all this, but we don't talk about anything else; we talk about one topic: Ornge. Howard asked 47 questions about Ornge during those estimates that could not be answered. We got a promise of an answer, but no answers ever come for any of the estimates questions until two years down the road.

Then, we have more and more whistle-blowers coming to the NDP who also tell us that they have gone to different levels of the ministry—some went to the wrong ministry and went to the Ministry of Health Promotion, but a lot of them actually went to different departments and basically talked to the minister, tried to communicate that things were wrong at Ornge, that they are making decisions right now that are taking money away. They shared with them what they could: level of patient care is going down, some of the decisions that are being made, we heard rumours that Dr. Mazza's salary is going to hit the moon etc.

At what point does an issue like this register with a ministry the size of the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Just before I—could I just get you to agree with me that the questions at estimates—because you referred to me being at estimates—the questions you're referring to—

M^{me} France Gélinas: You were not there.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: —I was not there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, no. You are not the one.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Thank you. Questions at estimates are always answered, in my experience. That's part of what the role of estimates is. If you're saying the questions weren't answered, I can't offer you an opinion as to why. I don't know why. In my experience, generally, questions in estimates were followed up and answered.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We cannot think of a valid reason why questions in estimates would not be answered. Neither can you?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, unless the information wasn't available, the ministry couldn't get the—I mean, I can think of reasons why perhaps not, but in general, questions were and are answered.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I agree with you. On this point, they were not. I'm trying to understand what needs to happen within the Ministry of Health to pay attention to one of its thousands of transfer payment agencies; I mean, Ornge was but that. The Ministry of Health has thousands of transfer payment agencies. You had a transfer payment agency that, in my humble opinion, was running amok.

The NDP had had a few whistle-blowers come to us, so we filed a freedom of access of information—we concentrated all of our questions in estimates on Ornge to try to get answers, because you don't always know if the whistle-blower is telling you the truth or not, so we were trying to get information. We know that whistle-blowers were going directly to the ministry, yet no actions got taken for months. That turned into a year; that turned into two years.

I'm sure there must have been other instances where you paid attention to one of the thousands of transfer payment agencies that were within your portfolio. How much smoke must a fire do before you notice that there's a fire?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: It's a hard question for me to answer as I sit here today. I'm quite certain the ministry would not ignore information. So, if questions were asked, I'm quite certain the ministry would go about trying to find out. As I've already said, I don't believe the ministry would have ignored Ornge, as you've suggested.

The ministry is organized in a way such that transfer payment agencies generally have a recognized contact with the ministry. In this case, it was the emergency services branch. I would expect that they had much discussion and contact with that particular agency over complaints and other business dealings.

So in terms of the normal way the ministry would operate, there would be, I would assume, lots of discussion and contact and information exchange. How then it gets raised, I think, is your question. That would be based on the kind of answers that were being provided to the questions, if there were answers provided to the questions. It's difficult for me to evaluate the specifics of it without, frankly, talking to ministry staff and understanding it.

M^{me} France G  linas: In the time when you were deputy minister, do you figure there could have been a transfer payment agency out there that paid their CEO $1 million, and you wouldn't have known?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

M^{me} France G  linas: You would have known one way or another and, I take it, taken corrective action?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes. Well, public transfer payment agencies would be in receipt of public money, which would then invoke the salary disclosure legislation. That would have been transparent. So I'm relying on that particular process as the mechanism.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. So then, we'll go more specifically into the story of Ornge, where Ornge decided to create those for-profit entities, and this is how they justified not putting their salary on the sunshine list. My questions now are going to be about these decisions to have private entities.

In your time at the ministry, how important was the concept of leveraging the expertise, knowledge and skills of the health care system to basically promote a way of making money to fund the health care system? We've heard over and over that what we had at Ornge and what we have within the health care system in Ontario is something to be proud of. We have expertise here that can be leveraged, that can be sold abroad to bring money back into Ontario to fund our health care system. We have some of the best scientists, some of the best hospitals and some of the best physicians here. Basically, we have expertise that we could export. How important was this concept? How was it shared and—I have a hard time with this word—vehiculated? How was it shared around? Did you understand this?

Mr. Phil McNeely: Mr. Chair, could I maybe have the witness closer to the microphone? I can hear Ms. G  linas very well. I cannot make out what Mr. Sapsford is saying.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: My apologies.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: In my words, I would describe that whole notion as secondary or ancillary to the prime purpose of the agency. If you want to talk specifically about Ornge, the prime responsibility was to deliver air ambulance services to Ontarians, period, full stop.

Now, it's not uncommon that agencies develop ancillary relationships and try to market, as you said, and sell their services abroad. I'm familiar with cases in the hospital sector, so this isn't in itself an unusual thing. But it's certainly not the prime mover for a health organization. It's kind of a secondary benefit that occurs.

M^{me} France G  linas: Let's say we take the example of some of the hospitals that do this. Do they share what they're doing with the ministry? Or are they allowed to go on their own for that part of the ancillary services, as you call them?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No, I would say they do that quite independently. I think, at least in my experience, where those sorts of companies are created they operate to the benefit of the institution 100%, so they're seen as a subsidiary of it, and any benefit that does accrue accrues to the principal agency as opposed to any other organization.

M^{me} France G  linas: So it's done either through a foundation or through a not-for-profit?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No, often it has to be a for-profit organization because of the federal tax implications. Hospitals, for instance, or non-profits have to protect their non-profit status, and so carrying on ancillary businesses would be designated by the federal government as having to pay tax on income. So they're created as for-profit organizations, pay tax, and any residual benefit flows then to the principal organization.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Is there a mechanism to guarantee that the money will flow back to the hospital, and does the ministry have a responsibility in overseeing that that actually does happen?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: It's rather the reverse. The concern is not that private money flows to the benefit of the non-profit; it's that public monies are not flowing the other way, so that the funds voted for the health service are used for the health service and not to support ancillary businesses.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What does the ministry do to ensure that public money isn't used to help start up or to assist in the formation or the creation of those ancillary institutions or organizations?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Usually a financial review to make sure that funds are not flowing to subsidiary organizations, those sort of questions—in my experience, public organizations that do this kind of business are well aware that the protection of public funds is a prime responsibility, and so one relies on the prudence and good judgement of boards of governors and management to recognize that fundamental responsibility and to comply with it. That's an expectation.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That is an expectation, but when that expectation sometimes is not met—for example, in Ornge, public money was used in the for-profit side. As an ADM, what role would the ministry, as an oversight organization, oversight body, play in ensuring that that doesn't happen?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I suppose the normal review in following up on questions—one has to discover the problem in the first place. As I understand—I haven't followed all the details of this proceeding—information was withheld by Ornge from the ministry. I guess part of the problem is, how do you find out the information that then gives you the ability to follow up and act on it? If the agency of record is not being forthcoming or straightforward, or non-transparent, then the ministry quite clearly is going to have some difficulty. In reading the auditor's report, even the Provincial Auditor had some difficulty in getting information. So one has to judge the difficulty the ministry faces in this particular case with who was on the other side.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What about the corporate structure and all the decisions along the way being presented to the ministry and to ministry officials, the corporate structure, for example, that allowed for salaries to be withheld? That structure that came into place was disclosed to the ministry. Would that not raise some alarms, that this type of structure of a for-profit/not-for-profit is created? One of the effects of it, which was openly disclosed, would result in salary not needing to be disclosed.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: You ask me a very difficult question because I don't know the details of the structure. I'm certainly not privy to it. It never was raised with me at any time. These are events that transpired long after I left the ministry and I really feel unable to offer an opinion.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. I asked you about how for-profits attached to not-for-profit transfer payment agencies usually work. Would you say that when you were deputy, you pretty well knew every transfer payment agency that had a for-profit attached to them, or was this not something that we paid attention to?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No, I certainly wouldn't be aware of that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So the transfer payment agency could have done this and it wouldn't necessarily have reported that to the ministry?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I'll give you one example. For instance, I learned, in the normal course of my business, a hospital had a contract in China to offer expert advice on hospital services and so on and so forth. That was conducted through a subsidiary. One would hear of these sorts of things, but there was no formal tracking that I'm aware of, in the ministry, of those sorts of organizations.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Knowing what we know now, do you figure the ministry should track this?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: We talk in our health care system a lot about innovation. We talk a lot about improving our health care system through innovation, and innovation, to some degree, implies risk. So I think that the health care system needs a certain amount of freedom to explore innovation and then to apply it to the benefit of our own health care system.

What I think is the important point is to make sure that public monies are not flowing in the wrong direction. I don't have a problem with people undertaking innovative business approaches to try and improve health care or benefit or lever, I think was the word you used at one point, our knowledge and expertise. The important point is to keep the public and the private separately to ensure that public funds are not used for private purposes. This is such a well-accepted rule and understanding in my experience that to have to track it in some minute detail for every single agency—I don't think it is a particularly productive use of anyone's time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Very good.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about two minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, I'll use my last two minutes.

The members of the board and the chair of the board at Ornge were paid $200,000 a year for their membership on the board of the not-for-profit transfer payment agency that was Ornge. In your time as deputy minister, do you know of any other transfer payment agency that paid their board members that amount of money?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know of any transfer payment agencies, except for CCACs and LHINs, that pay the members of their board of directors?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: For not-for-profits?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Transfer payment agencies of the Ministry of Health.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, yes. Transfer payment agencies, yes. Don't forget, a large part of our health care system is delivered by private companies.

M^{me} France Gélinas: True. Labs and—

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Labs. Long-term-care homes would have private corporations whose boards, I suspect, are paid.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Let me rephrase this, then: not-for-profit transfer payment agencies.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Not-for-profit transfer payment agencies: You had hundreds and hundreds of them, and not one of them paid their board of directors to be on the board?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, none that I'm aware of. There may be one or two for very specific reasons, but it's not a common thing. Most boards who are responsible for public health agencies usually serve on a voluntary basis. Usually, costs are covered. Directors incur expenses in the course of their duties. Those would be offset by the agency. But payment of the kind you're talking about, I've never heard of in my whole career.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. We'll leave it at that for now.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move to the government members. Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Good morning, Mr. Sapsford. Welcome back to public accounts. You've been here on all sorts of topics, in your role as deputy, in the past.

I recognize that this development of Ornge, or Ontario Air Ambulance, was well under way when you arrived, I think you've said, in March 2005 as deputy. So that was happening. From your earlier conversation with Mr. Klees, I wasn't quite clear on exactly when it was you first met Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I'm not clear either. It would have been, at the earliest, in 2006. It could have been in 2007, somewhere in that—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But by this time, the Ontario Air Ambulance actually existed—

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Oh, yes. I met him as the CEO of Ornge, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What has always puzzled me is that there seems to be a long period of time when Dr. Mazza served as a special adviser to the ministry or something. He seems to have had this relationship with the ministry above and beyond simply doing his job at Sunnybrook at the base hospital, as it was then; and there seems to have been this appointment of him as a special adviser. As Mr. Klees alluded to, we did have testimony from Mr. Bates that Dr. Mazza was effectively put in control over the air ambulance program, developing this, and that most notably, during the design stage of the performance agreement, he was the go-to person.

When you came in as deputy, did anybody ever bring it upstairs and brief you on this somewhat peculiar arrangement?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No, would be my simple answer. I think Dr. Mazza had left the ministry, frankly, before I arrived. I stand to be corrected on that, but I think his role as special adviser predated the detailed delivery of the final package of information to cabinet.

I never had any contact with Dr. Mazza in the Ministry of Health. It was always as the CEO. I believe—I stand to be corrected—he had left the ministry before I arrived.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That perhaps explains this disconnect, because clearly, in a lot of the documentation we've seen around the legal billings for the early development of the performance agreement, it backs up what Mr. Klees alluded to, it backs up what Mr. Bates told us. It was quite clear from the notes of the day that Mazza was the go-to person in the early framing of the performance agreement and early structure of the corporation. But you're saying you think that it was so far developed when you came that he had done that early work and he had moved off again.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: That would be my best understanding, yes; that the early work had been done and he had left, and then the discussion around the formality of the service agreement was after that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Do you have any knowledge, then, of why this, to me, very odd structure was set up; that the person who was going to be the eventual CEO of the corporation was essentially given responsibility for negotiating the performance agreement? It appears as if Dr. Mazza was negotiating with himself.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I don't know the answer to the question. I just simply don't know. It may be that events transpired in an order, and where they started and where it ended up were two different things. I don't know.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It just seems so, so odd that somebody negotiates their own performance agreement. And it may be why you're unclear on who the lead negotiator was—that the lead negotiator, it sounds like, was actually Dr. Mazza, as I say, negotiating with himself. That may be why you sort of struggled with the earlier question about who was the lead negotiator.

The other thing that has always seemed quite peculiar to me—because I'm certainly aware, as are you, that there's a whole host of lawyers at the ministry—is why it was that negotiating the Ontario Air Ambulance side of the performance agreement seems to have been farmed out to Fasken's, an external law firm, but was paid by the ministry, as far as we can figure out. Fasken's appears to have been on the performance agreement development file as early as January 2003. Was it ever raised as an issue to you that much of the legal work on developing the performance agreement had in fact been done by an external law firm which saw itself as representing OAA, as opposed to representing the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: The air ambulance corporation itself was created, I think, in 2004, and my understanding is that Fasken was that corporation's lawyers—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But they were billing as of January 2003—

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, then, it started earlier than that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. So nobody raised this as a flag when you came in as deputy, that you need to go back and look at the legal history of who was negotiating with whom or—

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No. My understanding, coming into it, was that the corporation out there that was receiving the air ambulance as part of the divestment had been created; there had been negotiations with them over a period of time. I wasn't aware that it was necessarily Fasken at that point in time, but they would have been the lawyer representing that external corporation.

As to why the ministry would pay, it would seem to me they were already treating it as if it were a transfer payment agency, and so the costs of setting up the corporation, going through the divestment, making sure that the agreements were in place would have been considered part of the transfer payment cash flow.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because that was certainly part of the payment trail, starting in 2003, to Fasken's that the auditor identified.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, the corporation wouldn't have had any other revenue source, other than the ministry. So as the receiving organization, I suspect—I'm a little out on edge here. I suspect—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Well, this is what we're all trying to figure out. Why was it set up this way? It didn't seem to be the way in which it would best protect the interests of the ministry, necessarily.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: My view of that would be, the ministry would be on the other side of the discussion, negotiating with the external organization over the divestment and the service agreement and so on and so forth. The ministry would be representing its own interests.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. So there were two sets of lawyers working on this.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Once OAA had been formally created and the service was turned over, would you have met with Dr. Mazza, other than that one meeting, at all?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Would you get reports on how this was unfolding? Did you get an impression of how the divestment was going, how the creation of the operation was going?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No, I didn't receive regular reports. I think the way, in terms of operational detail—things would be reported to me on an exceptional basis as opposed to a routine report. I was aware, actually, through an audit report shortly thereafter in terms of the operation of air ambulance, and I think I appeared in front of this committee. So I was certainly aware of some of the issues affecting air ambulance as a result of the Provincial Auditor's—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But there wouldn't have been a routine follow-up; we've created this new thing and sort of just routine reporting that would come up as far as—

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No, unless issues were raised by ADMs to me directly.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. The thing that seems to have obviously happened some time in here is this moving to a global operation. We certainly know that there was extensive briefing in January 2011, after you had left, obviously, around this big new structure, but it's clear that the board passed that in January 2010 and that there had been a lot of prior work go into it. In this chain of flagging issues, did it ever come up to you that Ornge was starting to work on a new corporate structure?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So that was never raised as an issue to you.

We know then, as I say, that Ornge moved a lot after you left. One of the things that did seem to come up earlier was the decision to move to the air ambulance. That setting up the bond-holding corporation to actually get into purchasing aircraft happened earlier. Did that come up to your office when they started to move to the purchase of aircraft?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So that didn't come up as a flag to the level of your office, because clearly that did start before you left, setting up that—

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I believe that was sometime in 2009, I think.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. But again, it didn't come up as a flag.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Obviously you've been following some of the media, given what time you have from all your other responsibilities that you've got now, and we've certainly been hearing about outrageous salaries, bonuses; we've been hearing about the girlfriends, the daughter, the chair of the board getting big jobs; public funding going to people getting university degrees. When you hear about that now, do you have any thoughts on where this went off the rails, how it got off the rails? Where did Dr. Mazza sort of go astray? Because I think what we all keep asking ourselves is, what went wrong and how do you make sure it doesn't happen again?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: It's a very hard question for me to answer. When one hears—well, certainly reading the auditor's report raised my eyebrows in a number of areas and led to questions, many of the questions I think you've been asking here. It's hard for me to assess what went wrong. I think one has to look very seriously at the decision-making of the agency itself as to what they had in their mind. Somehow it shifted from operating public air ambulance services to a whole series of other business ventures that somehow seemed to put Ornge as subservient. That's just my view looking from the outside. Why that happened, how it happened, what decisions were taken: I don't have those answers.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You mentioned that this is the second time you've appeared before this committee on the subject of air ambulance, because the auditor did a report I believe in 2005, and you were here in, I think, February 2006. I believe Mr. Zimmer and I have been around long enough that we were here too.

I dug out some of that testimony, and I certainly don't expect that you're going to remember in any detail who said what to whom.

The auditor had been looking at the air ambulance service, because he would have been in there doing his audit work in early 2005. His work had to do with before the service was divested. When we go and look at the conversation we had at public accounts, your testimony and Mr. Bates's testimony, it was largely about what Ontario air ambulance was going to look like now that it was being divested because this policy change had happened between the report and you appearing at the committee.

You focused on the creation of Ontario Air Ambulance. Do you recall what you saw as the benefits of creating Ontario Air Ambulance, from a public policy point of view? There were obviously problems that had been identified by the auditor, and Ontario Air Ambulance was looked on as the solution. Can you recall why this structure was the solution, as seen at that time?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I'll try, but maybe you'll tell me what I said. In answer to a previous question, it was to create an organization that was spending full time focused on the delivery of that service. If I remember some things about the audit, there were coordination problems and standby problems; there were employment issues. There was a whole series of problems in having the service available when needed. Creating an organization that would specialize in this and understand the business from an expert point of view to find the solutions and to manage it on an ongoing basis would be, in my mind, the principal policy reason.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: One of the things that sort of stands out, in a way, is what we didn't discuss. There was mention of it being, I think, a non-profit. There was no discussion of alternative revenue in the model. Would that be consistent with your understanding at the time, that there was never any discussion that came to you as you were reviewing the MB20, the cabinet submissions, of setting up these side for-profit corporations?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Not to my memory, no. As I've said, the principal reason was to divest to the non-profit the operation of the air ambulance service. That was the prime motivation.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, and certainly your testimony at the time doesn't reflect any thought of creating for-profit entities.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. One of the other things that has been a big issue is the whole business of buying their own aircraft. Again, you've said that it didn't come up to you as a briefing issue. It's clear from your testimony, again, that the model that people are talking about is still procuring the actual flight services from independent, private aircraft operators. That's the model that it's very clear from your testimony that you thought of. Was there ever any discussion that you were briefed on about the pros and cons of owning aircraft at OAA, versus contracting out to private carriers?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it isn't that something didn't get mentioned in the testimony before the committee.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It was simply that there was never any discussion of switching models.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No. But I will say that part of the model was to put those sorts of considerations and decisions into the hands of the air ambulance operator so that—I can't say I would be surprised that they might choose to do that. In the lexicon, it's a make or buy decision, whether you contract it or offer the service yourself. It was within the authority of the corporation to make those sorts of decisions but it wasn't contemplated at the beginning.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, and that's very helpful to make that distinction. Going back through the testimony, it just isn't something that we discussed.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: No.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But it would have been within the authority. That's helpful to know. Okay, thank you. We'll come back later.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. As usual, we're running out of time. I'm sure that you would rather stay here for another day as well, right?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Please don't invite me.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Clerk, does Mr. Sapsford have a copy of this?

We're trying to wrestle with this issue of where things went wrong, who knew what and how early did the Ministry of Health know that this was developing into something beyond what was originally contemplated. I've just handed to you, and members of the committee have in front of them, the recommendation section of the Meyers Norris Penny report that you may or may not be familiar with.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I'm sorry, this is—

Mr. Frank Klees: This is the summary of that report, the Meyers Norris Penny report, which all members of the committee have. The final report was delivered September 2010, so you may not have seen this.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Never. This was as a result of the—

Mr. Frank Klees: This was a report specifically ordered by the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care to assess the performance of the Ontario air ambulance system.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Okay.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay? The reason that I wanted you to have a look at this is that as early as July 16, 2010, which is the date of this summary, it included that interesting corporate structure. Some of us saw this for the first time in a letter that was distributed to the minister in January of last year. This report that was delivered to the Ministry of Health back in September 2010, at the very latest, already has this organizational chart growing and it already has a number of for-profit entities. It has the J Smarts not-for-profit foundation, it has Ornge Peel, it has a numbered company that currently—at that time, was inactive, but they had some plans for this.

The reason I show this to you is that the recommendation from Meyers Norris Penny—the first recommendation was, and I'll quote, "The organizations must discuss and document" the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care's "concerns regarding Ornge's corporate structure and enter into agreed-upon revisions of their contractual relationship, if any, that are required to give the" Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care "more comfort regarding Ornge's corporate structure and its impact on the delivery of air ambulance services in the province of Ontario."

This was a fairly strong message to the Ministry of Health back then. It was another red flag in the whole lead-up to the mess that we find ourselves in.

My question for you, sir, is: If you were the deputy minister at the time—I realize that it's hard, and you may not want to go there, but I'd like to challenge you. Something as important as this, with this kind of corporate structure, would that have given you any cause for concern and would that have prompted you to say, “Look, I think we need to ask some more questions about this”?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Just a question of clarification, this chart that I’m looking at on the back page, is this part of—

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, that is the corporate—that is part of that report.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I would want to ask questions.

Mr. Frank Klees: I thought that you probably would.

What concerns us at this committee is that, again, this is information that was in the hands of the Ministry of Health at the time and it seemed that no one was particularly concerned about it.

I’d like to—

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I don’t know, though, sir, what questions were asked, so I wouldn’t assume the ministry didn’t—

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, here’s the interesting thing: There was an even more comprehensive briefing. It was about a 43-page letter, with an organizational chart that was twice as complex as the one that you see there. We have had testimony from the deputy, from the assistant deputy, from the minister, and not one person indicated to us at this committee that that gave them any cause for concern, and we’re wrestling with that. From our standpoint, given the oversight responsibility that the Ministry of Health had, and seeing how this organization was apparently spinning out of control, it just baffles us that somebody did not stand up and say, “Look, let’s put the brakes on here. Let’s call Mazza and his board in here, and let’s have a fulsome discussion about where the priorities should be.” Because, sir, at the same time that this organization was spinning into international businesses, they were having meetings with paramedics in London, Ontario, saying, “We may have to shut this base down because we don’t have the resources to carry on.” If that isn’t a problem, if that isn’t something that even the first person in line for oversight would have to respond to, we don’t know—and that’s why at this committee we’re wrestling with, how do we get a handle on dealing with this issue? Because we can make as many legislative changes as we want, we can make as many changes to a performance agreement as we want, but if the individuals at the Ministry of Health who have oversight responsibilities are not sensitive to what can go wrong and are not exercising their proper oversight, we’re right back to square one.

My question to you, as a former deputy, is, how would you get the attention of the people within your ministry who have that oversight responsibility, to do their job?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): After the answer, we’ll move to the NDP because you’re out of time.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Mr. Klees, in my experience, the Ministry of Health—and I’ve worked in the ministry on three separate occasions, and I’ve been on the receiving end of the ministry my whole career as well—has always treated its responsibilities of oversight and due diligence extremely seriously. In this particular case, I can’t answer all the details of it because I’m not aware of it.

Again, I would point you to the fact that the kinds of decisions that were made by this organization are atypical. They’re not typical of what one would expect. So, in presenting this set of facts to the ministry, there may have been some difficulty in understanding or following up, or not getting answers. But my experience is that the ministry staff are extremely diligent and pay attention to things that go wrong, and I can give you lots of instances where, in fact, that has been the case.

So, from my point of view, you’re dealing with an unusual circumstance, as opposed to a fundamental problem with questions of oversight from the Ministry of Health. That would be my reflection to you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We’ll move to Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I tend to agree with you, having been at the receiving end, that the Ministry of Health usually does a good job of oversight. As an executive director for many years, I had to account for every penny that I received. They watched and they asked questions, and they took their job seriously of making sure that the money that had been transferred to my agency was for the accountability agreement that the board had signed with the ministry. So if we take for granted that this amount of oversight that we see throughout the Ministry of Health was applied to Ornge—and yet we have the bad turn of events that has happened at Ornge, as the Auditor General has put in his report. We have the $1.4-million salary. We have the personal loans. We have the $200,000 to the board of governors. We have this spaghetti of a corporate structure that makes no sense to anybody, to this day, except for the lawyer who designed it. We have all of this.

So the ministry—we’ll take it for granted—did a good job. They knew that something was drastically wrong, and they tried to act. Then you’re left with this: This was allowed to go on because somebody wanted it to go on. Neither one of those scenarios I like too much.

Going into the experience that you’ve had, not all transfer payment agencies of the Ministry of Health, I’m sure, were charming to deal with. Using your experience, what other scenarios could there be out there that would explain why this went on for years?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: First of all, remember: The most difficult parts of this whole story were not decisions of the ministry. Let me start there.

I think how one discovers those kinds of things is the difficult part of this. What I understand of the overall position is that information was kept back, actions were taken that were not revealed, and things were done behind closed doors that were difficult to discover and understand. I think if you start there, then the problem becomes, how do you catch up with that?

I guess in this particular case, it took the Provincial Auditor’s report to do that. I looked briefly at the response of the ministry to the auditor’s report, and I think some of the suggestions that were put forward by the ministry as action as a result of it were useful things to do.

So in terms of how we ensure it doesn't happen again—I'm reading that into your question—I think some of the proposals that have been put forward would do that. They dealt with following the money, tracking the money, and making sure that, if there were certain kinds of actions to be taken by an agency, there needed to be an explicit approval. Some of those techniques, I think, are important considerations.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So the premise of this discussion is that the ministry did not know and, therefore, could not act because they did not know, and it was basically an agency that hid things?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: It strikes me that that's the fact.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry, I missed that answer.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: It strikes me that that's the fact.

M^{me} France Gélinas: A huge part of me wants to believe this, except that there are so many documents and testimonies that have been presented to us that make this hard to believe. It makes it hard to believe that.

Why is it that whistle-blowers were telling us that his salary was over $1 million? The whistle-blowers came and testified that they've also told the ministry. When we asked for a freedom of access of information to find out what his salary was, wouldn't the government find out what his salary was?

That's a question.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes, one would attempt to, for sure.

M^{me} France Gélinas: One would attempt to, for sure. I agree with you.

When questions are asked in estimates that have to do with the corporate structure, that have to do with the money going to the for-profit entity of what was Ornge Peel and Orngeco and all the other for-profit Ornges, that was also an opportunity to get to learn about what they were hiding from you—not from you; you were gone—what they were hiding from the government. When questions are posed in estimates, wouldn't that be an opportunity to learn what they're trying to hide, especially if the questions were pointed: What is this corporate structure? Where does this for-profit get its money?—with a promise from the deputy and the minister to get back to us. Do you consider this an opportunity to find out what they're trying to hide?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute and a half.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, yes. To ask the question, absolutely.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you agree with the position that there may be transfer agencies that improperly handle money? There may be transfer agencies that don't do their job that they're supposed to do properly? And that may occur again and again. Simply finding a transfer agency that's making a mistake and saying, "Oh, this one's making a mistake time and time again," looking at the agency itself, those mistakes may occur again and again. But a systemic or a systematic approach to the problem would be to have better oversight on a consistent basis so that the government can prevent this from happening.

Instead of looking at, for example, Ornge, and saying that it was Dr. Mazza who didn't disclose, who withheld information—that may happen again; we can't prevent that—what we can do is ensure that the ministry has sufficient oversight so that it catches these issues early on before taxpayer dollars are wasted. Do you agree with that approach?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, I think you need to remember there are different legislative schemes or regimes for different parts of the health care system. I would argue, in a systematic way, the Ministry of Health has huge ability to oversee and to make sure that services are delivered effectively without things going wrong. But there is no legislative scheme that will prevent things from going wrong, and how the government responds, of course, is the more important thing.

One can look at different kinds of legislative models and apply them differently. The same regime is not applied to every single health service. I think the learning from the auditor's report—and the ministry in fact has followed, in its response, to borrow some additional protections from other models that weren't applied in this particular case, that in hindsight—and hindsight is perfect—could have and perhaps should have been in the past.

In terms of the fundamental structures and accountability mechanisms and so forth, I think they're strong and intact.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move to the government. Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just finishing up on the testimony and the conversation back in 2006, and I notice you said the same thing again today: that Ornge was envisioned as a transfer payment agency; it wasn't envisioned in the way that it turned out.

Anything in particular that, again, you can identify that is key in trying to make sure that that loss of transfer-payment-agency behaviour where, as you mentioned, it seems to not be focusing on public interest but rather private interest—how do you draw that line, given that private entities may be acceptable; how do you enforce that line that you keep the governance model focused on public interest, even though there may be private for-profit offshoots?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: I think in the minister's response the ministry offered a couple of those. One would be specific approvals on large capital transactions, prohibition on movement across corporate lines for assets that are flowed to the public agencies—those sorts of occasions where those kinds of business changes are anticipated, then, with a specific approval, would bring the question back to the ministry, at least, for review.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: One of the things that is in the legislation that is before the House but has not been passed is giving the minister the ability to appoint a supervisor, much akin to hospitals, CCACs, other health entities. Is that a useful fail-safe, that the minister has the ability to put the transfer partner under supervision?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you would encourage us, then, to make sure that that ability is in place as well?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Well, the minister has that authority over a number of health agencies, so—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But, unfortunately, not under this—the existing legislation did not allow for that. So that would be a useful legislative step?

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much for coming before the committee this morning. We appreciate it.

Mr. Ron Sapsford: Thank you so much.

MR. HUGH MACLEOD

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our next witness, Mr. Hugh MacLeod, is coming to us via teleconference, and he's on the line. Can you hear me, Mr. MacLeod?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes, I can. Can you hear me?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, we can. If you want to, first of all, either swear an affirmation or, if you have a Bible there, you could do an oath with our clerk.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Affirmation.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. Our clerk will go ahead, then.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Mr. MacLeod, do you solemnly affirm that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes, I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Also, just to confirm that you received a letter giving information for a witness testifying before the committee?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes, I did.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Go ahead with your opening statement, then, Mr. MacLeod.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Good morning from Edmonton, Mr. Chair and committee members. My name is Hugh MacLeod. I have a very brief opening statement. First, I'd like to lay out for you a brief overview of my Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care work experience; and secondly, provide a high-level chronology of my experience with base hospital air operations, Dr. Chris Mazza and the emergency health services branch.

First, turning to my Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care work experience, in the fall of 2002, I was headhunted from my position as senior vice-president, Vancouver Coastal Health. In December 2002, I signed an employment offer with the Ontario Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care as assistant deputy minister, acute care services, and within that, responsibility included base hospital air ambulance operations.

In February 2003, I commenced employment as ADM for acute care services. For the period in 2003 to July 2003, I managed a SARS command centre for care coordination and transfer. For the period of August 2003 to 2004, I performed the full role of the ADM, acute care services division, that I was recruited to. In July 2004, I moved from the ADM acute care services file to set up the health results team. The team was responsible for reducing wait times for cancer, cardiac, cataract, hip, knee, MRI and CT; creating the 150 family health teams and the LHIN structure. In July 2004, I began the transitioning of my ADM portfolio, including base hospital air ambulance operations, to another ADM, and began recruitment for the health results team. In December 2004, a formal announcement was made that I was appointed the associate deputy minister and executive lead of the Premier's health results team, and with that announcement included the names of the health results team leads.

In mid-2007, there was a reorganization of the ministry, with a new organizational structure. The deputy at the time gave me the position of assistant deputy minister responsible for the wait times file; the family health teams; the LHINs; provincial programs like cancer, Cardiac Care Network, renal dialysis and diabetes; and the OMA file. I left the ministry in March 2008.

With respect to my history with base hospital operations, for context, the period would be February 2003 to September 2004. In February to March 2003, there were a number of briefings by the Ministry of Health's emergency health services branch, including Dr. Chris Mazza, with regard to air ambulance.

Key messages from that briefing:

The associate minister, Dan Newman, and his chief of staff were strong proponents, and work was already under way on a conceptual design, a redesign of air ambulance services. This was due in part to a number of studies, coroners' cases and recent audits that identified gaps between dispatch and service delivery.

In and around April and May 2003, we are now in the thick of SARS. I retain the service of the late Dr. Bill Sibbald, then physician-in-chief at Sunnybrook hospital, to assist me in managing ICU surge capacity and critical care issues due to SARS. I had many conversations with Dr. Sibbald about gaps in critical care, lack of integration, disconnects of critical care transitions and disconnects between dispatch and base hospital. Needless to say, SARS put a spotlight on care disconnects and problems with transitions of care.

Some time in spring 2003, Dr. Sibbald set up a meeting with myself and Dr. Mazza to discuss the current state of affairs. Dr. Mazza once again shared information about previous studies, coroner's cases, consulting studies and recent audits, all recommending changes to the structure of the air program. Dr. Mazza also highlighted the support from the associate minister, Dan Newman, and his staff with regard to a reorganization of the program using the Alberta STARS program as a demonstration but making it the Ontario model. The concept was a non-profit. The concept was to do it within the existing budget allocation.

At the same time, as a result of what we learned with SARS, there was also interest in having Mr. Mazza begin to look at an EMAT, which was an emergency medical assessment team, including the building of a mobile 20-bed unit that could be dispatched in the province in the event of an urgent requirement. Conversations also took place at this time with a number of ministry staff, including Malcolm Bates and staff from the minister's office, to confirm again interest in moving to a new model post-SARS. The direction was clear: We were to move with all dispatch to create a new Ontario model, and Dr. Chris Mazza would lead the assessment of how this would be accomplished.

I seem to recall also around June or July 2003, a very strong letter that came in from the land ambulance steering committee, which had representation from a number of municipalities, that again shared some significant gaps in care delivery and a lack of action on behalf of the government.

On September 4, 2003, Mr. Bates tabled a document which summarized a meeting called by me to address the air ambulance issue.

In October 2003, there was a new government and a new minister, and activity on the air ambulance initiative slowed and then stopped. The focus of our briefings were briefings with the new minister and his staff, preparing for the 2004 budget and preparing and looking at ways to reduce wait times and create the 150 family health teams.

I was also aware that, during this period, Mr. Mazza had met minister's staff to highlight the previous 2002-03 work with regard to air ambulance.

In July 2004, Dr. Mazza and I met with the minister to discuss the history of the air ambulance. In that conversation, a review took place of the 2002-03 activity and the need to create an Ontario model, again, incorporating the best practices of the Alberta STARS program. Dr. Mazza, in that conversation with myself and the minister, was very clear that the integration of services could be done with little new cost to the system.

Following that meeting, an email was sent to Malcolm Bates capturing the spirit of that meeting and, again, that Dr. Mazza was to take the lead in the file to develop a slide deck for the minister. In addition, a request was made for a detailed breakdown of all expenditures to ensure to "get the biggest buy-in for the dollars we have."

There were a number of correspondences that Malcolm Bates tabled on July 30, again, confirming the need for a full breakdown, a clear understanding of what monies could be applied and my asking for complete disclosure.

I left the file again and transferred the full transition to the new ADM in September 2004. I was made aware in March 2005 that a formal announcement from the new ADM to all ADMs regarding the appointment of Chris Mazza—that he had been retained as the strategic adviser on a secondment, and attached to the March 2005 letter was an outline of the work that Mr. Mazza was to perform as special adviser. Hopefully that context will assist. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for that opening statement. We'll move first to the NDP for questions. Ms. Gélinas?

M^{me} France Gélinas: From the personal relationship that you've had and the opportunity to work, we'll start with Dr. Mazza, did anything ever lead you to believe that we would end up where we ended up?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It came as a complete surprise?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: It came as a surprise given that it was very clear from the get-go this was to be a public sector, not-for-profit organization and to provide a much better integrated delivery system that was recommended in a series of reports. That had always been the intent going in.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. So you just said that in 2005, the ADM responsible for the emergency services branch announced that Dr. Mazza had been retained as a—and the word didn't come through.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: On a seconded arrangement, as a strategic adviser.

M^{me} France Gélinas: As a what?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Strategic adviser.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Strategic adviser. Thank you; there's a little bit of noise in here. So he was retained and he worked for the Ministry of Health from March 2005 as a strategic adviser to set up what would be our air ambulance service?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: That is my understanding, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Any idea how long this secondment lasted?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I don't really know because, again, in September 2004 my focus was wait times, family health teams and the LHIN structure, so I don't recall how long the secondment period lasted.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, but we all know that he ended up taking the job of CEO at Ornge.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: We know that; yes, we do.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I will ask you to take a minute and kind of look back—I take it you know the mess that the Auditor General has uncovered at Ornge?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I have not read the Auditor General's report, but in preparing for this hearing I did scan a number of the transcripts so I have a general feel, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Just to highlight some of it, the Auditor General basically found a number of things that were not in keeping with the original idea of having an integrated air ambulance system, some of it being the creation of a series of for-profit entities; 40 of Ornge's staff were paid by the for-profit entities—because it was for-profit, their salary was not disclosed; we find out that Dr. Mazza ends up with a $1.4-million salary; yesterday we had a human resources person here who also brought in over $1 million in salary; personal loans were done; questionable deals regarding the purchase of a building by a for-profit that is then lent back to Ornge for a higher amount of money—we're talking millions of dollars more—etc.

In all of your dealings with everybody that was trying to put this integrated air ambulance system together, looking back, you never saw any red flags; you never saw any inkling that those people had more motives than they let us know?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No. Again, looking at Malcolm Bates's testimony and a couple of documents that he tabled—I'm looking now at the September 4 document that speaks to a meeting that I called, and the number one item reads, "Want to create"—and in bold print—"a public sector, not-for-profit organization modeled on the Alberta STARS program." Where this got to was quite a departure from where this started.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Was there ever any discussion about having some for-profit company attached to Ornge to leverage some of the knowledge and skills that we were to develop? Was it something that was ever thought of?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: The only area, in my time on the file, that came remotely close to that was the Alberta STARS program. Again, that was the selling feature, I understand, in 2002, to the associate minister at the time. It was also the selling feature when Dr. Mazza and I met with Minister Smitherman in 2004. The Alberta STARS program had a feature that they could raise, through a foundation, sort of charitable donations. So that would be, from my recollection, the only area where—if you want to call that "private" and "revenue generation," that was the only area that was discussed.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The auditor wanted to add something to the discussion.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sure.

Mr. Jim McCarter: It's the auditor here, Mr. MacLeod. I just thought I'd mention—you were asking about the dates of the secondment of Mr. Mazza to the ministry. There was a one-year secondment from April 2005 to March 2006, with a one-year renewal. I'm not sure whether the renewal was exercised or not.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Okay.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. All right. Because you had put it March–April, close enough—from 2005 to 2006—

Mr. Jim McCarter: With a one-year renewal option.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Because we have testimony from Malcolm Bates that says that in 2003, you had directed Mr. Bates and others within the emergency health services branch to provide every assistance to Dr. Mazza, basically as he needed. Do you agree with Mr. Bates's characterizations that Dr. Mazza was already controlling Ornge at the time?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I think that's taking some liberties, because if I look at the correspondence that he tabled, it does not say that. It's pretty specific. Again, if I'm looking at the September 4 capturing of the minutes of the meeting that I called, and then the follow-up meeting on September 8—Malcolm Bates was not even there—and then the October 8 meeting, it all points to a public sector, non-profit organization incorporating the best practices of the Alberta STARS program. The Alberta STARS program did not have all the private models that eventually became part of Ornge. It was to identify an action plan and bring forward, with that action plan, the necessary legal framework and, I guess, eventually the performance agreement, the sequential investments that were required and the timeline for moving the project further. I think a characterization that, at that time, Ornge as we now know it was on the radar screen, I would disagree with.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Fair enough. When would you say that Ornge came on to the radar screen?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: That I don't know because I was no longer on the file.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know Mr. Alfred Apps?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No, I don't.

M^{me} France Gélinas: He was the lawyer who designed the corporate structure for Ornge. You've never met him?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No, I have not.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And you've never had any dealings?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. How would you characterize the Ministry of Health's relationship to the air ambulance while you were there; as in, was this an important project? How did it fare regarding other duties that were going on at the time?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: It was an important project from my understanding from the briefings in 2003. It was an important project of the ministry and the minister's office in 2002. It elevated its importance, I think, in 2003 because of all of the disconnects that were discovered through SARS. So there was some urgency post-SARS to move with, if you will, the 2002-03 plan to develop an integrated air ambulance program. In part, again, what fuelled that were all the audits, the consultant reports etc. That direction was given to Malcolm and his staff in September 2003 to move forward, and work began in September and October. As I said in my opening, it then slowed down as a result of the new government, which was now focused on briefings of the minister and the minister's staff, getting ready for the 2004 budget, but also looking at what they had on their program, particularly wait times and family health teams.

There wasn't really much activity in terms of advancing the new design of the air ambulance service in 2004 until, if my memory serves me correctly, the summer of 2004.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Mr. MacLeod, this is Jagmeet Singh, MPP. I'm going to be asking you some questions now, sir.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes. Can you hear me okay?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I can hear you totally fine. I think everyone else can as well. I'm seeing some heads being nodded.

Sir, I'm just going to ask you some questions in general with respect to the ministry's role at Ornge and in general with respect to any transfer agency. Would you agree with me that one of the primary roles of the ministry would be to oversee or to provide oversight of organizations to which it provides funding, particularly transfer agencies?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I would agree. In my time with the ministry, it was a wonderful experience because it was my first time within government. I had spent all my career up to that point in time on the operational side, and I got to see the level of sophistication, the loyalty of what's deemed to be the bureaucracy. I think they took that as a very important part of their job, to ensure oversight. Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you very much for that, sir. You'd agree with me that transfer agencies sometimes will work in perfect coordination with the ministry and do everything to the standards and maybe above and beyond the standards, but there will also be times when transfer agencies may fall short of that. Do you agree with that statement?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: It's an interesting word: "perfect" coordination. I haven't seen that yet, but yes; in spirit, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Agencies will have different CEOs or different boards of directors. That may change from time to time, but there is one constant: The government remains the primary source of oversight.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: They remain the primary source of oversight, but within the system, there is an understanding that boards will keep to and maintain their fiduciary responsibility, which they all have, and that CEOs will operate in accordance too, and that we shouldn't have bad behaviour.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Right. And in the odd chance that you do have a CEO or a board that doesn't follow the vision or the mandate, it would be the ministry's responsibility to ensure that that doesn't happen, or that, if it does happen, it stops.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: The ministry has a number of, if you will, vehicles at their disposal to become involved.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay, let's talk about that. With respect to Ornge, one of the initial propositions was that it would be a public entity, a not-for-profit that would provide a service for Ontarians. Is that correct?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: As I said earlier, when I was on the file, it was to be a public sector not-for-profit organization. That is correct.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Would you agree with me, then, that the corporate structure of Ornge would be of vital importance, to ensure that it maintained that initial mandate?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Well, corporate structure would dictate how decisions are made; the pecking order, if you will, the hierarchy, and who makes the decisions.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sorry, just to be more specific: Any proposed change to the corporate structure; for example, integrating or including for-profit entities, including other mechanisms of revenue or other mechanisms of governance—the ministry ought to have had a keen eye on any changes to the corporate structure that may suggest anything but the public model. Do you agree with that statement?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I'm struggling a bit because I'd have to look at the context before I would make that assessment.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure. I can provide some more clarity, if you'd like.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Again, I came as the ADM of acute care services, so I was well aware that a number of our large, for an example, academic teaching centres did have—and it's part of innovation—opportunities to bring forward new revenue, but always being in compliance, and never to take any money from the public sector part of the funding to feed those initiatives. If they created a corporate structure within the organization to advance that work, I don't think that in and of itself would trigger somebody in the ministries to say, "Well, we'd better get involved." So it's got to be within a context, if you know what I mean?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That makes sense. If you were presented, however, with a corporate structure that suggested a unison between a public side and a for-profit private side—the corporate structure itself, if it was presented to you, as an ADM, or presented to the ministry, it would be of importance to assess it, to ensure that—one of the most important things would be to ensure that the public side wasn't transferring money to the private side.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I guess the short answer is, I'd want to be assured that there was no transfer of public funds. That is correct.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two and a half minutes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. It has come to our attention that there was an audit that was conducted of Ornge and the results of it were presented in July 2010. The audit was conducted earlier, 2008-09. Are you aware of the MNP audit that was conducted?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No, I have no familiarity with that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. I'm reading from the MNP recommendations. They indicate that their number one recommendation—and I'm not sure the numbers have anything to do with priority. The first recommendation was that, "The organization must discuss and document" the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care's "concerns regarding Ornge's corporate structure and enter into agreed-upon revisions to their contractual relationship, if any, that are required to give the" Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care "more comfort regarding Ornge's corporate structure and its impact on the delivery of air ambulance services in the province of Ontario."

That was a recommendation, and the ministry's response, written here in the report, was, "The ministry will consider this recommendation with input from the ministry's legal services branch." Were you able to hear all that?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes, I was.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you agree with me that this constitutes a very clear red flag—in your mind; tell me your opinion—that the auditors have flagged an issue, that the ministry is concerned about the corporate structure and that the ministry should proceed to evaluate exactly what's going on and ensure that there are no concerns, to address their comfort? Do you agree that this is a very clear red flag about the corporate structure?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: You've got me at a disadvantage because I'd like to see the full report before making that assessment.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's fair.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: But it's safe to say I would assume that whoever looked at, reviewed, that report made a decision based on what was in the report. Again, it would be difficult for me to make an opinion on just what you gave me.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. But in general, you would agree that, though innovation is encouraged, and innovation is important, it's essential that the ministry oversee to ensure that the way these corporate structures are created prevents public money from being transferred to the private side?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes. On that, I think it's clear that that is not to happen. The reason why I was hesitating on your question is because in life, if you want someone to be innovative, with innovation comes a risk. I would not be suggesting that you micromanage to the nth degree and, therefore, halt all innovation.

However, on the point that you just last made, it is very important to ensure, again, no transfer of public funds to private endeavour.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you very much, my friend.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the government side. Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: My name is David Zimmer.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Good day.

Mr. David Zimmer: I have questions in three areas: One is the early birth or genesis of the concept of Ornge, then I'll have some questions about the use of consultants in the early stages of the birth of Ornge, and then I have some questions about Dr. Mazza's management style.

Let me start first with my questions about the genesis or birth of the Ornge concept. I'm going to read to you an excerpt from Hansard at a previous hearing of this committee. It involves a series of questions and answers from Mr. Klees, a member of this committee, to Mr. Malcolm Bates.

From Mr. Klees to Mr. Bates: "Why do you believe that Mr. MacLeod made the decision to essentially take your authority away and hand it to Dr. Mazza?"

Answer from Malcolm Bates: "I believe he was given direction, but I'm not sure. In the information we have, it was direction from—well, I will tell you, back in 2003, first-hand, I know that direction was given by the minister's office in 2003 that this particular transfer from the ministry to a not-for-profit organization was to be accomplished and accomplished quickly. There is evidence of that as well. In 2004, it carried on in the same vein that this would be accomplished. It was not whether, according to Mr. MacLeod, it was how soon."

Question from Mr. Klees: "Did you ever get any indication as to where Mr. MacLeod's directive came from?"

Answer, Malcolm Bates: "As I said, in 2003 it was relatively clear to me because I met with Michael Mjanes, who was chief of staff to the associate minister, Dan Newman. At that particular point, Mr. Mjanes was very clear with us that the proponents of this particular service change wanted it done and wanted it done quickly, and the minister"—that is, Minister Clement—"supported that."

1100

You also said in your opening statement—and I think I've got it correctly; if I don't, just correct me. You stated that Dr. Mazza claimed support—that is, for this Ornge concept—from Associate Minister Newman and Minister Clement. You went on to say that it was clear to you, from Associate Minister Newman and Minister Clement, that MacLeod was told to move with great dispatch and that Mazza would be in charge.

What prompted you to come to that opinion that Associate Minister Newman's chief of staff and Minister Clement were pushing this Ornge concept to the extent that they were, and why it seemed so urgent to them that the leadership for the concept be turned over to Mazza?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Just for clarity: not the leadership but the lead for the development of a potential plan.

On your first question of why, as I mentioned in my opening, in the briefings that I had in that period—February to March 2003—it was very clear to me that there had been a number of conversations that had taken place in 2002, again, in a follow-up to the audits, the consulting reports etc. and the need for a transformation of air ambulance service.

I think what elevated the importance of moving forward was SARS. SARS put a huge spotlight on just how fragile the system was, and the disconnects. There were a number of conversations that took place during that period. There was also post-SARS. There was the David Walker expert panel, which is now beginning to look at what lessons could be learned from SARS. There was the Justice Campbell commission on SARS.

I think all of that together fuelled the desire to move quickly to begin the design of a new air ambulance service, and given Dr. Mazza's involvement way back into 2002 and going forward, he was the logical choice, in the comfort of, at that time, the minister's office, to take the lead on the design of what that new design would look like.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did it surprise you or concern you that this rather dramatic change of moving air ambulance from its traditional home in the professional Ontario civil service to a private entity, albeit not-for-profit, under the lead of a non-civil servant—did that surprise you or cause any concern or second thoughts?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: At that point in time, none of that was on the table. The initial work was, again, to scope out the how, what it would look like and what all the potential issues were. Again, in the meeting I called in September 2003, it was all about [inaudible] a clear series of questions and answers to potential issues that may be asked by the deputy minister. So the lead for Mr. Mazza, because of his familiarity with "the program," was to design and deliver a plan, and that plan did not, at that point in time, include what we now know of as Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: Is it your view, then, that at that time there was no sense that the civil service was being reduced to a secondary role in the development of this plan?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No. In fact, I think the minutes clearly state that what Malcolm Bates tabled September 8, in the October 8 minutes—which was the first time I'd seen them, because I was not part of those discussions—clearly sets out a pretty onerous set of responsibilities of the ministry in working with Dr. Mazza to develop the plan.

Mr. David Zimmer: There has been some suggestion from some of the witnesses heard previously here that some of the impetus to drive the Ornge concept emanated from the so-called Red Tape Commission, which was on a mission to reduce bureaucracy. Do you have any sense that that played a role in the shift to Ornge from the civil service?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I can't speak to that. The thought was, again, in the briefings that took place in 2003, and as anchored by the audits, the reviews etc., that by bringing all the pieces together in an integrated fashion, one of the outcomes should be the reduction of bureaucracy and levels and, if you want to call it that, red tape. But that wasn't the primary motivation. The motivation was to build a model built on a very successful model in Alberta called the STARS program, which was truly an integrated air ambulance delivery system.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you have any sense that, once the associate deputy minister's chief of staff, Mr. Mjanes, got involved in this and it was communicated quite clearly that both the associate minister, the minister and, indeed, the government of the day supported this and particularly supported Dr. Mazza's involvement in this—did you have any sense that Dr. Mazza had any back-channel relationship with the minister's office or the offices of the government of the day?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No more than any other individual in the health care system. No.

Mr. David Zimmer: What do you mean “no more than any other individual?”

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Well, many times, CEOs of organizations would have conversations with the ministry and also with the minister's office—so no more than others.

Mr. David Zimmer: Let me ask you a question about the use of consultants in these early stages. It has come out at this hearing that a Toronto law firm, Fasken and Calvin, has been spotlighted for billing something in the order of $7 million to $9 million as external counsel for Ornge in the process of setting it up and restructuring it and so on. We know that Fasken's got involved in the very early stages of the development of the Ornge concept.

From the documents we've received, the arrangement went something like this: The Minister of Health at the time, Mr. Clement, was obviously interested in pursuing an overhaul of the air ambulance. His choice of lead on that was Dr. Mazza. Dr. Mazza, at the time, was employed by Sunnybrook, which housed the air ambulance program. Mazza was provided with a team of very senior lawyers and consultants, many of them Conservatives, who were situated at Fasken's to support him. They were hired via Sunnybrook. Those individuals were Lynne Golding, Minister Clement's wife; Guy Giorno, a former Harris chief of staff; and Kevin McCarthy, who is currently Minister Flaherty's chief of staff. Those folks worked with Mazza to lobby the minister of the day and other government representatives to work on the setting up of Ornge. In effect, instead of having the bureaucracy completing the job, they gave it to Mazza and those consultants, who got paid through a hospital budget to in fact lobby the government to do things for which the government had already said it wanted to do. Were you aware of those arrangements or that stuff that was going on?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you think that type of an arrangement is appropriate in the public administration?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I can't comment because you're bringing something new to me, and I'd have to see the full context.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you think that's an effective use of taxpayers' dollars?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: To do what? I don't understand the question.

Mr. David Zimmer: Paying those kinds of consultants to lobby the government to take an approach to setting up Air Ornge for which the government has already committed itself.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Well then I think you've answered the question. If they had already committed themselves, I don't know why you'd do the work.

Mr. David Zimmer: I'm sorry, I didn't hear your answer.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: You just said they had already committed themselves to doing it. So I'm assuming they had already committed themselves to do it because they believed it was a good plan in the first place.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: That's what I'm assuming. Again, I wasn't there until 2003, so I don't have knowledge of what transpired prior to my arrival in February 2003.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you first meet Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: As I said in my opening, some time between February and March 2003. It was part of the usual, as the new ADM from the province of British Columbia. There was a series of briefings, including briefings from Malcolm Bates and the crew in the emergency health services branch and Dr. Mazza about land ambulance, air ambulance, base hospitals etc. In that time frame was the first time I met him.

Mr. David Zimmer: And what was your impression of Dr. Mazza? Some people have described him as a charismatic visionary; other people have described him in other terms. What was your impression?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: My first impression was, very bright, very charismatic, good on his feet and able to articulate a vision and a concept extremely well.

Mr. David Zimmer: When did you last have dealings with Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: On this file, it would have been, I would guess September 2004. I did have further dealings with him, and I believe this would have been around 2005 or 2006. Now I'm on the wait times file, and I think it was around the summer of 2005. We had commissioned a piece of work, an expert panel on critical care. The critical care report came down, I think, in spring or summer 2005. In that report, which was authored by about 65 physician leaders in the province, Dr. Mazza had a role in what we refer to as "surge capacity" in critical care. We had a conversation at that time about what were some options to build surge capacity in the event that we had another outbreak like SARS. But it was nothing really to do with the air ambulance; it was to deal with critical care.

Mr. David Zimmer: So over your couple of years of working with or knowing Dr. Mazza, did your impression or view of his management style or his vision or the way he executed his vision—did it in any way change?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Well, at that point in time while I was on the file, there was no execution of the vision. These were early days of planning for the redesign of the air ambulance system. In that regard, I was quite impressed, as others were in 2002 and 2003, about his vision for what the air ambulance system could look like: again—he was very clear in all the briefings—modelled after the best practices of the Alberta STARS program and that it would be a public sector, not-for-profit organization. So on that, yes, I agreed, and I thought his vision of what this could be was sound. But at that point in time, there was no execution. This was still early days of planning. So I couldn't comment on his execution.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you, Chair.

So fast-forward now to 2012. Looking back over the last six or seven years, keeping in mind your skills and experiences as a health care administrator, and knowing what you know now of where the Ornge concept ended up, where do you think and how do you think it came off the rails?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I guess that's the million-dollar question, or maybe it's bigger than a million-dollar question—

Mr. David Zimmer: I'd be very interested in your answer.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: —that you're all grappling with.

I guess on a very high level, something went wrong, from what I think was the vision of what could be a very good and integrated air ambulance delivery system, on the execution side. I can't answer the question, "What happened?" On the execution side, something happened.

Again, by looking at the transcripts that I quickly went over, there appeared to be a shift—maybe a distraction—from what was initially to be a public sector organization in the management of public sector funds to some distraction in the creation of a number of private sector entities. Maybe in all of that distraction, something happened in the execution. That's just my hypothetical, based on what I observed.

But again, I think when you have two governments, multiple ministries, countless reports that say, "It's time for a redesign; build on the principles of the STARS program," and everybody bought in—it wasn't the plan that was at fault here; something happened in the execution.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Good day, Mr. MacLeod.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Good day.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to just pick up where you left off in your discussion with Mr. Zimmer as to how we move from a vision to a nightmare, which is what I think we ended up with here.

I think we all agree that the initial concept had a good direction. We needed coordination; we needed to introduce efficiency into the program. The fact that two governments saw the wisdom in that certainly seems to at least endorse the direction. What I would like to do is just identify a couple of the components of that so-called vision.

I had the discussion with Mr. Bates as well as with a number of others over the last few weeks on this very issue. The question that I put to them I'm going to put to you as well, just to see if we have some consistency in what that initial understanding was. That is this: Was that original concept that was incorporated into that cabinet submission, the MB-20, and incorporated into the performance agreement—did that at any time include the concept of bringing in-house the ownership of aircraft: helicopters, fixed-wing aircraft, assuming responsibility for the maintenance and overseeing an entire carrier industry?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I really can't answer that because that happened—and I'm not trying to duck it. I was not involved in those conversations. What I can say to you is, those questions that you are asking were not part of the deliberations that I was involved in, leading up to the building of the plan. Those conversations that you just put to me were not part of the 2003-04 conversations.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, and that was really my question. Was it part of the plan? Because everything that we've seen and what we've heard from other witnesses is that that was never a part. We've looked at the cabinet submissions. We read the original performance agreement. Nowhere is there any reference to this concept of purchasing helicopters, bringing the ownership of those assets into what ended up being Ornge. What you're saying to me is that you would concur with that, that that was not contemplated in the original concept that you were familiar with and that Chris Mazza discussed with you. Is that correct?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: That is correct. In fact, I think that's confirmed by one of the documents that Malcolm Bates tabled. I'm looking at an October 8, 2003, planning meeting, which is the follow-up to the meeting that I asked for on September 4, 2003, and it begins to lay out the work for the ministry and particularly the emergency health services branch. Nowhere in this six-page document is it surfaced, what you've just put on the table.

Mr. Frank Klees: We—I shouldn't use the term "we," but there are many who have come forward, and I tend to agree with those witnesses who have come forward who have expressed their opinion that Ornge did not have, does not have the core competency to take on that massive responsibility of owning and operating a fleet of aircraft; that that is something that is highly specialized and should be left with organizations that have the expertise, have the history and have the competency in place to manage that. Would that be a logical conclusion that you would draw?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Well, I'd have to see—the diligence of the ministry, what they usually do, is seek out that advice and then put whatever that advice is in front of the ADM or the deputy or the minister. So I would want to see all of that and then, based on the good counsel from the ministry, make a decision. But I haven't been privy to that.

Again, going back to how this started, it was pretty clear that this was not on, if you will, the initial drawing board in 2003-04.

Mr. Frank Klees: At the point of time that a policy decision was made within Ornge—because there's no record anywhere of a decision coming to cabinet that specifically authorizes Ornge to get into that business. So what we have, so far at least, is an organization that was granted a mandate, a very responsible one, that then took it upon itself to expand that exponentially and incur, in order to get into that business, a debt of some $300 million through a public bond offering, and nowhere on record is there any authorization from the government, formally, to Ornge to get into that business. How does that happen, in your opinion?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I can't answer that. I think that's probably what the purpose of this committee is: trying to uncover how decisions were made; when they were made; who was involved. I don't even know what period of time those conversations took place, so it would be very difficult for me to answer that.

I think, though, there's an important piece of context that is missing here. I know a lot has been made of my email to Malcolm Bates on July 12 where it's characterized as putting him completely in charge. That was not the case. If you read the email, it says "to take the lead on this file and prepare the necessary slide deck for the minister to take forward." That was to convince the minister of the day that all of that information—2002-03—is still relevant today. It's important.

But the last piece is even the most important piece: "a detailed breakdown of 'all fiscal expenditures'"—and these are my words—"the minister ... wants to be convinced that we have tactically set in direction how we are going to get the biggest bang for the dollars we have." This goes back, again, to the earlier conversations in 2002, 2003 and 2004 with Minister Smitherman. It was very clear that the original plan could be done within the existing funding envelope, with maybe a tweak here and there. If my memory serves me correctly, at that point in time the funding envelope was in the range of $90 million. This was about using existing dollars wisely in the design of a new system. I think that's just important context.

Again, I can't speak to what happened. How did it move from—I'm not saying, a relatively simple plan. But how did it move from a concrete plan—again, modeled after the STARS program in Alberta, which is not a private sector the way Ornge got to be. What happened in the execution of that? I can't answer that.

Mr. Frank Klees: I guess we have our work cut out for us, trying to figure that out, because we're not getting a whole lot of co-operation from very many people.

One aspect of this, however, is the whole issue of oversight. One would expect that if a particular plan is to be executed, then we need someone to focus the organization, whether it's Ornge or any other transfer agency or organization of the government, in order to prevent it from going rogue, as this organization has been described by the minister. In order to prevent that from happening, we need in place the appropriate accountability measures and appropriate oversight mechanisms, and someone has to be appointed within the Ministry of Health, in this case, to play that role. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Well, I would agree that—again, as I said earlier, in my time within the ministry, coming from the outside, from the operations side, you have a jaundiced view of how the ministries operate and the level of competency etc., but you get inside and you really begin to realize these are loyal public servants, these are dedicated professionals who come to work every day to ensure the protection of the public funds, the adherence to legislation and regulation etc. So I think, in the main, they do pay attention.

I guess the challenge that you have is trying to figure out what happened here. Was it a rogue organization that just kept information private and didn't share the information with the ministry, and therefore it's all to them? Or were there some earlier signals that people didn't pay attention to?

The ministry does have a series of vehicles at their disposal when they identify, as you say, red flags. They have a number of vehicles that they can become involved. Even on my time on the file and on acute care services, there were times that there were enough red flags that were raised, and proactive action was taken by the ministry, by the minister's office to address those red flags. So the mechanisms are there.

Mr. Frank Klees: You've confirmed what we heard from Mr. Sapsford, who testified earlier. He indicated that there are really four mechanisms available to a minister to intervene, if need be. Three of them are prescriptive, in terms of legislation, regulation and agreements. The final one is the moral suasion that a minister has because he or she is a minister, and that overrides the first three—knowing that the minister has ultimate responsibility for administration and oversight. It seems that that fourth mechanism was overlooked, unfortunately, in this case.

There's another aspect of this, Mr. MacLeod, that I'd like to follow up with you on. I'm going to go back to Mr. Bates, who, I think, did not interpret your email as passively as you're suggesting it perhaps was intended. It was very clear from Mr. Bates's testimony that he took from this email, as well as from a number of others that he tabled with us, that this was really a very clear direction to him to stand down. Along with that standing down was also what he referred to in his testimony as a disbanding of the emergency health services branch unit that had oversight responsibility for air ambulance.

As a result of that, the message to us was that, notwithstanding the stated mandate of the emergency health services branch to oversee and to hold accountable this organization, they neither had the authority—which, according to Mr. Bates, was undermined by your direction. How do you respond to that?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I tried to get a hold of Malcolm prior to my giving evidence—he's on vacation—because I didn't want to surprise him about what I was about to say. We're asking ourselves to go back in time—2004, so that is eight years ago—but what Malcolm didn't produce in the evidence is that before I sent him that email, I sent him the draft of the email, and I said to Malcolm, "I'm going to send you an email. Tell me if it's okay"—and I don't want to capture all of what happened in 2002-03, but the essence of the email is no different than the direction that was given by the previous government in 2003—"Tell me if you're okay with sending the email." And so, he gave the okay; I sent the email. So I'm just trying to clarify for you and for Malcolm the intent.

Perhaps what happened here—and I'm just guessing. As I went through his testimony, it was quite obvious to me, because on a couple of points—I think you asked the question, "How often did you have contact with Mr. Bates?", and Malcolm talked about how every time he had conversations with him it was a tirade and Dr. Mazza was dictating to him. So perhaps what started—I'm just surmising here; again, I have not had an opportunity to talk to Malcolm. I'm not going to say it was passive, because there was a direction, but it was basically the same direction that was given in September 2003. Maybe as a result of the relationship that now emerged, Malcolm began to interpret it to have more direction than was intended originally.

Mr. Frank Klees: Speaking of relationships, can I ask, over the course of time, as you saw this Ornge organization emerging, what was your assessment? Because now you started to see Chris Mazza up close and personal. You must have had a very close eye on this, because this was a new experiment. There was a lot at risk. It was an important part of health services. Over time, did you get more comfortable with Chris Mazza as the CEO, and did your confidence grow? Or did you start to question whether Mr. Mazza was on the right track or whether he was the right person for this job?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I don't think it changed. It didn't change. When you say, "paying attention to the file," yes, I was paying attention to the file up until 2008 when I left the ministry, and at that point in time, if my memory serves me correctly, there wasn't a lot of [inaudible] Ornge ended up to be, so there was no reason for me to become alarmed. I only became alarmed later when I began hearing about what was in the Toronto Star and where the organization evolved to.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there ever any discussion about this organization between yourself and anyone in the Premier's office?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: You made reference to a meeting that you had with the minister and Mr. Mazza.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there anyone else in attendance at that meeting?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I believe Ken Chan was there, a policy adviser, and Dr. Mazza. During that period of time that I alluded to, late fall 2003 until spring 2004, the new government was preoccupied with briefings, the budget, the wait times file that I would eventually have and family health teams. I was made aware of the fact that Dr. Mazza had had a number of briefings with Ken Chan, the policy adviser, again, bringing him up to speed on what happened in 2002 and 2003 etc. So I do believe in that July meeting with the minister, Ken Chan was present.

Mr. Frank Klees: Are you aware of any other meetings that Mr. Mazza may have had with others in government, whether it was policy advisers in the Premier's office or the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I'm assuming he probably had a number of meetings with people at the Ministry of Health—the Premier's office, no—but I'm assuming probably a lot of meetings with Malcolm Bates and folks with emergency health services. Then post-2005, when he became seconded as special adviser, I'm assuming in that, he must have had lots of conversations with the ministry and then, no doubt, the minister's office.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there ever a time when you received specific direction from the Minister of Health or anyone in the Premier's office to get on with this plan?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No, no more than the direction that was given to me following the meeting with the minister to say, "Begin putting the slide deck together and get a document to me with all the financials." No more than that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you very much.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: You're welcome.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France G  linas: It's nice to talk to you again, Mr. MacLeod. I want to pick up a bit as to where Mr. Klees was going. That is, in one of his questions, you answered that the ministry has a series of vehicles at their disposal if they see that something is happening that seems wrong. In your experience as an ADM, could you tell me some of the vehicles that are at the disposal of an ADM if one of their transfer payment agencies is doing wrong?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Well, first of all, if you combine the legislative and the regulatory, usually that's the first place to start because that begins to give you your legal construct or your framework. You are the funder, so that carries pretty significant clout, and you have the office. In my time, it was basically three offices: You had the office of the minister, so a call from the minister; or the office of the deputy, or a call from the deputy; or the office of the ADM responsible. So there are vehicles there.

When I was ADM of the acute care services file—and as I said earlier, there were occasions where there were enough red flags that came in that would begin to show a pattern. That's hopefully what the red flags will do: When you bring them all together, it begins to show a pattern. You would then have conversations within the ministry and then with the minister's office.

On occasion, supervisors were appointed. When that happened, it wasn't just, if you will, the individual coming in as the CEO; there was also coming in as the board, because typically, when you got to that situation, there was actually a disconnect not only at the governance/fiduciary level, but at the operational level. So there are tools available.

But again, in my experience, probably the biggest tool that you had was, you are the funder and you are the ministry, so picking up the phone can get people's attention.

M^{me} France G  linas: I agree with you. From where I stand, it seems like the red flags were showing a pattern and that action should have been taken before.

Some of the red flags started with my party, with the New Democrats. We filed a freedom of access to information in March 2010 because the salary of Dr. Mazza was no longer being disclosed. Actually, why we did this was because there was some whistle-blower who had come to us to tell us, "Hey, this guy really gave himself a huge raise. You guys should look into this." So we filed a freedom of access to information. The freedom of access to information was answered on June 9, so a couple of weeks later, basically telling us that they had found 19 pieces of correspondence—I forgot the exact word—but none of them could be shared with us.

If you had a freedom of access to information asking for the salary of the CEO of a not-for-profit transfer payment agency of the Ministry of Health, do you figure you would have found out the salary?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: That's the way I feel, also.

So there were 19 records that could not be shared with us.

Then comes estimates time. I know that you've had the pleasure to sit in on estimates and you know what the process entails. Well, here again, we were in 2010 and estimates came around. I'm the health critic for my party, but my leader subbed in for me. My leader is the one who had been receiving whistle-blower information, so he subbed in for me for the Ministry of Health estimates and asked 47 questions about Ornge. We didn't talk about anything else—no primary care, no hospitals; all sorts of stuff was going on in 2010—solely about Ornge. We talked about the corporate structure. We talked about the salaries not being disclosed. We talked about some issues with quality of care. The ministry was not able to answer the questions, which is fine; they promised to give us answers. No answers were given to the estimates questions till way after the scandal had hit the front page of the paper. We were in 2012 by the time we got answers.

Would you consider this a red flag?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Again, I wasn't at estimates—I don't know if it was a pleasurable event, as you frame it; estimates was always an interesting event—but the whole purpose of estimates is to ask the questions and to ensure that there's good due diligence on the management of the public purse. My experience with estimates is, when questions are asked, they're either answered there or there's a follow-up answer. So I can't speak to why you were not provided with answers to the questions, because usually that is the purpose of estimates: to ask the questions and get answers to the questions.

M^{me} France G  linas: From where I sit—we asked those 47 questions—it seems to me like the civil servant would have gone to Ornge and, basically, asked our questions to them, to find answers, and did their work. But the result of that work was never shared. Is this the way it usually works? If I ask—

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Again, in my history with estimates, that's not the way it works.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You are out of time, so we'll move to the government.

Who in the government would like to ask questions? Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Mr. MacLeod, Liz Sandals here. I wonder if I could get some clarification around a question that Mr. Zimmer asked earlier. You were discussing meetings and who was meeting with who back in 2003. With the billings that we've seen from Fasken's, it's clear that both Mr. Giorno, who you would know from your past experience with the provincial government, and Kevin McCarthy, who was also working for Fasken's but who has now moved on to be Minister Flaherty's chief of staff—it was clear that they were meeting with various political staff in both Minister Clement and Associate Minister Newman's office. That was going on at the same time as the meetings that you've described in the spring/summer of 2003 that you were holding with Dr. Mazza and I'm presuming other people more at the bureaucratic staff level. Were you aware that those political meetings were going on simultaneously?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No. This is a long time, but if my memory serves me correctly, in that time period, 2003, it was my understanding that Mr. McCarthy—I think his first name was Mike?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Kevin.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Oh, this is Kevin. Okay.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So maybe we're talking about two different people.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Okay. Because there was, I think, a Mike McCarthy who was a policy adviser in the minister's office.

No, I was not aware—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, this is a Kevin McCarthy who was clearly working for Fasken's.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Okay. No. The answer is I was not aware.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. It just didn't sound to me in your chronology that you were aware that there was also—in fact, Mr. Giorno, and I expect Mr. McCarthy, but Mr. Giorno was actually registered as a lobbyist at the time.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes. I've never met the individual.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, but you know him as Mr. Harris's chief of staff at the time. I just wanted to check in with you on that particular piece of information.

When things started to go astray—actually, the other thing I wanted to check in with you is that Mr. Sapsford, who was here earlier this morning, testified that he had never been briefed on or asked an opinion on the whole issue of Ornge buying its own fleet of aircraft. He essentially said what you said, which was that the conversation was always about the aircraft continuing to be provided by private operators; even though it worked for Ornge to buy their own aircraft—it was started while he was still the deputy minister—that he in fact had never been briefed on it.

You talked about “Did anybody ask permission?” Clearly nobody at Ornge asked permission because the deputy minister of the day wasn't involved in a policy discussion about whether or not this was the right thing.

Is this the sort of thing that it would be useful to include in performance agreements, in legislation? As we move forward and look at transfer partners and how do we prevent this, that there actually be an explicit requirement for public sector non-profits to check in with the government in advance of taking on major capital debts?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: That's a big question. Again, you'd have to look at the full health care system and ask yourself, is this just one additional impediment barrier to managing of the system? Again, something happened here that you folks are trying to get your arms around, and I wouldn't want to put a cast on [inaudible] who abide by the rules. The rules of the day, if you will, are very transparent and have boards that understand their fiduciary responsibility.

I think the question is, what happened? Did those conversations take place in that period of time—March of, I think it was 2005, and I think the auditor said until 2006, when Dr. Mazza was seconded? What was the breadth of the conversations that took place then that led to the creation of what you now know as Ornge? I think those are important questions to ask.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: As a general policy point of view, though, what I think I heard you say—contradict me, please, if I'm wrong—is that as we move forward as a public accounts committee and look at recommendations, we need to be careful that we don't create another whole round of red tape that clamps down on the ability of public sector organizations to innovate and that we need to find some sort of a balance between accountability and oversight while still leaving public sector organizations the ability to manoeuvre in ways that benefit taxpayers and benefit citizens receiving services.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I think that's a fair assessment. I guess I've been in this business a long time, and when things go wrong, whether it's bad behaviour or whatever, everybody else shouldn't be penalized. Good governance is good governance. It's governance that understands their fiduciary responsibility and understands the separation between their role, which is ensuring that the policy frameworks that they create are being administered and followed by the CEO and, particularly in public non-profit organizations, ensuring that public dollars are used for public purposes and not for innovative private-sector purposes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Interestingly, that's the same line that Mr. Sapsford drew: ensuring that public dollars are only used for public purposes.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: Yes, well, they have to be, because again, that's why the dollars were allocated in the first place to the transfer agencies.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you very much. You've been very helpful, Mr. MacLeod.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. MacLeod, I believe you asked the question once, “Do we bury or spin bad news to avoid internal and external transparencies that could provide a compelling case for change, and suppress the truth in the organization?” Do you recall asking that question?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: I do.

Mr. Frank Klees: We may be facing that, and we may need your help to get us out of this. There's a tendency, whether it's in government or any business organization, to want to avoid the truth because there will be consequences. I think the challenge that we have in this committee and that the government has is not only to recognize what Chris Mazza and the board have done to go rogue, but if we're going to deal with this going forward, I think we also have to be very honest about what went wrong within the Ministry of Health.

The Auditor General, in his report, one of the cautions that he raised was, he made it very clear that, in his opinion, the Ministry of Health failed in its oversight responsibilities. It's one thing to say that; it's another thing to then determine where that failure of oversight took place and what it is that we have to do to address that to ensure it doesn't happen again. From someone who has been in government in a very senior role, particularly in the Ministry of Health, knowing what you know from the auditor's report—no doubt you've seen reports on these proceedings—what would you recommend we do, specifically with regard to the issue of oversight at the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: That's a million-dollar question. That's the whole purpose of why your committee was convened. I haven't had the luxury of—I don't know how many people have given evidence about history, chronology etc. But from an outsider looking in, it's obvious to me that, again, as I said earlier, something went wrong with execution both at the board level and at the C-suite level of Ornge.

I think the question is—and you talked about spin or truth—how much did they hold back? As a result of them holding back—I guess you'll determine that through your deliberations—it caused the situation you now find yourself in in Ontario. On the other side, were there some missteps in the ministry in not following up—I can't answer that. And if so, what correction can be taken?

If there's some tightening that I think, as an outsider looking in, perhaps is needed in future performance agreements that should be signed by both the board and the CEO, it would be—I guess I didn't hear all of Mr. Sapsford; I only heard the last 15 minutes—clarity in the performance agreement that no public sector funds can be used for any other purpose. I'm not suggesting that if that clarity was there and signed off on it would have avoided some of the execution issues at Ornge, but I think it would have probably gone a long way in that regard.

Mr. Frank Klees: I just have a couple of questions. Leading up to this hearing, Mr. MacLeod, have you had any discussions with anyone at the Ministry of Health here?

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: No, I have not.

Mr. Frank Klees: My final—

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: The only conversation I had was with your clerk. What I asked for is, "Give me any documentation that made reference to my name."

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Well, thank you very much.

Mr. Hugh MacLeod: You're welcome.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you, Mr. MacLeod, for taking part in the proceedings today.

We are now recessed until 1 o'clock this afternoon.

The committee recessed from 1158 to 1303.

MR. JONATHAN LEE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I call this meeting to order. I call our first presenter this afternoon: Jonathan Lee, pediatric transport paramedic. Please come on forward.

Mr. Lee, just to confirm: You received the letter for a witness coming before the committee?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I did.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Great. Our clerk has either an oath or an affirmation for you.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): The Bible is in front of you there if you want to do the oath.

Mr. Lee, do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Welcome to the committee. You can take the time to do an opening statement if you'd like, and then there will be questioning by the three parties. Go ahead.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Good morning, everybody. My name is Jonathan Lee. I have spent the majority of my 18-year paramedic career working in Ontario's air ambulance system. I started flying in 1998. I have worked in both northern and southern Ontario. I have worked on helicopters; I have worked on airplanes.

I ended my 10-year helicopter stay in Toronto approximately two years ago when I transferred to the newly formed Ted Rogers Paediatric Transport Team. It's a unit that Ornge runs out of its Markham base, and it is a team of seven that are specialized in the transport of children aged 28 days to 17 years.

Before you begin your questions, I'd like to take a moment to express to you how both flattered and surprised I am at being called before the committee. As an employee of Ornge, I obviously have a great deal of interest in the goings-on of the committee but must make it clear to you that I have been, up until this point in time, no more than a passive observer in the process.

I hope you are mindful of the fact that I did not receive any information regarding the substance of the questions that are about to be asked of me, so it was very difficult for me to prepare. Furthermore, my role at Ornge is limited to basically patient care, so I don't know how much pertinent information I will have for the goings-on of your committee.

I would like to add also that I'm here to speak for me and don't make any claims as to representing the opinions of anybody else in the organization.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Great. Thank you very much for that statement. The government will ask questions first, so I'll turn to—who am I turning to? Mr. Moridi.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you, Mr. Lee, for appearing before this committee. Before yourself, Mr. Lee, two of your colleagues on the front-line staff from Ornge appeared before this committee. Their insight was very helpful to the committee, and it was quite beneficial.

I would like to begin by asking you, how long have you been at Ornge, working at Ornge as an employee?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I've been at Ornge since it has been Ornge. I was in the air ambulance system when it was Ornge; I was in the air ambulance system when it was Ontario Air Ambulance. I worked for Canadian Helicopters, and I worked for the Ministry of Health before that.

Mr. Reza Moridi: So you practically started working at the current Ornge before it became Ornge.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I'm sorry; I've also spent 10 years in a helicopter, so I can't hear you. You've got to speak loud.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Okay. Would you explain your role at Ornge? What's your role?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Right now?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: My role right now with Ornge is strictly patient care. I'm part of a paramedic/nurse team that works in specialized critical care transport. Its role is to basically move pediatric patients from the community into a tertiary pediatric hospital. I spend the majority of my time working out of Markham in a land ambulance, bringing most of my patients down to SickKids. I am a provincial resource, though, so if there are children in need outside of the immediate area, Ornge has the ability to put me on an airplane or a helicopter and I will go up to—where did I go the other day?—Sault Ste. Marie, to bring a patient down in an airplane to other tertiary hospitals, like Ottawa or London or Hamilton.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you give us a sense of a day in the life of a pediatric transport paramedic at Ornge?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: As far as what I do, how I spend my day, it really depends on the day. It could be a day where I sit and do nothing all day. It could be a day where I come in at 10 o'clock and I work 12, 14 or 16 hours straight. It's really quite variable. It just depends on how many children are sick that day.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you tell us why you wanted to become a pediatric paramedic?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Pediatrics?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Specifically pediatrics?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It was a good opportunity to change for me when they opened the team up in Toronto. It was a new challenge. Pediatrics tend to be something that a lot of health care professionals are a little shy around. It was nice to have the opportunity to take a bit of extra training and a bit of extra time and to specialize in what is normally sort of an uncomfortable patient population for some providers.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would you tell us why Ornge was attractive to you?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Why Ornge was—

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes, as an employer. What made you become an employee of Ornge? Were there particular reasons that you could tell us?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It's a difficult question because I didn't really become an employee of Ornge; they kind of became an employer of me. I was a Ministry of Health employee. I'm a helicopter paramedic first and foremost. That's where I started. I went through a number of employers while I had the same job and the same locker, and I just sort of landed at Ornge.

Mr. Reza Moridi: So you would say that there was a kind of natural transfer from the previous employer to Ornge.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, it was, very much.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you give us an explanation, a brief idea, basically, of the culture of Ornge—the changes that took place earlier this year? Earlier this year, as you know, there were some changes made in Ornge. The culture changed. Could you explain those changes to us?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: The culture change?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Those changes you may have felt.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I can tell you what I feel, and that's about it.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: From a day-to-day operation—it's certainly a more relaxed environment when you're dealing with people in head office. They seem to be a little less on edge now. It's certainly a more open environment than it was a year ago at this time. But, how is it right now? It's certainly a warmer culture.

As for the front-line paramedics, what are things like right now? Things are just—up in the air, right now, I think is probably the easiest way to describe it. It depends on the day and it depends on who you talk to.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Did you ever interact with Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I did, yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You did. What was your impression of him?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: My interactions with Dr.—let me frame the answer to the question: I dealt with Dr. Mazza perhaps twice in the last five or six years. My dealings with him have been very limited since he became a suit-and-tie, MBA kind of guy. I had a great deal of dealings with him when I initially started in air ambulance. He was very heavily involved in the medical operations of the air ambulance in Toronto at that time. So I did countless hours of training with him, hospital time with him, so I had a very decent relationship with him that way, medically speaking.

Mr. Reza Moridi: What other front-line staff would have—their impression of Dr. Mazza? Do you have an idea?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: What—

Mr. Reza Moridi: Other front-line staff, like yourself, what would they think? Or what was their impression of Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Well, I expect that their impression would be like Mr. Wade's yesterday or like Mr. Doneff's, or anywhere in between. It really would depend on who you speak to. It's a difficult question for me to answer.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Dr. Mazza and his executive team members told the ministry and also the minister that the for-profit entities which they created would have no effect on the Ontario operations. Do you have any particular view on that statement?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I have no idea how the for-profit parts of the company would interact with the actual day-to-day operations—that's way above my pay grade.

Mr. Reza Moridi: That's basically what they said. They said it's not going to affect the Ontario operation.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I don't know what to tell you, sir.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You don't know.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: That's not me. I don't have any shares in any companies.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Have you noticed any changes in Ornge, in terms of culture and otherwise, since the new leadership was placed a few months ago?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, I do. I think—again, I've got to be careful. I certainly was very hopeful when things changed. It was a very difficult environment. I think the problem right now is there are a lot of things that need to be fixed and the things that need to be fixed are not quick fixes. I know right now I'm sort of trying to be patiently optimistic. Is that sort of a good way of putting it?

Mr. Reza Moridi: So would you say that the environment has been improved?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, certainly, it has been improved.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Good. My colleague Mr. Klees makes comments about Ornge not having the right skilled people to run and operate Ornge. He has even gone on to say, "I wouldn't want to be a patient of Ornge." Can you explain the effect of this sentiment on the front-line staff at Ornge?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: The effect of Mr. Klees's statements?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I can explain it on me.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes, you and your colleagues—the front-line staff.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Mr. Klees's statements don't mean very much to me on a day-to-day basis. I don't know what to tell you.

Mr. Frank Klees: He wants you to say something bad. That's what he wants.

Mr. Reza Moridi: No, no—just asking your feelings.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I don't know how to answer the question. I can see that Mr. Klees has been very busy. Do I blame Mr. Klees for the environment right now, the abuse that we take from the public right now? I would imagine at some point, you're all a part of the abuse that I'm taking from the public right now. Is it Mr. Klees's fault? Maybe. I don't know. Am I happy when you tell me that you don't feel safe being in my helicopter? Whatever. It's your opinion. You're entitled to it. If you want to come and see me and what I do in the back of the helicopter, you're more than welcome to, and I would suggest that that would change your opinion.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Okay. What would you recommend to help improve morale at Ornge? What can be done in the future, in your view?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I really think that we just need to get back to the business of doing what we were doing. My personal opinion is that a lot of this has become very distracting. I know that I was very optimistic when things started to change, the environment started to change. But there's a list of problems, we need to fix them, and we need to just focus on fixing them. From my perspective, that's what would make me happy. The Auditor General's report, right now, doesn't mean anything to me.

You've got stuff in front of me that needs to be fixed. Let's fix that and move on.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You may know that a number of initiatives have been introduced by the minister in the past few months. For example, a new leadership team is in place at Ornge; a new performance agreement has been signed with Ornge; also, there's proposed legislation. Do you think that Ornge is now heading in the right direction?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I think it's heading in a new direction. I couldn't tell you whether it's the right direction or not. It was the right direction when Mazza took over. It was the right direction when we were downloaded from the ministry. You guys have a new right direction every few years. It has been my practice to just kind of hold on and ride it out.

Mr. Reza Moridi: I must tell you that in the past few months, we have heard some troubling stories in this committee room about Ornge and, in particular, what the leadership of Ornge has done. I assume that you have followed this news in the media and also at the Legislature.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I followed some of the stories. I'm not sure specifically which ones you're referring to.

Mr. Reza Moridi: But generally you have been following the stories—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I have, yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: —with regard to Ornge, and the discussions in this room and also at the Legislature. As a paramedic, what are your thoughts on what has transpired at Ornge over the past number of months?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: As far as the leadership changes or as far as the troubling stories?

Mr. Reza Moridi: All of these developments.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Like I said, we're changing. We're fixing some of the problems that we had. Some of them are easily fixed and fixed right away, and some of them are still in the process of being fixed. Like I said, I'm cautiously optimistic at the moment.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Again, over the past eight, nine months, as you know, there has been very heavy media coverage on what's happening with regard to Ornge. Most of this coverage wasn't positive. How has this situation affected the morale of yourself and also your colleagues, particularly the front-line staff at Ornge?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I think it is what you make of it, right? Nobody wants to be the subject of abuse and ridicule, and there has been a fair bit of abuse and ridicule. How has it affected the morale? It's difficult. Has it affected my morale? It really just depends on the day. Is my morale happy at the end of a 14- or 15-hour shift when somebody is swearing at me and asking for their money back? No. That's not good for my morale. Again, I like what Brandon said yesterday: You do what you need to do to stay positive, and if you don't, then it takes you down to a dark place, right?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Some people have come up to me, Mr. Lee, and said, "Enough already. It's time to move forward," with regard to what we are doing in this committee. They're saying, "You know, we have heard all we are going to hear. Let's get back to what matters." Basically, they mean delivering the best emergency health service to the people of Ontario. What do you think about this kind of statement?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, I would agree with that statement. From what I see on my end, no system is perfect. You trust the people within the system—and I'm talking about the people in this part of the system, the part of the system that's doing things. We will figure out how to work the system. But what has happened in the last five or six years is, it has been constantly changing. Nobody knows from one day to the next what to expect, what the expectations are or how they can effectively use the system.

So, yes, I agree with that statement. I would very much like to get back to doing what I'm doing and doing it without having to testify in parliamentary committees. My apologies, sir; you're kind of on the bottom of my list of fun things to do.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes, Mr. Lee. In the last year and also this year, our government has taken a number of steps basically following the AG's, the Auditor General's, recommendations to fix things at Ornge. Have you noticed a difference in the organization in recent months as a result of the changes—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Oh, certainly, yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: —we've made as a government in Ornge?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Certainly, and I said that initially. The organization is certainly a lot more open than it was a year ago.

Again, the front line was fairly insulated from the senior executive on a day-to-day basis. People who are up in the head office, up at Explorer, there is a huge change in the mood with those guys. It's noticeably more relaxed up there.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Things which happen at the top level, at the highest level, at the executive level, affect the front-line people as well. As you were saying, if I'm hearing correctly, there have been significant changes in the front-line staff. In terms of your morale and organization, the work culture etc., have there been?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Again, I can speak for me.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes, your own feelings as a member of the front-line staff at Ornge.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Like I said, I am cautiously optimistic. I know that things are changing, and a lot of the things are getting better. I'm trying to be patient while the other problems are cleaned up as well. Is my morale improved? Yes, my morale has improved. I can't tell you about the others' morale.

Mr. Reza Moridi: There have also been changes to patient safety and related policies at Ornge—again, in recent months, after the changes in the leadership at the top at Ornge. Policy changes with regard to patient safety—you could elaborate on that?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I'm fairly insulated from a lot of those because I don't do a lot of helicopter work anymore, so a lot of those big changes are not me. I know they've made changes, from my patient care perspective, as far as incident reporting and what they consider to be patient care incidents that need to be reported, how they're reported and what happens to those reports. There's certainly a more sort of vested interest in that. It's no longer just a paper trail exercise if something happens.

It's to the point where I think we got an email the other day that said—there's criteria. If certain things happen in the air, I have to fill out paperwork. Obviously, if a patient dies, it's a significant incident. But there was even a blanket email I think like a month ago that said, "If things get worse in your patient"—just very generic, if it goes poorly—"please just notify your immediate manager when you're done so that they're in the loop of any adverse events that may or may not happen in transport."

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Okay, thank you very much, Mr. Lee. Thank you, Mr. Chair. That's all.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, very well. We'll move on to the opposition, then. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Welcome, Mr. Lee. You indicated in your opening statement that you were surprised to be invited here. Can you tell me who you were invited by?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Mr. Short.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can the clerk tell us who nominated Mr. Lee?

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): I thought the subcommittee got all three lists, but maybe not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, Ms. Gélinas said that she did not nominate Mr. Lee. I did not nominate Mr. Lee. So it must have been the government nomination, just to clarify.

Welcome. You heard Mr. Moridi make his comment. I just want to set something straight for the record. I have at no point in time ever said anything disparaging about front-line paramedics or front-line pilots. I have made reference to unqualified people who are working at Ornge. The information we got about unqualified people working at Ornge came from front-line paramedics and front-line pilots. A great deal of that focus was on managers who had been appointed to very important roles. As one of your colleagues testified yesterday, they would be introduced to managers who would then have the responsibility to, for example, manage a branch. They had never seen them; there was no experience on their resumé relating to air ambulance in any way, shape or form, but all of a sudden they were put into a position of management. That caused some concern on the part of the front line, who are out there relying on some management support and resource support.

I have also called into question the unqualified people who—some of whom work at the communications centre. That was brought to my attention, as well, primarily by pilots who were very concerned about incidents that they were subjected to as a result of someone in that communications centre being so unqualified that they don't even know medical terminology, can't pass on appropriate information, which causes a great deal of difficulty not only for the pilot but for the paramedics. Have you ever experienced anything like that?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It's getting better. They had a little experiment a little while ago.

Mr. Frank Klees: Tell us about that.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: You'd know better than I would the dates, but at one point they decided that our dispatch centre, which basically is divided into medical people and aviation people—so you were hired as a medical person with your medical background or as an aviation person with your aviation background, and if you were a medical person with your medical background, then you did medical things. They had a little experiment where they decided that they could make the flight people into medical people and the medical people into flight people; furthermore, if they could train flight people to be medical people, then they could train people with neither flight nor medical backgrounds to do flight or medical things. They did that for a little while, and that was less than optimal.

Mr. Frank Klees: In other words, we had unqualified people holding very important jobs, that, based on what I was told by front-line paramedics and pilots, were putting people at risk—patients, as well as pilots and paramedics.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes. It made things a little bit difficult.

Mr. Frank Klees: To clarify for Mr. Moridi, who went out of his way to attempt to misrepresent what my intention was, I'm going to read from an investigations report that all of the members of the committee have. You're familiar with these, in any event, but I think it's important that we at least put some of this on the record.

This was a confidential document that is prepared for cabinet. In one of those items, February 20, 2011, the Sudbury communications centre claimed that there was a lengthy delay—or rather, the Sudbury CACC—you're familiar with what that is—claimed that there was a lengthy delay for OCC staff to answer the phone when the CACC was trying to request emergency air ambulance response, resulting in a serious incident.

Another one: Renfrew CACC claimed that the OCC—that's a communications centre—delayed processing a modified on-scene air ambulance request. The implication of that, we all know.

I'm not going to take the rest of our time because I have other questions, but this is full of those.

I tell you, I make no apologies for bringing it to the forefront that under the Ornge administration, unqualified people were allowed to assume very responsible positions. And yes, I'm hopeful that that has stopped. But I believe one of the reasons it stopped is because we made it a point to make that public, and as a result of that, I believe that people's lives are better. I believe your life is better because it makes your life that much more efficient in terms of being able to carry out your responsibilities.

I'm interested in your unit, the pediatric transport paramedic unit. I understand that that was really initiated as a result of a donation to Ornge by the Rogers Foundation. Is that your recollection, as well?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I don't think it was initiated; we were well on our way, and then the donation came after the fact.

Mr. Frank Klees: If I recall correctly, I think it was something in the range of $200,000?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It was $250,000.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right, $250,000.

Can you help me understand—I know what your focus is. You've explained that. Do you do other calls, as well, or is it strictly—that's your specialty, but obviously you would look after other transfers and—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I try not to. There is evidence to support improved outcomes for children when they're transported by specialty teams. So, really, that's my focus. Am I capable of doing other calls? Have I done other calls? Yes. But again, that's not a matter of routine. Those are the one-offs.

Yesterday, Brandon talked about meeting up with medics from Toronto. I was one of the medics he met up with from Toronto. There happened to be three of us on the pediatric team one day, and Brandon was by himself in London. I met up with Brandon, and we went and did calls.

It's a matter of scope of practice for me. When I chose to do pediatrics, my scope of practice changed as far as adults are concerned. I have a very broad scope of practice when it comes to children, but now, if I choose to do adult stuff, my scope of practice is very narrow. It's just a by-product of specialization. Can I help do adult calls? Yes. But I am essentially a primary care paramedic when it comes to dealing with adults. Primary care paramedics are of limited value in a lot of these ICU kinds of calls. I help out where I can with that sort of stuff.

Mr. Frank Klees: You are a critical care paramedic by training. Is that right?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, that's correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to talk about that a bit with you. You're familiar with the term, obviously, "balanced level of care," BLOC, right?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: My understanding is that Ornge management has been suggesting that balanced level of care is the best way to provide care. For the benefit of the committee, can you describe what Ornge means by "balanced level of care"?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I'm making this up, so just bear with me if it's not 100% accurate, because I don't have their policy in front of me.

The gist of it is that there are three levels of care within the—pediatrics aside, because, again, I'm a small group; I'm not really a good representation of the whole. Of the other 205 paramedics, there are three levels of care: There is a primary care paramedic, an advanced care paramedic and a critical care paramedic. What that means is—to make it quite simple for you, my goal, my job, when I get in the back of a helicopter or ambulance or whatever, is to go to Sudbury General and take a patient to Newmarket. To do that, I want to take your patient and I want to maintain or improve that level of care that they're getting in the hospital, and I want to do that without robbing resources from Sudbury hospital. So, you don't have to send your nurse, you don't have to send your doctor or your respiratory therapist.

Without getting too technical—as a critical care paramedic, there are a couple of things but not a lot of things that you can dream up in your hospital that I can't manage on my own. Our critical care guys will move things like intra-aortic balloon pumps; mechanically ventilated patients—patients who can't breathe; we're breathing for them. We'll run all kinds of potent drugs to maintain blood pressure.

That's the scope of practice of a critical care paramedic. You should be able to handle whatever is thrown at you.

As an advanced care paramedic, your scope of practice is fairly limited—not fairly limited; it is limited from that of a critical care paramedic. There are a number of more invasive things, a number of more drugs—the drugs scope of practice is limited. There are actually rules about which drugs you can run, as opposed to my critical care scope of practice, where it's wide open—

Mr. Frank Klees: Can an advanced care paramedic do intubation?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, an advanced care paramedic can do intubations.

If I work as a critical care paramedic with another critical care paramedic, my scope of practice is considered critical care. If I work with an advanced care paramedic and I'm a critical care paramedic—this is their balanced level of care—it is assumed that that aircraft can still function at a critical care level, because I have a partner who can intubate—that's one of the big things—who can maintain an airway with me; it doesn't change the level of care in the aircraft.

If you move to the third level of paramedic that is within the system right now, which is a primary care paramedic, their scope of practice is—this is sort of like an entry-level paramedic position. Their scope of practice is much more limited. They cannot do intubations. The number of drugs that they can administer is very limited. A lot of the hospital/ICU kind of interventions, they can't perform.

If I am working as a critical care paramedic with a primary care paramedic, that now affects the level of care of my aircraft. I can't function to my full scope of practice. It limits my scope of practice. So those are the level-of-care issues.

Mr. Frank Klees: And I understand that it's a policy of Ornge, where—at one time, the units were considered critical care units, because there had to be two critical care paramedics on board to respond to a high-level emergency. That's what I understand.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It's been a long time since it's been that. It was that with the ministry; I think, during Canadian Helicopters.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, it was.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: That's when they said it was okay to staff AC/PC/CP.

Mr. Frank Klees: When Ornge became Ornge?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Before Ornge; when it was Canadian—when it got downloaded. That's when the AC/PC/CP thing started, during Canadian Helicopters.

Mr. Frank Klees: What happens when you put a primary care paramedic with a critical care paramedic?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Less things happen, because—

Mr. Frank Klees: And how often does that happen in the field?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: To me, it never happens, because I'm a specialized—

Mr. Frank Klees: Oh, sure—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Like I said, I'm a bad person to talk to for this kind of stuff.

Mr. Frank Klees: But you're familiar with what happens in the field. Is that something that does happen?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I can tell you that it happened a fair bit before I left. That happened a lot. And I can tell you that there are still primary care paramedics within the system in the south. The number of times that it happens right now? I can't tell you. But is it still happening? I assume so, because they're still—

Mr. Frank Klees: And to be clear with Mr. Moridi, this is another aspect that the front-line paramedics brought to my attention, the fact that quite often they were placed into a situation where they were unable to respond to a particular call because of this policy. That is very frustrating, I can imagine, for a paramedic. You're there, you want to provide the service, but you're actually precluded from doing so if you aren't qualified to the appropriate level. Is that right?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I would agree with that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. So I'm hoping that Mr. Moridi understands that when I talk about unqualified people, it's not an aspersion on anyone. It really is a focus on the management at Ornge that allowed these things to happen.

Surely, on a go-forward basis, what we want to do is ensure that those standards of care are brought to the appropriate level so that we have people who can be comfortable on the front line; so that, first of all, whoever is doing dispatch understands their function; and so that whoever the team is, it's up to the appropriate staffing levels to ensure that we're not in a situation where, when a call came in—and there are numerous examples on this incident report—no one was able to respond because there weren't paramedics, because there weren't pilots. Those are things that are a challenge, and it's clearly something that we have to address on a go-forward basis. That we want to make sure that you've got the resources to do your job is basically what it comes down to.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: What I would like to add, though, is that when you talk about primary care paramedics, the primary care paramedics, I suspect, would be fairly offended if you told them that they were unqualified, because they are qualified. They are certified, and they are primary care paramedics. They've completed their education, and they've completed their training. They are qualified paramedics, but—

Mr. Frank Klees: Precisely. So again, thanks for that clarification, because no one has ever intended to call a primary care paramedic unqualified. The unqualified definition comes when that particular team is not qualified to respond to a particular call.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I would agree with that. The team becomes unqualified. That's correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Precisely. I think it's important that we all understand that context. To misrepresent that intention is not helpful, and I think what we want to do is ensure that we move forward with that understanding.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll save it for the next round.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move on to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you for coming, Mr. Lee. Although it is at the bottom of your fun things to do, you're here now, so we might as well get to it.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Second from the bottom, now that I get to talk to you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: There you go. Things are looking up.

All right. You've been there for a long time, so let's focus on since you worked for Ornge. Your locker stayed the same, but your paycheque came with a different logo. Since Ornge was there, did you ever have an incident where you had to put in a complaint to your employer or to anybody else, for that matter?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: What do you mean by complaint? I've got a lot of complaints. I'm a paramedic; I complain about everything.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Give me an example as to how it would work.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: How to the process works?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: The complaints process with Ornge, there were a bunch of different incarnations of it. I think it's called a care report now. It was at one point called a DSA. It had a bunch of different names. Regardless, the process was, you went into an online system, you entered your concern into one of different categories—it's a patient care issue, it's a health and safety issue, it's an aviation issue—you logged it, and you sent it off to—

M^{me} France Gélinas: To whoever answered those emails.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: That's correct, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And then what happened?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I didn't do anything with them after that, so I don't know what happened after that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you ever hear back? Can you think of something happening with health and safety, and you put in a complaint? Does the answer come back through email? Does somebody come and talk to you?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I'm a really bad person to talk to about that, because I haven't done a whole lot of them. I know they have talked a lot recently about improving the responsiveness to those DSAs. There was certainly a problem with a lot of those incident reports, with Ornge, just disappearing. I know at one point Dr. Mazza came in and said it was going to be some magic thing on his desktop, where these instant reports would be flashing right on his desktop so he knew about them. I know a lot of those, under Ornge, sort of disappeared, to the point where I know a lot of people just didn't bother filling them out anymore.

M^{me} France Gélinas: They gave up because the process was not working.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, it was kind of shoddy.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know if it's working better now?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Presumably it is working better now. Again, I haven't actually done one yet, so I can't tell you. My manager said to me just the other day, "Those incident reports now are looked at by everybody, so make sure you're concise and appropriate with them." So I assume now they are being scrutinized a little bit more closely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who is your supervisor?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Gail Houghton. We call her T.S. She's my immediate supervisor.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And who is Gail's supervisor?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: That would be Wade Durham, manager/director.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Since Ornge bought the new Agusta helicopters, have you had an opportunity to work in them as a pediatric paramedic?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Sort of. We did our initial orientation as the helicopters were coming in. I spent a lot of time in the old helicopter. I'm very happy and comfortable in the old helicopter. The new helicopter has got—there are a lot of things that have to be done just in the right way for things to work properly. I just won't do calls in that thing unattended, because I don't do enough of them. In the event that they put us in that aircraft, what I do is I'll take one of the paramedics who is working on that aircraft. He'll stay with the helicopter. He'll bring us up, and we'll go and do the call. So I have him there to handle the logistics of how the helicopter works, because I just don't do enough calls in the helicopter to be familiar with it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. There have been some problems that have been brought forward with the design of the interiors of the helicopter. The one that hit the front page of the paper, I'm guessing you know, is about difficulties performing CPR.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Given that you work with smaller patients, would that also apply to children, to pediatrics?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I would suggest to you that it would apply to anybody over about the age of one, because under the age of one, I can do CPR like this. After that, I have to straighten up my arm.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So as soon as they're bigger, then—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Then it's, yes, a bit of a problem.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

This question has nothing to do with anything; I'm just curious. Who handles the zero to 28 days?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Oh, zero to 28 days is handled by the neonatal transport teams throughout—

Interjection.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes. So SickKids, London—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Ottawa.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: —Ottawa, McMaster. I can't forget McMaster because my old partner would yell at me. And it varies. Some of them do a little bit older, too. SickKids will do up to the age of three, so there's a bit of overlap with us.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Is the neonatal considered, like you, a special unit?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Oh, very special. They're very specialized.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So it's a special unit that deals with neonatals only.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, very specialized.

M^{me} France Gélinas: This had nothing to do with anything; I had kind of forgotten.

When you were talking with Mr. Klees, you said that things have improved since there's been a new management team. You certainly talked about how they seem a little bit more relaxed when you call headquarters and stuff. Can you give me examples of how this affected what you do, as in the before and the after?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: How it affects me in the before and the after—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Well, you did say that things had improved. Can you give me an example as to what you based your comments on?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Oh, the relaxed atmosphere. Like I said, just even with the interactions with the people up there, that is better.

From a front-line perspective, how is it better? Things are certainly easier. There's much more communication with the front line. There's none of the "don't talk to me until you've gone through this set of steps," or whatever. I can run stuff up the flagpole if I want to run stuff up the flagpole. That's certainly a non-issue.

They are a lot more responsive to a lot of—like the helicopter, right? The helicopter was, "We're not going to talk about this. It's an education problem. You guys just don't know how to use it." Now it's, "Okay, you come forward, and you tell me the problems. We acknowledge the fact there are problems. We're going to work to fix it. I'm telling you that this is what we're doing. I'm telling you it's not perfect. I'm telling you it's just an interim solution. We are working forward." That kind of stuff just never happened before. It was, "This is what you got. Deal with it." It's a huge difference, right?

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's an improvement. I realize you're in a specialized unit. Are other paramedics in the same base with you?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: There are other paramedics, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you notice any changes in the staffing level?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Again, you've got to be careful because I'm not a good representation. I'm not working on the helicopter. The base that I worked at was never one of the bases that had issues with staffing, so I don't know if I could answer that and really give you any sort of real sense of what's actually happening out there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, that's okay.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: You need to get one of the guys from the Toronto helicopter down here. Talk to them.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Will do. My next question has to do with the training that is available. If we take your example, was the training accessible and done in a timely fashion? Was it sufficient to feel that you are well prepared to do what you have to do? How did it work?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: My pediatric training?

M^{me} France Gélinas: You can start wherever you want.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I have not done any real Ornge initial training. All of my training was done well before Ornge arrived. I trained under the ministry so—

M^{me} France Gélinas: So who holds your certificate for critical care? Is it Ornge?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Ornge right now, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It's hard for me to comment on that. I know that it seems to be a bit of a lengthy process under Ornge to go through a lot of the paramedic process, the paramedic training program.

My training specifically was, again, not a good representation. It's very focused. We have a specialized team that needs to start here. Here are the resources. Bang, it's done. We started. We did Monday to Friday. We went through, and we got the training done. My training was excellent. It was very focused.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You were satisfied with the people who came and gave it to you? You felt that you were ready once you completed the program?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It's really hard to argue with the staff physicians in the intensive care unit at SickKids. They're the ones who came down and taught us. Our own medical director—I think she runs the neonatal intensive care unit there now. She's an emergency doc. We have pediatric physicians from McMaster, from Kingston, from London. They all came down to be part of the training, as well as their own pediatric educator, who has a substantial background in education herself. We're very lucky. The pediatric team is very lucky. We get excellent education.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And do you say this because you feel there are other teams that are not as lucky as you?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I haven't seen other pediatric teams.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Not necessarily other pediatric teams, but the other training. Is there anything that leads you to believe that the other training that's offered within Ornge is not of the same quality as what you got?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: They're offered on a larger scale, so it becomes that much more difficult. They have economies of scale and geography to overcome so it's very difficult to compare those programs. The critical care programs right now—and again, I’m making this up because I am not in it, and I don’t teach them. It’s hard to get people in in a timely manner when you have to get people from Thunder Bay and from Peterborough. It’s a process, and I know it takes a little longer than they’d like it to take.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Are you the only pediatric team in Ontario?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: In Ornge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In Ornge.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes. There’s a pediatric team based out of SickKids and a pediatric team based out of London, as well. They’re hospital-based teams. London will move patients up to the age of 18, and SickKids will move patients up to the age of three.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Through Ornge Air Ambulance or through land?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Both.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Through both, okay. So they will send their paramedics?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Most of the hospital-based teams are all nurse-based teams.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Nurses, RTs, that sort of stuff.

M^{me} France Gélinas: If I’m putting a lens of equity of access, I’m really proud that Ontario has this team of dedicated pediatric paramedics. I think this is great. If you look at the geography of Ontario—and you probably know that I’m from northern Ontario—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I went to school in Walden, so you don’t have to tell me about that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Oh, there you go. I live in Walden also.

If you look at the geography of Ontario, what you offer to southern Ontario: Is it equally accessible to the people of northern Ontario?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: What I offer?

M^{me} France Gélinas: What your team offers.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Am I available to the people of northern Ontario? Certainly. Is it going to be as fast? No. It’s far. But I will get up there. They sent the guys to Fort Frances the other day—Fort Frances to Winnipeg, that’s far.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, that’s far.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I think the team right now—when I left the base, they were on their way to Sault Ste. Marie. I was in Sault Ste. Marie on Monday. We were on Manitoulin Island the other day. Do I get up there? Certainly. I’ve gone up to North Bay a couple of times. So we get up there.

Now you need to discuss, is it worth me getting up there? Is it worth waiting for me to get up there or is it easier to find some other way to do it? It’s a by-product of—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Of the distance. I’m fully aware.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: —the distance.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who makes those decisions?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Who?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: That is a Medcom decision. That’s a dispatch decision.

The way the process works is, if you are in Sudbury and you have a patient who you want to move, you’ll pick up the phone and you will call CritiCall, which is a separate organization which helps to manage beds for the province. They’ll find you a bed. Whatever your problem is, they find it for you. Once that’s done they will contact our dispatch, and our dispatch will determine if they meet the criteria to fly and, for lack of a better term, how sick you are and what level of care you need for the trip. Based on that, they have a big map that says, “Your patient in Sudbury: There are one, two, three, four different options to move them down. This one will be half an hour, this one will be two hours, this one will be six hours,” and then they’ll pick, based on time, how time-sensitive it is, and based on how sick you are and what level of care you need.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I take it that you listened to some of the testimonies that were done yesterday. We’ve heard that at this time last year, some of the paramedics were feeling that some of the decisions that had been made to delay launch, to change things, were really having an effect and basically demoralizing them and some of their co-workers because they didn’t feel that they were giving out top-quality care. Was the same thing felt within the unit that you work in?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Again, I’m a bad example, because I don’t do scene calls. That launch criteria just doesn’t affect me.

I can appreciate the fact that if you are a helicopter paramedic and what you are bringing to the table is speed of transport—that’s what you’re offering—and you start delaying and making me slower, that’s not going to be good for my morale and that’s not going to be good for my efficiency, right?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know that this was true? Do you know that this has happened?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: The launch policy?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, of course.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You knew about it, then. You knew that some of your colleagues were not happy about it?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Correct. I think that started before I left the helicopter, actually.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Oh, did it?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I think so.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Do you know that it’s better now?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It is better. Yes, they stopped it. It’s done. They’re not doing that anymore.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So they don’t do that anymore?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes. That was a huge thing for the guys on the front line.

M^{me} France Gélinas: My colleague wants to ask a few questions.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you very much for being here, and sorry that you've been on the hot seat for so long.

What I want to do with the time that I have remaining is basically hear from you, from a front-line worker, what recommendations you have to make Ornge better. What would you want to see happen to make it run better, work better, so that you can do your job to the best of your abilities?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I'm very optimistic about Mr. McKerlie—and again, my dealings with him are limited, but even on face value, there's a huge difference between listening to the town hall meetings and the communications from Mr. McKerlie and the ones from Mazza et al. That makes me very happy.

If you're asking me what needs to be fixed, you know about the helicopter. That's a bit of a big deal. Mr. Klees has talked about our dispatch centre and the primary care paramedics within the system. I think you tackle those issues, and then you leave me alone and you let me take care of people, and I will go take care of people.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Is there a policy or something that would help you be left alone to do your job more effectively? Is there something that we could—

Interjection.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Oh, you mean this process.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I mean you leave me alone. I can deal with everything else. You are the problem, sir.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: My apologies.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Did you like that? It wasn't you.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I know.

What about if we break it down more specifically, with the helicopters? Besides the helicopters, is there anything else with being a primary care medic in a helicopter that can make the job easier or better?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Like I said, the helicopter has got to be fixed. It's obviously—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So, the helicopter space. Besides that?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: How can it be fixed?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: No, besides that. There are issues with the interiors—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, those are the four big things that are, for me—and again, half of it I deal with; half of it, I don't. You need to make that helicopter a functional helicopter. And I know that can't be done like that—or it could be done like that, but it's going to cost you another $150 million. So that needs to be fixed.

The staffing is another issue. Again, it's not that I don't appreciate what's happening. You cannot snap your fingers and make another 30 critical care paramedics. That doesn't happen. It takes years. And I don't even care if you choose to hire primary care paramedics, but you need to at least train them. So you need to fix the staffing. You need to fix it so that it's appropriately staffed.

You need to sink some money and some time and some effort into the dispatch centre and make sure that it's being run appropriately and as efficiently as possible.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. And just to target the dispatch centre, if you could isolate some of the key problems that you notice with the dispatching, what are some suggestions, as a front-line worker?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I think Mr. Klees talked about it. It was difficult to try to talk medical talk with pilot people. I'm assuming it's also difficult to talk pilot talk with medical people. And then if you had neither a pilot nor a medical background, that was difficult.

I don't know. I'm not a dispatch expert at all. I don't know what happens in there. I know I feel bad for them, because they make decisions right now, with information coming from 12 different people that may or may not be accurate—and then Mr. Klees and his thing can sit back and judge in retrospect and say, "Well, you didn't do this. You had a 10-minute delay to get to that call in Sudbury." Well, you don't know if he's sitting for 10 minutes, saying, "Wow, there's a burnt baby in Sudbury, and there's a guy having a heart attack in Espanola, and there's an old lady having a stroke in Sault Ste. Marie." So I have got to decide which one of those four things has to happen before I send the helicopter to that scene call that got delayed for 10 minutes.

I'm not making excuses for them, but I'm just saying there's a lot that goes on within that system, and I don't know the best way to make it efficient.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): It's time to move on to the government and Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We go around again, but it will be shorter this time.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I was hoping that you were going to say that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It's going to be shorter this time. We won't have as much time, so the end is near.

The issue around the advanced care and the critical care paramedics: You've talked about training. I take it that Ornge is the only trainer of critical care paramedics. It isn't that you can go to the local employment office and hire a critical care paramedic. The only way you can get a critical care paramedic is, hire an advanced care one and train them up.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So in the situation that we've got, where they aren't standing around, waiting to be hired, in fact the approach we need to take is what I think I'm hearing you say is going on, which is that there are advanced care paramedics but they need to be trained up to the same level as you. So the approach that needs to be taken is being taken. It's just going to take some time to happen.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Oh, it definitely is. Is it being taken? I don't know. I assume so. Like I said, I'm not really involved in that, but I recognize the fact that that takes time. Is it taking too long? Could it be done quicker? I don't know, but it needs to happen.

The other problem is that you can't just take randomly—I can't just take Mr. Klees and turn him into a paramedic, right? Well, I could, but he wouldn't be a very good one. He needs to get experience along the way. It's a process and it takes time.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So everybody has to start at primary, get some experience at primary, train up to advanced, get some experience there—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Exactly.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then train up to critical care and then, in your case, go a fourth step beyond that, which is to be a pediatric specialist.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: That's correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The other front-line people that we've talked to have tended to be either pilots of one sort or another or paramedics who seem to be associated with particular aircraft.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It seems to me that your model is a total flip. You're specializing in kids and you get sent wherever there's a sick kid who needs transfer to tertiary care.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So even though you're based in Markham, you get the most critical kid who needs transfer to tertiary care and you get sent wherever the sick kid is, and then, by airplane, by helicopter or by land, get them to the nearest tertiary care facility. Am I understanding?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Which one do you do the most, then—land?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Land. By far, land. About 75%—and again, I'm making those numbers up, but about 75% of what we do is done by land. About 15% of it is done by airplane and about 10% is done by helicopter.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: With respect to the land ambulances, which are presumably standard land ambulances, whatever it is—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Not standard; ours are very special. There are stickers, SpongeBob SquarePants—very pediatric-focused.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. So I'll get little warm, fuzzy, cuddly things to hug?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: You will. Yes. There's actually a little lion with little arms that you can wrap around, and he can give you a little hug.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. If my grandchildren need help, I'll remember you.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: You call me.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: What about airplanes, then? If you're doing a transfer on a plane, is that a specialized plane, or is that just whatever plane is—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: A bit of both.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: A bit of both?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: A bit of both. We have specialized planes. We have the Ornge dedicated aircraft, like the one in Thunder Bay, the one in Timmins, that kind of stuff. They're kitted out to do actual patient care. Then we have the standing offer agreement aircraft, which is something that I would get more commonly, which is a sort of—what's the best way to word it? It accommodates a stretcher patient. They're set up the best they can under the circumstances. They're charter aircraft.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But they're not necessarily really good ambulance layouts like the Ornge aircraft?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I'm not going to say they're good or bad. They're not my favourite.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. And then you get the helicopters, and it could be one of the old Canadian Helicopters or it could be one—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Oh, I hope not, because those are only way up north, so that means I'm far. So normally right now it will be the new ones, the 139s.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. In terms of where the problems are, for those that are actually specialty vehicles, the only one where there's a problem with the specialty vehicle is the new helicopters, and they're working on that?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: As far as I understand, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The standard offer ones, as you say, they are what they are, so they're not going to magically change under anybody's screed.

You mentioned, when you were talking to Mr. Moridi, that you've been at this long enough that you actually first met Dr. Mazza when he was still the base hospital emergency specialist at Sunnybrook, and I think I heard you say that as an emerg doc, he was highly respected, you found. We never quite got to the "And then later..." Once you eventually found that Ornge was your employer, did you, in that context, with Dr. Mazza as CEO, encounter him there?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Encounter him, yes; any sort of actual relationship, no. Obviously I had a relationship with him; I know him, so it's not that I would ignore him in the hallway. But as the CEO, he had very little interaction with the paramedics. As soon as he was replaced, for lack of a better term, by other physicians who concentrated on the medical stuff, then my dealings with him were virtually nil.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So your observations aren't one-on-one conversations more recently; they're the culture—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, I believe I said that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —which you've already talked about. The other thing you mentioned a couple of times was talking about paramedics taking abuse from people. Is this a recent phenomenon, or is that—you've been doing this for 18 years.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Is this a new phenomenon—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: The Ornge abuse?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Do you want to tell us a little bit about that?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: About getting picked on? It's just randomly being sworn at on the street; that's pleasant. Telling me I'm a waste of money, having my ambulance keyed, coming back to the ambulance and having little dollar signs written in the dirt: That kind of stuff is fun.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Wow. So people are really—because they're reading so much negative stuff, they're actually taking it out on you as a front-line—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Correct, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because you actually do 75% of the work on the ground, they can get at you.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, exactly. The helicopter guys: They get a bit of abuse, I think, from the hospital staff, but they're not in the general public as much. Because our land guys and us are on the road, we're a bit more accessible. You can see me getting a coffee or getting—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, okay.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute left.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, thank you. I really do appreciate it, because I know that—we sit around committee rooms all the time and it's part of our life. This is obviously not your life, so we hope that we will get out of your way and let your life get back to normal—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I don't want you to get out of my way. I want you to come out, spend the day with me, if you're going to make—come and see what I do when you go to make your decisions. I'm happy to have anybody here and I'm happy for you to sit and watch and for me to explain to you exactly what I'm doing and what works and what doesn't work.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Wonderful. Thank you for interrupting the good work you usually do and coming and talking to us. That's been very helpful. Thanks.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you, and we'll move on to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. I'd like to follow up on the training. Do you know how many critical care medics have been certified, say, in the last four years?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Take a guess.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Ten, twenty? I don't know. I know there's a class going on right now; that they've just started. I know that there is a class that's just wrapping up. Was there a class before that? Is there maybe—no; I'd be guessing.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. The word that we have is that there were very few. This, again, is one of the things, obviously, that has to be fixed.

Under the agreement that Mazza negotiated with the government, Ornge became the monopoly trainer/certifier of critical care paramedics. What that did was set up Ornge to ensure that all medics who qualified as critical care medics would have to come through the Ornge funnel. It essentially allowed Mr. Mazza and his group to totally control the critical care medic population in this province. It's one thing that I think, as a committee, we're going to have to look at, because there are other institutions that are very capable of providing that training, from what I'm told.

To have more opportunity for more advanced-care paramedics to get into a training program so that we can in fact create the mass that we need to deliver the front-line service—I think it would serve everyone's best interests. It also gets us away from this monopoly that never serves anyone well.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I can't really comment on that. I can't really argue with the number of paramedics that are trained, because obviously there are holes. We need more; we don't have enough. But I will tell you—and I'm not even going to argue with how they do their training, but I will tell you about the end result of their training, Mr. Klees. You have some of the—actually, you have the majority of the best-trained critical care paramedics in the country in this province.

Mr. Frank Klees: We have no doubt about that.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: That comes from their training and their medical direction.

Mr. Frank Klees: Just to your point, we need more of them.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes. And I'm not arguing that with you, but I'm just saying, the quality of the paramedics that they produce is very high.

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand congratulations are in order for your performance at a North American competition—this goes back a couple of years—apparently, you and Wayne Diamond. Could you tell us about that experience of yours?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Wayne and I, when I was working on a helicopter, went to Tampa to AMTC, which is a conference that is put on every year by the same association that certifies all of the air ambulance providers, basically, in the world. They had a competition that pit all of the different air medical crews against each other in simulated patient care. So we went down to do that competition.

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand you qualified for what they called the Airmed World Congress.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes, we did.

Mr. Frank Klees: How did you fare at that?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: We fared fairly well.

Mr. Frank Klees: How well?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: We placed first.

Mr. Frank Klees: There you go. Congratulations.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Thank you. Those are your Ornge paramedics, right?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes. That's great. Who paid for that?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I don't know who paid for the first trip. I assume it was Ornge. For the second trip to Prague, my understanding—and again, I'm not a money guy—is that we were paid for by the Air Medical Congress. They paid for us to go over. It was their first attempt at putting on one of these competitions, and they wanted some more seasoned competitors and a bit more international flavour, so they footed the bill for us to go to Prague—I think. Don't hold me to that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Congratulations. Thanks for being here today.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move on to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Right now, when pediatric care is required in northern Ontario, it could very well be that the team that is based in northern Ontario ends up doing this care because a decision has been done that the time saver is better than the specialized unit?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: That's correct, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: This is not something that—we would never ask your opinion as to, should your team be deployed or should the local team? Or do—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: They will; they'll ask. And I'm happy to do whatever. To be quite frank, if they're sick, I'll do whatever you want. If you're sick and you need me, we'll go and do whatever you like. It's going to take me eight hours to get up there? We'll go. But I'm also fairly realistic with my own abilities and the abilities of the system. So if you are sick and you want me to go get you, I'll go get you. But if you are sick and you are time-sensitive and you need to be moved down, then I may or may not be the quickest option if you're in Kapuskasing or some place in northern Ontario.

M^{me} France Gélinas: If you would have found yourself in a situation with your employer where things were becoming really, really bad—you don't feel that you have the equipment needed to do your job properly, you don't feel that you've been matched with people who you trust have the knowledge and skills to do what you need to do—just kind of imagine a worst-case scenario. Where would you go with that complaint? How would you go about fixing this?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It would really depend on what the issue was. That would dictate where I went with it. Gail, my manager, is probably the first stop for most of the stuff. If it is dispatch silliness, I usually have a specific dispatcher who is responsible for us, so I'll go through him to the operations manager within dispatch. If it's a medical problem, we have an overall medical director who's easy to talk to, as well as our own specific pediatric medical director. So it really would depend on what the problem was.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you say that most of the other paramedics you work with would have the same way of handling things as you?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: For the most part, I think, yes. You talk to your manager, fill in a care report. We're unionized staff as well, so it leaves the option of going through the CAW if it's a policy kind of issue. We have a health and safety committee that's a good avenue for—I know that a lot of the helicopter stuff went through the health and safety committee.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you would say that you basically worked in an environment where people knew that you go through your supervisors, you fill out the form, you can go to your union. People know that there are resources out there for them when things go bad.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: You're asking me that now?

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm asking you that now.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: As opposed to before, maybe it was not the same?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It was always there. The end outcome was a little bit more questionable.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Because what I'm trying to get at is that for the last two years, we've had whistle-blowers coming from your organization—people you know, people you work with. Maybe they shared that with you; maybe they have not. We're talking about people with education, skills, knowledge—people who usually get the job done. As you say, not everybody could do it. You face a lot of challenges on a daily basis, and you rise to them and you figure things out to make it work.

I'm sitting here thinking that there were systems in place to get things better. How bad could it have gone that we got so many whistle-blowers who said, "I'm used to solving problems. I know how to work it inside. I've done my best. I can't take it anymore. I think it's pretty bad—bad enough that I'm going to go to people I don't know from a hole in the ground"? They don't know me; they don't know my leader; they don't know any of us. Yet they were so desperate that they came to us, they came to the ministry, they came to the government. I'm trying to get a sense as to, on a scale of anything, how bad was it that they decided to do that?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: It was pretty bad. I worked on that Toronto helicopter. I wanted for a long time to end up on that Toronto helicopter. It's very visible. It does a lot of sick people. I've done some crazy stuff on that helicopter. That's me on the front page of the Toronto Sun or CNN or whatever, all that kind of stuff. The helicopter is there, right? It was not a very comfortable environment to work in at all. It was one of the reasons I decided to switch gears, because it was a very toxic environment. You were working very hard.

Appreciate that if I come into work and there are two helicopters and only one critical care paramedic and there are a couple of other ACPs—there are sick people in that Toronto helicopter. That one critical care paramedic: He's doing all the calls. He does a sick person; comes back; another sick person. Well, I can't send the other crew if they're not critical care, so that same medic gets back in that helicopter and keeps going. You can only go on for so long before you're tired and stressed.

It's not the same. Could you and I go and take care of a sick person? Sure. You and I can go and take care of a sick person. Is it going to be the same as two certified people? No, because I'm going to have the bulk of the workload. It's extra workload; it's extra stress. Does it affect the patient? It's not going to go as fast. I'd like to think it doesn't affect the patient. I'd like to think the care is the same, but it's not a healthy environment for the paramedics down there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you. He has a few more questions.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just a couple of questions. I promise I'll be short with you—not in a bad way, but I'll be brief with you, I meant to say.

Training-wise, just out of curiosity, the way training works, people who are training to become a paramedic: Do they come and do they rotate in and get to see what it's like to be a medic with either aircraft or a helicopter or fixed-wing?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Like regular—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Oh. Again, for the pediatric team, the answer is no. The problem with other paramedics coming to the helicopter is—people like to come on to the helicopter, and there are probably about 300 paramedic students within a two-hour drive of Toronto right now, so if they all came out for a day, there would be one there every day. So, as a rule, no.

The training paramedics—I know one of our part-timers works in Peterborough, so they do a little draw and she brings one of her paramedic students out to do a day—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I see. Is there an intern process if you want to just try it out and see if it's something that you're interested in?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Not really. Certainly, you could work part-time. That's an option.

The fact that I can only fit so much weight and so much space on the aircraft, it's very limiting for me—the number of extra people I can bring.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Fair enough. Do you know how many graduates from initial paramedic general training end up wanting to get into this specialized type of—

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Who knows? I imagine there are a few who want to work on that helicopter. It's pretty sexy.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Those are all my questions. Thank you very much. We'll leave it at that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much for coming before the committee. We appreciate your insight.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Thank you, sir.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you're the only one who worked the word "sexy" into this hearing so far.

Mr. Jonathan Lee: I'm telling you, every single one of you, come and spend the day with me. You want to decide about the helicopter stuff? Come and spend the day with me. I'm happy to have every one of you.

Mr. David Zimmer: In the helicopter?

Mr. Jonathan Lee: Well, you'd have to call the helicopter guys and ask them. But you can come and help me take care of little babies.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): That's a good invitation for the committee. We'll have to consider that.

Mr. David Zimmer: Mr. Chair, would you look after that?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We can talk about it.

MEYERS NORRIS PENNY

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our next presenter is Margriet Kiel from Meyers Norris Penny. Please come forward.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Good afternoon.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Good afternoon. Just to confirm that you received the letter for a person coming before the committee?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, I did.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Good. I understand you're doing an affirmation.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The clerk will do so.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Ms. Kiel, do you solemnly affirm that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. If you want to make an opening statement, go ahead and do so.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Sure. I'd like to.

Good afternoon, Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee. My name is Maggie Kiel. I am a partner with MNP LLP and am MNP's national services leader for internal audit and enterprise risk management. I am pleased to attend before you today, provide a brief opening statement and then answer any questions that you may have.

By way of brief background, MNP is one of the largest chartered accountancy and business consulting firms in Canada, with over 2,800 team members in over 70 offices across the country, making it Canada's fastest-growing accounting firm.

With respect to myself and my qualifications, I obtained my master of business administration degree in 1995, a master of professional accounting degree in 1998, a chartered accounting designation in 1999, a certified internal auditor designation in 2002, an associate business continuity planner designation in 2009 and a certified risk management assurance designation in 2011. I have approximately 17 years of experience in the areas of corporate governance, enterprise risk management and internal audit services. Prior to joining MNP, I was the lead for Deloitte and Touche's risk management and internal audit practices in northern Australia, Papua New Guinea and Russia.

In July 2008, the Ontario internal audit division, on behalf of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, sent out a request for services with respect to a review of air ambulance and related services provided to the province of Ontario as governed by the performance agreement between the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care and Ornge, which would specifically cover the period from 2005 to 2008. I was part of the MNP team tasked to create a response to the request and was the individual who, from start to finish, spent the greatest number of hours on this engagement.

MNP provided its proposal for services on August 13, 2008, and was awarded the engagement later that month. It is important that the committee understand the nature of MNP's engagement, in that MNP was not engaged to provide an audit opinion of Ornge; rather, MNP was retained to provide a review engagement.

In layman's terms, a review engagement is more limited in scope, is not intended to, and will not, result in the same types of conclusions that would be found in an audit opinion. A review engagement generally consists of inquiry, discussion and analytical procedures. Essentially, a review is simply a process of asking questions and analyzing limited documentation provided by management to see if the information—financial or otherwise—is plausible or worthy of belief.

An audit, on the other hand, involves much more analysis of documentation, testing of information, corroboration of information and management assertions, with the end goal being to be able to state, with reasonable certainty, that the information is true and fair.

There were seven objectives that MNP was to report on in its review, the first one being to assess Ornge's financial management, forecasting and reporting processes and controls for the delivery of air ambulance and related services.

The second one was to assess the appropriateness of Ornge's procurement processes, specifically Ornge's ability to acquire required goods and services at the right time and in the most economical manner.

The third one was to assess the integrity of the financial and service data reports provided by Ornge to the ministry.

The fourth one was to assess whether Ornge was in compliance with the performance agreement signed with the ministry.

The fifth one was to assess whether Ornge is using provincial funds economically and efficiently in providing air ambulance and related services.

The sixth one was to assess the effectiveness of Ornge's enterprise risk management framework.

The seventh and final one was to assess the governance and accountability framework and the mechanisms in place within the ministry and Ornge over the management of transfer payments for air ambulance and related services, and ministry compliance with the requirements of the transfer payment accountability directive.

I think it's also important to note what MNP was not engaged to do, and that certain things were excluded from our review, most notably a review of any salaries of the employees at Ornge, which was not surprising, given that at the time of the engagement, the salaries of Dr. Mazza and the other executives at Ornge were still publicly disclosed.

The engagement commenced with MNP providing a list of key documents required from Ornge on September 4, 2008, followed by a kickoff meeting between MNP, the ministry and Ornge on September 9, 2008.

In response to MNP's request for documents, Ornge demanded that a confidentiality agreement be prepared and executed, and one was put in place as between Ornge, the Ministry of Finance—as that was the ministry that ultimately engaged MNP—and MNP. MNP has notified the Ministry of Finance and Ornge of our required appearance before this committee and the anticipated discussion of confidential information, as required by the terms of the confidentiality agreement.

MNP's fieldwork commenced on September 29, 2008. During that work, I personally interviewed the following individuals at Ornge: the CEO of Ornge, Dr. Chris Mazza; the chairman of the board of Ornge, Mr. Rainer Beltzner; the chair of the governance committee, Mr.

Luis Navas; the chief operating officer, Mr. Tom Lepine; the VP of finance, Ms. Maria Renzella; and two other staff members at Ornge. I also interviewed individuals at the Ministry of Health, including the director of emergency health services, Mr. Malcolm Bates. Utilizing what we believe to have been a very efficient and thorough approach, MNP was able to conclude its fieldwork by November 30, 2008, and thereafter began writing its report.

On April 7, 2009, Ontario internal audit was provided with a draft of our report for review and comment, following which the report was delivered to the emergency health services branch for their review and comment. The report was provided to Ornge on September 9, 2009.

The significant delay in being able to render a final report was due to the actions of many parties, and the six to nine months this engagement should have taken from start to finish ended up being two years. While Ontario internal audit and the Ministry of Health were reasonably prompt in providing their questions, comments and additional documentation, Ornge's review process caused a delay of over nine months in the issuance of the report. During this period, both MNP and Ontario internal audit made repeated requests for meetings with Ornge, and a meeting was held with Ornge counsel in February 2010.

On June 4, 2010, MNP issued its final report to both the ministry and Ornge and requested responses to the recommendations it had made. After some further delay in receiving these responses, MNP was able to render its final report, including these responses, on September 10, 2010.

Our report made 26 recommendations, a number of which had significant findings for the ministry to follow up on, notably that, first of all, the Ministry of Health and Ornge must discuss and document the concerns identified by MNP with respect to Ornge's corporate structure and how the performance agreement did not appear to apply to any entity other than Ornge.

The second recommendation was regarding—Ornge must provide increased, more timely and more detailed reporting to the Ministry of Health, including more formalized and documented meetings.

The third one was relating to the parties to review the performance agreement to ensure that the ministry had better tools to provide adequate oversight of Ornge and to ensure that the performance agreement was complied with.

As indicated, our report resulted in a total of 26 recommendations, which outlined deficiencies and opportunities for improvement in various areas across the organization. You will note that one of our conclusions was that "our review indicated that Ornge is using provincial grant funding economically, efficiently and for the purposes intended." While that statement is an accurate one, it must be noted that it was a specific response to only one of the seven objectives identified by Ontario internal audit in its request for service. One should not lose sight of the fact that in total there were 26 recommendations made, and to state that this was MNP's conclusion with respect to the other six objectives would be incorrect.

Finally, given what is said about Ornge in the Auditor General's report, I would be remiss if I did not note for the committee that at the time MNP conducted its review, the salaries of Dr. Mazza and the other executives at Ornge were still publicly disclosed on the sunshine list. As earlier noted, a review of salaries was not a part of our engagement. I should also note that the much-discussed purchases of helicopters and airplanes and the issues surrounding same were transactions that occurred after the conclusion of our review.

I hope that you have found my brief opening statement helpful, and I look forward to aiding this committee with its work. Mr. Chair, members of the committee, I am now pleased to answer any questions you that may have.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much for that. We'll go to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to start by asking if you were able to secure a release from that confidentiality agreement that you had with the Ministry of Finance and Ornge.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Both confidentiality agreements that we signed had a clause in there that we had to provide them with notice if we had to appear before a committee like this. As such, we contacted both the Ministry of Finance as well as Ornge, and we notified them of such.

Mr. Frank Klees: So there are no questions that we will ask you that you feel you cannot answer in a forthright way?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No, I should be able to answer every question that you'll ask of me today.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. How much did this report cost?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: The report in total was approved by the ministry for a total of $287,692.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was that the initial fee or was that the end fee? Was that all-in?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: It was not the initial fee as outlined in our proposal for services in response to the request for services. Our proposed fees were $199,475.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what accounted for the additional uptake on that fee?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: The bill was higher—approximately by $90,000—really due to the complexity that was involved in the engagement as well as the delays in information and information requests that we sent out and subsequently, the way in which we received that information; as well as, as I outlined in my opening statement, from the time we issued our report to the time it was finalized was probably over a year and a half. You can imagine that in that time you have to speak to the various stakeholders; you're trying to set up meetings; you need to try to get people in the same room; additional documentation is provided that we need to review and consider in light of our findings and recommendations. All of that had resulted in significant additional costs. The ministry agreed that a lot of that was not anticipated, and hence we were able to recover some of that.

Mr. Frank Klees: So your contract was directly with which ministry?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: It was with the Ministry of Finance and their internal audit division. And their group was, obviously, the Ministry of Health audit group.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was Mr. David Schell your contact there?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Had you done business with Mr. Schell previously?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No, I had not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Because it took you about a year and a half, two years, to complete this, and knowing the organization, there's an awful lot that happened from the time you started your work—it could have been a very different organization by the time you concluded. How comfortable were you in signing off on this report, knowing that it took so long? Did you have any question that there might be information in this report that was considerably outdated, or that the recommendations you made might be out of date?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: It's important to know that our review period covered the period from 2005 to 2008, and the financial information was looked at up until March 31, 2008. That was the specific scope of our engagement. Any information that was relevant up to November 30, 2008, was included in our review, and anything that occurred after that date was specifically excluded from our review. So, at that point in time, our report was obviously factual, it was accurate and it was complete.

Mr. Frank Klees: When you went into this organization and you started your questioning, who was your primary contact at Ornge?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: The primary contact who was assigned to us was Maria Renzella, the VP of finance. But most of the requests that we had—initially, we had a documentation request. All the types of information that we would like to look at, we provided to Ornge, and then we were waiting for the information so that we could review that, prior to us having interviews with key personnel. So we provided that list to Maria.

It was clear, from an early point on, that Dr. Mazza was actually driving the review, so any requests for documentation actually had to be approved by Dr. Mazza, and we would have to provide a business case for any piece of information that we wanted to look at.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry, did you saying "driving" or "dragging"?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: He was driving—

Mr. David Zimmer: Driving. Thank you. Sorry.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: —on Ornge's behalf.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

Mr. Frank Klees: When you say you had to make a business case for information, can you elaborate on that? What would that look like?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: We had submitted probably a two-page document that outlined all the documentation that we would want to look at, such as organization structure; financial statements; risk management framework; governance framework; committee structure; terms of reference for committees; all their internal controls; all the financial reporting documentation; procurement policies and procedures—really, in support of all of our objectives. If Dr. Mazza did not think that that piece of information was relevant to us, he would require us to tell him specifically why we would need that piece of information, and he would assess that and make his decision accordingly.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you have direct contact with Chris Mazza?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, I did.

Mr. Frank Klees: How often, over the course of this two-year period, would you have had a meeting with him or contact with him directly?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: We started our review on September 29, 2009, after we had that initial kickoff meeting on September 9, 2009, at which Dr. Mazza was present. From the time we started our actual fieldwork—we were on the premises of Ornge at that time—we had several interviews with Dr. Mazza because, obviously, a lot of the information that we wanted to review and wanted his comment on—obviously we wanted his input and to find out what his thoughts were on, for instance, the communication with the ministry on whether the organization was risk-based, and on a lot of the other types of questions we had. So in the first couple of weeks, when we completed our fieldwork, we had, probably, an interview with him at least twice a week. If we had to provide additional support for our information requests, then we would have contact on a more regular basis, so at the end of the day, we would have another five- or 10-minute discussion with him. Our fieldwork was completed by November 30, 2008, so from that point on, our contact was a lot less. From the time that we had issued our report to them, Ornge actually referred the report immediately to their legal counsel. So from that time onwards, we had no contact with Dr. Mazza again.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm sorry; I missed some dates here. Your initial kickoff was September 29—

Ms. Margriet Kiel: In 2008.

Mr. Frank Klees: And you completed on November 30, 2009?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: In 2008. We did our fieldwork in a little bit over two months.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Did you ever have any contact with the chairman of the board?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, I did.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was the nature of that contact? Tell us about where the chairman of the board would have been involved in this process.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: For most of our contact with the chairman of the board, it mainly consisted with respect to the last two objectives of our review. That was a review of the risk management framework as well as the review of the governance and accountability framework then in place, because obviously those touch very closely on what the board is in place for, and it all relates to governance. So we had several discussions with him on those particular topics.

Once we had finished our review of the governance framework, one of the key findings we had was that at that point in time, Ornge did not have a whistle-blower policy in place, and we thought it would be best practice and that it would be prudent that Ornge implement that whistle-blower policy. So we went to the chairman of the board again with our recommendation, and he said that Ornge had considered it but thought it was not required for Ornge at that point in time.

Mr. Frank Klees: Although in their response to the ministry, I note that they did say they would consider it.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I was going to say: They didn't say they would implement one; they said they would consider looking at implementing a whistle-blower policy. That's correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: But the chairman of the board, in his communication with you, expressed the fact that—could you just repeat? I don't want to put words in your mouth. I'd like to know what the chairman of the board said to you directly about that.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: The chairman of the board said specifically that he did not consider that to be necessary for the organization, as he felt that the culture of the organization was such that if people would find anything that they would feel was not in accordance with policies, procedures or anything else, people would be comfortable enough to bring that to the attention of their supervisor or the immediate supervisor above that particular person.

In addition to that, the chairman of the board presented us with a note to file presented by Rhoda Beecher, who was the vice-president of organizational development and human resources. In that note, it says that, "After discussion with the executive, it was decided a 'whistle-blower' procedure was not required as part of the code. CAW and OPSEU members"—the union members—"are protected under the agreements; non-union employees are protected from reprisals in the harassment, discrimination and code policies." So that was their note to file on why they didn't think it was necessary to implement that whistle-blower policy.

Mr. Frank Klees: Could we ask for a copy of that for the clerk?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Most definitely.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Any other discussions with the chairman of the board concerning specifically the accountability framework? Was there any additional deliberation on that?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No; we had our interviews with him. We obviously spoke to the ministry on that objective as well. We collected supporting documents and looked at all the sources of funds and the payments that were made. At that point in time, we found nothing unusual. After our initial discussions, and perhaps we had two interviews with the chairman, we didn't find it necessary to speak to him about that again.

Mr. Frank Klees: I found it interesting in reading the report that it almost seemed as though there was a sanitization of the major headings, if I can put it that way, because your report would make statements such as, “We find”—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I hate to interrupt, but the clerk wants to get that note just so he can copy it. Sorry.

1450

Mr. Frank Klees: There would be statements similar to the one that you told us about, that they’re in compliance. But then the report goes on and lists 10, 20 or 30 areas of non-compliance.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: You know, a lot of people just read headlines.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Of course they do.

Mr. Frank Klees: When I was reading this, I thought what a tremendous opportunity this was, because, really, apart from the Auditor General’s work, it’s the first formal document where someone has actually been inside the front door of this organization and has made some pretty astute observations. And yet the astute observations are buried in the details, to the point where Dr. Mazza wrote a letter to David Schell on August 27, his covering letter—I’m sure you’re familiar with that.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, I have read that.

Mr. Frank Klees: —where he makes the point, “The review concluded that overall Ornge is using provincial grant funding economically, efficiently and for the purposes intended...” Everything is just wonderful, and on they go.

My question to you is, why was the report written that way? This could have been a much more helpful report to the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Finance if it wasn’t so nice. You make bad things sound good. Why did you do that?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Well, I don’t think I agree with that, because of the fact that we have 26 recommendations, some of them really highlighting some areas that the ministry had to look at, which subsequently in the Auditor General’s report were also confirmed. Just the mere fact that we had so many recommendations, I think, should indicate that it was certainly not a nice report and certainly not a report saying that everything is great, Ornge is doing everything perfectly and there is no opportunity for improvement. I don’t think that was the case at all.

It’s a little bit unfortunate that the readers have taken that one statement to say that that was the overall conclusion for the entire report, whereas that was absolutely not the intent. That specific recommendation purely related to objective 5, which was to look at the use and source of funds and whether the funds had been used economically and efficiently. When we did our procedures with respect to objective 5, we found nothing at that point in time—and remember that this was really in regard to the transactions that had occurred up until November 2008. That conclusion merely related to objective 5, and therefore it’s unfortunate that people seem to apply it to the entire report; whereas I think, as I mentioned earlier, we had 26 very strong recommendations, some of them being very key.

Mr. Frank Klees: One of those is on page 5 of your report, the top paragraph, where it says, “During our review of the procurement policies and processes, we noted that effective July 2008, Ornge’s board of directors revised their signing authority for approval of individual items from a $750,000 limit to $2 million for items that have already been approved in the annual budget. Additionally, board approval had been revised to a $1-million limit for those items that are not already approved in the annual budget.” Then you say, “This is not in compliance with the” performance agreement.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Unless you’re highlighting it in yellow, this could very easily be lost, unfortunately. It didn’t take long for this organization, from the time that they were handed the keys, to give themselves all kinds of spending authority.

When you submitted this report to Mr. Schell, I’m assuming that you would have had a debriefing with Mr. Schell and his people?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Tell me of the nature of that meeting. How did the debriefing happen?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about three minutes, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can I just carry on into my next session, please?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I’d just like to wrap this up.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: The normal process—Ontario internal audit was the group that engaged us to undertake this engagement. By the time we issued our preliminary findings, we would have had discussions from November onwards, because we were in contact with them on a weekly basis. By that time, and until the first draft of our report was issued, we would have several discussions to say, “These are our findings. These are our recommendations. This is probably a very preliminary draft.” Then Ontario internal audit would ask us questions such as, “If you found this, what type of evidence do you have to support that finding?” They would ask with specific objectives: “What about this particular issue? Did you look at that? What about this conclusion? Is there any information that perhaps the ministry has that you haven’t reviewed?”

It is more like an internal Q&A process that we would follow in that first couple of months to ensure that from internal audit’s point of view, we have addressed all the objectives as outlined in the request for services; we’ve addressed the full scope; and that all our findings and recommendations are relevant and we have appropriate evidence to support those recommendations as well.

Mr. Frank Klees: How many of these audits would you do—when I say “you,” obviously, your organization—of this type of organization, a not-for-profit?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Numerous. Would I have specific numbers, based on, say, a per-year basis? I would not, but it would certainly be probably in excess of 10 reviews.

Mr. Frank Klees: You included an organizational chart which has—

Ms. Margriet Kiel: We did.

Mr. Frank Klees: Actually, this is about a quarter of what it ended up being, and that's on page—I guess it's an attachment, isn't it? "Current Corporate Structure of Ornge." How many organizations that you've done this kind of report on would have had an organizational chart that looks remotely like this one?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: For a not-for-profit organization?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Probably not a lot.

Mr. Frank Klees: Any?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Not that I can recall, but I also don't think that most of the not-for-profit entities I would have looked at would be charged with such an enormous responsibility as providing air ambulance and related services. The scope of the organization is obviously tremendous.

Mr. Frank Klees: Except that not very much on this chart here—not too many of these boxes have anything to do with providing air ambulance service. Most of these boxes have to do with a whole lot of other stuff.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: At that point in time, in 2008, obviously we looked at the organization structure, but the only thing we could review at that time was really management's intentions. We could look at the objects, to see whether they were in line with the objects of Ornge. At that point in time, they did align. Management's intentions, as they outlined them to us, did not appear to be unusual. For us, as you say, the organization structure was unusual, and that's why we did highlight it in our report. But certainly, based on the detailed review that we did, there was no specific transaction that would cause us to say, "This corporate structure is used for purposes not intended by the performance agreement."

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand that, but it was obviously sufficiently interesting to you that you would raise that as a recommendation for the ministry to look into.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Absolutely, and it was recommendation number 1.

Mr. Frank Klees: Chair, I'm going to defer at this point. Thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay; very well. We'll move on to the NDP, then. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Now that you've had an opportunity to look back and see the good work that our Auditor General has done, we'll start with—what was the reason for the huge delay? Is this common? It looks like it cost us $90,000 to have this delay. Did we get our money's worth out of this delay? If you could comment on that.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: The delay was, I think, certainly unusual. I don't think I have ever worked on an engagement where it took two years, or more than a year and a half, from the time you issue a draft report for it to be finalized. So that was certainly very unusual.

The delays were caused by numerous reasons, one of them being—the first delay occurred when the whistle-blower letter was received in mid-November 2008. At that point in time, we ceased all activities on that engagement because obviously the very nature of the forensic investigation that internal audit had started at that point in time really had to do with the integrity of management. Seeing that a review engagement is very much focused on obtaining management responses on interpreting the information provided, we really had to make sure that the forensic investigation would not show up anything, because obviously at that point in time our report would have to be considered, to say the least. That was our first delay, of probably about two months, because I think—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sorry; because you received a letter that talked to you about they did not want a whistle-blower procedure—you'll have to say that again. I don't see the connection.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No, no. Okay, it has got nothing to do with that note that was just passed to the committee. What I'm referring to is the whistle-blower letter that was provided to the ministry, of an employee of Ornge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: And then the ministry obviously sent in their forensic team to investigate whether the issues brought up in that letter—whether there was any substance to those.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Oh, so it's that whistle—

Ms. Margriet Kiel: It's the whistle-blower letter, yes. Does it make sense?

M^{me} France Gélinas: As you've completed your fieldwork, you started to do a little bit of debriefing with the Ministry of Finance. Smack in the middle of this, the whistle-blower starts to raise the alarm bell with the Ministry of Health. The Ministry of Health sent their own audit team into Ornge, so that's the first delay of two months.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Continue.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Once we had the clearance on that and they found nothing really to substantiate the allegations, we continued our debrief with the Ministry of Health internal audit team.

I think two things really caused a delay, the first one being that the internal audit department of the ministry really wanted to have a staged process in the review of the report. What that meant was, rather than sending the report out to each party at the same time, when we had our first draft, they really wanted to stagger it to say, "First, the ministry is going to look at it and provide any comments to see whether there are any factual inaccuracies and, if so, give them the opportunity to provide additional documentation and support so that we can review that and see whether it would have any impact on our recommendations." The next party that looked at it was the emergency health services branch. Once the ministry was okay with it, it was sent to the emergency health services branch.

They did find one of the recommendations that we initially had made was with respect to—a risk assessment had to be done on the transfer payment accountability directive. Based on representations from other members of the emergency health services branch, they had told us that that hadn't occurred. As a result, we found that obviously to be not in accordance with that directive. The emergency health services branch therefore was provided with an opportunity to look for some backup documentation that they could provide to us to say, "Have you or have you not undertaken that risk assessment?"

They provided us with that documentation; it took about two months for them to collect that. It was provided to us. We would take two weeks to review it and to see whether it would have an impact on our finding and recommendation. In this case, it did, because we found sufficient evidence that they, in fact, had done a risk assessment. That took another three months, probably, to conduct and for them to say, "We're okay with the report in its current format."

The report was not provided to Ornge until September 2009.

M^{me} France Gélinas: There are months missing here. We're in November 2008. Two months for the whistleblower, and we're now in January.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Two months for the ministry to—you didn't say how long for the ministry to review.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: From the end of January until the end of March, so two months for the Q&A process of the internal audit department. We had a first draft version of the report by April 7, 2009, that was provided to the ministry.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So first draft. We're now in April.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes, correct. On April 28, we received the okay from the ministry. At that date, the report was provided to the emergency health services branch.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Then it took them two months to give you the information—

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes. Initially, there was already a delay to get some meetings happening, because it took them some time to get all the key players in the room who needed to review this report. So we did not have a meeting until June 26, 2009.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Is it just me who thinks that from April 28 to June 26—this is two months to arrange a meeting. How busy are those people, anyway?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Unfortunately, I can't tell you that, but it certainly took a little bit of time to get that initial meeting.

So then we're in late June. The emergency health services branch disagreed with the finding around the accountability directive, and it took approximately two months, seven weeks, for them to provide additional evidence that would support their point of view that they had indeed conducted that risk assessment. We then took two weeks to review that information, and we actually subsequently took out that finding and recommendation.

Accordingly, a revised version was issued to Ornge on September 9, 2009.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. We're now on September 9, 2009.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You still have another 12 months to account for, because—

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Absolutely. We're not there yet.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right; keep on.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: We were advised at that point in time that the report, from Ornge's point of view, was handed over to their legal department. Legal, at that point in time, was sort of our main contact, from their point of view, of reviewing the report. Ornge wanted to go through it line by line, to find out whether they were in agreement or not in agreement with the findings outlined.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who were the people that you dealt with who legally represented Ornge?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: The in-house legal counsel.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Maria Renzella?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: No, she was a VP of finance. It was Catherine Rosebrugh. She was their legal counsel.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Only Catherine?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes, she was our main contact at that point in time.

According to Catherine, they had their internal review process. She said that, obviously, Dr. Mazza looked at it and the board looked at it, and they provided some initial comments. Based on their comments and additional information that they provided, a revised version was sent to them on October 23, 2009.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so a revised version was October 23, 2009.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Correct. I think it was within a week of that revised report that we were told that legal counsel had fallen ill, quite seriously, and that she had to undergo numerous treatments. So, pretty much, as legal was our main contact—and as I mentioned earlier—from the time the draft report was issued to Ornge, from that time onwards, we had no contact anymore with Ornge people like Dr. Mazza or the chairman of the board.

She fell sick, so in the ensuing months, we constantly tried to say, "Okay, where are we at? We sent you a revised report. Can we have an exit meeting? We would like to conclude this report. We would like to issue it." Every two weeks, it was either MNP or it was the Ministry of Health internal audit team that would say, "Okay, where are we at? Can we get a meeting? Can we get the exit meeting scheduled?" And we did not have a meeting until February 1, 2009.

M^{me} France Gélinas: February 1, 2010.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: In 2010, yes. At that time, legal counsel, Catherine, was still ill, so we kept swapping emails, kept swapping phone calls to say, "Okay, where is it at? Can Dr. Mazza and the board please sign off? We've gone through this report in a lot of detail. It's ready to go."

Nothing really happened until April 9, 2010, when a new lawyer started with Ornge. Her name was Lisa Kirbie, and she was then our main point of contact. We had very regular email and phone conversations with her, probably every two weeks, to say, "Okay, why can't we get sign-off? What's going on?" She would say, "Well, I'm going to try to get Dr. Mazza's approval by the end of today," and then we would get another email saying, "He's not available; he's going away for a couple of days," so it was another week. All up, it did not get signed off by Ornge until June 4, 2010.

M^{me} France G  linas: Wow, that reads like a soap opera. Any more?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Well, it continues on a little bit. We're not quite there yet.

On June 4, since we had gone to all the stakeholders and everybody had reviewed the report and provided their comments and they were accepting all the findings and recommendations as they were, we were then asked by internal audit to send out the report on that date, June 4, 2010, to both the emergency health services branch as well as Ornge and to obtain the management responses, because obviously that's something that we always try to get before we issue a final report.

We asked for responses back by July 12, 2010. Emergency health services branch gave their responses on July 16, 2010. However, we received a note from Dr. Mazza saying, "I won't be able to meet that deadline. I need to submit this report to my board for their review and their approval. I already have a full board meeting for July, so it won't be able to go to the board until August 2010." Obviously, it went to the board there, I can assume, and they gave us their responses on August 27, 2010.

We then incorporated all the responses, had some contact again with internal audit, and then issued the final report on September 10, 2010.

M^{me} France G  linas: Is this one story that you tell often, as in the way not to conduct that kind of business, a case study into what should not be?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Well, if there was actually something that we could have done about it, then perhaps you could use it as a case study, but we had no control over this process.

M^{me} France G  linas: The part that I found rather peculiar is when Ornge decided, "Okay, we're not going to deal with this anymore. Legal is going to handle it." Is this something you've seen in not-for-profit health organizations before?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I must say, I have not seen that. I can't speculate on the reasons that Ornge decided to take that approach: for legal to be the main contact for us and to really handle the finalizing of the report. It's definitely unusual.

M^{me} France G  linas: The person who got sick, it seems it would have been a good time to say—well, maybe somebody else in legal—at the end of the day, it was Dr. Mazza who signed off on it, but he wouldn't budge. He wanted legal to be your contact.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

M^{me} France G  linas: And you tried to say, "Well, this thing has to move," to no avail?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Absolutely.

M^{me} France G  linas: Now that you can look back, did you make any connection between this experience—because really, it was an experience—and what we've now discovered with the working of our Auditor General?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Obviously, I've read the Auditor General's report, and I think he mentions in there that it was difficult to get information from Ornge and that it oftentimes took a long time to get that information. We encountered the same problems.

M^{me} France G  linas: The exact same.

The one line that everybody is quoting from your report, that you've made it clear that this is a line that is being used out of context because it refers specifically to objective 5, and people are using it to describe—have you ever mentioned that to anybody, that those comments that were first made by Dr. Mazza that all was well should be used appropriately, as in, this is for objective 5, not for the whole report? Did you ever share that with anybody except us?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: As in—

M^{me} France G  linas: As in when you did your debriefing with the Ministry of Finance, when you talked to the people at the Ministry of Health, emergency health services, anybody else.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Obviously, the responses would have been sent to the Ministry of Health internal audit team—because at that point in time it was about management response, so they would not have been provided to us because we were engaged by the internal audit group. So the management responses went straight to the ministry's audit team. Normally, it's best practice that management responses—they can reply in whatever way they see fit. So internal audit would have seen how we would have replied. Whether they necessarily agreed with it or not, I can't comment on that. Organizations are certainly allowed to respond however they see fit and agree or not agree.

M^{me} France G  linas: If we look at the size of your report—you have the seven objectives. If we look at all of the recommendations that you've made, to me, as somebody who takes the time to read it all through, you had already flagged a number of areas that needed significant improvement. This gets shared with the ministry—at the same time as a whistle-blower blows a whistle. Months go by. In your experience, would it be normal for some action to be taken during those months of waiting? Sure, you hadn't finished your work, but you had given them a first final draft. Then a year and a half went by. It seems to me that during that year and a half, time was not used wisely to act upon your recommendations.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I think from the time we issued our report and our recommendations, in the year and a half afterwards, we would not have known whether the ministry had taken actions based on our recommendations. We would not have that information.

My first observations or what I heard about it was really when the Auditor General issued his report and at the time that he performed his audit work, as well as his conclusions, findings and recommendations. He was saying that he agreed with what we had found and, at that point in time, it was still the same. Obviously, the Auditor General was questioning, as well, why was no action taken?

I think, from some earlier comments I heard, one of the few things that were implemented was more formalization of the quarterly meetings and that they would be minutes and signed off.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a couple of minutes.

M^{me} France G  linas: Just to focus on that, we're now in July 2010. You were about to release your September 10 final report with the responses that you had. Did you debrief anybody on this, on and after September 10, once you finally got the sign-off from everybody and delivered what we now have? Who did you debrief?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: There was no debrief. At that point in time, the report was finalized. We had received management responses, and the report was issued to the Ontario internal audit team. After that, we had no interaction with any of the parties.

M^{me} France G  linas: They had this for a year and a half. When they responded to you on July 16, you could see by their answers that no work had been done on the recommendations that they had for 16 months—more than this. Would it be appropriate for you to comment on that?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I don't think it would be appropriate for us to comment on that. I think that would really have to come from the internal audit team, as we were engaged by them to undertake this review. We would report to them. I think at that point in time, if they saw that that was necessary, then they would have to take those required steps.

M^{me} France G  linas: Did you expect them to work on your recommendations?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Of course. That's why we make recommendations. That's why we do this important work—to bring to light certain areas that are perhaps of concern. And they should be of concern to the ministry, especially the main recommendations that we had made.

M^{me} France G  linas: Would you say that in other similar reviews that you've done, you have seen more of a pickup on your recommendations than what we've seen with this particular one?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Most definitely. In most of the similar engagements that I've undertaken, I've certainly seen that recommendations, especially if they're significant to the operations, are implemented quite promptly.

M^{me} France G  linas: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move on to the government. Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Thank you Chair, and thank you, Ms. Kiel.

We know that Meyers Norris Penny was retained to conduct a review of Ornge. Prior to this retainer, had Meyers Norris Penny been retained by the government of Ontario or one of the ministries to conduct reviews or audits, or was this the first?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No, I believe we had done some smaller engagements on behalf of the Ontario government.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Is it safe to assume that MNP was also experienced in providing of audits and consultant services in the health care sector?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, we were.

Mr. Phil McNeely: So Meyers Norris Penny, or MNP, was experienced at performing this type of review and would be well positioned to produce a report on which the government could rely. Is that correct? Was that the reason?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Absolutely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: What was your role specifically in this retainer by the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care relating to the Ontario air ambulance and related services? What was your role?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: As per our response to the request for services, I was the knowledge leader. That meant I was the co-engagement leader for the engagement. John Caggianiello of our office, as he resides here in Toronto, was the day-to-day contact between the Ontario internal audit as well as with Ornge. When we commenced our fieldwork, I was the fieldwork partner, as you may say. I was there to conduct all the fieldwork and supervise any other staff that we have on that engagement.

Mr. Phil McNeely: You issued your final report on September 10, 2010.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Was that really a report up to about the same period in 2008? Was there any new information after 2008?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No. Normal engagements of these types, when the objectives are very specific and the time period is very specific, even though other types of information may become available after that point in time, you would not incorporate that within such a report.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Did you review and sign off on the final report before it was provided to the ministry?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, I did.

Mr. Phil McNeely: You would agree that MNP was comfortable with the report and confident in its findings? Otherwise, the final report would not have been provided to the ministry. Is that correct?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Absolutely. We were very thorough in our review.

Mr. Phil McNeely: The final report says that MNP was engaged to review specific areas relating to organizational effectiveness in connection with the delivery of air ambulance and related services provided by Ornge to the province of Ontario. It also states that MNP looked specifically at seven objectives, which you went over earlier: the assessment of financial management processes; assessment of the appropriateness of Ornge's procurement processes; assessment of the integrity of the financial and service data reports provided by Ornge to the ministry; an assessment of whether Ornge was in compliance with its performance agreement; an assessment of whether Ornge was using provincial funds economically and efficiently; an assessment of the enterprise risk management framework; and an assessment of the governance and accountability framework and mechanisms in place within the ministry and Ornge.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

Mr. Phil McNeely: This was an accurate overview of your responsibilities. That's what you said earlier.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

Mr. Phil McNeely: MNP's final report was quite lengthy and detailed about the overall conclusions of the final report. I will quote from page 2 of the final report: "Overall, our review indicated that Ornge is using provincial grant funding economically, efficiently and for the purposes intended in providing air ambulance and related services for the province." Is this accurate?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Whether that was our overall conclusion or whether that was a statement within the executive summary?

Mr. Phil McNeely: I'll just read it again. "Overall, our review indicated that Ornge is using provincial grant funding economically"—these are the words of the report—"efficiently and for the purposes intended in providing air ambulance and related services for the province."

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I think, as I outlined in my opening statement as well, that was certainly not the conclusion for the entire report. It was a conclusion that specifically addressed objective 5. If our readers interpreted it like that, it was certainly not the intent of the report to convey that message, because we had 26 very specific recommendations in regard to the other six objectives.

Mr. Phil McNeely: The 26 recommendations: We have them here, of course. This is a pretty definitive statement that you've made. This is, I would think, comforting to the owner, which happened to be the government of Ontario. Do you have any other comments on it? How can you be so definitive? The information is a year and a half late. You're signing it in 2010. Any comments?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: We're not making that comment up until September 10, 2010. I think it's really important to understand that our review period covered 2005 to 2008. The comment in our conclusion that funds were used economically and efficiently really only related to objective 5, which required us to look at the source and use of funds. We did appropriate types of audit objectives to look at how best to review the documentation. We obviously looked at all the sources, how they were received, also how they were used. Based on that, as at November 30, 2008, we could conclude that at that point in time, they were used economically and efficiently.

Mr. Phil McNeely: The difficulty you had with Ornge coming to meetings, to receiving the report—you said that they were the reason it took a year, a year and a half—

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Partly.

Mr. Phil McNeely: —to get that. This didn't concern you, that there seemed to be a reluctance to have this report arrive?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I don't think it concerned us that it took so long. As I said, there were a couple of specific reasons for it. First of all, there was how the report was staged and issued and sent to the various stakeholders for their review and input. That certainly took more time than you would normally anticipate or than you would normally expect if you disseminate the report to all parties at the same time.

Certainly, it did take a lot of time for Ornge, once they had the report, to review it, to comment on it and to get back to us. There were a couple of specific reasons. One of them, as I alluded to earlier, was that legal counsel had fallen sick, quite seriously. Why it would have taken them a couple of more months to finally provide us with their comments, I can't comment on that. But it was certainly both MNP as well as Ontario internal audit that were constantly following up with Ornge and saying, "We would like to finalize this review. We would like to get an exit meeting. Can you please respond?"

Mr. Phil McNeely: The final report found a number of other positive conclusions, which I will briefly review for you. With respect to the procurement process—this is at page 35—the final report concluded that the procurement processes were appropriate, documented and in accordance with the performance agreement, best practices and in the spirit of government directives, ensuring openness, transparency, fairness, competitiveness and value for money.

Regarding compliance with the performance agreement, the final report noted that Ornge was not in compliance with some administrative sections. "However, none of these issues affects the delivery of services, and we have concluded that Ornge is using grant funding efficiently, effectively and in accordance with the provisions of the PA."

With the 26 recommendations, is that statement a fair statement to make?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, because that very statement and that last comment, as I mentioned earlier, was a specific conclusion with respect to objective 5 and objective 2, the procurement process, and objective 5 being the use and source of funds. They're obviously very connected because they both deal with how money is received and how money is spent.

With respect to objective 2, where we looked at the procurement process, we looked at the process. We looked at whether the procurement process, as implemented by Ornge, was in accordance with government procurement policies and procedures, whether they were in accordance with best practices. What that means is, you look at things like, is there a delegation of authority in place, and is that in accordance with the performance agreement? It looks at, for purchases less than $100,000, do you have an adequate process in place to ensure that you get a fair price for services requested? So you would get three written quotes. For anything over $100,000, there's a requirement to go for public tender. Did Ornge do all of those things? Yes, they did.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Lastly, in respect to risk management, the final report found that, "Overall, our review inlicated that the risk management approach and capability within Ornge is effective.” Down the road, obviously, this was not something that we’re very pleased with.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Well, we—

Mr. Phil McNeely: So the conclusions I have read out are quite positive, that you made. Would you agree?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. McNeely, let her answer the question.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Our objective was to look at Ornge’s enterprise risk management process.

There was an external consultant engaged in 2006 to develop that enterprise risk management framework. At that point in time, an organization-wide risk assessment was done to see where the key risks within the organization were from the point of view of, “What are your objectives?” They were to provide air ambulance services. “What are your key risks?” Some of the key risks that were highlighted in that risk assessment process were that a communication centre disaster recovery plan was an issue, that their information technology platform was all old; that some of their planes were old; that the contractual agreements that they inherited once they took on the provision of air ambulance services needed to be reviewed.

At that point in time, the enterprise risk management framework was adequate, and the policies and procedures set up to support that were in line with best practice.

Mr. Phil McNeely: You’re saying that today. I think you’ve answered the question. I just asked you another one: Do you agree that, following receipt of this report and taking into account many of the conclusions drawn in the final report and particularly the finding that the provincial grant money was being used—the grant money it received—effectively, efficiently and for the purposes intended, the Minister of Health would have felt confident that Ornge was an effective organization and was using provincial funds appropriately? Wouldn’t you agree that this would be a nice report to receive with those statements you’ve made in your summary?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: No. Once again, I think that you’re pulling it out of context because, as I mentioned earlier, that specific conclusion relates to objective 5, where we looked at the source and use of funds. There were six other objectives that we looked at, and as a result we had 26 recommendations—some of them, I think, very serious. Once again, they were confirmed in the Auditor General’s report that was issued earlier this year.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Then might I suggest that the conclusions in your report did not match the recommendations that were made?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: No, I don’t agree. I think it’s taken out of context. It was certainly not our intent to say, in general, that the entire organization is running in accordance with best practice; that’s not what we said. We said we had 26 recommendations whereby there should be a specific focus on the corporate structure of the organization, the performance agreement, communication between the Ministry of Health and Ornge, the fact that various reports were not provided on time, and that the variance analysis that was provided by Ornge was not sufficient for the ministry to provide their conclusions. So, I think our report did certainly not say that Ornge was operating—

Mr. Phil McNeely: I would suggest, with these 26 recommendations, that the recommendations showed that Ornge had pulled up their socks and got a lot of things straightened out. I think that having the conclusions you’ve made has devalued the important recommendations—you say they’re important.

We’ll get on to the Auditor General’s report. You’re aware the Auditor General of Ontario recently completed a review—it’s not recent now—and released a report regarding Ontario air ambulance and its related services? Are you aware of that?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Are you familiar with the report?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes, I have read it.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Needless to say, the Auditor General found a number of issues at Ornge, ranging from secrecy to financial irregularities. He went so far as to say that he was stonewalled—you said it was difficult getting information—and noted, at page 2 of his report, that he was only able to access records relating to entities controlled by Ornge or of which Ornge was the beneficiary; he was denied access to records of any of the other entities. MNP’s final report certainly outlines about 26 recommendations but makes no similar allegations of secrecy or financial irregularities. Is it safe to assume that, had MNP been stonewalled or prevented by management from completing its review, MNP would have included these concerns in the final report?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: If we had encountered those issues, they would have been included within our report.

Mr. Phil McNeely: But you said you had difficulty getting information.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: We had delays in getting information. In the end, we were not denied access to any information that we had requested. As I said earlier in response to a question, if Dr. Mazza did not agree with a certain type of information that we had requested, we had to provide him with the reasons why we wanted to request that information. Our request for information would always specifically address these specific objectives. Therefore, even though, perhaps, there was some delay, he could not deny us access to that.

Mr. Phil McNeely: What was the general attitude of Ornge executives towards the review you were doing?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: The general attitude was that everything with respect to the review had to be approved by Dr. Mazza. Our main contact was Maria Renzella, the VP of finance. She was our day-to-day contact. Any requests that we had for information or additional interviews, we had to go through her, but she could not make the final decision on any of our requests. That had to come from Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Phil McNeely: My final question is: Do you stand by your final report?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes, I do.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Thank you.

Mr. David Zimmer: Time?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have four minutes left, if you want to do anything.

Mr. David Zimmer: In hindsight, looking back, would you agree that the government receiving your report—and the recommendations and the comments that my colleague Mr. McNeely just made in his questions to you—that it perhaps gave the government of the day, the minister of the day, the deputy minister of the day, perhaps a sense of well-being that was not in fact deserved—that is, the well-being of Ornge?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: No. At that point in time we had, I think, sufficient recommendations that they should seriously have a look at the various aspects of Ornge and whether that was in line with and in the spirit of the initial performance agreement that they did have.

Mr. David Zimmer: But in some of the comments that Mr. McNeely read out to you in the summary—if I was receiving the report, it paints a much rosier picture of things at Ornge that in fact were extant.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: I do not agree. I think the executive summary contains both that one statement that everybody seems to be focused on, but the executive summary also outlines all the areas that we found that the ministry should be concerned about and look into.

Mr. David Zimmer: But it seems to me, reading the report over, and as Mr. McNeely has pointed out, when push came to shove, and despite all of the difficulties that you had getting information, and the concerns that you raised in the report, at the end of the day you softened the report around the edges and it gave an unwarranted sense of confidence to the recipient of the report.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: I do not agree with that statement. I don't think we softened the report. If I look at the first version we had issued to the Ministry of Health and I compare that to the latest version, no findings or recommendations had been changed other than what I alluded to earlier, which was with respect to the risk assessment done for the transfer payment directive.

Mr. David Zimmer: Let me read the conclusion again, the final report. The "procurement process is appropriate, documented and is in accordance with the" performance agreement, "best practices and in the spirit of government directives, ensuring openness, transparency, fairness, competitiveness and value for money.

Further, "Ornge is using grant funding efficiently, effectively and in accordance with the provisions of the PA."

In fact, that wasn't the case, and if that doesn't give someone—the recipient of the report—a level of comfort and confidence, then what would?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Once again, that just addressed one of our objectives. Yes, we looked at the source of funds. Yes, we looked at how they were used. We looked at the organization structure, at the various entities. At that point in time, none of the unusual transactions that the Auditor General is, for instance, referring to in his report—none of those had occurred in 2008.

Mr. David Zimmer: At any time—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please, let her finish.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: None of those had occurred in 2008. So, based on the work that we did in 2008—there were no transactions with any of the entities that were set up, other than Ornge. For the type of transactions that we did look at, they were in line with procurement processes and they were based on normal best practices, such as, any expense over $100,000 was going for public tender.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. All right. Here's my last question.

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Sure.

Mr. David Zimmer: We've heard from Mr. Klees, and we've heard for days and days now at this hearing about—as Mr. Klees refers to it, and Ms. Gélinas—all of the red flags that popped up all over the years on this. You, from your resumé and your company, are highly experienced consultants. Did you or MNP ever recognize any red flags, or was that just everybody else?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: We identified red flags. They were outlined in our recommendations.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was the most serious red flag?

Ms. Margaret Kiel: The fact that they should look at the corporate structure. They had to look at whether the entities that were set up outside of Ornge were in line with the performance agreement and whether the ministry was comfortable with that corporate structure. That was the most important finding, which we outlined in recommendation number 1.

Mr. David Zimmer: You go on to say, "None of these issues affects the delivery of services, and we've concluded Ornge is okay."

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Yes, because at that point in time, the entities were set up but there were no transactions in them as yet. At that—

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you ever pick up the phone and call somebody at the ministry and say, "Look, off the record, here are some red flags. You should have a really"—

Ms. Margaret Kiel: Our red flag was recommendation number 1, which we discussed with the Ministry of Health internal audit department in early November, and onwards from that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you, Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move on to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: I just want to thank Mr. Zimmer for asking that question, which gave Ms. Kiel an opportunity to talk about all the red flags that are in all the 26 recommendations that anybody who read beyond the headlines—which is the point I made earlier. If someone stops at the headlines, this a very sanitized report. But one would expect that people within the Ministry of Finance who commissioned the report and individuals in the Ministry of Health who have oversight responsibilities would have read beyond the headlines and looked very carefully at those recommendations that raise significant concerns, and they failed to do that.

I don't want you to feel badly about this, because there are numerous reports—I tabled one yesterday with the minister, which her own Ministry of Health commissioned and was presented as a confidential advice to the minister. The minister hadn't seen it. Six senior bureaucrats who were copied on it obviously hadn't made any effort to advise the minister. Many of the same issues that you raised red flags about here were in that report as well.

I just want to say this: I believe that what you have helped us do is to at least help the government understand that there are three guilty parties in this situation. Clearly, the minister has recognized Mr. Mazza as having made bad decisions, and she fired him. She recognized that the board of directors did not meet their fiduciary responsibilities, and she fired them. There's one last piece of the puzzle, and that is that there were people within the Ministry of Health who failed in their oversight responsibilities, which the Auditor General also pointed out. You, with your report, were helping the people within the Ministry of Health to do their job. They failed to do their job. So we have to see just how much help the government is willing to take in terms of dealing with the third guilty party, which is the Ministry of Health.

The Auditor General, when he presented his audit report, made an interesting comment. He said, "What I saw here didn't pass the smell test." When you closed the books on your report, did it pass the smell test to you, in the sense that the Auditor General made that comment?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: At that point in time, as I said, our recommendations were such that we said, "You need to look at these things. I think there are certain things starting up, entities being set up, and the ministry needs to be comfortable that the intentions of those entities are in line with Ornge and that there is a specific tie to that in case, say, assets were going to be transferred to any of those other entities"—and the same with the communication between the ministry and Ornge.

We clearly outlined that the information provided by Ornge was in all instances perhaps not complete, like the fourth-quarter in-year reports, like the variance analysis that they provided. So therefore we said, "The ministry needs to ask more questions, they need to have more formalized meetings and they need to make sure that they get the explanations that they desire in order for them to provide adequate oversight." The last one was the performance agreement. Certain provisions were not complied with, so that was something that the ministry should address to review what they were.

Mr. Frank Klees: I would have thought that, specifically relating to the performance agreement—your notes on page 8, at the bottom, which I'll just read into the record:

"Ornge has changed its organizational structure to deliver air ambulance and related services, which structure was not contemplated in the" performance agreement. "In addition, there are administrative compliance-related issues, communication matters and typical government provisions for funding that should be addressed."

Anyone reading this report, whether it's in the Ministry of Finance or whether it's in the Ministry of Health, should have seen this as 10 red flags waving at them. For some reason, they chose to ignore it. I think that's one of the reasons that we're here today. So I thank you for your presentation.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move on to the NDP. Who would like to go? Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you again for coming. When Mr. Zimmer asked you what was the most significant red flag, you didn't hesitate. You said, "The corporate structure." You went on to say, "We discussed this with the Ministry of Health in early November and onward." I'm going to do a little memory test on you right now to see what you remember of those conversations. I'm looking for times, place, people, was anybody taking minutes, that kind of stuff. Where was it?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Initially we would have discussions—talking about November, that would have been with the internal audit group, because they were the ones commissioning us, and they would be the ones that we had preliminary discussions with, with respect to our findings, our recommendations and any comments they may have had: "Did you look into this? Did you look at that?" We would have had that dialogue with them from that point onwards.

From the time that our draft report was issued, it was obviously issued first to the ministry, so we had discussions with the emergency health services branch, Mr. Malcolm Bates specifically. But from the ministry we also had discussions with the assistant deputy minister at that point in time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you remember who the assistant deputy minister was?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Ruth Hawkins.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It was Ruth?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. So you have your draft report, you have your recommendation number 1—you speak with your words, but you speak with your actions. You put it as recommendation number 1. When you say that you presented it to the minister or the ministry before you presented it to the emergency health services branch, who do you mean by the minister or the ministry?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: That would have been the assistant deputy minister.

M^{me} France Gélinas: To Ruth?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you remember specifically: Did you go see her in her office? Would you meet someone specific? Would anybody else be with her—note takers or anything like this?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, she would have had—I do not recall the name of that person. I could certainly find out for you, if that's of interest. But we met in her office and we would have gone through our recommendations, one of them being the corporate structure.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you remember if there was any reaction on her part? When you raised that red flag, your recommendation number 1—which, to me, is significant—did she find it significant as well?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I cannot comment on what she was thinking, but—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did she ask questions?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Sure, she asked questions. Another thing that occurred is that, to my knowledge, the Ministry of Finance legal department then started its own review into the corporate structure of Ornge and related entities.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Say that again. The Ministry of Finance legal department—aren't they the people who had hired you to start out with?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No, that was the internal audit department. I'm talking about the legal services branch.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, of the Ministry of Finance, who would have started their own investigation of the—

Ms. Margriet Kiel: They were going to do an audit on the corporate structure of Ornge and its related entities.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who told you that?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I have some documentation and some email correspondence from the legal services branch where they're asking for specific documentation from us with respect to the various entities, like the objects, like the incorporation dates, discussions that we had with management as to the intention of those entities.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So it was the Ministry of Finance legal department, not the Ministry of Health legal services branch, that did an investigation of the corporate structure.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I will just have to confirm that for you.

It was the legal services branch of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care and Ministry of Health Promotion. It's on the letterhead.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So it was the legal services branch of the Ministry of Health.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Because of the exchange, you know that after you flagged it for them as your number one recommendation, they went in and they looked at the corporate structure. Do you have any idea if it was in depth, if it lasted longer than the delays that you had, if it was maybe some of the reason for the delays?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I can't comment on that. I have not seen the outcome of that audit, so I'm not sure when a final report would have been issued and what time frame that included. I'm not sure.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Was there anyone specific who said that they were going to follow up with that—a specific lawyer or a specific individual from the legal services branch?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes, it was Bill Georgas, counsel for the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So there were some reactions, then.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So you presented your number one recommendation. There's an exchange; there are questions. Then you see that it's actually actioned off to the legal services branch. And then it goes into a black hole that nobody knows where it ended. But it started, anyway; we know that much.

Then, when you presented the—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're just about out of time, by the way.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No kidding.

I thank you for coming. Thank you for sharing with us what you know.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No problem. My pleasure.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the government. Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: I'd just like to ask the Auditor General for his comments on this Review of Air Ambulance and Related Services, Meyers Norris Penny, September 10. That was something you obviously read before you went in to do your audit. Could you comment on that?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I see the two points of view as to the overall conclusion. I have to say, when we read it there were some areas of the report where we reduced some of our work. For instance, we didn't do a lot of work in the procurement area because of the work done by Meyers Norris Penny. Again, it was pretty hard to miss the first recommendation about the inter-corporate structure.

I could understand your reading of the report—the front of the executive summary, where it does say that, overall, things were pretty good. But when you look at some of the language in the detail of the report—one of the issues was communication, and some of the language used is “frustration,” “confusion” and “conflict.” Again, when you get into the detail, that's pretty strong wording and I would certainly interpret that.

So there were some red flags in the report, and based on their work, we did reduce some of our work.

The other thing that I would say—Mr. Klees's question about, did it pass the smell test? Again, being the auditor, we can look at whatever we want, whenever we want, so we could look at compensation and some of these issues, and that did impact my overall comment about that; whereas Meyers Norris had six specific objectives, so they weren't really getting into the depth of what we could get into.

I guess that would be my overall perspective, Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Thank you. How much time do we have left?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about five minutes.

Mr. Phil McNeely: David Zimmer will handle that.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just following up on that, Mr. Auditor General, you said, to use your language, you read the MNP report and it had a rosy opening statement, if you will.

Mr. Jim McCarter: At the end of the introduction—overall, it talked about that they spent the funds with due regard for economy and efficiency. Now, again, as Ms. Kiel said, that was meant as one of the conclusions of the overall objective, but again, when you get into the detail, there were a number of recommendations. Some of the language, to me, was—when you're using words like "frustration," "confusion" and "conflict," we get into that sense that—the client always likes you to tone down that sort of language, but I suspect that maybe there was a bit arm-twisting to tone down that sort of language. Again, that part of it certainly wasn't sanitized.

Mr. David Zimmer: You're an auditor also. You've read lots of these reports. Do you think it would have been the better practice to take some of that detail which really raised the red flags further down in the report and stick it right up at the front of the report so it sort of jumped off the page, given we're dealing with public monies?

Mr. Jim McCarter: It's hard for me to say that without having the perspective of going through the whole report and doing all the detail and getting the depth of it. It's really up to the people doing the work to make the decision as to what they decide to put up front or what they decide to emphasize.

Mr. David Zimmer: Mr. Auditor, what thought was in your mind when you speculated, just a minute or so ago to the MNP representative, that perhaps there was, to use your expression, arm-twisting that went on by Ornge to massage the report a little bit?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I was very interested in the answer to that question because, to be honest, the level of arm-twisting—this is sort of inside baseball because it stays sort of within the government. All of our reports, it's outside baseball; everything in our reports can hit the front page of the paper. So, I was a bit curious to see what level of encouragement there was to sanitize the report. What I gather is basically that whether there was or not, the draft report stayed largely the same with respect to a number of the recommendations. So, whether there was some arm-twisting or encouragement or whatever, I gather there wasn't a lot of change from the initial draft version to the outside version. But I'm always interested because, as you can imagine, we go through that process in our audits as well.

Mr. David Zimmer: Perhaps, in fairness, to give you a chance to comment on the arm-twisting observation.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: Sure. Obviously there's always dialogue that you have with the people whom you give your report to and who were the subject of a specific review. I must comment that at any time when we had meetings with any of the stakeholders involved, we had Dave Schell, the internal auditor that we reported to on behalf of the ministry, with us at any meeting. So, any type of wordsmithing or a little word here and there that would have been taken out—he would have had to approve all of that prior to us making any changes to the report because he was the person who issued that request for services and he was the one who engaged us.

Mr. David Zimmer: With the benefit of hindsight, if you had to write the report again knowing what has gone on since, would you have written a stronger report?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: I think our report would stay as it is. In hindsight, it's obviously always easy, perhaps, to make particular statements. Seeing that a lot of people have really taken the three sentences—I think it's three—in the executive summary and have taken that as being the overall conclusion and then have not read any further—would I have either changed that statement or would I have taken it elsewhere or would I have had other recommendations put forward? I may have considered that. But as I said, it was three sentences in the entire executive summary as well as 26 recommendations. So in my mind, I think it clearly outlined the specific objectives that we were asked to address, the findings that we had for each of those findings and 26, I think, very valid recommendations.

Mr. David Zimmer: Any thought that you might have gotten caught up in the Mazza charisma?

Ms. Margriet Kiel: No, because by the time the draft report was issued we were not dealing with Dr. Mazza again.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you, and thank you very much for coming before the committee today. It's very much appreciated.

Ms. Margriet Kiel: It was my pleasure. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We are recessed until 4:30.

The committee recessed from 1600 to 1630.

MR. RAINER BELTZNER

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'd like to call this committee back to order and welcome Mr. Rainer Beltzner back to the committee. He has been here once before, so—

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Just to remind you that you're still under oath from your previous time.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Welcome back. Did you wish to make any statement to begin with?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No, I made my statement the last time I came. I'd prefer to have the committee use my time to ask additional questions. I'm here to help as best I can.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. It's the NDP's time to go first.

Mr. Frank Klees: Could we just ask him who is attending with him?

Mr. Lincoln Caylor: Lincoln Caylor, from Bennett Jones, counsel to the former board members.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry, I missed that.

Mr. Lincoln Caylor: Lincoln Caylor, from Bennett Jones.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. And you said counsel to—

Mr. Lincoln Caylor: Mr. Beltzner and the rest of the former board members.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. It's time for the NDP to go first. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I just wanted to check: Are we going to go in 20-minute rotations?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, roughly 20-minute rotations. If you find you're in the middle of a discussion, if you want to adjust it either shorter or slightly longer, that's fine. I will do my best to adjust it so that everyone gets the same time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Welcome to Queen's Park once again.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Thank you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The last time we talked, you went into some details as to how you had come to Queen's Park in 2011 to brief a number of people on the corporate structure and the strategic direction that Ornge was going in.

Tonight, we're going to do a little memory-testing exercise. I'd like you to go back from that period—including it, if you want—and tell me: Were there other occasions where you as a board, or you as a chair, or you as a representative of Ornge, took the initiative to inform the minister or the Ministry of Health or other ministries of this government of the work of Ornge?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: There are no other specific situations where that occurred. There were certainly some meetings that I initiated—for example, meeting with the ADM at the time, Patricia Li, with respect to, first of all, the progress on the Provincial Auditor's draft report; and secondly, proactively from my side, meeting with Patricia Li again—and this would have been in the fall of 2011, I believe—to talk about the funding increase percentage that the government had allocated to Ornge for that year, and some of the challenges with respect to Ornge having to deal with increasing fuel costs and HST. I just wanted to make sure that Patricia was fully aware of all of the financial challenges that the organization was facing as a result of the labour agreements, the fuel changes, as well as the taxation changes, none of which had been included as a provision for adjustment under the performance agreement, so it was something that Ornge would have to absorb.

Our expectation at the time—the reason I went—was that we would receive about 3.5% annually, and that's what our budget was based on. I believe that year, if my memory serves me correctly, we received 2%. Of course, as we were well into the year, as with most organizations—you budget on 3.5%; you get 2%—then it's a matter of, "We've got to do something to adjust."

I just wanted to make sure in my own mind that Patricia was well aware of those additional financial challenges.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When would that have taken place?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I think that was in early fall 2011.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Early fall of 2011. So it will be a year, soon, that you had asked to talk to her. Did both communications take place at the same time, as in wanting some updates as to the auditor's—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No, there were separate meetings a couple of weeks apart. I could probably dig up the exact dates, but my memory says—it was clearly after we got a copy of Jim McCarter's draft report, I think in September, if I recall correctly.

Mr. Jim McCarter: It was in mid-September, I think, Mr. Beltzner.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes, mid-September, about there. I had a meeting with Patricia on that basis.

The other meeting—I'm just reflecting back. My memory will, you know—

M^{me} France Gélinas: It works that way.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I'm not sure if it was the same meeting or a prior meeting—I can verify that for you, if you wish—but I had another meeting with Patricia Li where we were talking about the Provincial Auditor's audit. I had expressed some concern about how the audit was validating data, in particular a meeting that we had with the audit team where they came and said, "We want to sit down with you"—the representatives from Ornge—"and we want to validate that we have the facts correct." The process of that validation was that the members of the audit team would rapidly read out data, which, from my experience as an auditor—and I've done lots of audits—if you want to cause confusion and get people confused very quickly, that's one way to do it. So I asked the audit team to slow down, to present the data in bits so that if they wanted confirmation, we could obviously absorb it and say, "Yes, that's right," or, "No, that's wrong" and so on.

Whether it was by phone or a meeting, I can't remember. I had a chat with Patricia Li basically to say, "Is this normal, based on your experience and having dealt with provincial audit teams?"

Anyway, we got that resolved, Jim. Not to belabour the point, but we got it resolved fine. It was just the process that was a little awkward.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Remind me of when you started on the board at Ornge.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I started on an advisory board before the company was created. To the best of my recollection, it would be late 2005, somewhere in there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So from 2005 on, had you or the board ever initiated other communications with anyone in the government?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Not that I'm aware of, no.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So really, the first time was when you were presenting your new corporate structure. You came with Mr. Apps and you came with Mr. Lepine and you presented it.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: That is correct. Just to clarify, the reason for that was that we had created an independent committee of the Ornge board to review the proposed transaction to create Ornge Global and the relationship and the various licensing agreements and so on. When we in the independent committee reported back to the board to say, “Okay, we’re comfortable with the way that the money would flow from the profit side to the Ornge side. We’re comfortable with those arrangements,” and so on, then it was put to the board to say, “Should we proceed? Have all the i’s been dotted and the t’s crossed?”

There were two items that we felt needed particular attention, more from a good due diligence standpoint. One item was related to the credit rating that Ornge had, because obviously Ornge had a bond. The rate was dependent on the credit rating. We wanted to make certain, first of all, that Ornge’s credit rating would not be impacted and, secondly, that because of any imputed relationship between Ornge and the government, that the government’s credit rating would not be impacted. So there was a condition, if you like, put on the board approval to move ahead that said there has to be some confirmation of that credit rating issue, which was done.

The second condition was a condition that said we have to be comfortable that the government is aware of this. This is one of these situations we talk about on the board and, from my own point of view, I said, “I’m not going to be comfortable until I sit in front of the people and tell the story and see the colour of their eyes, so to speak. If I hear any objection, if I get any objection”—I wanted to make sure that there was a clear communication of things to the government and an opportunity for me to hear any rebuttal or concern or questions. None of that, by the way, came about. There were some interesting questions for clarification, but there was no indication in any of the three formal presentations of any negative reaction whatsoever.

From my perspective, it appeared from the lack of questions and the lack of response that people around the table were not surprised. After all, I had sent the letter, back on January 11, 13, I can’t recall—one of those dates. So all of this was set out in the letter that had been widely distributed some time before. The meetings with the other government ministries occurred in February, March, thereabouts. So there would have been plenty of time, in my view, to have some form of negative reaction from government, and there wasn’t any. On that basis, we, as a board, said, “The government has been informed. We haven’t heard anything. Therefore, it must be fine.”

Obviously, we offered clarification on questions as they came up about why this structure and why this and so on. But other than that, there was nothing that came forward that suggested we should not proceed with full steam.

Hopefully that answers that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, it does. Those are initiatives that you had taken to reach out to government to basically share the direction that Ornge was going.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Can you remember the opposite way around, where the government reached out to you to get information from you? And when I say “government,” take it broadly.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Most certainly. Let me go back. I think the first time that I received a call or a communication from government was from Ruth Hawkins. That would have been in 2008. It might have been a couple of calls. I’m trying to remember the sequence. Again, I can look it up and provide you with specifics. Certainly, there was one call related to a consolidation question, and there was one call related to a letter that Ruth had received internally, within the ministry, from an individual outside who had raised a number of concerns about Ornge. Ruth called me. We had set up a meeting—myself, Luis Navas, Ruth Hawkins and—I hope I’m right; I think I am—Ken Flynn from the ministry’s internal audit. We met at Julia’s restaurant in Oakville around about December 6 or December 8, 2008. She shared with me the content of this letter, which was accusatory of Ornge having—if I remember correctly; I don’t have a copy of the letter—two sets of books, doing a bunch of things, including having exorbitant bonuses, or something of that nature.

I believe Ken Flynn looked at the issue of the two sets of books. We certainly looked at it internally. That was nonsense, simply put. I did communicate back to Ruth Hawkins, I believe in a formal letter—which would be on file with Ruth, no doubt—which detailed the process of compensation and the bonus process. I basically conclude that from the board’s point of view, there wasn’t anything inappropriate going on at the time.

Around about that time, we were also dealing with—I don’t know whether it was a result of that or before that, but in any event, then came the ministry’s internal audit and the process there, and MNP and that process.

That was a communication from the ministry to me. Other than that, I’m trying to recall—I know that there might have been a call from Patricia Li at some point about something or other, but that would have been in 2011, possibly as a question as to the status of our response to the AG’s draft or something. Perhaps Patricia would have a better memory of that, but very, very few communications back and forth.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Except for kind of a busy period in 2008, where you got a call from Ruth Hawkins regarding the consolidation at the time, then you got another call, followed by a meeting regarding a letter with concerns, specifically the two sets of books and the bonus, which you responded to in writing, and communications from Ms. Li late in 2011, after the AG’s draft report, those are the only times you can remember that the government—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No. I just remembered some additional ones.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sure.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I did receive, either addressed to me directly or copied to me, letters from—again, I have to go back and try and find these—the assistant deputy minister, the deputy minister or the minister informing me of changes to the budget allocation. “You’ve done a wonderful job; you get 3.5%,” or whatever the case may be. There were a series—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you call this the standard letter you got every year with you—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes. There were a number of letters which we also received, and they might have been addressed to me or copied to me, dealing with the changes in the procurement policies from government as a result of the various things that have occurred, including consultant muffins and things of that nature.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, Choco Bites, they were.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: In each case, I believe the letters always said, basically, “We know you’re not required to follow these rules but we would like you to follow these rules.” In our response—we always give a formal response—we said, “Of course we’ll follow these rules. No question.” So that’s where those other communications came.

Just bear with me. I don’t think there were any more, but if something jumps to mind, I’ll certainly jump in and tell you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You’re quite allowed. The memory test will keep on going for a while—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Sure.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —and sometimes they get tougher.

There’s one issue that I would like you to try to remember if you ever got—there was a report that was done by Meyers Norris Penny, do you remember, in—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes, absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. The first recommendation had to do with the corporate structure of Ornge. Basically, the ministry said that their legal services branch would follow up. Basically, the report from Meyers Norris Penny said, “Minister, you should look into this”—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Right; I recall that.

1650

M^{me} France Gélinas: —and the minister says, “Yes, we will,” or, “The legal services branch of the Ministry of Health will do an investigation of that.” Did the legal services branch ever come to you?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: They certainly didn’t come to me or any member of my board, as I recall.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Didn’t write, email, tweet?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I don’t recall any communication, any writing. I don’t recall any emails. I don’t recall any phone calls. In fact, I don’t recall any discussions about a changing corporate structure resulting from that—just nothing came forward that I recall.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Your last minute and a half.

M^{me} France Gélinas: This is my last minute and a half. The first thing I wanted to establish was really communication. The two and a half hours that we’ll spend together: If other things come to mind, please let me know. You were really clear as to the times that you’ve reached out, and you seem pretty certain of them. If there are other times where the ministry asked you, except for the standard letter you get once a year as chair of the board—“Here’s your allocation for the next year. Please sign and send it back”; we expect you to get those—things that had more to do with inquiring what was going on at Ornge. Basically, any other effort from the ministry or the government to reach out to Ornge that comes back to you, please share it.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Let me be clear: There’s nothing that I recall at the present time of any ministry communication with me or members of the board other than what I’ve mentioned.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We’ll move on to the government. Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Good afternoon. Thank you for coming back, Mr. Beltzner.

When Dr. Mazza appeared before this committee, he said he regretted that his $1.4-million compensation had become “a lightning rod for controversy”—his words. However, he really refused to acknowledge that this compensation package was in any way excessive, and he repeatedly told the committee that he was not involved in setting his compensation and that his compensation was “always the purview of my board of directors. I had no input into my compensation ... my opinion was never requested about my compensation.”

He seemed to be having trouble remembering what his compensation actually was. Presuming that the sunshine list as published in 2007 accurately reflects his 2006 compensation, it was $284,206. Another witness has said that in 2009, it was approximately $550,000, and of course what we know is that by 2011, we’re talking about $1.4 million. That means that between 2006 and 2011, the figures we think we know for sure, his compensation increased by $1.1 million, which seems like a rather large increase in compensation.

Do you believe his compensation in hindsight was excessive, perhaps even outrageous?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: In answering that question, I’d like to go back to Dr. Mazza’s assertion about his involvement with compensation, if I may.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I would be delighted if you do that, because that was two or three down the way in my questioning—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes, thank you. I’m trying to presuppose what your questions—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I have chaired boards and board compensation committees and I have never just walked up the CEO and said, “Gee, we’d like to give you $1 million more.” So I thought this was odd.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Ms. Sandals, I can only say to you that, based on my experience in having dealt with probably well over 100 CEOs in my professional career, I don’t know of any CEO who is totally absent from discussion on compensation.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That was my reaction. Would you please explain the process from your point of view?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I’ve made some notes for myself just to try and put this in good order.

First of all, members of the committee, the compensation process, as you can well understand, was adopted by the board after discussions and advice from compensation consultants. So we don't do this in the black; we get good advice.

We adopted a pay-for-performance model, which guarantees a base salary and has at risk the bonus or the amount up to a potential total compensation. The way that we structured the pay-for-performance model was that the base salary would typically be 50% or less than 50% of the total attainable compensation. So the total potential compensation is then made up of the base salary, the benefits plus any bonus.

The benefit amount, by the way, for executives, is there to cover health plans, pension contributions and so on, that are typically covered for lower-end employees under HOOPP or whatever other arrangements there are.

So the performance bonus component is determined as follows: The CEO presents, on an annual basis, the short- and long-term business plan to the board. One of the responsibilities of the board is to do strategic planning and to reaffirm the business plan. The business plan comes initially from a presentation from the CEO and is then discussed by the board, and amendments are made as necessary. So the board debates the proposed plan and, after any necessary agreed amendments, approves the plan. That sets the framework for going ahead.

The CEO then prepares, under the pay-for-performance model, a draft of his balanced scorecard. The balanced scorecard, for those that are not familiar with a balanced scorecard, basically sets out a set of key objectives that are directly tied to the approved business plan and the deliverable and related specific metrics to be achieved within the next business year. So you've got an overriding objective, you've got a bunch of deliverables, and then you've got a bunch of metrics to be achieved in the next year.

Usually there are no more than three to five business deliverables, each having a particular weighting adding up to 100%. The metrics are categorized under three achievement targets: "threshold," "target" and "exceeds." In plain English, it means, basically, you're doing okay; you're doing a little bit better than okay; or you're doing really well, you've exceeded your targets. Each of these is tied to a bonus percent. That bonus percent is on the base salary.

So, clearly, the CEO develops the balanced scorecard, initially by himself, based on the approved business plan, and then presents it to the board. But to clarify, the percent of base salary that becomes the bonus for each achievement level is something that comes from advice from compensation consultants. They tell us that if you achieve threshold, it's typically a 15% bonus; if you achieve target, it's 30%, or whatever the case may be. So the weighting of deliverables—in other words, out of three to five to seven deliverables, what has more weight in total—is something that is discussed among the board and agreed with the CEO. That drives the CEO's direction.

Then that draft balanced scorecard is presented to the board by the CEO. The board then discusses it in depth, challenges the CEO, and makes changes as necessary—and we've made changes—and that gets final approval.

The CEO then uses the scorecard objective and deliverables to develop the balanced scorecard for each of his senior management team so that there's accountability going down for the same objectives, all the way down to the lower levels of the organization.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But the balanced scorecard for the CEO is approved by the board?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Absolutely. And the balanced scorecard for the senior management team that reports to the CEO is approved by the CEO, and it's his objective to make sure it matches, because it ties into his. His reports do the right job, and then his own job does well.

During the course of the year, the CEO then comes back and presents an interim report to the board on the progress toward achieving the deliverables.

Shortly after the end of the business year, the CEO prepares a formal presentation to the board concerning his achievements against the agreed balanced scorecard. The CEO self-evaluates his performance and presents his achievement level to the board, as well as his recommendation for the bonus.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So for 2011, what was Dr. Mazza's base salary?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I honestly can't recall. It might have been somewhere around $500,000.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And would the compensation committee then have—if I'm understanding you properly, you've got the percentage that would be achievable if you exceeded the target.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Did you set any maximums?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you would have been able to do the calculation, as a compensation committee, that says, "Given these weightings, let's assume that he exceeds the target on every threshold and that he reaches the maximum per cent of exceeding, and this is the per cent." You would have been able, as a committee, to do the math and figure out what was the maximum possible salary.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Absolutely. Absolutely.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So is $1.4 million an appropriate maximum possible salary?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, as I indicated in my opening comment the last time I came to the committee, there was a bit of a discrepancy between what we recalled his compensation maximum to be and what the numbers added up to when the compensation numbers came forward at the end of 2011.

That discrepancy had to do with this additional contract that Dr. Mazza had with regard to I think what he referred to as a stipend, which was a contract between Dr. Mazza's professional corporation and Ornge.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So in addition to the compensation which the board approved, he also had a contract as a private company.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So are you telling me that when he was on the sunshine list—his 2006 sunshine list number of $284,000, in fact, failed to reflect his total compensation?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, I was going to get to that. My comment would be that I don't believe the amounts that Dr. Mazza had been receiving as a stipend, either before he joined Ornge—in other words, while he was working for Sunnybrook and Women's—or after he joined Ornge, were reported under the sunshine list. I'm not sure of this. I'm speculating at this point.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So, in fact, there's actually—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: In other words, his—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The $1.4 million might be an accurate total.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct. It's obviously an accurate total.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But the sunshine list information is probably what's inaccurate. He was actually making more money all along, is I think what you just told us.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes, and perhaps if I could just elaborate on that point, if I might: In 2008, at the request of Dr. Mazza, the chair of the compensation committee at the time came to me and asked me to co-sign a services contract between Dr. Mazza's professional corporation and Ornge. I was informed that this contract was, in fact, a carry-over from his prior employment with Sunnybrook—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So, given that he's—why? Why?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: —and that his professional services as a medical director, which is what the contract said, were, in fact, required.

I recall reading the contract and that it did, in fact, set out a series of professional services and deliverables, as a medical director, which is above and beyond his job as a CEO and so on.

I was subsequently informed that a prior contract existed, signed and authorized by Jacob Blum, and this would have been—I believe it was 2006. I didn't know that at the time, by the way. I was informed by the chair of my compensation committee at the time that, yes, this was a rolling contract. It existed for upwards of eight years, and the services were required; this was normal. I read through the contract, and there were clear deliverables, responsibilities and so on. I saw nothing wrong with it, quite frankly, and, as well, signed it.

What became apparent in 2011, though—what became apparent to me in 2011—was that Dr. Mazza was not, in fact, providing any of the services, nor were they required. This was apparently, according to information provided me by Mr. Lepine in late 2011 as all of this started to unravel—this was well known to the former chair of the medical advisory committee, Dr. Bruce Sawadsky, who, as chair of the medical advisory committee, reported directly to the board and never reported anything of that nature, including that Dr. Mazza was challenged by Dr. Sawadsky and, I think, Mr. Lepine about this at various points and Dr. Mazza basically rebuffed them and told them to go away.

When I heard this, I did follow up with Maria Renzella to ask the simple question of, "Where is the support for the payments?" If we're paying for services, surely to God there is an invoice, or something that says the services are required, such as an invoice from a professional corporation detailing hours, deliverables and so on, all of which one would expect, at a minimum, to support such payments. I was informed that no such invoices were ever provided, yet payments were demanded by Dr. Mazza and made.

I subsequently asked about any other situations where payments under contracts were made without supporting invoices. Two additional situations were brought to my attention at that time, the first by Mr. Lepine, who told me that there were payments made to a Dr. Tom Stewart for which services were apparently not required. I don't know whether this is true or not—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Who's Dr. Stewart? That's a totally new name in this.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Dr. Tom Stewart, I believe, is a senior physician administrator at Mount Sinai. You would have to check.

Both of these—so Dr. Stewart's situation—when somebody tells me that we're paying something for which services are not getting provided, as well as Dr. Mazza's stipend situation—I then put together an email to Ken Flynn, of the ministry's internal audit, which detailed what had been identified and occurred. I asked Ken to follow up. I said, "This is strange, unusual."

Mrs. Liz Sandals: "Strange" would be an understatement.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Exactly. And basically, "I want you to follow up." That was it.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I wonder, Chair, if we could take a few minutes at the end of the meeting, because I don't want to take the time away from questioning the witness, to craft a sensible motion to see if we can get this information from Ornge.

I understand you no longer have access to the records.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: But I think the committee does need to get the information about every payment to Dr. Mazza.

When you look back at this in hindsight and look at all the various different payments—the alarm bells that are going off in my head, quite apart from the outflow of money that not even you, as chair of the board, knew about—my God, Jacob Blum is signing off on contracts?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: That came as a big surprise.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Where did that come from? What does that say about the governance model that all these contracts are floating around and the board, the board chair, the chair of the compensation committee—nobody seems to have the whole picture?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I think you could appreciate that the board is somewhat at the mercy of the management team to come forward and disclose, report, things that they feel are inappropriate. The board is not in a position to get fingers into the day-to-day operation. That's not the role of the board. The board has a right to rely on appropriate reporting from management. This is something which certainly over the course—Jim, I see you're nodding—of the years, one of the things that the board has done, and I just wish to reiterate—perhaps I'm a little exercised over this issue, but I have a right to be—as a board chair and as an experienced professional, I am relying on the trust from senior management to come forward and report things that they feel the board should be aware of.

We have written reports of the board and committees from all of senior management on a quarterly basis that cover operations, HR, finances. In none of those had any of the more significant issues that have come up before this committee come forward to the board.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have a minute left.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just quickly, let me go to the disclosure issue, because on the salary disclosure issue, Dr. Mazza again was quite clear that this was a decision that was made by the board in terms of not disclosing the salary once he was moved over to the for-profits. But we also heard from Lynne Golding, who said, "Yes, we said that was technically possible. We also advised the board that they had a moral, ethical obligation to report to the ministry." Why did the board end up, it would appear, supporting Dr. Mazza's viewpoint that the salary not be disclosed, as opposed to the legal advice, which was, "Yes, technically possible, but you really should tell the Ministry of Health what's going on?"

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Thank you for that question. First of all, I was surprised to hear Lynne Golding's testimony. I was listening to it and I was surprised to hear that comment about the advice being that, "Nevertheless, you should," because I don't recall that advice ever coming forward to the board. She may have provided that advice to management. I did consult with a couple of my board members on that issue. I said, "Do you recall this?" "No, not at all." The question of salary disclosure was more around the question of, "Are we on board legally with everything we should be doing?" That's the concern of the board. The legal opinion was, "We don't have to disclose salary." That's what was presented by Dr. Mazza, and—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: If we were to check the legal advice, the documents received by the board, we would just get an opinion that says, "You do not have to disclose."

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I believe that all that came to the board at the time in whatever form it came was the indication that legally we don't have to disclose, because our concern was to stay, in all circumstances, compliant with the performance agreement, compliant with all laws and legislation, and that was it.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Whose idea was it that Dr. Mazza and the others should have their employment status changed to one of the for-profit entities as opposed to Ornge, the non-profit?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: You were asking me that question the last time I was here and I was trying to evade the question. It wasn't the board's idea. I just want to make that clear. We were embarking on an approved business plan. I just want to make that absolutely clear. We had long discussed this business plan about creating a structure that would allow for the generation of for-profit revenues to go back actually to Ornge and so on. This was the evolution of that structure.

As part of that evolution, what was presented to the board was that all personnel, other than those directly required under the Ambulance Act, would move from Ornge to Ornge Peel.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I'm cognizant that we're running out of time.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The board approved it.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The board made a decision that the employees would move based on their direct service to air ambulance.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Based on recommendations from management; yes, absolutely, and consistent with legal opinion as to what was permitted, allowed.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So that was a board decision.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Beltzner, interesting story. We have yet one more situation where previous witnesses have laid blame on someone else. We heard from Chris Mazza, and he actually put you into an incredibly good light, because he attributed his very generous compensation package to you, sir. I hear you saying that you're refusing to take on that label of generosity.

I'd like not to belabour this, but can we agree on the $1.4-million compensation number that we have been dealing with here as the compensation that Chris Mazza received in the last fiscal year as a starting point?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Based on the information that was put together by, I believe, Maria Renzella and Rhoda Beecher in the fall of 2011, very specifically after much back and forth with government, the number of $1.4 million was in fact reported as the total, and that would have included that stipend issue.

Mr. Frank Klees: Of that $1.4 million, how much of that would have been the personal loan to—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Oh, nothing. The $1.4-million compensation would have consisted of his base salary, the benefits percentage to account for pension and those things, the bonus amounts, as well as those payments under stipend under that contract that I cancelled.

Mr. Frank Klees: In addition to that, there was a personal loan—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: There was. In addition to that, in 2010 there was a loan to Dr. Mazza, which was a housing loan, which was approved by the board and was, contrary to constant reports in the media, interest-bearing.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was the interest rate on that?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: It would have been the prevailing CRA interest rate. One of the things that we did, and very carefully, was to do some research, through Maria Renzella and Rhoda Beecher at the time, about two things. One was, would a housing loan in any fashion violate any of our abilities under the performance agreement or whatever the case may be? The second question was, we wanted to make sure that it was structured to be fully compliant with CRA. Dr. Mazza's not a tax expert, so the logical thing to do was make sure that things were done in accordance with CRA rules so that he didn't get himself into trouble on that side.

I'm aware that both on this loan, the advance on a bonus that was made by GP, which I can elaborate on, as well as the additional housing loan that the media constantly reports as no-interest—I just want to assure the board that the board minutes of all of those entities are very clear and very clearly specify interest. Whether he paid interest, whether Maria Renzella ever charged him interest, I'm a little bit in the dark about that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, that's certainly something that we would be interested in.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I'm sure the forensic auditors or the other investigations will get into that.

Mr. Frank Klees: With regard to these loans, what I'd like to do is get some details. There was more than one loan, as I understand it.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: There was the housing loan. How much was that loan for?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: To the best of my recollection, the housing loan was either $400,000 or $500,000, somewhere in that range. I'm sorry; I just—

Interjection.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Five hundred thousand?

Mr. Frank Klees: Five hundred thousand. Was that secured against his residential property?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No, it wasn't secured against his residential property, because I don't believe he had a property at the time that he took the loan out. What we did was we secured it against his future bonus payments. Payments out of his long-term incentive plan were, if you like, required to go against the loan, rather than him.

Mr. Frank Klees: So he created his own golden handcuffs. It's pretty hard for you to fire him and not give him a bonus if he owes you a repayment on half a million dollars, right?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, certainly, our incentive on the long-term incentive plan, which is another subject that we can get into—I think it has come up before, under some testimony. Dr. Mazza, at some point in 2010, in discussions with the compensation consultant—the compensation consultant tells me that Dr. Mazza is looking to greener pastures and other places. This was of some concern to me and the rest of the board, as some of the critical business objectives and deliverables were very, very clearly tied to Dr. Mazza's continuance within Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: So there was a threat that he was leaving or considering another offer.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did the board ever have a discussion with Chris Mazza about that, and did the board ever ask for proof of that offer?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Would that not have been a reasonable thing to do?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, I know I had some difficulties with—when I had the discussion with the compensation consultant, I had some difficulties with Dr. Mazza's assertion that he could get a job at a better value and so on, so we had a bit of a back-and-forth on that.

I was, however, aware that Dr. Mazza had been in long discussions and interactions with a Charles Fabrikant, who is the CEO and chairman of SEACOR in the US—a rather large company—who also has a subsidiary that's in the air ambulance business, or providing services in the air ambulance business. So I didn't think it completely out in left field that others would be interested in Dr. Mazza. Charles Fabrikant, from the couple of times that I met him, certainly demonstrated a strong liking to Dr. Mazza. And as I said, they had a business in this area. He was a potential investor.

Yes, there was a risk. We evaluated the risk, and we said, "Well, fine. If we can lock him down with a long-term cash incentive plan, that wasn't such a bad idea."

Mr. Frank Klees: And what about the other loans? If you could itemize those for us, please.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Sure. So now we roll into 2011. In the beginning of 2011, Dr. Mazza approached me and possibly some others on the GP board—we're now talking GP—saying, "Look, I've worked hard. I've gone to lots of presentations. I've been presenting to everybody from OMERS to people in the US to people in Brazil, to invest in all this. We're going to get a $20-million to $30-million investment. I've been promised that from this particular investor. I think I should get a bonus as a result of all my hard work."

Mr. Frank Klees: Of course, in advance of getting the money from the investor.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well—and he wanted the bonus to be early, right? There was a percentage that he had put forward, which would have resulted in a higher amount than we actually advanced on.

The bottom line on that is he was very up on this, positive on this, and said, "How about an advance, in advance of closing the deal?" So we discussed it and agreed on an amount of $250,000 as an advance against the bonus—again, interest-bearing, in this particular case, at our actual cost of money, so it would have been higher than the CRA rate. Basically, that would have been a direct loan at our current cost of money.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how was that drawn up, in terms of paper?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Maria Renzella would have drawn up a formal agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you sign off? Did you sign those documents?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I can't recall. I presume I did, but I honestly can't recall. That would be in the records.

Mr. Frank Klees: Assuming that you did sign off, do you recall seeing the documents? If so, was there a repayment schedule as part of those documents?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: There was no repayment schedule as part of those documents. As I've said, the understanding was, as minuted in the board minutes, he was to receive $250,000 at whatever the current cost of money was, interest payable without particular repayment terms. It was against a future bonus.

Mr. Frank Klees: If that was a bonus characterized as a loan, what were the tax consequences to Chris Mazza on that?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: That kind of a situation—I'm a little fuzzy on my tax rules. Forgive me. It's been a while since I've practised tax. But in that situation, I presume it's similar to you going to the bank to borrow money. The rate of interest you pay is what it is. I presume that if that loan had been outstanding for more than a year, there might have been—

Mr. Frank Klees: Deemed.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: —a deemed income component for tax purposes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. The other bonuses or loans.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The last of the loans was again in 2011. Dr. Mazza approached certainly me and perhaps other members of the Global GP board with a request for additional funds. The committee and the board, after discussion, agreed to an additional interest-bearing secured-housing loan of about $400,000.

Mr. Frank Klees: Another $400,000. But this one was secured against his property?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: This one was secured against shares that he owned and insurance policies.

Mr. Frank Klees: And the shares were in what?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I believe OGMI.

Mr. Frank Klees: OGMI. That would be Ornge Global something international?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Basically the management company that Chris was majority shareholder of.

Mr. Frank Klees: So this was his personal management company?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No, this was—

Mr. Frank Klees: This was an Ornge Global.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: This was the management company that was set up to initially hold 99.99% of the shares of the limited partnership, which would then be diluted as investors came in.

Mr. Frank Klees: What percentage of shares did he own at that time?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I was told that he owned a majority portion of the shares. I don't know how many shares he owned.

Mr. Frank Klees: So what was the value of those shares?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The valuation of the company, assuming it could be monetized, was—I think about $100 million was the valuation.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what would that be based on? What would the asset be?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I don't know.

Mr. Frank Klees: What source of income did that company have?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The company had no source of income.

Mr. Frank Klees: No source of income?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No. The company had—

Mr. Frank Klees: It had no assets, but it was worth $100 million.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The company had no source of income at that point in time, no.

Mr. Frank Klees: So we have a company with no source of income, that owns no assets—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: But has a licence agreement to utilize the know-how and the intellectual property of Ornge, which then has value.

Mr. Frank Klees: And it has value to whom?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: It has value to anyone who wanted to start an air ambulance operation, for example, in another jurisdiction. Obviously, when you start an air ambulance operation, it's clearly helpful to have an experienced management team. It's helpful to have access to know-how methods, processes, so that you're not starting from square one. That was part of the product set that the for-profit side was moving forward with, presenting to jurisdictions like Brazil and others the opportunity to launch air ambulance operations with the know-how of Ornge.

1730

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to pursue this. It's getting very interesting.

The knowledge base was developed within the walls of Ornge, which is a government-funded, not-for-profit company designed to deliver air ambulance service within Ontario.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: The individuals who gained that intellectual property were being paid by the government of Ontario to carry out their work and build their intellectual property within the context of that not-for-profit Ornge company that was government-funded. Correct?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: So far, you're correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Now we take these people and their intellectual property that was seeded by taxpayers' dollars and we move them over into Ornge Global Management, and voila, we create for these people, who are now shareholders of that company, a $100-million value. Right?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, you're partially correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Tell me where I'm wrong.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I think it's fair to say that four or five people alone can't do that. They need to have access to processes, methodologies, procedures, software—

Mr. Frank Klees: And all of those methodologies and all of that process, they brought with them from Ornge.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No. In fact, if they had used it, it would have been a violation of intellectual property rights. Understand that in order for all that good know-how to be used in its totality and have any value, it really has to be under a master licensing agreement from Ornge to that party.

Mr. Frank Klees: And of course, that licensing agreement was in place, because, as you say, that's what gave value.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct. Without the licensing agreement, two things could not happen. The first and foremost is that there would be limited ways by which Ornge could benefit monetarily from those operations, because the licence agreement, from a tax position, and to protect the charitable status of Ornge, was a mechanism by which we could extract from outside of Ontario some value for the methodologies and good works that had been developed within Ontario in the air ambulance system.

As you're well aware, we looked at a number of different structures, hired PriceWaterhouse, who did some research and different arrangements in terms of what kind of fees are reasonable and so on, and we came to two basic conclusions from all of that. One was that to establish a percentage based on the net revenue of organizations using the licensing agreement would be a very difficult way to get comfortable that the amounts flowing over were in fact proper, because, as I think we can all appreciate, net revenue, bottom-line revenue, is after all sorts of expenses and goodness knows what else comes in.

We didn't want to get into a situation, from the Ornge side, of having to decipher financial statements of companies on the other end.

One of the conclusions we reached was that the simplest way to identify fairly the amounts that should flow over was to base it on gross fee revenue. So whatever dollar came in to the right-hand side, the profit side, a percentage of that, before anything else happened, would flow over to Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: That's where the 3% came in; right?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes. You've made a lot of comment about the 3%, but again—

Mr. Frank Klees: But 3% of $100 million is not bad; right?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Three per cent of gross is not a—

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand. I think we've pretty well nailed that one down.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're at 21 minutes, but you can continue.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, I'd like to continue with this because I think it's rather interesting and it's pretty fundamental, I think, to a number of issues.

Our friend Chris Mazza got himself another $400,000 on the strength of his shares in OGMI, which was valued at $100 million because of the—and all that. Were there any other loans?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: No other source of income?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Not at that time, no.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did Chris Mazza carry an OHIP billing ability with him as—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I honestly don't know. I know that one of the things—right from the early days, Dr. Mazza and I had a number of discussions around the question of—I think he was doing some stints in Toronto General Hospital as an emergency physician. I know he was doing some stints as a patch physician within Ornge. He and I discussed this question of whether he should continue to do this.

My view, as well as the view of the others on the board, was that it was pretty important for the individual who's running the air ambulance system to have hands into a couple of the key medical areas. He was the expert in critical care transport.

Mr. Frank Klees: Plus a lot of other things, from what we can see here.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: That could be, but on the subject of critical care transport, we certainly supported him doing stints for whatever rate of pay everybody else got doing those stints.

Mr. Frank Klees: So in addition to all this, he would have an OHIP billing and—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —who knows what he's collected through that. He has done very well, and obviously he had an incredibly co-operative board.

I'd like to go back to this OGMI, where he had, I think you said, the majority of the shares—60%—or did you say—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: My understanding is that he had majority ownership of that—

Mr. Frank Klees: Who were the other shareholders of that corporation?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I don't know all the shareholders. I know that after the company was formed, he let a number of—I can't recall whether it was three or four or five of us on the former board. He advised us that we were offered 0.5 of a share or 0.75 of a share. In my case, I think it was 2.5 shares or something, some miniscule amount.

Mr. Frank Klees: So 2.5 shares would have been valued at what?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: From my point of view, zero, and a long time of zero.

Mr. Frank Klees: No, but if you, as the chair of the board, were willing to give him a $400,000 loan against his shares, you must have—and you've said there's a value there, like $100 million. Let me ask you this: How many shares were issued on that—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I have no idea. I have no idea.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. I won't get into that. I have to believe, sir, that you had a pretty good idea of how many shares were in that corporation or what your shares were worth.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I can assure you, I have no idea how many shares; no idea of how the shares were distributed. I certainly didn't at that time. I have learned since that certain members of the management team had gotten shares. I couldn't tell you how many shares they got.

Mr. Frank Klees: You don't know. Okay. So there's that share—that OGMI.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: The other for-profit companies—we have this. I don't have to give it to you because we—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I probably know it by heart.

Mr. Frank Klees: We know what that looks like; right?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: So there are a bunch of others. Are there any other companies in which you personally own shares?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No.

1740

Mr. Frank Klees: So you own shares in none of these other companies?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I had nothing to do with anything other than being on the board of a number of those companies.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. I'm assuming Chris Mazza owned shares in all of them. Would that be correct?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The other companies were subsidiaries of the limited partnership, I believe.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: And so it would have been the limited partnership that owned those, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Where did the seed money come from to establish these companies? To establish a company costs money. You have to pay lawyers; right? So there's an expense to even putting the scheme together. Where did that seed money come from?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: To the best of my recollection, the funds that Ornge GP had access to were under that agreement with Agusta, the marketing services agreement. That was a revenue-generating item for GP. Then there was—

Mr. Frank Klees: So how much of that Agusta money would have gone—let me ask you this, because it will be helpful: When the Agusta money came in, where was it deposited—into which of these companies—as kind of an entry into this scheme here?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I honestly can't tell you. I assume it went into GP, the general partnership.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I'm assuming—

Mr. Frank Klees: And what was the name? Is it Ornge—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Ornge Global GP.

Mr. Frank Klees: Ornge Global GP.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes. Under limited partnerships, you create a general partner that handles all the business activities.

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The limited partners are silent.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right. So it came in there and—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I presume.

Mr. Frank Klees: How much money would have flowed into that? The full amount? There were two contracts, as we know, amounting to $6.7 million.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I'm sorry; I don't know.

Mr. Frank Klees: But you're saying—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I'm assuming it was the 4.8.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there any other source of outside money coming into any of these companies, other than that?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: There would have been, certainly—as you're aware, Ornge Peel and Ornge Air moved over to the for-profit side.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The payments of the employees engaged on Ornge operations and the air operations for Ornge—those costs would have been charged back to Ornge under a management services agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: Right. I think this is important for us to get a handle on. When you set up these for-profit companies and the employees were moved over there, their salaries were paid out of that for-profit company. The for-profit company charged back to Ornge, the not-for-profit, those salaries.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The salaries of those individuals that were involved in Ornge operations; correct—and other costs that were paid for: fuel and whatever else.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. The overhead.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there any kind of a profit margin that was added to that as a buffer?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Not that I recall, no. In fact, the management services agreement, I think, said very specifically “at cost.”

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Because the intent, Mr. Klees—understand that the intent of moving Ornge Air and Ornge Peel over, which had $1 values—they had no assets. They had a bunch of people doing work on behalf of Ornge, and licensed to fly planes and things of that nature in Ontario. The intent was to be able to leverage some of that infrastructure and share the cost with the for-profit side. That was clearly delineated in the management services agreement, in the agreements between the right- and left-hand sides, in terms of cost sharing.

For example, when we get into Dr. Mazza's compensation, the intent in the agreements for Dr. Mazza and Maria Renzella and the others were that they were supposed to keep track of the time that they spent on Ornge versus the time that they spent on Global. They were to charge only time that they spent on Ornge to Ornge under that management service agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you assure yourself that that, in fact, was taking place?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: During the discussions in the fall of 2011—and understand this was all set up in March or April 2011 or thereabouts; it was new and getting set up. Based on discussions with Maria Renzella in late fall—in fact, I think it might have been January 2012 when we were meeting and going through some of the stuff—it became apparent that Dr. Mazza had instructed an allocation of time that was not reasonable. In fact, Barry Pickford, who was chair of the finance committee, and I then asked Maria to redo the allocation so that it would be proper, because we obviously didn't agree with Dr. Mazza's generalized allocation, if I can put it that way.

But there was a very clear legal agreement between the right side and the left side that said that the left-hand side was paying for the time of certain management that was based on actual hours, actual work done for Ornge.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, two more minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay, two more minutes and I'll wrap up here. This has been very helpful. I think we have a much better understanding of how this came together and what the outcome was and potentially could have been.

I would like to go back—and I don't want this to be taken on a personal level. The last time you were here, I asked you about your compensation as a director—$200,000—and you chose not to comment on my question.

I think all of us understand the role of not-for-profits. Many of us are on boards. We know what the compensation levels are. We've heard from many people who have come forward and asked them their opinion of the various compensation levels.

I'd like to ask you again, Mr. Beltzner, how could you justify drawing down $200,000 as a director of a not-for-profit organization? You're probably going to tell me that you relied on an external compensation review. I do know this: As a chairman and experienced board member of many boards, you also know that you don't have to accept that, and what you could have done is say, "You know something? This is a not-for-profit organization. It's delivering an essential service. I can't even justify accepting that." You had the opportunity to do that.

Your comments, sir.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I'll do my best to comment on that. Mr. Klees, I'm not going to try to do anything to justify any dollar amounts. I can just give you some comments.

My comment is, I have spent probably 30 years serving on volunteer boards at no compensation. I have a long history of providing support to the community, as many of us do. I think that's normal for all of us to do. I also hold a 10-year award from the government of Ontario for community service. I spent years on many, many boards on a free basis. These are boards where the level of involvement and the risk inherent in being a board director were relatively minor.

We had one board director flying in from Dryden, spending three days to come in for a one-day board meeting. I think we offered him an additional $1,000—he's a retired professional—to cover some of his costs. They were relatively modest, I would say, at that time.

Keep in mind, in those early days we were given the opportunity to restructure an organization, or to create an organization that did not exist. There was not an infrastructure. There was not a business. There were many, many hours of meetings. We didn't charge on a per-meeting basis. We just said, "Listen, $10,000, $15,000 a year"—whatever it was—"was fine." The risks were relatively low.

We then, of course, created the foundation, the charities, and none of those had remunerated boards, and nor they should. But then we created the for-profit Peel and the for-profit Air. For those two subsidiary companies, notwithstanding directors' liability insurance and everything else, certainly from my own personal point of view, being a director of an airline company raises your risk profile somewhat, so the remuneration was directly related to the for-profit companies balanced between the amount of time that things took and the risk increase that directors undertook.

The board remuneration over the five- or six-year period increased modestly over time. The $200,000 remuneration that you referred to in that particular 2010 year, in addition to the for-profit subsidiary entities and all of the operations and so on and so forth, we had of course the issue of the independent committee work, which I presume Alfred Apps has commented on, the amount of time that the independent committee has taken. That's all documented in detailed billings and so on.

If you ask me whether the $200,000 was fair or not, it was certainly fair in relation to the number of hours spent on the for-profit entities and the number of hours spent on the work of the independent committee, which, on an hourly rate basis, by the way, would have been about a third of what I normally would have charged as a professional.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move on to the NDP. Who would like to go? Mr. Singh?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead, please.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you very much, Mr. Beltzner, for being here. I just wanted to ask you, just changing up the questioning, to comment on, if you can, some of the issues that—there's somewhat of a contradiction going on between the evidence or the testimony of Minister Matthews and Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I'll do my best.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes, thank you. That's all we can ask of you.

Dr. Mazza testified that he had requested a number of times to have a meeting with Minister Matthews. From his testimony, and it's fairly well corroborated, he had met with every other minister and spoken to every other minister. Are you aware of Dr. Mazza making or attempting to have a meeting with Minister Matthews? Are you able to comment with respect to that?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I am not aware, personally, of any specific request that Dr. Mazza had made with respect to a meeting with Minister Matthews. There's nothing in my recollection that suggests that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. Were you going to add something else?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: That, I'm not aware of. Whether he made requests to other ministers previous to Ms. Matthews, again, I'm not sure.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I would not have been involved.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure. As Ornge developed, there were changes that occurred—

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, just—

Interjection: You're in the wrong direction. You're too far—

Mr. David Zimmer: Speak into the mike, so we can hear you.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Oh, I'm sorry.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Or just turn on the other mike.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I apologize. I'll speak into the mike. Thank you.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: There were changes that occurred in terms of the corporate structure of Ornge. Throughout, there have been a number of deputants who have come forward and said that as these changes occurred, the ministry was advised of changes that occurred. Is this something that you can speak to? Are you aware of this in general? I can go into more detail in a moment, but is this an area that you have knowledge of?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I think, to be fair, what the board had knowledge of is what the board was informed of. The board was informed that there were regular meetings with the ministry, as required under the performance agreement, that the ministry was fully informed of our actions at all times. Certainly there was the opportunity back in 2008-09 with the MNP interaction to have had lots of discussions concerning the activities of Ornge. I don't think there was anything at all that was hidden or otherwise from MNP.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just to ground the comments you're making now, what are they based on in terms of your knowledge of this? It's based on direct knowledge? Who told you or what's your basis for this knowledge?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The people who would have said that to me and other members of the board would have been Dr. Mazza, Mr. Lepine—in particular, those two. I don't recall whether Maria Renzella ever said anything of the nature. I presume that she, in fact, did have meetings with the ministry to go over financial statements and budgets and things of that nature.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. I'd like to move to a different area. When Dr. Mazza's salary was initially disclosed on the sunshine list and then it transitioned to no longer being disclosed on the sunshine list, one of the reasons why that was possible was due to a restructuring of the way Ornge was organized, in terms of having different entities. Is that correct? Are you aware of that?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes, that's correct.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That change to the corporate structure of Ornge, which allowed for—in a completely legal sense; maybe not in the spirit of disclosure, but certainly in the legal sense—and insulated Dr. Mazza from having to disclose his salary, went through the board and was approved by the board?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Oh, absolutely. Absolutely.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you agree that that change allowed for that legal exemption from having to disclose salary?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: It's not something that I need to agree with. Our concern, as I said before in testimony, was: When we do any restructuring, are we on board with the performance agreement? Are we in violation of the performance agreement? Are we in violation of any other law? Is there any other regulation that we need to comply to? That's the objective of the board, to ask that question and to get positive answers from that. We received all the assurances and legal opinions and whatever else was required.

To go back to this point on compensation disclosure, I would say that the compensation disclosure issue probably was the last thing from the board's mind in this restructuring. I just want to reiterate that, right from the beginning—and I would take you back to a board retreat in February 2006, just after the formation of Ornge. We have our first board retreat in the lovely hamlet of Kenora in the middle of winter. I think it was about 38 below or something at that time. At that board retreat, Dr. Mazza, who was, for all intents and purposes, the person appointed by the government and selected by the government to create this organization—he had the knowledge; he had the vision—presents to the board this vision and this business direction that he is informed or agreed with government to do. In that presentation, there is a very clear and definitive set of statements that said we are to create this air ambulance system; we are to look for funding through donations, which had not been done previously; and we are to look for opportunities for for-profit operations to support the Ornge operation.

So right from the beginning, and this is documented in the minutes of the board retreat—and we had a facilitator at the board retreat who documented everything, so it would be in the board minutes—in the board's mind, here was an individual, Dr. Mazza, who had been presented forward by and approved by the government—keep in mind where we're coming from—to now bring forward a business plan and a vision and a concept. This is what he put forward, this is what we understood to be the objective, and this is what we went forward with.

From my point of view, throughout the years, there has never been a time when we weren't, if you like, public with that objective. There are lots of things that we said and did that clearly indicated that that's the direction we were heading in. For example, back in 2010—it might have been even 2009—there were discussions with potential investors, OMERS and others, regarding investment in a for-profit operation outside of Ontario leveraging the good knowledge and know-how that has been built up, so this was no secret.

Now, whether in fact Dr. Mazza or others in the organization had properly kept the government apprised through the process, I honestly don't know. What I do know is that in January 2011 I did send, with the help of Alfred Apps, legal counsel and a whole bunch of other people, a very detailed, informative letter, which I thought was necessary to send to government, to everybody I could think of in government, to say, "Look, this is what we're doing. It's a novel thing. I recognize you may not have the legal right to stop or whatever"—I think Alfred Apps had some words like that in the letter—"but this is what we're doing." And if you have a comment, a question or a concern, surely you would have raised it. So I'm confused.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Fair enough.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Quite honestly, I'm confused.

I just want to say, again, we set out, way back in 2005-06, with an honest objective. We may have debates as business people about whether this structure or that structure was the best appropriate structure, whether this decision was the right decision or whether tail rotors falling off AW139s is good or bad, but in all of these cases, comprehensive business cases came to the board; the board undertook all appropriate actions. We felt and believed and understood that this was the right thing to do and that government was fully informed and, just to go back to your comment, Ms. Gélinas, at no time did the government ever come back and say, "This is no good."

I asked myself the question right from day one, I was interested—if I might digress. This morning, I was listening to a few comments from Hugh MacLeod, who was here this morning. I very much respect Hugh MacLeod. I've known him for a number of years and I understand his work and so on. I was particularly interested in his comments about the early days of 2002, 2003, 2004, that Ornge was to be set up similar to the Alberta STARS program, but Ontario-fied, if I can put it that way, which made sense. Ornge, or air ambulance, was unknown to the public; there was no public funding. Surely to God the public should know about this fantastic entity or operation and help to fund it, whether public or corporate donations. Fine.

I understood from Mr. MacLeod's testimony that there were lots of presentations by Dr. Mazza about failures in the past, ways to go forward and so on. Throughout all that discussion, there wasn't anything raised about the question of for-profit. It was all modelled after STARS and so on.

I asked myself, how did this come forward that the government of the day divests to basically a fully independent, not-for-profit organization and operation, combined with a performance agreement that, I think it's fair to say, Jim, didn't have all the hooks that one would normally see?

Mr. Jim McCarter: Yes, especially on the for-profit side—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Right, and notwithstanding even the for-profit side, I think there might have been other hooks on the foundation side.

To me, as I came into the organization, here was a situation where a company had been created, or was going to be created; the government was clearly giving the organization full rein and full opportunity. Dr. Mazza was telling the board, "Our goal is to raise donation income, raise for-profit income, run the organization well. That's what we're doing." There wasn't an indication of anything else. So Hugh MacLeod's testimony this morning was a bit of an eye-opener to me, I have to say, because that identified for the first time, in my eyes, that somewhere along the line it went off the rails. But I have to say, I think it went off the rails as Ornge was created, or the Ontario Air Ambulance services was created, at day one.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Mr. Beltzner, thank you very much for that. I just wanted to bring you back to another issue. Thank you for sharing those comments.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Sorry.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: No, I appreciate that.

After the MNP audit occurred, were you aware of the recommendations that MNP had put forward?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Of course.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: The first recommendation was to ensure that the government was comfortable with the corporate structure.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What was the impact of that on the board, and what steps did you take when you saw that?

And just one additional thing: Did that inform your decision to be very extensive with your briefings in 2011, when there were further changes? Did the MNP recommendation to make the government more comfortable with the corporate structure inform your decision to make sure that there was this letter sent out to all interested parties in the government, and even the opposition, related to the corporate structure?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Thank you for that question. I'll do my best to answer it.

I think there was a set of recommendations in the MNP report that basically said the government should take the initiative to get a better understanding of the corporate structure, do some changes to the performance agreement, things of that nature.

From my point of view, I didn't have any objections to any of those things, of course. But I'm not government. We're kind of downstream from that. My expectation was that if government wanted to do something or accepted the recommendation, they would. But nothing happened. That's the first answer.

With respect to your second question about whether it informed the subsequent January 11 position: maybe subconsciously, but not consciously. The January 11 letter, quite simply, was a matter that any good board undertaking something of this nature would have paused and said, "Hey, let's just do a sanity check with government, who are our key stakeholders." That was the purpose of that letter. We weren't going to go ahead unless that sanity check had been done.

I know Dr. Mazza had made comments about, "Had the minister said something, it would have been 'Yes, ma'am,'" and so on. Notwithstanding all of that, we have a board of professional people, of experienced business people, some of us with long relationships with government. Had there been a pushback from government on this, we certainly would have entered into a discussion and figured out, "Where is this going off the rails and why are you objecting?" Maybe that would have raised a flag. Maybe it would have stopped the situation at that point in time. But I can tell you that from my point of view and from my board's point of view, there was nothing that came back that would suggest, in the least bit, anything but a supportive response. That's the best I can tell you.

Interjection.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Chair, it's still ours?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Take it away.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm just going to clean up a few things that have already been worked on. When we had Mrs. Rhoda Beecher here and asked about Dr. Mazza's salary, she said kind of the same thing as you, but not exactly. I want to see: Do you see it as different, or are you both saying the same thing? She says that Dr. Mazza's salary came from the board or the compensation committee of the board and was made up of his base salary, his performance pay, his long-term incentive pay and his clinical director pay. That's what she told us yesterday. It's not exactly the words that you used, and you added a percentage for benefits, which she did not share with us.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Are you comfortable with what I just read? Do you want me to read it again?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Let me maybe speak to that. What came to the board for approval and what the board had specific responsibility to approve was his base compensation, any bonus—

M^{me} France Gélinas: What she called performance pay.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: —performance pay and any special bonus, and then any loans or things of that nature. What did not come to the board for approval was any specific payment that he received as a patch physician. We didn't know how many hours he spent in the box in the patch physician role or what he got paid for that. That didn't come to the board; the board didn't approve that. That may be the only discrepancy in that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you remember what the percentage in lieu of benefits was?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Now you're testing my memory.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes. I'm good at that.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I think 30% of base pay.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Very good. The other little item I wanted to clean up before we go on—or did you get—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Just a moment here. The stipend that Dr. Mazza received under that separate contract, the personal service corporation: As I indicated, the contract in 2008 was brought to me by Luis Navas, who was chair of the compensation committee, to renew the contract for that stipend. As I indicated, I spoke to Luis about it—"What is this?"—got an explanation in terms of the history of it, read through the contract from a business person looking at it and saying, "Does it have deliverables, responsibilities?", those kinds of things. It was reasonably structured. There were amounts set out for each of the medical director areas. On that basis, I had signed that contract.

I don't know whether we ever took that particular contract to the board. I don't believe we did, and, quite frankly, I think it disappeared off the radar, if I can put it that way, until it reappeared in 2011. The contract had a clause in it which—and I'm sure you can get a copy of the contract—allowed for automatic renewal year to year. I see Mr. Klees smiling. You know, I suppose it's not really unusual. What's unusual in this situation is that Dr. Mazza would renew it, if you like, without performing services. I think, as a professional, that's a little—anyway, I'll let him deal with that issue, if I might.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. That was the cleanup I wanted to do with the compensation of Dr. Mazza. The other little cleanup I want to do is on questions about payments for the board.

In February 2006, things are just starting up. Right there, in 2006, the board approved $10,000- to $15,000-a-year payments for every board member?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I honestly can't remember the specifics for each board member at the time, but I can tell you that in late 2011, under my instruction, that information was put together in detail by board member, by company, for every year, and reported to the ministry.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So there is a document that exists out there—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: There is a document which exists, which I saw—I don't have it anymore but I saw. The instruction was to communicate it to the ministry. I think it probably went to Patricia Li, if I am to guess. It would have come from Maria Renzella and it would identify very specifically, by year, by company and by board member, exactly how much everyone was paid through the period.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Before you put that together, did you know where the money was coming from?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Of course.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So if we talk about yours, can you tell me—the year 2010 is the one that has been on the top of the Toronto Star for six months so everybody knows that the amount is $200,000.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes, thank you, Toronto Star.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Whether you want to or not, you have—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I'm worth more than that, by the way. Let me put that on record.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Of the $200,000 that came to you for the year 2010, any idea where the bits and pieces came from?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I can't remember the exact breakdown—

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's okay.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: —but it would have come as a board retainer for the board of Ornge Air and Ornge Peel, as well as an additional retainer as chair of an operations committee of Ornge Peel, and then an amount per meeting—sort of a meeting fee—for every committee meeting or board meeting.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And would that include the committee meetings and board meetings of Ornge, the not-for-profit entity?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Ornge was a charity and there was no board remuneration for Ornge or Ornge Founda-Mazza that are outside of established company policy. Dr. Mazza engaged services not needed and not delivered.

"Underneath all of this is the other question of why Rhoda Beecher, Maria and possibly others went along with this, and without reporting it.

"Clearly this may ... be the tip of the iceberg, so to speak. I have advised Barry Pickford, chair of the audit and finance committee, of these matters as well.

"This is most disturbing.

"Rainer."

Going up the email, there was a response from Mr. Flynn: "Rainer, clearly these are items that warrant further scrutiny. Rest assured, we shall take these into account as the audit moves forward."

Can you comment on—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I think this is totally consistent with what I testified a little earlier this evening.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. And what actions were taken subsequent to this?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: This memo, as you can see, was written December 24, Christmas Eve, halfway through that day. Obviously I am most disturbed—

Mr. David Zimmer: How did these matters come to your attention?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I think, as indicated clearly in the memo—

Mr. David Zimmer: You got the information and then were concerned about it and sent off the email to Flynn, but how did you get the information?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: What had happened, as I testified a little earlier, through the process in December when everybody was trying to do this compensation disclosure—we were trying our best to satisfy the government on the request for compensation but could not, for reasons I can be happy to get into, and eventually did. When that $1.4-million number came up, it raised the question—I mean, I went back to Rhoda, or Maria, and I said, "What's this? What's it comprised of?" It came to my attention that we were still paying for this stipend. My impression at the time was, "Why are we still paying for this?" Because we had kind of moved on. Dr. Mazza was not spending as much time on Ornge matters as he used to, and it raised the question in my mind of what's this all about? Because the last time I saw it was in 2008, thereabouts.

Through discussions with Rhoda and Maria Renzella—I perhaps forgot to mention Maria in this—I kind of dig into this and I say, "Where are the invoices? How do we know work is done?" Then Lepine gets into the conversation to say, "The work has never been done. It's not required. There are other people doing this work," and the rest of it. I left it at that. I didn't dig into it any further than to raise those questions.

I got home, put the memo together and said, "Look, this is something that needs to have a formal investigation. Ken, please take it on."

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. And Ken Flynn also tacked on another email response. He said, "For our consideration. Also assoc. DM informed me we should go back to 2007 when looking at exec. compensation." That's the full email.

Who is the last—in the last sentence in the letter: "Clearly this may ... be the tip of the iceberg so to speak. I have advised Barry Pickford, chair of the audit ... committee...." Is he a board member?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes, he is.

Mr. David Zimmer: When and in what manner did you inform Barry Pickford? By cc'ing this email?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I might have sent him a copy of this email, but I definitely did speak to him. I can't recall whether I phoned him or spoke to him or sent him an email or what it was.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. So going back, then, in the years leading up to this email of December 24, 2011, why did the board approve those payments?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: As I testified earlier, the payments under the stipend came about as a result of a long-standing contract between Dr. Mazza's professional firm and originally, I guess, Sunnybrook and Women's, and then Ornge Air Ambulance Inc. and then Ornge.

I first became aware of it when it was brought to my attention by the chair of the compensation committee in 2008, who presented to me this contract between Dr. Mazza's professional services corporation and Ornge detailing a role as medical director for a number of different areas of the province with, I think, $50,000 or $60,000 amounts associated with each. I reviewed the letter. I had a discussion with Luis Navas at the time to kind of get clarity as to why we were doing this and so on. That's when it was approved.

The contract had an automatic renewal component year to year, which, quite frankly—

Mr. David Zimmer: So here's what I'm struggling with: Obviously, from your statement just now, this issue was in play at the board because you were talking about it with various people back in 2008. The issue was out there. It's not—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Sorry, what issue?

Mr. David Zimmer: These extra payments or contracts with Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No, the contract between Dr. Mazza's professional corporation and Ornge was presented to me for approval as a co-signer of a contract, along with Luis Navas, and I did go sign it. To the best of my recollection, it did not go to the full board.

1840

Mr. David Zimmer: So what happened on Saturday, December 24 at about 9 o'clock in the morning—10 o'clock, 9:54? People are getting ready for the holiday season, the Christmas season, all the usual holidays. What jumped out in your mind on Saturday, December 24, when everybody is shut down and they're doing other things and getting ready for holidays, that gave you a start to sit down and crank out this lengthy and detailed email on this issue? Something must have hit—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Absolutely.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was it?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: It was probably on the previous day, on the Friday, when we were wrapping things up in the office that—it would have been perhaps over the previous days in that week that we had gotten into a conversation about, what's going on that this stipend is being paid? What's the support in evidence for the stipend? Through the conversations and dragging other people into the conversation, such as Mr. Lepine, then it got into, well, who else is getting paid for which there is no evidence? It just carries on. So I was going home late that night and I was saying, "Good Lord, what's going on? It's time to sit down and paper a memo to Ken Flynn," because at that point in time, I was hearing from management that they knew of things that were potentially inappropriate—nothing proven at this point; potentially inappropriate, which is disturbing. This had to do with potentially unauthorized payments, so my objective was to flag it to Ken.

Mr. David Zimmer: When was the last board meeting before December 24, when you wrote this memo?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I can't recall. It might have been early that month.

Mr. David Zimmer: Early that month.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: You used the expression, "I've got to paper a memo," and it happened on December 24, on a Saturday. It seems a great rush to get the memo out, a great need—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, it was a holiday period, and detail is my nature.

Mr. David Zimmer: One way of looking at it is that on Friday afternoon, on the 23rd, you became aware of this for the first time and diligently advised finance and the chair of your audit committee.

Another interpretation may well be that the issue was known about for some time and something happened on the day before that triggered this almost panic to get this email out, to paper something.

And another interpretation might be, if you'll pardon my expression, that it was a "cover my butt" memo.

Can you see how those two interpretations would play out?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: With all respect, I think your interpretations are incorrect.

Mr. David Zimmer: But can you see how the interpretation—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: There are lots of interpretations that I could develop, but none of your interpretations, particularly the last two, are correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. Thank you.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: How much time do we have left?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes left.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In this round or—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): In total.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In total. Okay.

Incidentally, I did want to make one comment on your earlier description of your understanding in 2005-06 from Dr. Mazza of the intent to create for-profit. We had both Hugh MacLeod, who was the ADM in 2002-03, and Ron Sapsford, who was the deputy in 2005-06, and they were both crystal clear that, in their view, the intent was to set up a non-profit corporation that would act solely in the public—you know, provide air ambulance service in Ontario, that there was no discussion at the time of setting up for-profit corporations, hence the lack of any reference to that in the performance agreement. There was a contemplation of setting up charitable foundations to receive donations, in the Alberta model, but not to create for-profits.

I just wanted that—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: No, I appreciate that and—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —to stand because that was the testimony we heard from the relevant senior bureaucrats at the Ministry of Health this morning.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Certainly, and just in listening to Hugh MacLeod's testimony this morning, I understand that. I just want to make clear that was not something that was brought forward to the new board in any way, shape or form.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, and thank you for actually sharing that with us because that does give us some perspective.

I want to think a bit, in the little bit of time we've got left, about the issues of governance and accountability and acting in the public interest, because you're both a professional CA, where you have a code of conduct—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Absolutely.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —where you need to act in the public interest. In addition, you were sitting on the board of a publicly funded entity providing public air ambulance service.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Did the issue ever come up in your own mind, given that you had positions not just on Ornge but on various of these for-profits, as a board member, a shareholder, whatever, on some of these for-profits—did it ever come up, in your mind, that there was a conflict of interest here, from a governance point of view?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you are on your last minute.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: We looked at—yes. The answer to that question is yes. We looked at it carefully and we tried to balance that. Clearly, the position of being on the board of Ornge GP and on the board of Ornge could potentially be viewed as conflict. My view was simply this: that as we developed the master licence agreement between Ornge and the new to-be for-profit entities—as I testified with Mr. Klees's question, as a simple accountant, I wanted to make sure that there was a straightforward way of calculating the monies moving over. That's point one.

The other point was, I wanted to have some mechanism, as the chair of the board of Ornge, to have some insight into the operations of GP. After much debate and discussion, we embedded within the master licence agreement the requirement that there be two board members—a minority position—from Ornge on the board of GP.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And if I may, the reason I'm asking the question is—and you've made reference to some of the front-line workers. What we've actually heard from the front line is that they could tell the difference, once the for-profits were set up; that it seemed as though the senior people were "distracted"—that was the word that often came up—in looking at how to make a profit and that they lost sight of the core role, which was to provide public air ambulance service. So whether there was a legal conflict, there seems to have been an ethical and a practical conflict between the activities of focusing on the for-profit and the enterprise of delivering air ambulance service in the public interest.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, perhaps I could speak to that momentarily—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Just quickly, as short an answer as you can. That would be great.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: As short an answer as I can. First of all, Tom Lepine, who was COO of the Ornge operation and responsible for the delivery of the air ambulance services within Ornge, was dedicated to that. Dr. Mazza provided and continued to provide the visionary oversight and so on. But the day-to-day ground-work—it was Mr. Lepine and his crew who were responsible for that, as well as the medical advisory committee.

I can assure you that certainly the board, for all of the changes and different operations, including, for example, the change in response time—I don't know if you're aware, but one of the first things that the board did after the change in response time was initiated was to say to the medical advisory committee, "You monitor that and you report back to us about whether there is any impact at all on patient." That was a direct requirement for the medical advisory committee, to come back to the board on that issue, and they did. I only point that out to say that at no time did the board of Ornge lose sight of its responsibilities to do the best for Ontarians.

That wasn't a distraction for, particularly, the people involved in day-to-day operations. I can appreciate how people in the field may have viewed that as a distraction and perhaps to them it was, but it certainly didn't distract the board, and it certainly didn't distract the board from asking the right questions about what's happening out in the field, patient reports and so on.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And if we can move—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And perhaps it comes back to your earlier observation that you didn't always get all the feedback from the front lines.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Correct. For example—if I might, Chair, just two minutes more.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I was equally surprised at Mr. Lepine's comment about having provided the ministry with incorrect patient transfer data. I can tell you that at the board that's a big surprise.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. So we'll now move to Mr. Klees and the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Beltzner, I just want to speak very briefly about your responsibility as a director and the other directors who had a fiduciary responsibility to ensure that the organization of Ornge was acting within the scope of its authority. That's a fundamental mandate of any board of directors. My understanding is that the scope of the authority of Ornge was clearly defined within the performance agreement that was signed between Ornge and the government of Ontario. There was no other document. That was the mandate that Ornge was granted, and the conditions were clearly set out.

In my questioning of Mr. MacLeod this morning, and other witnesses, it all comes down to this: that there was a very clear mandate set out by the government. It was to consolidate air ambulance services. Nowhere in that performance agreement is any reference made to for-profit companies being established, to international business being developed. There may have been a seminar, but the document that gives the scope of authority is clearly the performance agreement.

My question to you is this: Given what has happened—as you said, the members of your board were experienced people. At what point did the board ask for documentation or for a policy decision of the government that gave you the latitude to go beyond the scope of your authority? At what point did that happen?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, Mr. Klees, the best way I can answer that question is, as I understand it from the legal advice that we received throughout the process, everything that we did was well within the legal authority of the entity to do and did not violate the performance agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who provided that legal advice?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: That would have come from Fasken's.

Mr. Frank Klees: And specifically at Fasken's, who provided that advice?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I can't specifically—it would have been either through Lynne Golding, Cynthia Heinz, Alfred Apps, or a combination thereof.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who specifically was it who designed this schematic of all of these for-profit companies?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: That would have been, to the best of my knowledge, Alfred Apps.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

This document, Meyers Norris Penny, you're familiar with it?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did all of the directors see a copy of this report?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I expect so, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Some 26 recommendations in this report went to the board of directors, it went to the government, but I want to deal specifically with the board. Any board member reading this has got to say to themselves, "We've got a problem here." There are 26 very serious issues, and the first one that is at issue is a recommendation that the Ministry of Health have a discussion with Ornge about the structure of Ornge, because there was a concern that it was inconsistent with the performance agreement.

My question to you is this: Did at any time any director at any board meeting make reference to this and say, "Gentlemen, we have a problem that we need to look into?" Did anybody raise that concern even once?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: With respect to the government's understanding of the structure?

Mr. Frank Klees: No, with regard to this document, apart from the government. You get a document like this—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I think I need you to clarify your question.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay; 26 recommendations, 26 red flags that say that Ornge is out of compliance with the performance agreement; the reporting documentation is not what it should be. There are numerous other issues. Did any director ever say, after reading this, "What are we doing about this, and coming into compliance?"

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: The answer to that question is, of course, that it was fully—that was discussed at the board. There are a number of items, in particular related to reporting requirements and timing of reporting. I know there were a number of issues in that MNP report where we were either not in full compliance with the performance agreement or there was some misunderstanding about that. Certainly, that was discussed at the board and certainly the direction to management was, "Get it fixed." Reports back from management—I'm fairly certain we initiated that even before the MNP report—was a quarterly report back to management on performance agreement compliance, which was management's assertion on all areas of the performance agreement. It was sort of, "Tick 'comply,' 'comply,' 'comply' or 'non-comply,' and here's why."

Mr. Frank Klees: So management reassured the board that they are in compliance with all of these issues. You were satisfied with that?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to focus on the $6.7-million agreement that was signed after the purchase of the helicopters from AgustaWestland. I've referred to it as—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I apologize; I don't know which $6.7-million agreement—

Mr. Frank Klees: There were two contracts that—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: So you're referring to two agreements?

Mr. Frank Klees: Two agreements totalling $6.7 million. Are we clear now which contracts those are?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I've referred to them as kickbacks. The reason I did that is because any reasonable person who looks at that transaction would see a sale. We heard testimony here from senior people at Ornge who said, "There was no substance to that $6.7 million. We did not need to pay it. Chris Mazza insisted on paying it. A couple of months after we paid for our helicopters, lo and behold, we get a contract, a marketing services agreement, that has a schedule of payments that would amount to $6.7 million being paid to one of our for-profit companies."

As a director, someone who knows business, someone who knows what value is, did you or any other director ever question that transaction—question its integrity?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Which transaction?

Mr. Frank Klees: The marketing services agreement between AgustaWestland and, I guess it was, Ornge Global.

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: In context, let me respond to that question.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you have three minutes left, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Please only take two, because I have—

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: I will try to be as quick as possible and give you some of my 10 minutes if you like.

Let me be clear: The board was completely unaware of any additional payment amounting to six-odd million dollars made to Agusta. This became evident to the board in January—

Mr. Frank Klees: Of this year?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Of this year. Cynthia Heinz reported that to me and Barry Pickford at the Fasken's office as we were meeting in early January of this year to try to help the government with the issue of board resignation and all the rest of those things. I'm hearing this from Cindy. I then ask, "Where's the evidence? What's going on?"

We then have Bruce Tavender, who was the chief financial officer of Ornge, come. He presents to us—by "us," I mean certainly Barry Pickford and myself, and there may have been some other board members in the room; I can't recall—certain documents, including a letter from Agusta to Ornge, to—I can't recall; it might have been Rick Potter who it was addressed to. But in reading through the letter, it became evident that Ornge was not required to pay for a weight upgrade. That's what the letter said, in effect.

Bruce Tavender tells us that Ornge did, in fact, pay for that weight upgrade. At this point I'm confused, because the authorization from the board with respect to the Agusta contract, the original helicopter contract, was black and white. It said, "The board approves this contract and approves amendments to the contract of a minor nature. Any major amendment must come forward for approval and must have the signature of the CEO and the chair of the board"—very specific.

Mr. Frank Klees: And did that happen?

Mr. Rainer Beltzner: Well, if you look at whatever documents are related to that transaction, you will see the signatures, I believe, of Chris Mazza and Maria Renzella. It did not come to the board. There are no board minutes. In fact, Maria's presentation to the board, the last one for Agusta payments, dealt with about $2 million, dealt with additional parts and additional implementation time changes, all completely fine. We looked at that and approved that. There was never a mention of a payment of $6.7 million for a weight upgrade.

When that issue came to light, I walked out of the room. This is in a meeting with Bruce Tavender and

SPECIAL REPORT, AUDITOR GENERAL:
ORNGE AIR AMBULANCE
AND RELATED SERVICES

ORNGE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'd like to call this committee to order and invite our first presenter this morning, Julius Ueckermann, vice-president, logistics, from Ornge, to please come forward. Welcome to the committee.

Mr. Ueckermann, just to confirm that you've received the letter to do with a witness coming before the committee?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I have, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. I think our clerk is looking for—

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): I got it.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): —either the oath or affirmation.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): The Bible is in front of you there, Mr. Ueckermann.

Mr. Ueckermann, do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. You have time for an opening statement if you'd like to make one.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Committee members, good morning.

My name is Julius Ueckermann. I am currently the vice-president of logistics at Ornge, and I am responsible for the operations control centre, or OCC, formerly known as the Ornge communications centre.

The OCC is the nerve centre of Ontario's air ambulance and critical care land transport system. We determine the level of care required during transport events and then coordinate and launch the appropriate resources, whether it be an airplane, a helicopter or a land ambulance. We also run the provincial transportation authorization centre, also known as PTAC, which authorizes every patient transport between any two medical facilities in the province, regardless of who is doing the transport. There is also a dedicated flight-following function, known as the aviation control centre, that performs dedicated flight following for all our dedicated air ambulances. The staff consists of communication officers, operation managers and transport medicine physicians, who triage for service and provide medical direction to Ornge paramedics in the field.

I would like to take this opportunity also to introduce myself and give you a bit of my background. I completed my B.Sc. honours degree in biochemistry in South Africa in 1986, after which I had to report for two years of compulsory military service. I was allocated to the medical corps, was trained as a combat medic, completed my officer's training and also qualified as a pilot in the South African Air Force flying club.

After the completion of my military service, I was offered a position at a medical pathology company, where I worked as a medical biochemist for a number of years. I eventually joined the pharmaceutical industry before I got involved with the medical insurance industry.

I joined a company called Medscheme, which was the largest medical administration company at the time, and I managed a variety of areas, including high-volume national call centres. I managed a number of Six Sigma projects and trained as a Six Sigma black belt and held the position of general manager.

In October 2005, I was approached by an international headhunting firm and was recruited to work for International SOS, one of the world's largest medical assistance and air ambulance companies, in the capacity of head of assistance, Southeast Asia. I was based in Jakarta, Indonesia, and managed a very busy alarm centre. The centre consisted of around 120 staff members, and this included a managed care component. This was a very challenging environment to provide emergency services in, based on the fact that the region consisted of 18,000 islands. We were heavily reliant on both fixed- and rotor-wing aircraft, and also did the occasional landing on the deck of large shipping vessels to evacuate sick or injured members.

In February 2009, an opportunity presented itself to move to London, UK, to manage the operations of two key accounts. These were the US military contract also known as Tricare and the British Foreign and Commonwealth Office contract. I was transferred from Jakarta to London, and worked in the capacity of director of operations, health care management services, for northern Europe, the Middle East and Africa. In this capacity, I was responsible for the day-to-day operation of both alarm centres, and staff consisted of operation managers, nurses and air ambulance dispatchers, supported by a group of medical directors.

Our mission for Tricare was to provide air ambulance services to all US military personnel situated outside of the US, excluding active war zones. The alarm centre was audited every six months by a US military audit team, and protocols were strictly adhered to.

I also completed a full MBA program during this time. It was awarded cum laude, which is the highest honour, to me in 2011.

In the summer of 2010, I was approached by a head-hunting firm about an opportunity to work in Canada. I accepted the position with Ornge and arrived in Canada on December 22, 2010, and I started working with Ornge on January 3, 2011, in my capacity as vice-president, logistics.

Very soon after I started, I was asked to get involved with Ornge Global by setting up an international operations centre that could dispatch air ambulances anywhere in the world. I completed this request and managed to establish a functional operational centre, but never got the opportunity to launch it due to the closure of Ornge Global. Shortly after, I was offered the opportunity to assume full control of the operations control centre in January 2012, and I was delighted to take on this challenge.

I consider it a privilege to have the opportunity to be involved in the OCC, to share my knowledge and experience, and to improve service to the residents of Ontario. I am full of confidence in Ornge and its management team, and I believe that we are on the right track. My directive from Ron McKerlie is to build a truly world-class operations centre, and that is what I will do. Since January 2012, we have been making steady progress in addressing the issues identified in the Auditor General's report as well as working towards full compliance with the amended performance agreement.

Over the past few months, with the heightened public interest and scrutiny of Ornge, the dedicated staff in the OCC carry out their day-to-day work with professionalism, through exceptionally challenging circumstances.

I want to mention at this stage that the staff in the OCC should most definitely be considered front-line staff. They have a very, very difficult job to do and carry huge responsibilities on their shoulders. I want to acknowledge that group of people today that nobody ever sees, but without whom the Ornge air ambulance system cannot function.

To give you an indication of the volume of work being performed by our staff, I would like to highlight a few numbers from the past few months. The OCC authorized more than 90,000 medical transportation numbers and handled more than 174,000 phone calls over the past three months. To clarify, the medical transportation numbers are transfer approvals between any two medical facilities in the province, regardless of who is doing the transportation and when. In the past three months only, the operations control centre coordinated and transported 4,709 patients. This is an indication of the workload being handled by the centre.

At this time, I would like to share with you some of the many initiatives and improvements under way in the OCC. In January 2012, we implemented the new launch policy, where aircraft are being launched immediately without delay. We have done an entire review of the OCC dispatch system and telephone system and have drawn up specifications for a replacement system in line with the Auditor General's recommendations. The RFP will go out in August. We have reviewed the staffing model and staffing numbers, and we're in the process of upstaffing the OCC. We are in the process of moving forward towards a complete specialized staffing model, but this will only be completed once the collective bargaining agreement negotiations are completed by the end of this year.

We are also in the process of reviewing and redesigning the entire training curriculum, and we'll be introducing certifications for every position in the OCC. We have introduced a quality program in the OCC, and we are busy expanding this to be much more comprehensive moving forward. We have also rearranged the OCC management team to ensure that people's strengths are being utilized in the right areas.

We have incorporated the aviation control centre, or ACC, in the OCC and by doing so we have improved the flight awareness for the staff in the OCC.

We are in the process, also, of rolling out two decision optimization tools that will assist the OCC staff to make better decisions. One of these programs was developed for Ornge by the University of Toronto engineering department, and the other one was developed for Ornge by Cornell University and in line with recommendations from the Auditor General.

A visual call management system has been purchased and will be implemented in the next couple of weeks. We have changed the shift handover process to allow a better one-to-one transformation of knowledge during shift changes.

There are other changes and initiatives that I haven't mentioned, but I have to acknowledge that we still have room for improvement. However, the staff in the OCC are very keen to complete this journey and I'm looking forward to taking this road. Thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for your opening statement. We'll move first to the opposition for questioning. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Chair. Good morning, Mr. Ueckermann.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Good morning, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: You have been, according to your CV, the vice-president, logistics, for Ornge since January 2011; is that correct?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: When you were hired on, you were hired on to Ornge Global; is that right?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No, sir. I was actually hired on to Ornge Ontario.

Mr. Frank Klees: Ornge Ontario?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: But your CV indicates that you were responsible for setting up all logistical and operational functions for Ornge Global International.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was that all about?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I was originally hired and appointed into Ornge Ontario with the understanding that I will have oversight over the operations control centre, but also that I would, once Ornge Global is functional, build an international dispatch centre that will basically service the clients that they were going to line up for Ornge Global.

Mr. Frank Klees: I just want to clarify, because I need to get straight in my mind how this all works. So you were hired by Ornge Ontario.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: And you were put in charge—overall responsibility for the Ornge operational control centre?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No, I was hired in that position but I never functioned in that position. When I started with the company, just after I managed to basically find my feet a couple of weeks later, Dr. Mazza approached me to spend all my time on Ornge Global and to start looking at setting up an international dispatch centre.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you were hired by Ornge Ontario to take over total control of the operation of the control centre of Ornge Ontario—

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —but when you showed up, you were told that that's not what you were going to do.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct. Well, I was told I was going to get involved with Ornge Global, but not that that was going to be my only focus.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. I just want to get a sense of what you did do.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you've got your desk. Your assignment from that point on was to do precisely what?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: To basically set up an operations centre for Ornge Global.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what did you do?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I started by doing an evaluation of the current Ornge Ontario system to see if there's any of that that we could basically use in Ornge Global—

Mr. Frank Klees: And could you? Could you use any of that?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No, sir. I looked at the current dispatch system that was operating in Ornge Ontario, and it was most definitely very old and not advanced enough to use on an international level.

Mr. Frank Klees: That's the dispatch network that was being used by Ornge Ontario for the last number of years. Your conclusion, within a matter of—how long did it take you to make the assessment that this was an out-of-date, dysfunctional system?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: A couple of weeks.

Mr. Frank Klees: A couple of weeks?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: What did you do then?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I started looking at what would be needed to set up something like this. I was actually quite shocked in terms of the lack of knowledge and understanding of the people who actually wanted to get this international business process going, because nobody had an idea in terms of what it involved.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who were these people? You very quickly drew the conclusion that these people were not very knowledgeable—unqualified, would you say?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Not experienced in international business, for sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who specifically were those people?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I guess that's everybody that was involved in Ornge Global at that point in time. Dr. Mazza had some idea in terms of how to operate because he was on board some international air ambulances. But in terms of the administration, nobody that was involved with Ornge Global knew anything—nobody. There was no expertise internationally.

Mr. Frank Klees: Are any of those people currently employed at Ornge Ontario?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No, sir. No.

Mr. Frank Klees: So no one who was working at Ornge Global is currently employed anymore with Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: People who were full-time employed with Ornge Global?

Mr. Frank Klees: Full-time or part-time.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: There were some of the Ornge Ontario people who were involved in it, so they would attend some meetings, but—

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay, fair enough. So then you drew that conclusion, you had in mind—you knew now what organization you were working with and how knowledgeable and experienced these people were. What was your next step?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I raised my concerns on numerous occasions that I think this whole thing is being approached backwards.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who did you do that with?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: We had weekly operations meetings, and I particularly raised my concerns with the people who were doing the product development.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who was that?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: At that point in time, when I started, there was a marketing manager. His name was Paul. I can't recall his surname. He was working with Kelly Long and they had a marketing team that was actually doing a product design.

I had a lot of international experience with this type of environment and I was convinced that that product was not sellable at all. I raised, on a weekly basis, the concern that, first of all, we don't have a product and we cannot proceed before a lot of other systems come in place.

Mr. Frank Klees: And that product—I'm sorry, I don't want to interrupt you, but I just want to focus in on some of the details.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Sure, sir. No problem.

Mr. Frank Klees: The product that they were working on, what was that product?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: The product was a travel insurance product. It was supposed to be sold on the same principle or basis that you would sell a golf membership to very wealthy people. It was going to be priced exorbitantly expensive and it was going to give you unlimited access to private air ambulance jets anywhere in the world.

I looked at this product. First of all, I knew what the overage was going to be to run something like that and I tried to do calculations of how much of this product you would need to sell just to break even, and I thought to myself, it's impossible.

Mr. Frank Klees: Interesting. And obviously this was one aspect of the vision that everyone bought into; right?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: It turned out to be a bit of a nightmare.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Absolutely.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you did that for a period of months; you were there. During this time when you were doing this work for Ornge Global, who was writing the cheque? Your cheque was coming from where?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Well, that's a good question, and that puzzled me. I was employed into Ornge Ontario. I remember the reason why I took that position, because I left a very stable, large international company and moved my family across the world to come and work in Canada for this company. It was sold to me that I would be working for Ornge Ontario. The only client is the government of Ontario, so it's a very secure company.

I remember at the interview I asked, "How do you capitalize all of these aircraft?" and they told me, "We raised a bond and it was sold within minutes with a massive credit rating." Based on that information, I said to my wife, "This is a very secure company to work for," and based on that, I moved.

However, at some point in time I got transferred into Ornge Global and I cannot recall that I ever received a notification of that. What I do recall is that at some point in time I was approached by HR and told, "We're going to transfer you into another division and you do not qualify for HOOPP anymore, which was the—

M^{me} France Gélinas: The pension fund.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, the pension fund, because only people employed by Ornge Ontario can go on HOOPP.

I then went back a week ago, just to go and check, because that question was haunting me as well. I followed my pay stubs, and my pay stub indicated I was paid out of Ornge Ontario until the end of May of last year, then my pay stub started showing I'm being paid out of Ornge Global. However, when I received my—what's the tax form called? Something four—

M^{me} France Gélinas: T4.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: That's it. When I received that at the end of the year, my whole salary was indicated as being paid out of Ornge Global, so I assume there must have been some adjustment on the books to allocate my whole salary into Ornge Global.

Mr. Frank Klees: How much were you being paid?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: My base salary was $175,000; then I have pension benefits as well.

Mr. Frank Klees: And bonuses in addition?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I officially qualified for a bonus, which I never received.

Mr. Frank Klees: Which you never received?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Never.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to just talk about your background a little bit. I see your CV. Would you say that you have direct experience in air ambulance services?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, sir. Absolutely.

Mr. Frank Klees: I can see the repatriation part of your business, your past experience. Can you tell me in what context the experience that you have would be identical to the current air ambulance and immediate-response requirement? Typically, when you talk about the business that—I think you mentioned Tricare—

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: —which would be similar, for example, to our Blue Cross. That involves repatriation. The dispatch and the urgency is very different from that than getting a call to a trauma case, an auto accident or something. Just help me to understand and put into context your past employment experience to how that would focus here. What are the similarities with Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think we can break it down into two components. The typical on-scene requests that we do in Ornge Ontario run at about 6% of our volumes. The large percentage of it would be the typical inter-facility transfer, which is very similar to your repatriation type of environment.

In Indonesia, when I managed the Southeast Asia region for air ambulance and repatriation services, a very large component of that was actually air ambulance services. We provided services to a lot of offshore well components. We had a lot of explorations in Borneo, in places like that. We serviced a lot of mining companies. That was the typical air ambulance service. We made use of contracted helicopters to respond in case of accidents or injuries. We also had the odd call from ships coming through that dangerous and very difficult laneway. We had to dispatch quickly and get people off ships. So that's very similar to the on-scene call environment.

Obviously, my exposure in Tricare was of a tremendous amount of value. The protocols being used in the military environment and the audits that they apply are extremely strict, and I really use that as a benchmark that I want to get Ornge Ontario to, because they were really solid and really well-developed systems.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. The reason I'm asking these questions is because I have made the statement on a number of occasions that I am concerned about the unqualified people who are in some very responsible positions. I never referred, in that context, to our paramedics or the front-line pilots. I did, however, make very specific reference to the operations centre, the communications centre, the dispatch, which I think you'll probably agree is really the heart of the air ambulance system, from the standpoint that if you don't have it right there—you have pilots and paramedics depending on getting appropriate information and correct information so that they can be where they need to be at the appropriate time. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I absolutely agree with that, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: I have a document here. I'm going to ask the clerk if he wouldn't mind passing you a copy. Members of the committee have this. You may have seen it; I don't know. It's a document that I tabled a couple of months ago, and it originally came to my attention—it was a confidential document prepared for cabinet that deals with investigations concerning the air ambulance program. I want to take just a few minutes and go through some of these incidents, because it highlights the importance of what you're doing and one of the reasons that we're here today.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to refer you to what is noted as page 11. We're going to go through a few of these incidents. On page 11, you'll see on the left-hand side an incident date. This was January 10, 2011. Under the description it indicates that, "It was reported the Ornge communications centre ... had assigned an air ambulance to rendezvous with a land ambulance for a code 4 patient...." Could you confirm for us what a code 4 patient is, please?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Code 4 is the highest-priority dispatch level.

Mr. Frank Klees: Subsequently, the communications centre "attempted to cancel air ambulance response for various reasons after the air ambulance had arrived on scene." The comments from the investigators are as follows:

First, "The lack of complete, concise and accurate documentation by" the communications officer "during this call for service was incomplete."

Two, the communications officer did not follow communications centre "policy to contact TP regarding the crew overtime situation before launching helicopter."

Three, the communications officer "did not provide accurate information to the TP regarding crew overtime circumstances."

Four, the communications staff "provided confusing and conflicting response information to the staff at Sudbury and North Bay CACCs."

The second item on this page: The incident is February 13, 2011, in Temagami. The description: "The Ornge communications centre ... did not notify North Bay CACC to arrange for land ambulance to transport a code 4 patient from the hospital in Kirkland Lake to a rendezvous location to meet with the Ornge critical care land ambulance ... which would be transporting the patient to Sudbury."

The next page: incident number three, February 25, 2011, Onaping Falls township. The description of the incident: "Sudbury CACC claimed that the Ornge communications centre ... delayed notification of an air ambulance for an on-scene response for a patient having difficulty breathing and a possible CVA." Under the comments from the investigator, it was "found that OCC staff did not address the concerns expressed by Sudbury CACC staff in a professional manner."

The next item on that page: an incident on February 20 in Capreol. The description of the incident: "Sudbury CACC claimed that there was a lengthy delay for" the communications centre "staff to answer the phone when the CACC was trying to request emergency air ambulance response."

The investigator's comments:

"(1) OCC staff did not answer the phone in a timely manner.

"(2) OCC staff did not address the concerns expressed by the caller in a professional manner.

"(3) OCC staff did not create a record of the call request."

On page 11, incident on March 31 in Arnprior—

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Excuse me, sir, which page?

Mr. Frank Klees: Page 11. Oh, sorry; page 14. Incident number six.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: The description: "Claim of a delay by Ornge communication centre ... staff to process a request for a modified on-scene air ambulance response."

The comments from the investigator:

"(1) It was found that an OCC staff member did not immediately enter the request for the modified on-scene to the computer-aided dispatch ... system, causing a delay in response.

"(2) It was also found that the OCC staff members on duty were not familiar with the location of the helipad locations in Arnprior."

Next item: March 31, county of Renfrew. The description of the incident: "Renfrew CACC claimed that the OCC delayed processing a request for a modified on-scene air ambulance request.”

Next incident: June 12. On the next page, the description is as follows: “Communications centre assigned two rotary-wing air ambulances to an on-scene code 4 request when only one air ambulance was required.”

0930

The bottom of that page, incident number 10: June 20, Norfolk county. The incident: “Ornge advised the ministry a critical care paramedic (CCP) had refused to service a request for an on-scene rotary-wing response to a”—motor vehicle incident—“in Norfolk. The CCP advised staff at the OCC he did not have a partner and felt he was unable to perform appropriate patient care to his skill levels in a safe manner and by doing an on-scene call without a partner placed him in contravention of the Occupational Health and Safety Act...”

Page 17: July 23, Sturgeon Falls. The incident: “It was claimed that there was a more than seven-hour delay in the provision of emergency ambulance inter-facility transportation from the West Nipissing hospital to the hospital in Collingwood.”

Item number 3: “It was found that when resources became available, the OCC”—that’s the communications centre—“did not ask the sending facility to consider using a fixed-wing aircraft that was at the North Bay airport or the rotary-wing air ambulance that became available in Sudbury.”

The next page, item number 4, under that same incident: “It was also found that the”—communications centre—“staff did not keep CritiCall updated with flight planning.”

The next item under that same incident: “It was also found there were errors in communication between the OCC and North Bay CACC leading to both communication centres trying to control this request for emergency ambulance transport.”

Sir, I’ll stop there, but we know that there are at least another 20 incidents in this report alone that are of a very similar nature. We know what happens when information is passed on that is inaccurate, that is delayed.

We had testimony yesterday from a paramedic who spoke to the issue of the confusion at the communications centre, having people on the flight side and having people on the medical side trying to do each other’s jobs and neither knowing the language of the other. So when I’ve spoken in the past about unqualified people causing delays and putting patients at risk, that’s what we’ve been talking about.

Would you agree, sir, based on the evidence here that we’ve just discussed and based on your personal observations, that that is in fact an issue and certainly has been an issue at Ornge, that we have had unqualified people in key positions in our communications centre at Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Mr. Klees, I think I can answer you in this way: Yes, I think there was a problem in the way that the OCC was managed. I think the policies that were implemented and the workflows very much contributed to some of the issues that you’ve raised. Unfortunately, we know that we work in human systems, so you’re always going to get people making mistakes. Nobody can prevent that from happening. I think it’s our responsibility—and most definitely what I’m focusing on—to make sure that we put in systems and processes to minimize that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Sir, I—

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I just want to go back to your question. Coming back to your point where there were unqualified people answering phones, that is based on a cross-training staffing model that was implemented in the OCC which was the very first thing that I changed and am in the process of changing.

If you want to talk about qualified staff, we have 34 medical-qualified people in the OCC, 27 flight-qualified people in the OCC, two of them who are double-qualified. But unfortunately, with the cross-training model, there were instances where flight people were answering medical calls and vice versa, which is completely unacceptable.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And Mr. Klees, you are out of time.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can I borrow just another five minutes?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes total—

Mr. Frank Klees: In total?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): That’s it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, sir, let me just say this, then: Clearly, our air ambulance service has had its challenges, to say the least.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I agree.

Mr. Frank Klees: And one of the reasons is the fact that the incident report that I’ve just shared with you touches people’s lives. There are families, there are individuals, who, today, are not the same. There are people who died, who may be alive today, if in fact this system would have been more efficient and in a position to respond more effectively.

You have a challenge, sir. I would just ask you this: The issue of qualified people, experienced people, people who are trained to do the job—this is not a telemarketing centre. This is not about selling widgets and you can say, “Well, we’ve sold a million widgets and we’ve only had a 5% failure rate.” I don’t think we can afford to fail one patient in the province of Ontario.

The only way that we can assure that is to ensure that people like yourself are ensuring that we have qualified people, properly trained, on the front lines doing the work that they’re being paid to do. People in this province have, I believe, the right to expect that when the phone rings at the communications centre at Ornge, there will be a response.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Ueckermann can respond, and then it will go to the NDP.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Mr. Klees, thank you for your comment. I thank you for that comment. I appreciate it and I agree with you. There is still a challenge ahead for us. We have made huge progress to address these issues.

The individual cases that you mentioned in the report—I went through every single one of them and looked at what caused them, and every single one of them is being addressed. We will not stop before we have cut down issues, problems, complaints to the bare minimum. As I said, we would like to eliminate it 100%. It might not be possible, but it's my responsibility to put in systems, processes, procedures, training and qualified people to make sure that it's reduced to the bare minimum.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you. It has been a bit of a ride for you. It's not exactly the welcome mat we usually put out to people who decide to join us in Ontario, but I'm happy you chose to join us.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Thank you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I would like to take you back to January 2011, when you started to work for Ornge. It was clear from what was presented to you that you were joining an agency of the government of Ontario. We call them transfer payment agencies. The government of Ontario was the sole client, was the payer. You were afforded things like HOOPP, which is the pension plan for the people who work for the health care system in Ontario etc.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Right.

M^{me} France Gélinas: During that time at Ornge—we'll call it before December—did you have any contact whatsoever with anybody from the government of Ontario, the Ministry of Health, the emergency health services branch, and how did those go and who did you talk to?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Before I joined Ornge?

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, from the time you joined Ornge in January 2011 till December 2011.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No, ma'am. I've never even heard their names mentioned in meetings. I had no contact with them whatsoever.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Have you had contacts with people from the Ministry of Health since?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, I have.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who was that and in what circumstances did that come?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I was part of the team that negotiated the new amended performance agreement. We also have now monthly meetings with the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care to discuss progress. We're implementing a quality plan. I now have close ties with the emergency branch, where I would phone them when there are any issues that are of concern or issues that I want their assistance with. I'm working very closely with them at this point in time to make sure that we get this train back on track.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And could you share with us the names of the people who you are now in contact with at the ministry?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Dr. Tony Campeau is my main contact, and then Rob Nishman, some of the ministry investigators—I don't know all their names, unfortunately.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's okay.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Obviously, Patricia Li, and various other people who attended the meeting. There has just been a new appointment as well. I think it's Richard—I can't remember his surname. I apologize for that. I'm not good with surnames.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's okay. I'm lousy with names also. I know exactly how it goes.

Do you find that this closer relationship to the ministry adds value to your work, helps improve quality?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Absolutely. I think when Ornge operated in isolation, we lost a lot of assistance that we could have had from the ministry. I most certainly get a lot of value out of it. Going back to the Auditor General's report, there were really good recommendations in terms of working with the ministry to assist us with linking into the national systems that have been used by the ambulance dispatchers. We can approach them to assist us with building better radio links to talk to our aircraft etc. At this point in time, we're getting really good assistance on that side.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Is it reasonable to think that, had this assistance from the ministry been available from the start, it would have been helpful back then too?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: It's difficult to say. I wasn't operating in that environment at that point in time, so for me, it's very difficult to say, whether it was available or not available.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you're hired and you come to Ontario to look after the OCC. No sooner are you here when you realize the OCC is not really performing as good as it could. I think you said that it was old and—I forgot the exact word that you used. But then you transferred over to set up the international part of Ornge. Who then looked after the OCC?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Well, I never took control of the OCC. The OCC had its own reporting structure. I came in and was never officially put in charge of the OCC.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But when you shared with us that you had an opportunity to look at what was going on and quickly made up your mind that it needed some modernizing, to say the least, who were the people in charge at the time?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: The ultimate responsible person was the chief operating officer, who was Tom Lepine. Then there was the VP of operations that was overseeing the OCC as well as field operations. Then there was a director of operations as well.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Who were those people? Do you remember their names?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: The director of operations was Les Cleverly, and the VP of operations was Steve Farquhar.

M^{me} France G  linas: Did you share with them what you've shared with us?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I did. Again, this is second-hand knowledge or second-hand information that I got, but I raised the issues of cross-training as a concern. I raised the issue that the systems, although they were functional—I think with the third-generation computer-aided dispatch systems available these days, there can be a lot of improvements made to the system.

The feedback that I got from them was very much that they had made a lot of those recommendations themselves, but they were not allowed to implement any one of those suggestions that they had made.

M^{me} France G  linas: So Mr. Farquhar kind of knew that the cross-training was not a good idea, knew that it needed new computers to be able to function better, but was not allowed to implement them?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Well, as I say, again, I can't speak for what they knew and what they decided to do. All I'm saying is in discussions that I had, they made it clear that there were a lot of issues that they actually wanted to change, but were not allowed to.

M^{me} France G  linas: Do you have an idea as to why they were not allowed to?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I cannot speculate on that.

M^{me} France G  linas: No?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No.

M^{me} France G  linas: They never raised the issue of money or anything like this?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No.

M^{me} France G  linas: No. And you wouldn't venture a guess?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: If I have to venture a guess, I would say I think there was more focus on the Global side development.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Good morning. Thank you for being here.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Good morning. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: It seems to be that there was a focus on the Global side, as opposed to working on providing the service here in Ontario. I know it's just a guess, but why do you have that feeling?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Well, I think there was a lot of hype in the company in terms of Global. The senior management team most definitely was excited and energized. I know Dr. Mazza was driving this very, very hard. From where I sat and looked at it, it was most definitely the part of the business that received all the attention at that point in time.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And because of that attention, the services in Ontario may have suffered.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Again, I can't say that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. There are a number of things that need to be changed, and you've addressed that. If you could just isolate with some greater specificity, what are the areas that you really want to see some improvement in, moving forward, that would be able to help you do your job better or help Ornge do its job better?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Are you talking about internally or externally?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Both. Start with internally, if you like.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Internally, I've been receiving a huge amount of support for everything that I've recommended thus far. One of the first things that I did was—obviously, that we want to move to a specialized staffing model. It's very important that we have people working in specialized positions.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Can you explain what you mean by "specialized positions" and "specialized staffing"?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: In a call centre environment, you have two options in terms of how you strategize your staffing. You can do the cross-training model, which means you train everybody to be able to do everything. It's a very cost-efficient model because you can put anybody in any position. The problem with that is you will never get the quality. Or you can go to a specialized staffing model, which means you highly specialize and train certain people into specific positions. The downside to that is it's more expensive, so you require more staff. Those are the two models. I'm opting for the second model. I think, dealing in an emergency environment, you need the highest quality you can have.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What's the advantage of having that specialized? You said that it's more quality, but what gives it the greater quality?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: As an example, you will only have a well-qualified medical person taking a phone call and talking to a physician or a hospital or a paramedic. They would understand the common language and obviously would be able to interpret the information correctly.

Likewise, if I have a qualified commercial pilot, a flight dispatcher or an air traffic controller on the flight dispatch side, these people understand aviation law, the challenges of weather, technical issues with aircraft and everything else associated, so they can talk to the pilots and make informed decisions.

So I've put forward my proposals to do that. It has been really well accepted, and I get full support for that.

I did a full evaluation of the current system that we're using at Ornge. It is my personal view that the system needs to be replaced and that the phone system can be enhanced. It has been approved by the board. The project executive committee signed off on it, and the RFP will be going out. We are looking at implementing a truly world-class dispatch system which can also assist the flight dispatchers and the medical call-takers in optimizing that decision. So we get a lot of electronic brains to help us in that instance.

One of the big things that I'm driving, obviously, is training. We are redesigning every single training manual, and we are implementing certification courses for every position in the OCC, so nobody would be allowed to work in a specific position unless they have been certified into that position.

There are a lot of initiatives, and we are really putting a lot of effort and time into addressing every single issue that was raised in the Auditor General's report, as well as making sure that we comply with the performance agreement.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You mentioned some external issues as well. What were those?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Well, externally, it's really good co-operation from the government, which at this point in time they've been very forthcoming with. This is from the IT cluster, in terms of tapping into the government capabilities on the IT infrastructure, as well as assistance when we have issues that we need to sort out with the local dispatch centres or other areas that we need better co-operation with.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Now I want to turn your mind to when you first began at Ornge, if you could talk about some of the key problems on the dispatch side. I know that you weren't on the dispatch side for very long because you were transferred to Ornge Global, but while you were in Ornge and you were working with the command centre and the dispatch services—can you talk about some of the problems that you noticed on that end?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think my first big concern was the cross-training model, because I know at that point in time there was a lot of talk from the field that they were talking to people who were not understanding what they were saying in terms of the medical or flight side. That was a big concern of mine.

There was no quality system in place, so the quality of the phone calls and the information that was captured in the system wasn't monitored and quality-controlled. We've got a really well-functioning quality system now in place.

The system that we have in place is very functional, but it's limited in terms of getting information and statistics to really monitor how well people are performing and what our response times are. That is why I've put through a proposal to replace that system, as well.

We've incorporated the aviation control centre into the OCC, which is something that I was driving for, simply to improve the situational awareness in the OCC of our dedicated aircraft and where their movements were. That has really increased the situational awareness of the staff in the OCC to know where our aircraft are, at what time they're actually taking off and what time they're landing.

Some of the issues that Mr. Klees brought up—you know, people were late in getting ambulances to an aircraft—were simply because there was miscommunication in terms of when an aircraft would arrive at a specific destination. With the dedicated flight filing that we have now in place—we have an arrivals and departures board on the wall and everybody knows when an aircraft is departing and when it is arriving.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you for that.

I want to turn your attention now to your experience when you worked in your UK contract, working with the US military.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You indicated that there were very strict protocols in terms of audits by the military.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, correct.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: How would you compare the audit process that occurred under the US military and their strict protocol to the Ontario government in terms of their oversight or their auditing of the work that was done by Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I've not been through a full ministry audit. We're scheduled to have a service review audit on, I think, October 23 and 24.

I've received the audit documentation. It's very comprehensive. I think it's well designed. I think it's going to touch every single point that is important. It most definitely touches the issues raised in the Auditor General's report, as well as some amendments that were made on that audit—which are different from your central land ambulance dispatch centres, which specifically drive towards the performance agreement's KPIs as well. I think it's going to be very comprehensive.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you. My colleague has some questions.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Sure.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm taking you a little bit in a different direction. On the aviation side of the dispatch, do they keep records of the flight that took place under their dispatch?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Absolutely. We've recently launched, and I can't tell you exactly when it came into place, but we've launched software called—it will come back to me; I apologize. We've launched a dedicated software system that does flight following. We have a dedicated flight follower that speaks to the pilot before he takes off. It records very specific information: number of hours of fuel on board, when it's going to take off, how long its flight is going to be, what its alternative airports will be if weather moves in, arrival times etc.

This information then gets into a software system, and we have on all our dedicated aircraft what we call weight-on-wheels devices. The moment that the aircraft takes off and the weight reduces on the wheels, it triggers a sensor which sends a satellite signal to the OCC so we can immediately see when the aircraft takes off and when it lands. Every record of that aircraft, obviously, is kept in a database.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So we have this now. Did we have this when you came?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: But it wasn't my initiative. The aviation guys implemented that software system, which was superb, before I took over the OCC.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. But if we were to look back through the years, would we be able to find which aircraft was launched through the dispatch centre?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: We would. The current Optimas system is not very friendly in terms of its reporting capabilities but staff have been recording every flight that gets dispatched. Our aircraft have got designated identifiers which are linked to the base that they've been launched from, and where we've got more than one aircraft at one base, we use the base number plus primary or secondary aircraft. That is recorded on every dispatch in the system.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And this is a document that Ornge has kept over the years?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I believe that information is within the case files. I think it's going to be very difficult pushing a button and running a report on it probably, but it might be possible. I'm not the IT expert, so I cannot really say. But those documents are most definitely kept.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Mr. Clerk, I would like to get the flight logs for the flights from Ornge for the month of August 2007. If it is feasible through the system he's described, then, if Ornge could share that with the committee.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I'm not sure when the Optimas system was actually implemented. I think it was implemented about five years ago so it might be—I don't know. We'll have to see.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Just on the cost.

So December 2011 rolls around. You see your employers on the front page of all of the local newspapers and a whole bunch of people at Ornge Global lose their jobs. You are at Ornge Global but you're one of the ones who survived. How did the transfer get done? How did that transition back to your original employer get done and by whom?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: It was very, very tough. It was a really traumatic time in my life and I think for the people around me as well. I think at the point in time when it was clear that Ornge Global was not going to survive—they were going to close—I was approached by the COO, Tom Lepine, at that point in time. He asked me whether I would be willing to move back to my old position, really, and take full control of the OCC.

I was delighted. That is an environment that I was hoping I would work in and that I'm very comfortable with; that is my area of expertise. I think it took me half a second to make that decision.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What happened to the director of operations and the VP of operations who were already operating the OCC?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: The VP of operations' role split. He had a split role, looking after the OCC on the one side, but also the field operations, which included all the medics and all the base management. Basically the one section split out and the director of operations was made redundant.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So that person was let go?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And the job of Mr. Farquhar got separated in two and you got the part that dealt with the OCC.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I will save my time.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well, we'll move on to the government then. Mr. Moridi?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Mr. Ueckermann, for appearing before this committee. Would you please tell us a bit about your background and how long you have been working for Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I started with Ornge on January 3, 2011. I worked for Ornge for probably exactly 12 months, getting involved in the Global side mainly, and then transitioned over to the current Ornge Ontario system where I'm now managing the operations control centre as vice-president.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you tell us a bit about your professional background?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes. I originally studied as a biochemist. I worked in a pathology lab in the pharmaceutical industry. I'm a trained pilot myself. I did a full, comprehensive MBA while I was employed by my previous employer, as well.

I also did training as a Six Sigma black belt, which is an advanced business improvement qualification using advanced statistics. I've managed a number of business improvement projects during my lifetime as well. I had five or six years of air ambulance experience situated in Asia and in Europe dealing with various types of clients before I got approached to come and work at Ornge.

Mr. Reza Moridi: What attracted you to Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: If you take out all the noise around Ornge, it is a phenomenal company to work with. If you didn't have all these things happening around it, it would have been the most incredible company in the world to work for. It still is. I really believe we've made the turn, and I enjoy every second I'm working for this company. It has everything in there that excites me, everything that I feel comfortable with. It is high-pressure. It is a tremendous service to the residents of Ontario. It has a lot of energy, a lot of activity. It is most definitely not a job that you come in the morning into the office and move your papers around, thinking about what you're going to do today to keep yourself busy. It is a high-energy environment, and I really enjoy working in it.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you explain to us your position at Ornge now, currently?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes. I'm vice-president, logistics. I oversee the operations control centre in full, which incorporates the aviation control centre. I'm responsible for everything around the logistical movement of aircraft and land ambulances to move patients from point A to point B.

Mr. Reza Moridi: How many people are you responsible for?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Currently in the OCC, I think my total staff complement is around about 73 or 75.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Do you report directly to the CEO and president?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, I do. I report directly to Mr. Ron McKerlie.

Mr. Reza Moridi: What's a typical day like for you at Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: There is no such thing as a typical day at Ornge, unfortunately. What I usually do is, the first thing when I come in in the morning, I go into the operations control centre and spend 10 or 15 minutes with the operations manager, who has taken over a shift at 2 o'clock in the morning. They then give me an update of what has been happening over the last 12 hours during night shift. At that point in time, we'll address any issues that are of any concern for me.

I then go back to the office, look at some of my emails and then attend a number of meetings, usually during the day. Every single minute that I have spare I try to spend in the operations control centre; I want to make sure that I know what's happening on the floor. I think it's my business to be very hands-on.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you tell us a bit about, and give us an overview of, the communications centre at Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: The centre is really basically functioning in two components at this point in time, and I'm hoping that I can move towards dividing it into four specialized sections going forward.

Currently, one section is what we call flight dispatch, with a flight-following component attached to it. The other component is what we call medical call-taking.

The medical call-taking is really split into two functions. The medical call-taking would be the people answering the phones coming in from the central ambulance systems or from the hospitals requesting patient transfers. They spend time with the people on the phone to determine the level of care required during the transport.

We have an algorithm in the Optimas system which is really working well. As you enter the clinical information of the patient, the system works out what the level-of-care requirement would be.

The level-of-care requirement then drives the level of care and the type of aircraft that will be used. That information is then passed across to the flight planners, who then look at the requirement and the location of the patient and then choose an aircraft. They would then phone the pilot and do a weather check, and once the pilot accepts because the weather is acceptable, the flight will dispatch. The flight planner will make sure that all other logistical processes around this ambulance are being put in place, like getting ambulances to wait for the aircraft when it arrives.

At the same time, the flight follower has a conversation with the pilot as well, enters the information in the flight-following software and then follows the flight while it's in progress.

The medical call-taking also has what we call the PTAC component. Every single transfer between any two health facilities in Ontario, whether it's been done by Ornge or by any other—even if you're going to push this patient across the street on a stretcher, you have to get this authorization through Ornge, and we're responsible for that as well. This came in place when SARS broke out, to make sure that you don't transport infectious disease patients into facilities. We have a system called PTAC, the Provincial Transfer Authorization Centre, that also issues these medical transportation authorizations.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you. In your opinion, how vital is the function of a communication centre for an organization like an air ambulance?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Sorry, I missed the first—

Mr. Reza Moridi: How vital is the role of a communication centre for an organization such as an air ambulance?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I'm sorry. I keep on missing the first part. What is that?

Mr. Reza Moridi: How vital is the role—

Mr. David Zimmer: Vital.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Vital.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Oh, vital.

Mr. Reza Moridi: How important is this, or how key is—

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: My accent and your accent don't—

Mr. Reza Moridi: Sorry, my accent.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No problem.

Mr. David Zimmer: Iranian accent.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes, an Iranian accent and a South African accent. They match very well.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: They match very, very well.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Anyway, how important is the role of a communication centre for an organization such as an air ambulance service?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: It is the most critical component as far as I'm concerned. This is the central point where everything that happens comes together: maintenance, aviation, weather, medical, physicians, paramedics, land ambulance systems. Everything gets together in the OCC, and that's why it's absolutely vital for me to make sure that I turn that place into a world-class centre. The opportunity is most definitely there.

Mr. Reza Moridi: I wonder: How do you manage the operation of these multiple bases in this province?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think the operational processes and procedures are well defined. It's really around following the right protocols, and that's why training is so crucial for us. That's why specialization is absolutely key as well. It really helps if you have somebody in the operations control centre who absolutely knows the environment, the bases, the locations, hospitals, towns, cities and runways at the drop of a pin. I am still amazed how well those people do it. It's absolutely incredible the knowledge that they have.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you. I understand that Ornge acts as a Provincial Transfer Authorization Centre.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: PTAC, yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Could you tell us a bit about what this is?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: The PTAC system has basically two ways that you can get this authorization number. If I want to move a patient from a frail-care home, or from one hospital to another hospital, from a nursing station to a hospital, I have to get authorization through the system. What the system really does is it records and logs any outbreak, in any facility around the province, of a potential infectious disease. The system was really developed in the days when SARS broke out. Every day, we will get the notifications from the province in terms of any reports of outbreaks that happened in certain facilities. That information is fed into the PTAC system, and when we get a patient with a clinical profile that matches an infectious disease, the system will flag it. Or if you give a request to move a patient into a facility or outside of a facility where there's a potential outbreak of an infectious disease, the system will flag it as well. So that's what the system does: It actually prevents people from sending infected patients in and out of facilities, so it stops the spread of disease, really.

About 70% of those authorizations are being done online. The hospital can log into a website and fill in all the clinical information. The system will do an electronic check. In about 30% of the cases, and in every transfer that Ornge does, especially the critical care ones, we actually speak to the people directly. We don't allow them to do that online.

Mr. Reza Moridi: In your professional view, Mr. Ueckermann, do you think that this is a right decision for Ornge to have this kind of authorization, or that this centre be a part of Ornge's mission? Does it fit within Ornge's mission to have responsibility for this centre?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I guess it's debatable. It is functioning really well within Ornge at this point in time, and I'm someone who believes that you don't go and break something that works.

We most certainly are very much involved in the more critical cases, and because of the speed of transfer that Ornge is involved in, I think it's most applicable to Ornge. We can very rapidly move people from one facility to another facility over long distances, so if you have an infectious disease outbreak that you put in an aircraft and fly across the province, you're going to be very rapidly spreading a disease. I think that's why we play a critical role to make sure we get that information first-hand.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you. We have heard from the front-line staff at Ornge that there was a policy called a delayed-launch policy.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct.

Mr. Reza Moridi: We have also learned, due to concerns mainly raised by the Auditor General, about the cost of failed launches. Ornge put in place a policy that aircraft were not to launch until responders at the scene had confirmed that there is a need for an air ambulance.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Correct.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Are you aware of this policy?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, I am.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You are. Do you have any more details about why this policy was in place initially?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I wasn't involved when the policy was implemented but I most certainly, when I started with the communications centre in January, was very aware of the effects that it had and the noise around it.

I think the principle of the policy made sense. It's true: The Auditor General pointed out that we had and we still do have a large number of requests to launch an air ambulance, where the people actually get in the aircraft and get airborne and in some instances even fly to the location just to be told, "Okay, you're not needed any more," and you're cancelled, which means you have to turn that aircraft around and fly back to base. That's an extremely costly exercise and I think the intention of the policy was to stop that. The reality is, we probably only service one or two out of every 10 on-scene requests because most of the time we're cancelled before we get there. Sometimes we even cancel before we get off the ground, which is the way that we would prefer it.

I think the intention of that policy was to make sure that we get an absolutely definitive indication whether we're going to be needed or not before we actually launch the aircraft. I think the intention behind it makes perfect sense. I think the execution of it was a problem. The execution of it was heavily relying on the first responders on the scene notifying Ornge whether they should continue coming to the scene or not. Now, if they get busy attending to a patient and they forget to say to Ornge, "Yes, we still need you. You've got to continue," we would not launch, so the aircraft would just sit there waiting and that caused unacceptable delays. The real issue, I think, was the execution of this. It is still a problem and it's still something we need to solve.

Mr. Reza Moridi: The policy has changed, right?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: The policy has changed. We've got an immediate-launch policy for on-scene calls.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Now this new policy in place, is there any issue in terms of putting that into operation?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No, I don't think there were any issues putting it into operation. It was basically changing the way that the OCC operated. It's very simple. You get a request in for an on-scene call. Immediately when you get the request in, you put the caller on hold and you immediately contact the flight planner to launch. They can then continue doing the discussion with the call-taker while the flight planner speaks to the pilot to get that aircraft in the air. It's really a rapid process at this point in time. There are no delays involved.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would you think that the new policy has any impact in terms of operational issues?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think we're just back to what the Auditor General reported in his report, and that is that we do get a lot of instances where we launch but are not being utilized. It is costly. Every time that a helicopter takes off and lands, it creates what you call a cycle on the engine. The more cycles you create, the more expensive the maintenance on those machines becomes. Obviously, these are just expensive machines to operate regardless. You typically want to also reserve that machine for really true emergencies. You just don't want to fly these around because it's a convenience to.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you. Have you read, Mr. Ueckermann, the Auditor General's report?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I have.

Mr. Reza Moridi: What was your reaction to this report when you read it?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think the issues were relevant and I very much used that as a guideline when I took control of the OCC to make sure that we addressed valid concerns in terms of the OCC. The Auditor General pointed out that the system capabilities are lacking, and I agree with that. He pointed out that there are issues with the launch policies; I agree with that. He pointed out the late-launch policy was a concern; we agreed with that. The Auditor General pointed out that the current system inaccurately monitors the launch times in the system and we've corrected that, although it's going to be a manual system. We don't have a system that can do that yet, but that's in the RFP going forward. We've taken a lot of notice from the Auditor General, and we're really working hard to make sure we fix those issues.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Were you a part of Ornge's response to the Auditor General's report?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Unfortunately not. That happened before I started with the OCC.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Since the minister has put in new measures at Ornge, have you seen any changes in the organization?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think if I sat on the other side of the fence, on the Ornge Ontario side, I probably would have been in a position to really give a more accurate assessment. I can tell you what I've seen and what I've heard—comments from paramedics and staff in the OCC, and yesterday it was testified as well.

There's a huge change in the culture in the company. It's much more open; it's much more transparent. The senior managers are engaging the staff to find solutions. There's a strong drive and willingness to actually put the focus back on the patient and to improve the systems to the best that we can. We are going out of our way to re-establish relationships with the central ambulance systems, with hospitals, which unfortunately broke down over time.

Yes, absolutely. I've seen, in the six months that I've worked in that environment, a really strong drive and push forward.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would you think that some of the points that the Auditor General has mentioned in his report have been addressed by Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I don't fully understand what you mean by that.

Mr. Reza Moridi: The Auditor General has mentioned a number of points.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: In your opinion, have some of those points been addressed by Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Can you explain what you mean by "adverse"?

Mr. David Zimmer: Addressed.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Addressed?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Addressed, yes.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Absolutely. I mean, I think every single point in the Auditor General's report that Ornge has the ability to address either has been addressed or is in the process of being addressed.

Mr. Reza Moridi: How about the work culture at Ornge? Have there been any improvements in the work culture at Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: It is improving. It is not an overnight process. People in general are skeptical, and you cannot blame them for that. But people are willing to engage and share their information and views. A number of those people also agreed to testify in this committee.

I can tell you, certainly from the OCC perspective, that we've managed to establish an outstanding relationship with our local union and are really working very well together with our local union on the floor. Staff in general made the comment, "You know what? We're relaxed. We don't feel we are under threat every day," and that is a massive step forward in terms of the culture of the company.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Have you heard that we have signed a new performance agreement with Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Also, there's proposed legislation. Are you aware of these two initiatives?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I was part of the team when we negotiated the amended performance agreement, yes, and I'm very aware of it.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Would you think that the new performance agreement with Ornge will improve the operation of Ornge and its performance?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think the amended performance agreement will have two really positive outcomes. The one is that it defines the expectations from the ministry and of, obviously, the patients out there, which is really important. It has some very measurable, key performance indicators in place, which Ornge will make available publicly, which I think speaks to the transparency of where Ornge is moving into. Just everybody can benefit from that. I cannot see that having any negative impacts whatsoever.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you. Mr. Ueckermann, the Auditor General noted in his report that the staff at Ornge's communications centre were not qualified to do their jobs properly, and many times information was not inputted properly. In your role, what steps have you taken to improve the communications centre?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I agree. That was most definitely a perception that I had, but I think it was more than people were working in positions that made them unqualified. We most certainly had the qualifications on the floor; they were just being utilized in the wrong environment.

Going back to earlier figures, we have 34 formally trained medical people in the OCC and 27 formally trained aviation experts in that centre, of which two are basically both medical- and aviation-trained. We still have a small component of staff who came across from the ministry's PTAC days who are neither medical- or flight-trained. We are taking the steps to make sure that those people don't work in key positions that are beyond their capabilities. So that's the first step that I've taken, to try to make sure that we don't put people in situations where they basically can't function.

The second thing that we've done is we have gone on a massive drive to retrain and re-skill everybody, regardless of their background and qualifications. We are re-writing all the training materials, and we're putting in place a certification course, where every position will have to be certified to work in that position. To back that up, we've implemented a really robust quality system, which has staff that will monitor phone calls from every staff member on a quality assessment and also control whether they're actually complying to policies, procedures and diligently entering the information into the system, as was pointed out by the Auditor General as well.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Will you be taking any further steps to improve the function of the communications centre?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes. I think going forward, we want to make sure we have the highest quality of staff in the OCC. We're currently expanding the number of staff available in the OCC. Unfortunately, we lost a number of people due to illness. We will only be appointing the best of the best that we can find, so the quality of staff who will come in there will be really well-qualified staff, and our training system has got to be really robust.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Mr. Ueckermann, as you know, in the past several months there have been lots of discussions and comments, answers, questions, in the Legislature, in this committee, and also very wide media coverage, which many times was negative. Understandably, that would have affected the morale of the staff at Ornge. So what would you think needs to be done, or have there been any steps taken by Ornge, to improve the morale of staff, particularly the front-line staff, at Ornge?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I agree. It was a really, really hard time for Ornge to deal with, and it was very demoralizing, and you can understand that.

Certainly, I've been going around visiting the front-line medics at some bases, and I have a lot of discussions with my own staff as well. I think the most important thing is, people want to be valued. They want to be acknowledged for what they're doing. They want to make sure that management hears them and addresses their concerns—which I believe was an issue in the past—and they want to be up-skilled. They want to be trained. They want to be empowered to do their job properly, and I think we really are on our way to actually getting that established.

Again, it's not something that you can do overnight; it's a process—but that process is most definitely under way.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're on your last minute.

Mr. Reza Moridi: I just want to thank you and also the front-line staff at Ornge. Thank you very much.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Thank you very much. I appreciate that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): There's just five minutes left for the NDP, so we'll move to the NDP.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm really impressed with the changes that you're bringing about, and I think they will improve quality, will improve morale. I see nothing but good things coming of it.

When you had conversations before with the VP of operations, with the director of operations and even with the COO, they had identified some of those problems. Had the ministry at the time started asking questions and started asking about some of those performance indicators, do you figure they would have been able to start those changes earlier?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think I need to clarify. The concerns that I raised and the opinions that I had were my own, and they were based on my background and experience. It didn't mean that the chief operating officer was sharing my view. I think in his mind, he thought the model was the right one and that was the one that should stay. I never was in charge or had any management roles or capabilities or any muscle power to actually enforce anything like that, so whether they agreed with my assessments, that's a different story.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Do you figure that Mr. Farquhar and the director of operations, had they wanted to update the training and to basically empower the staff to go back to—were they capable of doing this?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I can't say.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I can't say. I can't venture a comment there, unfortunately.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We had a system before where the medical people answered medical questions and the aviation people dealt with the aviation world. Those people were in charge then. A decision was made to go to this cross-training model and then the change was made, which, I think, led to poorer quality rather than better. Would you agree?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: That would be my assessment of the situation, yes. I am still of the opinion that in a critical environment you need the highest quality you can get. You can only get that through specialization. I understand the reasoning why the guys wanted to go for a cross-training model; it's most definitely a cost-efficient staffing model to operate and it gives you a lot of flexibility, especially if you want to schedule 24/7 shifts. So if you're short on the flight side, you could put someone from the medical side in there. That makes sense from a financial perspective, but my understanding is, it's dangerous. Going back to the military model, we had a very strict code, and that was that medical people speak to medical people and operational people speak to operational people; you cannot get those mixed up.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just to build on that, when you were initially a part of Ornge, did you have to provide monthly or weekly reports regarding your concerns or feedback from what was going on?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: No, sir. I really had no right to do that because I had no oversight over any one of those. These were just casual conversations.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When you went to the Global side and started to develop what was going to be the international, you said that you were ready to launch but you never launched because it fell apart. What exactly was ready?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: We had a full-blown operations centre ready. It was staffed; there were systems in place. We were ready to launch air ambulances. There were only three problems with it. The first one is, we had still no product, so nothing was sold. Number two is, we had no aircraft, so we had nothing that we could launch. Number three: We had no hospital network, so we had no agreements with any hospital to actually receive payment from us, even if it was going. That was in December. So, if you talk about bringing the cart in front of the horse, that was really it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We had a dispatch centre that had nowhere to dispatch and nobody to dispatch to.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, ma'am.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: One of the comments that has come out a lot is that Ornge expanded too quickly; that the model expanded more quickly than it could keep up with. Is that something that you would agree with?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Yes, it was. Obviously, from my perspective it was absolutely rushed. It was not properly planned. The typical business process that you would follow—if you were business-trained or if you ever worked in business, you would know that the first thing you have to do is that you need to lock down your product. You go through a procedure, a business plan, a strategy. None of those documents was properly produced, and the ones that I saw were just—the quality was really poor. I think we were rushing into one environment just assuming that the other components were going to fall in place, and they never fell in place.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: As an overall strategy, the concern is that Ornge wanted to expand its ability to fund itself, to have other sources of revenue, including charitable donations as well as being able to raise money privately to be able to assist the Ornge functioning. What we've seen is that, one, the expansion happened too quickly and it happened at the cost of the essential services, the primary services—the primary focus of Ornge—which was patient care. There seemed to be a shift towards expanding globally and expanding on the private side, and it took away some of the attention—the much-needed attention—from the public side. Do you agree with that assessment?

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: I think that would be the perception, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And then when it came to the private side itself, that wasn't well thought out or fully thought out. It was a rushed plan, a rushed model, without any of the necessary steps being taken, as in a business plan, having a product developed and ready to be taken to the market. It was somewhat haphazard.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you are—

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: That was my impression, yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You are out of time, but if you want to answer that question—

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: My answer was going to be, yes, that was my assessment of the situation.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much for coming before the committee this morning. I think you've provided a lot of useful information, and it was very much appreciated.

Mr. Julius Ueckermann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, committee members.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I believe we have a motion. Ms. Sandals?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, this is a follow-up on the brief discussion we had earlier.

I move that the document requests made of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care and the Ministry of Finance on June 13, 2012, may be amended by the unanimous agreement of the subcommittee on committee business.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Any discussion?

M^{me} France Gélinas: May I be as bold as asking that we deal with this after the next witness?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): It has been—
Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): It has been moved. It's just the motion at this point, and it has been moved.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And it has been moved? Okay.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): All in favour? Agreed? Okay.

CANADIAN HELICOPTERS GROUP INC.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our next witness is Mr. Robert Blakely, vice-president of EMS operations, Canadian Helicopters. Welcome, Mr. Blakely.

Just to confirm that you've received the letter for a witness coming before the committee.

Mr. Robert Blakely: I have.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Thank you.

Our clerk will have you either do an oath or affirmation.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Affirmation.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Mr. Blakely, do you solemnly affirm that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. Feel free to make an opening statement and—

Mr. Robert Blakely: No, I have no opening statement.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Then it's time for the NDP again to start with their questions. Go ahead.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Good morning, Mr. Blakely, and thank you for coming to Queen's Park.

Mr. Robert Blakely: My pleasure.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'll start with giving you a little bit of an opportunity to explain to us the role of Canadian Helicopters in medical transportation.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Well, I guess since 1977, we have provided the service to the province, up until 2009, through the Ministry of Health, and then from 2009 to 2012 with Ornge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How did the level of service change? I'm most interested in the period that goes, let's say, from 2000 until now.

Mr. Robert Blakely: From 1999 until 2005, we not only provided the helicopters and the pilots and the aircraft maintenance engineers, but for that six-year period we provided the paramedics also. In 2006, Ornge took over the provision of the paramedics, and we went back to just providing the aviation services.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And now?

Mr. Robert Blakely: The contract ended with Ornge on April 1.

M^{me} France Gélinas: On April 1 this year?

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What is your relationship with Ornge now?

Mr. Robert Blakely: We don't have a relationship with Ornge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: None whatsoever?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What was the monetary value of the contract that you had with Ornge?

Mr. Robert Blakely: It was approximately $34 million per year.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And that was for the helicopters, the pilots and the maintenance of the helicopters?

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. How many bases were you operating before it got transferred?

Mr. Robert Blakely: We had seven bases and there were eight front-line helicopters.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In the steps that got to Ornge owning its own helicopters and hiring its own pilots, I understand that Ornge had issued an RFP where, although they would own the helicopter, they will ask for somebody else to provide all of the flying, the aviation part of it—the pilots, the maintenance etc. Can you tell us a little bit about that?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes, that's correct. The model that was used for the contract that we won in a competitive bid process started in 2009. With the legacy aircraft, which are the older S-76s, and the new aircraft, the AW139s, Ornge owned the aircraft. We operated the helicopters on behalf of Ornge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did they ever offer for that to continue?

Mr. Robert Blakely: There is an extension clause in the existing contract with Ornge that would have enabled them to extend the contract for an additional two years, from April 1, 2012, until March 31, 2014, but they did not exercise that extension.

M^{me} France Gélinas: From 1999 to 2005, you owned the helicopters. The pilots, the paramedics and the maintenance people worked for Canadian Helicopters. Then in 2006, the paramedics go over to Ornge. Then in 2009, something else went over to Ornge, or it stayed the same from 2006 till 2012?

Mr. Robert Blakely: The contract that we were operating under ended in 2009, on March 31. In 2008, Ornge went through a competitive bid process, which we bid on, and we were successful, which commenced on April 1.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What was the difference between the contract that started on April 1, 2009, versus the contract that ended on March 31, 2009?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I don't follow. Say that again? Sorry.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I don't understand what happened on April 1, 2009. What was different on March 31 versus April 1?

Mr. Robert Blakely: On March 31, we owned the Sikorskys, the legacy aircraft. On April 1, Ornge owned the legacy aircraft. So they purchased the aircraft from us.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And then the rest of the contract?

Mr. Robert Blakely: We continued to operate them. We continued to operate the equipment that was owned by Ornge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In the process, you agreed to sell the aircraft to Ornge. Ornge owned the aircraft. Everything else stayed the same. I take it the rate must have changed too.

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's correct, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I understand there was another RFP going out after, since 2009, or no?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No, not that I'm familiar with.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So the RFP went out in 2008. You won the bid to continue to fly the aircraft you had been flying all along. It's just that you did not own them anymore.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Now, I take it you still own helicopters?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes. Canadian Helicopters is the largest helicopter company in Canada. We're one of the largest in the world, so we have, I think, in excess of 140 helicopters.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How many of them in Ontario?

Mr. Robert Blakely: None now.

M^{me} France Gélinas: None in Ontario?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Aside from the contract for patient transport, Canadian Helicopters did not do any other work in Ontario?

Mr. Robert Blakely: We have over the years done work. We have had bases in Ontario. We've worked for other provincial agencies fighting forest fires, for instance. We ran a flight training school also. But today, we have no other bases in Ontario.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The flight training schools and everything else are also gone?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes, that's correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you don't have a presence in Ontario anymore.

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's correct.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: If you could just compare for me the difference, if there is a difference, between the service delivery, and then if you can comment, at least on the aviation side, pre-April 1, 2009, and after April 1, 2009—if there was a difference in Ornge purchasing the aircraft, if that created a different delivery mechanism in any way—or when the aircraft were owned, operated and maintained by Canadian Helicopters, or when Ornge took it over.

1040

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's a fairly complex question. Trying to put it simply, the biggest difference was part of the services agreement that we had with Ornge stated that when Ornge purchased the new helicopters, the AW139s, they would look after what we'll call logistical support. For the legacy aircraft, the older S-76s, Canadian Helicopters continued to provide the logistical support, which is the purchasing of parts, maintaining of inventory, that sort of thing. Ornge took over the logistics for the new aircraft. That would be about the only change.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So that's the contract shift, the logistics component. Besides that, there wasn't anything else that was substantially different.

You're familiar with the initial model of Ornge and the newer model of Ornge, in the sense that initially Ontario Air Ambulance was providing the medic side and they were outsourcing the aviation side?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Absolutely, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So you're aware of that going on.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Then the model shifted into integrating the aviation side into the newly formed Ornge. One of the differences between Ontario Air Ambulance and Ornge was Ornge wanted to then integrate the aircraft.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes. I think Ornge refers to that as internalization.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Internalization, exactly. Can you make any comments with respect to that overall difference—that first model of outsourcing the aviation side and having the medic side versus the internalization?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Well, I think my opinion is going to be viewed as biased, but we are absolute experts in operating helicopters. That's all we do. It's a very, very complex operation. Putting it simply, there's no learner's permit for this. It's very, very difficult to do. We're very good at it. The company I work for has been in business for 65 years, and we ran the ambulance helicopters in Ontario for 35 years. We knew what we were doing.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: There have been a number of people who have actually said something similar to what you've said.

This will be difficult for you to do because it's going to be looking at it the other way, but could you think of any advantage to having the aviation side internalized?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: With respect to—one was the expertise. You had the experience and, like you said, there's no learner's permit. We're dealing with sophisticated machinery, and lives are at stake here, so of course there's no learner's permit.

What was the advantage, on a practical side? We understand that on a knowledge, experience and expertise side, there's obviously an advantage. What was the practical benefit, then, that translated from having the previous model, where it was outsourced? What was happening better or faster or more efficiently? What was practically better, if there was anything—or cost-wise?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think you have to look at the dispatch reliability data, quite frankly. We've got very, very good records for the past 35 years, and I think we demonstrate an excellent, world-class dispatch reliability of over 98%. So I think it speaks for itself.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you have a question?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes. I'm sorry, I had to step out.

The dispatch was different before it was taken over by Ornge—is this what you meant?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No. I was asked, what is the advantage of outsourcing aviation? My answer was that I think that we have a proven track record of dispatch reliability.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. I wanted to ask some of the same questions that I asked the previous witness.

Every time a Canadian Helicopter launched, for air ambulance at the time, for Ornge, I take it that you would keep information about this as to what time, who was the pilot, what kind of cargo was on board. Do you still have those records?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You do? Would it be feasible for you to share with the committee the flights that you have done for Ornge during the month of August 2007? More particularly—

Mr. Robert Blakely: Do you have a date?

M^{me} France Gélinas: A specific date? No. I could probably narrow it down some, but I'm basically interested in finding out—I'm interested in flights to northern Ontario, so you can focus on this. Basically, do you know a little bit about the type of information that you would have?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes, we would—if you could tell me the date and the location, which would help us a lot—

M^{me} France Gélinas: I could help narrow it down.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes, I can tell you the aircraft registration. I don't believe I would have any patient information, but I can give you times and I can tell you who the crew were.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Did you ever move cargo as well as patients?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Cargo on behalf of the air ambulance program? Do you mean like organs?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Organs or oxygen.

Mr. Robert Blakely: No, I think the aircrafts are too valuable to be used to do something like that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so this is not something that you did?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Did you want to keep—sorry.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes, no problem. When looking at Ornge right now, would you be able to provide an assessment of what needs to be fixed and what's going right?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Well, I think Mr. McKerlie and the new board at Ornge should be commended. It has been an enormous undertaking. It's a big ship; they've been trying to turn it around. I think they've been doing a great job. Again, I think that internalizing the helicopter operations specifically—I don't agree with that. I think that Ornge should look at contracting out the operation of the helicopters to the industry.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. In terms of other areas of aviation, if we look at—if the model doesn't change and they remain with the internalized model, is there anything else that you can look at in terms of problems that existed or that continue to exist and potential remedies or fixes for them?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No. Everything I hear, it sounds positive. I mean, the paramedic understaffing has been an issue since 2006, so it's refreshing to see that there's now a focus on this—a public focus—and that it's getting fixed.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Continuing on what my colleague was saying, this idea of contracting out—you're not the first one who mentions it. We own those helicopters now—I mean we own them, as in the people of Ontario; Ornge owns them. When you talk about contracting out to the industry, one of the things that the auditor always looks at is getting value for money. The industry of helicopter flying in Ontario—aside from you guys, who is it?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Oh, you have to understand that we're a global industry. There is lots of competition. To put it in perspective, we bid on operating ambulance helicopters in British Columbia, and we currently operate ambulance helicopters in Nova Scotia. So you don't have to be an Ontario company to bid on this work. There's no advantage or disadvantage.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, because in the 2008 competitive bid that went out, Ornge certainly did not get an uptake; they only got you, to tell you the truth. We're there to get value for money for the people of Ontario. History tells us that the market is very, very slim and narrow. You are the biggest one. I mean, you operated in Sudbury for a long time. I have nothing but good things to say about your company, the training, the service you delivered and everything else. But at the same time, to get value for money, when you are the only one—you are the biggest and you come here and say, "I think you should contract out." I hear, "I think you should contract out to me." I have no problem contracting out to you because you've done phenomenal work for us in the north. But at the same time, I have a responsibility to get value for money, so you'll have to be convincing to show me that we will get value for money if we go down this path.

Mr. Robert Blakely: I don't want to say you've been lied to, but you may have been misled. We were told there were competitive bids in 2008. That was held over our heads with a big hammer in the negotiation for the contract: that there were alternatives.

We were told there was another bid, at least one other bid. In a competitive bid process, it only takes one other bid. And when you go into a competitive bid process, you never know if you're the only bid. I hope my competitors think like that, because you'll lose.

We always go at it aggressively. I believe there were other bids.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you believe that if we were to go out right now, ask for people to come and fly our Agusta helicopters, there are people out there, there are—without sharing any secrets, who is there out there except for you guys who could come up with enough pilots and maintenance and everything else to do the work on those brand new helicopters?

Mr. Robert Blakely: There is a competitor that operates in British Columbia that is quite capable.

We have to remind ourselves that by the province owning the assets—if that's the correct terminology; "Ornge," "the province"—it fosters competition. It makes it easier to bid. You don't have to go out and purchase the assets. That was a clever idea, actually, taking on that model. But there are other competitors in Canada, absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you can think of one in British Columbia?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Oh, there are probably at least three or four capable competitors in Canada. I'm sure they're watching right now, so I don't want to be an informal for them. There are other very capable competitors, and we compete with each other on a regular basis. We were competing in the British Columbia ambulance service bid three years ago, and we went at that very aggressively, all of us. It's what we do.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So there is a market out there.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The pilots, the maintenance—basically the contracts that were in place from 2009 to 2012, where Ornge owned the helicopters and somebody else flew and maintained them, would be what would go out on a competitive basis. You are doing testimony under oath that says that there are people out there, aside from you guys, who are able to do this and to put credible bids forward.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Absolutely.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Just to inform you, you're at 21 minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'll let it run.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, so you want to move on?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Mm-hmm.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move on to the government. Who would like to ask questions from the government? Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you very much.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And if you don't mind moving the microphone a little bit.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes. Okay, good.

So the new contractual arrangements, or the new models that ended up being adopted in 2009, where CHL provided all the services except the ownership of the helicopters, that was a sea change in the way the service was provided. I'm interested in your thoughts about that, moving from the old model to this newer model.

Mr. Robert Blakely: As I said, it's clever. What it does is it makes it easier for companies that may not have been able to afford the capital to buy the aircraft, to compete. It actually fosters competition.

Mr. David Zimmer: Competition can be a good thing; it can be a bad thing. But keeping in mind the testimony of the previous witness, where he said that, yes, there are various models and there are various efficiencies in the different models, but given the critical nature of the service that's being provided—that is, ambulance service, life-and-death sorts of stuff—that efficiencies really should be just down a notch from the real goal of delivering quality critical care service.

On those two models, the pre-2009 and the post-2009, which model do you say would provide the best service to the patient-user, leaving aside the business efficiencies and that sort of stuff?

Mr. Robert Blakely: You're asking me to take off my Canadian Helicopters hat and put on my "I live in Ontario" hat?

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes, your Ontario citizen hat. Think of yourself as a patient.

Mr. Robert Blakely: It's a better model.

Mr. David Zimmer: Which is the better model?

Mr. Robert Blakely: The province owning the assets is a better model.

Mr. David Zimmer: And how is that model better for the Ontario patient?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I'm assuming that we're talking about that model being delivered by the industry, not being internalized by Ornge. It fosters competition and that keeps us all honest and sharp and the patients benefit because we're driven—absolutely driven—all the time to maintain that high level of dispatch reliability. That's our mantra.

Mr. David Zimmer: But isn't there also a competing pressure—not to put it too crudely—to save money, to provide the service for less cost?

Mr. Robert Blakely: It's interesting that the model that we operated under with Ornge was a cost-flow-through model. We were paid a fee to do this and we were actually rewarded by operating the model at a reduced cost. We had an incentive to do that.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was the incentive? Explain what a cost-flow-through model is.

Mr. Robert Blakely: A cost flow-through is—for instance, we spend, let's say, $5 million a year on pilot salaries. We pay the pilots, they're employed by us. We give Ornge a bill for $5 million and they pay us. There's no markup allowed.

Mr. David Zimmer: I see.

Mr. Robert Blakely: We charge a fee to do that.

Mr. David Zimmer: At whose invitation are you here today? Who nominated you?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think Mr. Klees.

Mr. David Zimmer: I gather that over the last months or maybe even a year or so, you've been in regular contact with Mr. Klees on these issues?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No, I haven't, actually. Before I appeared, I called your office, Liz, and France's office. I really didn't know what I was expected to bring. I struggled with—I have 35 years of data and information. I didn't want to back a truck up and I wasn't sure what you folks wanted from me. I've had minimal contact with Mr. Klees.

Mr. David Zimmer: Today, if you had your druthers, would you be happier with the pre-2009 model or the current model?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think that I would be very happy if Ornge had exercised the extension clause in our contract and we were continuing to deliver the service until March 31, 2014, under the current model. I'll call it the current model.

Mr. David Zimmer: I couldn't help but notice that you were here earlier this morning and you sat through the testimony of Mr. Ueckermann, who's the VP of logistics at Ornge. I saw you paying close attention to his testimony. Just as an overview of the themes that he hit on and the approach that he took to the problems, the challenges and where they are now, would you agree or disagree or would you highlight or not highlight some of those things? Where would you place his evidence? What's your view of his evidence?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think he's an amazingly bright guy and I think we should all be pleased that he has a role in the OCC. It sounds like he's making some really positive changes. I believe that Ornge should exist because they need to be dispatch, command and control. This is their role. Absolutely, the most important role is dispatch. 1100

Mr. David Zimmer: Bob Mackie is the—you probably know him—director of the air transport association.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes, I've met Bob a couple of times.

Mr. David Zimmer: He has been before the committee, and he gave some testimony. Essentially, what we heard from Mr. Mackie is that he was quite critical of Ornge's decision to purchase its own helicopters and aircraft. In fact, he went on to effectively accuse Dr. Mazza of conspiring "to eliminate the contracted carriers." Mr. Mackie recommended that Ornge get out of the business of delivering aircraft and helicopter services and return to contracting these out to such corporations as Thunder Airlines and CHL.

I realize that asking you your reaction sort of puts you in a bit of a conflict of interest, but what do you just have to say about Mackie's position?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Like I said earlier, we do one thing and we do it well, and that is operate helicopters. We've done it for 35 years in Ontario. We do it in Nova Scotia. It's going to sound like a sales pitch, but we would welcome the opportunity to continue to deliver the service in Ontario.

Mr. David Zimmer: This is a question that my colleague from the NDP touched on just at the end of her question.

Let me just read out a thought to you here: "There are some who say that when it comes to for-profit involvement in health care, there is always a cost. You may get competitively priced services, but something has to give in order to make the profit." As I said earlier, my colleague opposite has raised this issue when it comes to air ambulance and indeed long-term health care and other issues. So with that thought in mind, I have two questions.

Are you advocating that we take the current model, in which there is no profit, and take that to a private model where companies are competing to deliver the service and make a profit?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think that, again, Ornge should exist. Ornge should be in a position of dispatch, command and control, and they should be the contracting agency. For those services where they have no expertise, they should contract out.

Mr. David Zimmer: What do you say to the idea that contracting out in the competitive bidding process—and I'm not necessarily agreeing or disagreeing; I'm just exploring the issue with you—some people say it tends to drive down the quality of the service that's provided because there are cost pressures. If you can get a highly qualified employee who would cost X dollars, but you could get a less qualified but nevertheless qualified employee for X-minus dollars, then of course you'd be driven to hire the X-minus dollars. You've got, admittedly, a qualified person, but you could get a more qualified person without the pressures of competitive bidding. I tie that back into Mr. Ueckermann's evidence that he thought, when he came there, that the focus was not on providing the best critical care; that the focus was on management and managing cost issues and that sort of stuff. I'd just like to hear your thoughts on that.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Of course, as I said, I'm biased. I think we do a very good job at a very good price, so we deliver good value.

I think that perhaps the committee should look at the data—and the data is there. Ornge has been doing the work with the helicopters since January. So we have seven months of data from Ornge. We've got dispatch reliability data, and we have cost data. The data exists for when we did the work under the contract with Ornge; it's pretty easy to do the comparative.

Mr. David Zimmer: In your model, how do you solve the problem of the pilot training for the new helicopters—that's a big issue—in a cost-effective way?

Mr. Robert Blakely: It's a third party delivering a service, so there's not a lot you can do. For the new helicopters, it's about $100,000 to initially train each pilot, so what you have to do is manage the turnover. You only spend that once to train the pilot, then it's a minimal recurrent training after that every year, so what you want to do is minimize pilot turnover. You want to give the pilots an environment to work in that they're happy and they don't leave.

Mr. David Zimmer: That's a nice segue into my next couple of questions, having to do with Dr. Mazza's CEO management style and the culture that he created at Ornge. This morning, you would have heard, through Mr. Ueckermann—in fact, yesterday, we heard this recurring theme from front-line workers that now, absent Mazza and absent the old board, the culture or the environment seems to have changed and everybody's a whole lot happier.

I gather this business of retaining the pilots and so on is a part of that idea of the CEO, whoever he or she is, and the management team creating a culture where people want to stay there.

Did you work with Dr. Mazza? You've met Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Oh, I've—

Mr. David Zimmer: You've had dealings with him?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: I've asked this question of just about every witness. What is your view of Dr. Mazza's management style and personality traits that you would expect or not expect in an effective CEO?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Dr. Mazza offered me a job in 2006, and I didn't have to think about it for one second. I just struggled with telling him no without offending my best customer. I've known Dr. Mazza since the mid-1990s and I've seen his style—a very, very, very difficult man to work for.

Mr. David Zimmer: What are some of the elements of that difficulty?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think we've heard here in testimony: a volatile temper, absolutely volatile. We've heard people talk about his visionary—he's high-energy.

He's a brilliant man; there's no doubt. I think he has absolutely missed his calling. He should have been in sales, absolutely. He has sold all of us—not us, but he sold the province—on the concept that the system was broken, and it wasn't broken before.

As you've seen, he testified about dispatch reliability rates: 60% to 70%. That's why Ornge had to take over aviation. I submitted information to the committee that ours averaged 98%. I checked with Voyageur, the company that provided the fixed-wing dedicated service, and they were even higher; they were at 98.6%. That was misleading, putting it mildly, but everyone believed.

Mr. David Zimmer: I expect you've been following the evidence and testimony yesterday and in days before, particularly with the chairman of the board, Mr. Beltzner. There were issues that all members of this committee delved into about the chair of the board and board members' oversight and their relationship with Dr. Mazza. As you know, a model of board governance is that the chair and the board set the broad, strategic goals and the metrics of management performance and so on, and then hold the CEO accountable—oversight and all of that stuff. Have you got any view of how that was all playing out in the course of your dealings with Ornge? Who was running the show, or not running the show?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Oh, Dr. Mazza was definitely in the driver's seat, no doubt. It's interesting you say that, because I did watch what went on with Mr. Beltzner. I'm a vice-president with my company. I work for a publicly traded corporation. We have a board of directors. I made a brief presentation to our board four years ago, I believe, about what was happening at Ornge. The reaction from our board was, "How can this be going on? Where's the board governance? Where's the board oversight?"

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you still have a copy of that presentation?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No, sorry.

Mr. David Zimmer: You can't blame me for trying to get it.

Minister Matthews, the Minister of Health, has made a number of quite forceful and indeed dramatic moves around replacing the CEO, the chair of the board, the board and all of those things. Do you think she's on the right track cleaning house, as it were?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think it has been a difficult job. I think Dr. Mazza has sold a lot of people on things that weren't true. As someone who lives in Ontario, I'm pleased, yes. I'm happy with the changes, just not the internalization of the helicopter operation.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. You've been very fair and objective in your views on that.

My last question that I just want to raise with you is that I'd be interested—and I think the committee would be—in any suggestions that you might want to have this committee pass on to the minister about how to continue to improve or deal with these Ornge problems, where we are at today, and some ideas for making the system even better. What would be the three or four things at top of mind?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think you know what I'm going to say.

Mr. David Zimmer: I know one of the things you're going to say.

Mr. Robert Blakely: The service agreement with Ornge, the extension clause: We're still within the time frame of the extension clause on the contract. We would honour that extension clause. If the board at Ornge, Mr. McKerlie, the minister or whoever said, "We gave it a good shot; please come back," we could do that in about three to four weeks. We could re-employ the staff, take over the aircraft and deliver a very, very high level of dispatch reliability. That would give the province—or Ornge—an opportunity to fix the other problems, to not have to worry about their helicopter operation and write an RFP and go back to market and go back to a competitive bid which validates everything.

Mr. David Zimmer: Any suggestions on management style? Any other suggestions apart from the helicopter piece?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No. I had the opportunity to meet Mr. McKerlie. It was fairly brief: about a 45-minute meeting. I can't think of anybody more opposite than Dr. Mazza.

Mr. David Zimmer: How do their personalities oppose each other and why is that good?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Ron McKerlie mostly listened in our meeting; that's not what happens in a meeting with Dr. Mazza.

Mr. David Zimmer: That leads me to two final questions. This general idea of improving the transparency of what's going on in the air ambulance service in Ontario—because one of the things that has led us to where we are is that there were all kinds of things going on that lots of people didn't know about and they should have been kept informed and stuff going on behind the scenes and off-the-grid decisions and no paper trails and strange salaries and payments and all of that. What else could we do to achieve this level of transparency so that Ontarians, broadly speaking—whatever they are, whether they're executives or end users—feel that we all know what's going on and that what's going on is fair and right?

Mr. Robert Blakely: It's a good question. I think we're headed in the right direction. It seems to me that there's a bit of a siege mentality at Ornge, understandably. They're afraid to allow information to get out to the public, and that should not be the case.

One of the issues is the aircraft-out-of-service report—we've heard a lot about that: AOSR. That's not public information. That is the dispatch reliability data. That should be out there; the public should be aware of that. There's no reason—

Mr. David Zimmer: Sort of like hospital wait times.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes, true, absolutely.

Mr. David Zimmer: I slipped; I missed something that I wanted to ask you. Under your model, when CHC came back and so on, who would be responsible for the maintenance of the helicopters?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Canadian Helicopters, absolutely.

Mr. David Zimmer: You would. Okay. All right, thank you very much. And my colleagues?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're at 22 minutes. You can use all your time or you can—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We can wait until the next round.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, very good.

Mr. David Zimmer: How much do we have left? Twenty-two?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): No, you have about seven minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: About seven, okay. Thanks.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): So we'll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Blakely. I appreciate you bringing us some very constructive recommendations, and, yes, we have been in touch. The reason, Mr. Blakely, that I took the initiative to get in touch with you is because I thought it would be important for us as a committee to get some context in terms of what the circumstances were prior to Ornge and Chris Mazza's so-called vision and what it's like now. The bottom line is, how are patients being served? That really is the question.

The aircraft-out-of-service reports—you may be aware that I tabled and I spoke to that in the Legislature in one of my questions of the minister. At that time, based on the information that had come to my attention from that report, there were a significant number of hours that—in fact, I think it was, at that time, 1,819 hours of service interruption during a 150-day period. Are you aware of that incident, where I tabled that information?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Absolutely, and in preparation for appearing today, I went through our dispatch reliability to compare, to do a comparative.

Mr. Frank Klees: Would you please share with the committee what that comparison is? Because I think it's important for us to get a sense of that. A lot of the other issues that we're discussing are important, but at the end of the day, it's exactly that. When a call comes in from the dispatch centre and an aircraft is not available, that impacts everything that we're here to talk about. So if you wouldn't mind sharing that comparison, we would ask that you would table that information with the committee.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Again, back to your point, our motto has always been "You ring, we bring." All the patient cares about is showing up.

You said 150 days, 1,800 hours out of service. I'm going to assume that that was for the eight front-line helicopters, because that's the data that I have.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, it was.

Mr. Robert Blakely: I'm not sure whether it was just aviation reasons or it was no paramedics. If you annualize that—

Mr. Frank Klees: Just for clarification, if I might, it was both.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Okay.

Mr. Frank Klees: There was a combination of either pilots were not available or paramedics were not available.

Mr. Robert Blakely: We keep our data on an annualized basis. I took that 1,800 hours and 150 days, and that works out to 4,400 hours per year. It's actually 4,426 hours per year. Our average dispatch reliability rate would have given us an out-of-service time of a little over 1,900 hours per year. That's including paramedics, when we provided the paramedics. So it's more than double.

Mr. Frank Klees: Let me ask you this: Under that contractual arrangement that you had previously, what would be the consequences to Canadian Helicopters for being out of service for those 1,900 hours?

Mr. Robert Blakely: In the 150-day period? Well, I have to look at two different contract models. One was the contracts we used to have with the Ontario Ministry of Health, and the contract with Ornge. Which one do you want me to—

Mr. Frank Klees: Why don't you tell us about both?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Okay. In the contract with Ornge, we were eligible for a performance bonus. I explained earlier that we were paid a fee. It was a flow-through costing, but we were paid a fee. We were eligible, in that model, for a performance incentive fee of $200,000 per quarter, so $800,000 per year.

Mr. Frank Klees: Which you would have been paid over and above your standard fee.

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's correct. It was to give us the incentive to maintain high service levels. What those hours would represent is, we would not get the fee. So there would be a significant financial impact to the company.

The other thing I have to say to that is that we never lose sight of the fact that it's more than just the dollars, because eventually, in a competitive bid environment, we're coming back, trying to get the work. And we're going to wear this record. So with that kind of service record, I can guarantee you we would not get another contract. That would weigh even more heavily with us as the operator.

The other thing we can't lose sight of is the patients. No offence meant, but I don't hear a lot of discussion about the actual patients. Any one hour of service interruption can result in a patient death, a negative patient outcome—even one hour of service interruption. So it's an incredible responsibility that we always carry with ourselves: that we have to do everything we can to make sure those aircraft are launch-capable.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was the model under the Ministry of Health scenario?

Mr. Robert Blakely: The Ministry of Health—there was no incentive, but there was a penalty, so there was still a financial impact. We would be very close to a default under a Ministry of Health contract. That would be a material default. I actually brought the last contract we had with the Ministry of Health. I can submit it to the committee to look at. There are certain default clauses in there, but I would see that the ministry could invoke the default clause, and then it's game over.

Mr. Frank Klees: So for every time that a helicopter was not available to launch, what was the specific penalty to Canadian Helicopters under that agreement?

Mr. Robert Blakely: The penalty, during the Ministry of Health contract, was approximately $500 an hour. So on a 24-hour day, that's $12,000.

Mr. Frank Klees: Of course, the number of hours or the number of times that a helicopter could not launch under the current model: There isn't a penalty to anyone other than the patient, at the end of the day, who didn't get a call, right?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to go back to your comment about your meeting with Mr. McKerlie. When did that meeting take place?

Mr. Robert Blakely: If you don't mind, can I just take a look at my notes here? I'm trying to remember a lot.

We met—when I say “we,” Don Wall is my boss; he's Canadian Helicopters' president and CEO—with Ron McKerlie on Monday, January 30, 2012.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who requested that meeting?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Ron McKerlie did.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you tell us about the context and what was discussed in the course of that meeting?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Some background: In September 2010, Dr. Mazza informed us that Ornge would not be exercising the extension clause in our contract. We understood that; that's the client's prerogative. We weren't pleased, but so be it.

Then all of the media and the change happened at Ornge. The board left, Dr. Mazza left, Mr. McKerlie was appointed, and a new board. We thought perhaps there was hope that the contract would get extended, and we did read in the media that Ron McKerlie had expressed—I think he was quoted as saying that they were revisiting the internalization of the helicopter operation. So we were a bit hopeful, but the meeting was quite brief. It was less than an hour—about 45 minutes, so very difficult to pack 35 years of experience into a 45-minute meeting. That was the extent of it. He just listened—quite respectful; nice guy. That was on a Monday. On a Tuesday, my boss wrote Ron a letter explaining our position and on Wednesday a notice went up at the bases from Ron saying that they had decided to continue with the internalization process.

Mr. Frank Klees: The result of that was what? Obviously there was a transition that was taking place for the full internalization, which meant that staff that was previously employed by Canadian Helicopters—was there an agreement that that staff would also come across when this transition took place? When they purchased the helicopters, was that all part and parcel of the arrangement?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No. When Ornge purchased the helicopters, it was upon the commencement of the contract: April 1, 2009. The announcement that Ornge would not extend our contract was September 2010. We immediately entered into discussions with Ornge regarding our workforce, our front-line workers. There are 120, approximately, front-line helicopter pilots and aircraft maintenance engineers. This workforce is unionized and we thought it would be best for all three parties—Canadian Helicopters, Ornge and the workforce—if Ornge recognized, I believe it's called, successor rights. So if you worked for Canadian Helicopters at the Sudbury base one day, the following day you still come to work; your paycheque comes from Ornge. You carry forward your seniority and everything. That's the agreement that was made.

Mr. Frank Klees: And that agreement was honoured? There were no issues there?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Correct. The front-line staff—that's correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to deal with the practicality of what you're suggesting. The reason I want to pursue this is that we have had testimony here from a number of people. One of those was Tom Rothfels, who, in speaking to this issue of, “How do we go forward? How do we deal with this?”—his comment specifically was that in the time that he was at Ornge, he came to the conclusion that the core competency just simply is not there in the organization to manage the very complex industry of being the owner, the operator, having responsibility for maintenance, and that this is something that really should not be in-house. He made the suggestion that perhaps one of the models that should be looked at is—I think he said that FedEx works under that model, where FedEx owns the aircraft and then contracts out the operation, which I think is essentially what you're suggesting.

What would the logistics of that be? We've now internalized; we've got all of these employees who have made the transition. How disruptive would this be, or do you see this at a practical level as something that would be doable? You mentioned that Mazza was an excellent salesman. Could you give us a sales pitch here in terms of what the benefits would be and how logistically something like this could be accomplished?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I'm not the sales guy for my company. I'm the behind-the-scenes guy who just makes it all work.

I think the data speaks for itself. All you have to do is look at our service record, our ability to deliver the service at probably the highest level in the world. The workforce would transition back. Getting down to the nitty-gritty, we would accept successor rights for them to come back. I have been in touch with the union representing the workforce, and they would not be disappointed to come back to work for Canadian Helicopters. I think we heard testimony from Bruce Wade.

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Robert Blakely: We would re-lease the aircraft, the documents—everything is in place. All that's required is signatures to do. We could probably do it in two weeks, but I don't think that would be smart. I think it should take around four weeks to do from start to finish, where we would then be responsible for the delivery of the helicopter service.

Mr. Frank Klees: A number of helicopter pilots have left, which obviously leaves Ornge in a predicament, because you don't train up a pilot for an AW139 overnight. Do you have any idea how many of those pilots that were previously employed by you have gone international or somewhere else but they're no longer here and available to us?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes. Actually, we've been in discussions with the union because the union also represents our Nova Scotia crew, who of course have a different contract, to remain with us. A couple of weeks ago, we were in negotiations regarding the other contract, and one of the union representatives there was one of the Ontario pilots. We had an off-the-record discussion: "What if?" We call it the Hail Mary pass: "What if the decision came back?" I asked how many of those pilots who have left Ornge would come back. The union's position is: About 80% of the pilots would return.

Mr. Frank Klees: How many pilots does that translate into?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I'm not really sure. I think we'd have to ask Ornge that. I did listen to Jim Feeley's testimony. I think they're short quite a few pilots. It takes 78 to run the system. I think they're probably short, I would guess, seven or eight or nine. But you have to remember that one pilot is pretty important. Each pilot is very, very important. All the front-line staff are very important. But there's no surplus of pilots, so to lose one pilot is an enormous burden on the system which dramatically increases the risk of a service interruption. Also, from a financial perspective, Ornge is paying over $100,000 on the new aircraft to train each of these pilots. It would be nice to recapture that money and get the people to come back. You don't have to initially train them. They've already got the licence.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm assuming that a lot of those pilots who have left—when I say "we," through Ornge, the province of Ontario through the Ministry of Health has already paid for that training for those pilots and now they're off in another jurisdiction. As you say, there would be an opportunity to recover that.

I'd like to go to a point that Mr. Zimmer referred to earlier and again to Ms. Gélinas's point. We have a responsibility to ensure that there is value for money in whatever next steps are taken. There is this constant debate about, if you're contracting out to a for-profit company, that profit margin that's there perhaps should be better used internally, and I think one of the arguments that probably Mr. Mazza made was partially that. I know that in his argument, at one point he stated, when he referred to that broken system, that approximately 70% of flight legs had no patients carried. That was one of the little bricks that he put into his argument. I'd like you to comment on that, just maybe to clarify that argument.

In addition to that, there's always the question of experience and competency and efficiency. As we've seen over the last number of years, we now have paid multi-millions of dollars, and because of a lack of competence and some very bad decision-making at the management level, whether it's the communications centre, where we've got people who were in the wrong place at the wrong time, that's causing frustration to the front-line paramedics and the pilots. What is competency worth and what is experience worth? The issue of whether it's for-profit or not-for-profit isn't nearly as important, I would suggest, as ensuring that we have an efficient service and one that actually meets the needs of the patients. I think that's the other part of the value-for-money equation.

I'd like you to comment on, first of all—because it needs to be cleared up—this 70% of flight legs having no patients. Then I'd like your comment on this issue of the for-profit and not-for-profit companies bidding on this, because right now—and I'd like to suggest to my colleagues that even if there's only one other bid, if Canadian Helicopters were to bid against Ornge on a transparent basis, it would be interesting for us to see what those numbers look like.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Oh, I would love to bid against Ornge. But back to your comment on 70% of flight legs: Again, as I said before, Dr. Mazza is a brilliant, brilliant salesman. He stated that 70% of the flight legs had no patient on board, and everyone was horrified. Here we go: "The system's broken." You have to look at how we fly. The helicopter is based in Sudbury. It goes to get a patient—no patient on board, first leg. It picks the patient up and flies the patient down to Sudbury hospital, so there's a leg with a patient carried. It goes back to base. So there are three legs, of which only one has a patient carried. At the very minimum, 67% of the flight legs have no patient carried. It's like saying that for our fire department here in Toronto, 50% of the calls that the trucks go on aren't to an emergency. Yes; they're going back to the fire hall. So that's a way Dr. Mazza brilliantly has taken a data point and used it to show the system is broken.

It actually gets better, because if we do a team transport for a neonate, it's four legs. We actually go to get the team at the hospital—no patient; take the team out to the sending hospital—no patient; come back to the receiving hospital with the patient; then back to base. There are four legs, of which only one of those legs has a patient on board, so 75%, but that's how the system works. There's nothing to fix.

Mr. Frank Klees: I assume it's no different now under the Ornge—

Mr. Robert Blakely: It can't be. Unless we're staging patients along the route, you can't do that.

Mr. Frank Klees: How much time do I have left, Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You're at 22 minutes and 29.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to just talk about this issue of the competitive environment, because we had a couple of people try to justify the internalization. They actually referred to the pre-Ornge structure as a monopoly; that, I guess in that case, it was you—that is, Canadian Helicopters—that had a monopoly. I found that somewhat strange because what essentially has happened now is that we have created a monopoly. There is no competitive bidding for anything. We now have two for-profit companies that still exist under the Mazza scheme. The one for-profit company owns all the aircraft. The other for-profit company employs all of the pilots and other staff. Those are the for-profit companies. There's no bidding anywhere that goes on. There's no bidding process, no comparison of cost efficiency, from anyone outside.

At the very least, it would seem to me that it would make sense that Mr. McKerlie and the current board consider very seriously this issue of transparency that Mr. Zimmer referred to previously, and that is, let's have an open, competitive bidding process. Let's see where Ornge comes in on that, and let's see who else comes to the table, and compare the bottom line. Is that something that would make sense?

You mentioned that there are a number of other companies. I think it would be helpful for us—I don't want you to give a commercial to your competitors, but could you give us the names of some of these other companies that are within our jurisdiction and, in your opinion, may or may not want to come forward to bid?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Oh, absolutely. The operator in British Columbia, who, as I said, we bid against recently—two years ago—is HeliJet. Another very capable company would be Cougar Helicopters.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And where are they?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Well, again, as helicopter companies—we, as Canadian, operate in New Zealand, Australia, Afghanistan. So to say Cougar's base has a head office in Halifax, I don't think that's—we're nationwide, all of us.

Mr. Frank Klees: So the same thing would be true if it was one of these other companies who wins the bid. The pilots who are currently there would transition and simply work for the other company.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Those who choose to go—

Mr. Frank Klees: Those who choose to go?

Mr. Robert Blakely: —to work for the company. That's correct. And the aircraft maintenance engineers.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move on to the NDP, then. Ms. Gélinas?

M^{me} France Gélinas: I want to take you back to when Canadian Helicopters still had the contract and the new delayed-launch policy was implemented. I'm guessing that must have been a busy water cooler discussion at the time, if not higher up. What are some of the processes you had in place to voice your opinion of that?

Mr. Robert Blakely: We—"we" meaning Canadian Helicopters—have been bound by a very, very strict confidentiality agreement with Ornge. As we've probably heard evidence from previous witnesses, Ornge was very quick to what I'll call "lawyer-up." We were put on notice that we were to speak to no one about any of the goings-on at Ornge. We abided by that restriction.

You've heard other witnesses say that complaints fell on deaf ears. No one in Ornge was listening and it was very, very, very disturbing for the front-line crews, this policy.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So in order to secure a $34-million contract with Ornge, you had to sign a confidentiality agreement that meant: "It doesn't matter what you find out about us, you cannot talk to anyone"?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I'll give you an example of what happened. The AW139 stretcher configuration: We knew about it from day one, that it was a problem. In Sudbury, it was the first aircraft introduced. We couldn't say anything to anyone. I was contacted by the Ministry of Health investigations branch—I have some notes here I can produce later—and I actually contacted our corporate lawyer and said, "Can I speak to them? This is the Ministry of Health investigations branch." Her words to me were, after reading the confidentiality agreement, "Wait until you're compelled." In other words, make them force you to come. I felt terrible about that. So in spite of our lawyer's recommendation to wait until I was compelled, I went and met with the investigations branch. I was shocked to know at that time that they had no idea about this stretcher issue at all. But that's another issue.

It's a very, very strict confidentiality agreement. I know it's waived for speaking here, but actually, I believe it survives, so we're still bound by it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Some of the pilots who blew the whistle on Ornge knew that they were putting their job and your contract in jeopardy when they came and talked to us?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So everybody within Canadian Helicopters—I never had any maintenance come to me, but I've had pilots. Anybody within Canadian Helicopters knew that they were not to talk about anything at Ornge?

Mr. Robert Blakely: The policy within Canadian Helicopters is, if you have a complaint, come to me. And complaints did come to me.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And the complaints did come to you. What kind of complaints did you get, first of all, with the delayed-launch policy?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Well, if we could talk about that a little bit, one of the questions I was asked by the Ministry of Health investigators was—they had been provided with data by Ornge showing that approximately 4,000 flights per year were cancelled after takeoff, which is a serious problem because the aircraft—not only is it tied up, but there's a cost associated with that. They asked me my thoughts on that, and I thought, “Wait a second; these are only scene calls that we’re talking about, not inter-hospital transfers. We only do 5,000 flights a year.”

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes.

Mr. Robert Blakely: That number is impossible. So I went through our own database and it wasn’t even close. The number of calls that were scene calls that were cancelled after takeoff was 200 or 300, not 4,000. Again, it was this whole sales pitch to everyone that the system’s broken, and it wasn’t true.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How often did the ministry come to you to ask you information as to how things were doing?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Never. Other than when I was first approached by the ministry regarding their investigation into the inability to do CPR in the AW139, not at all.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And that would have been in the fall of 2011?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I’d have to check my notes but it—yes. Yes, it was.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The new helicopter came to Sudbury—I’m going by memory, but I remember. It was a big deal. We were getting a new helicopter. I think it came to us in 2009.

Mr. Robert Blakely: No, the helicopter showed up in December 2010.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It was 2010; you’re right.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Here it is. November 12, 2010—and I can submit these notes, if you’d like—is when it first showed up in Sudbury. Immediately, I got calls from our front-line crew saying, “There’s a problem with this. I don’t think the paramedics can do CPR.” No, I don’t “think”; the paramedics cannot perform CPR.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have two minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. So here you have that information since November 2010. Nobody ever came to ask you what you knew and you did not have an opportunity to share that without losing a $34-million contract and dealing with the raft of lawyers that Ornge liked to deal with.

Mr. Robert Blakely: We viewed Ornge as a representative of the province. Yes, if you characterize it like that, it makes it sound like we were cowards. But we entered into our contract with Ornge in good faith and we respected the contract. We felt that they were informing the Ministry of Health—I thought they were. I was shocked when the Ministry of Health investigators called me and they had just learned of this problem. I thought Ornge had advised them right away. So I had no idea.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So it was an 11-month delay between when you first got a, “Heads up; we have a problem,” to the time when the ministry called you and said, “We think we have an issue.”

Mr. Robert Blakely: Yes. It was October 24, 2011. You’re right; it was 11 months later that the Ministry of Health contacted me.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It’s a bit of a delay. If we were to go back to having private providers do the flying of the aircraft, how would you correct for that communication piece?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I don’t know. I don’t think that’s my realm of authority. I can say that when we were under contract directly with the Ministry of Health, there was an ongoing dialogue. The emergency health services branch had a manager in charge of all air ambulance operations in the province. I probably spoke to that manager daily. We had a very, very good relationship, and they were very proactive with monitoring us; absolutely.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We’ll move on to the government. Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: I was taken by your expression. When you described Ornge, you used the expression that they were “all lawyered up.” I practised law for a long time myself. I know exactly what the expression means, but it struck a chord because one of the themes in the chamber during question period and one of the themes at these hearings now that have gone on for quite a long time is that the ministry, the minister and the government all had great, great trouble getting information out of Ornge.

My colleague opposite for the NDP has, on several occasions, mentioned the great number of freedom-of-information requests that their party had sent—I think it was in the order of 50; anyway, it was a substantial number—and couldn’t get information from the ministry and the ministry was trying to get information from Ornge. There was this underlying theme that Ornge’s lawyers were giving the instructions, “You don’t have to say this. You don’t have to disclose that. You don’t have to do this.” In fact, in an answer to the minister and the minister’s request for information about salary disclosures and information about salary disclosures from the subsidiaries of Ornge’s not-for-profit—the for-profit subsidiaries—the great response was that they don’t have to disclose any of that. Then we find out that Ornge’s lawyers, Fasken’s, ran up 22,000 hours of work, pushing close to $9 million in fees.

What’s your reaction to why a company like Ornge would, as you say, want to get all lawyered up, and what impediments does that create in the company?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I didn’t mean it as an offensive comment to a lawyer—

Mr. David Zimmer: No, no, no; I understand.

Mr. Robert Blakely: I’ll give you an example—

Mr. David Zimmer: On transparency issues, when a company gets all lawyered up, it doesn’t want to be transparent.

Mr. Robert Blakely: It says it all, I think. I’ll give you an example: When we finalized the negotiations on the services agreement with Ornge, there was some fine-tuning to do in the language. This is normal; we go through that; it’s a fairly lengthy document. On our side, there was my boss, Don Wall, myself, and we use McCarthy’s. We have one lawyer. On the Ornge side, there was an in-house lawyer with Ornge and 11 outside counsel. We would just shake our heads—11.

Mr. David Zimmer: Anyway, with all that high-priced help, you can appreciate the difficulty that the government, the ministry, the minister and others had in getting responsive information from Ornge.

I understand that a number of former CHL staff are now at Ornge: Bob Raymond, Andrew Eaton, Barry Hesketh. They're CHL managers. I understand there are former pilot managers at each of the bases and about 70 former CHL pilots, and a number of aircraft maintenance staff have moved over from CHL to Ornge. Is that the fact?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I can't comment. I would say, yes, that's correct. The majority of the 120 front-line workers elected to continue with their successor rights and take work with Ornge; that's correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: How did that affect the ongoing operations at CHL?

Mr. Robert Blakely: These were people who did nothing but operate the EMS helicopters at the bases. When the bases transferred to Ornge—transitioned from CHL to Ornge—the people went with the bases. So there is no negative impact. It was a sad day, but there was no negative impact.

Mr. David Zimmer: They carried on what they were doing at CHL but now carried on doing the same thing at Ornge?

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's correct.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you keep in touch with any of those folks?

Mr. Robert Blakely: Oh, I do, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: What was their take on things at Ornge up to the board and the CEO being replaced? What was their reaction to things under the new regime, the new CEO, the new board and so on?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I think generally, from the people I speak to—and I'm not a spokesperson on behalf of these 120 people—they're pleased with the changes. They're pleased to see Mr. McKelvie there. The new board, however, they're not pleased with.

Mr. David Zimmer: I'm sorry?

Mr. Robert Blakely: I said that they're pleased with all of that, but the majority of them would prefer to work for CHL.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: How much time do we have?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You just have a minute.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We have a minute. Just quickly, this whole business of out of service—I'm not a pilot. My understanding is that aircraft need to have routine maintenance frequently. The pilots in the room could have more intelligence. Is that correct?

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So the helicopters will be taken out of service for routine maintenance, whatever the required air transport schedule is. Does that count as out of service? Because I presume that if you take one out of service at Sudbury for routine maintenance, you dispatch from Timmins or something.

Mr. Robert Blakely: That's a very good question. In Ontario, we have eight front-line helicopters. In the Ministry of Health days—let me put it this way: Prior to the introduction of the new AW139s, we ran with a fleet. Up till 2010, we had eight front-line Sikorskys with three backup Sikorskys. If we had to ground the Sudbury base for maintenance, if Canadian Helicopters was unable to produce one of those three backup helicopters, we would be in penalty. It's not easy to do, because helicopters require a lot of maintenance. There's a lot of thought that has to go into the planning of the maintenance. Also, you face what we called "unscheduled maintenance." Something breaks and you didn't expect it to break.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Exactly. Well, that was my next question.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Again, it's very, very difficult. It's not a sales pitch, but to maintain this dispatch reliability in excess of 98% is just unheard of in the industry.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Just to follow up on that, the comparison of Canadian Helicopters' dispatch reliability—that rate was 98%. If we compare that to the experience of Ornge just over the last number of months, their rate would be, as I understand it, somewhere in the range of about 45%. I think that's where the concern is. It goes to the issue of experience and expertise in-house to be able to manage that.

Again, you were aware, for example, of that medical interior problem, which, in the incident reports that we've gone through, caused some significant problems. Is there anything else about the AW139 that we should know, that you have knowledge of, that perhaps Ornge doesn't have knowledge of?

Mr. Robert Blakely: There are two problems with the EMS conversion on that helicopter. One is the stretcher configuration, which everyone is aware of. The other is the weight. The EMS conversion—if we can look at the S-76s, the Sikorskys, it's about the same size in the back of the helicopter, give or take. Weight is absolutely critical, so you have to watch every pound you add to the aircraft to accommodate the EMS systems. In the Sikorsky—again, similar EMS size of aircraft—the EMS conversion is 500 pounds. In the new AW139s, it's over 1,000 pounds. In the world of helicopter pilots, that's profound. That means you can carry 500 pounds less fuel, which does impact the service.

The other big issue with that aircraft is the single-generator-failure issue. In the AW139s, with the current EMS configuration, if a single generator fails in flight, all of the medical systems shut down, including the oxygen. What would normally be an inconvenience for the pilots becomes a life-threatening situation for the patient. It's a ticking time bomb.

Mr. Frank Klees: Are you aware that Ornge is aware of this? Because I haven't heard anything coming from Ornge that this is under review or that they're in the process of resolving that issue.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Absolutely. In the meeting that I spoke about earlier, that Don Wall and I attended with Ron McKerlie in January, I briefed Mr. McKerlie on that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Had he been aware of this?

Mr. Robert Blakely: No, he was not. He told me he was not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Again, I think it goes to the point of having someone manage this who knows something about the industry.

I want to thank you for your presentation. I think it's very helpful to the committee. At the end of the day, the current leadership team at Ornge, the board and Mr. McKerlie, will have to make some decisions on a go-forward basis. I think you've provided us with an alternative, and it's very helpful. I want to thank you.

Mr. Robert Blakely: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much for taking the time to come before the committee today. It's appreciated.

We are recessed until 1 o'clock.

The committee recessed from 1200 to 1301.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Let's call this meeting to order. I believe we have a motion from the NDP to begin with. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes. Basically, I have circulated a document to you, but I will make a few changes, so it would go: Pursuant to the response to the NDP FOI request dated June 2, 2010—and you should all have gotten a copy of the response—I move that, notwithstanding sections 13, 19 and 21 of the act, the 19 records in the legal services branch and the 13 responsive records in the emergency health services branch be distributed to the committee by the end of this month.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Any discussion?

M^{me} France Gélinas: The reason I think it would be good is that we have a little bit of "she said, I say." I think that those records showed how much Dr. Mazza was being compensated. If it didn't, then it would clear the air that nobody had had access to what Mr. Mazza's compensation was and did not have that information until later on. I think it would be an opportunity to clear the air.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Any other discussion? All in favour? Opposed? Carried.

OFFICE OF THE INTEGRITY COMMISSIONER OF ONTARIO

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our first witness this afternoon is the Integrity Commissioner and Lobbyists Registrar, Lynn Morrison. I'd like to welcome Lynn, Ms. Morrison, to the committee. If your counsel could also state for the record her name?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: Yes, thank you. My name is Valerie Jepson. I'm counsel at the Office of the Integrity Commissioner.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you, and for your counsel, I guess we have a witness oath or affirmation, whichever you prefer.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: Yes. I'm happy to swear on the Bible.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): An oath? Okay. Ms. Jepson, do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Welcome, and you can take some time if you'd like to make a brief opening statement and then we'll move to the parties for questioning.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to thank the members of the committee for the opportunity to appear before you today. I have been following the work of this committee and, in particular, those issues that link closely to the work of my office.

My remarks today will cover four areas:

(1) I will speak about my role as Lobbyists Registrar.
(2) I will address an advisory opinion regarding Mr. Alfred Apps.

(3) I will touch on the ethical rules for ministers' staff, as well as the disclosure-of-wrongdoing framework, otherwise known as whistle-blowing, that exists for public servants in Ontario; and

(4) I will offer suggestions of how the Lobbyists Registration Act could be amended to improve compliance.

As you have seen, I have with me today Valerie Jepson, counsel at the Office of the Integrity Commissioner. She's here to assist me in responding to specific questions about the work of my office and the legislation that forms our mandates.

I anticipate that committee members may have questions about these pieces of legislation, as well as whether certain individuals involved with Ornge were following the rules. I am happy to provide explanations to clarify the legislation and the rules. As Integrity Commissioner and Lobbyists Registrar, I will provide an opinion only when I have had an opportunity to review all the facts and preferably after hearing what the parties involved have to say. As such, my comments will be limited to the one advisory opinion I have issued with regard to lobbying on behalf of Ornge.

I will begin with my role as Lobbyists Registrar. My office has maintained the lobbyists' registry since 1999 under the mandate provided in the Lobbyists Registration Act. The act is based on the principles that lobbying is a legitimate activity and the public has a right to know who is lobbying whom about what. I have provided the committee with a document that summarizes the main components of the legislation as well as the definition of lobbying, and that can be found under tab 1.

As I said, lobbying is a legitimate activity. Lobbyists play an important role in government policy-making, and elected officials and public servants benefit from the information provided by various types of organizations and entities. Under the legislation, an individual is required to register when they receive payment for lobbying. Lobbying is defined as communicating with a public office-holder in an attempt to influence government activities.

In addition, a consultant lobbyist must register if he or she arranges a meeting with a public office-holder or communicates in an attempt to influence the awarding of a contract on behalf of a client. Having a registration on the lobbyists' registry is not punitive. It promotes transparency and accountability in the interactions between the public sector and private interests.

My job is to receive and review all registrations, and ensure my office maintains a transparent database of information that is readily available to the public. I work hard to ensure that registrations clearly articulate the lobbying activity, and if they do, I approve the registrations myself for posting to the public registry. I also provide advice to lobbyists on my interpretation of the legislation. As Lobbyists Registrar, I have no investigative or enforcement powers. There are offence provisions in the act, including a fine of up to $25,000, which can only be enforced by the police. This has never happened.

I would now like to address the materials I provided to the committee in April and which can be found at tabs 2 to 8 of the booklets I have provided. My letter to the clerk is at tab 2.

On January 13, I was asked by Fasken Martineau to provide an advisory opinion about a number of emails that Alfred Apps sent on behalf of Ornge in December 2010. You will find these at tab 3. I reviewed the materials and concluded that Mr. Apps was engaged in lobbying as a consultant lobbyist as defined by the act. The emails clearly showed him arranging a meeting between his client, Ornge, and public office-holders. I remind the committee that the act requires consultant lobbyists to register if they undertake to arrange a meeting between a public office-holder and any other person.

On February 3, I provided an opinion to Martin Denyes, managing partner at Fasken's, and also sent a copy to Mr. Apps. These can be found at tabs 4 and 5. In doing this, I had to consider the issue of compliance. As Lobbyists Registrar, my work has been focused on educating lobbyists and the public. In the case of Mr. Apps, the events in question took place more than a year before they were brought to my attention. There is no mechanism to file a registration retroactively.

In light of this and my efforts to educate lobbyists, I concluded that I would be satisfied to receive a letter from both Mr. Apps and Fasken Martineau confirming that they understood my opinion. I received this confirmation from Fasken Martineau in late February. Fasken's response is at tab 7.

I received a letter from Mr. Apps on February 10 in which he confirmed his understanding and acceptance of the opinion and also asked me to revisit my opinion in consideration of additional information he provided. This is at tab 6. I reviewed this additional information, and my original opinion was unchanged. I informed Mr. Apps of this, and you'll find that letter at tab 8.

To me, the intent of the legislation is that registration is required when an individual undertakes any activity that is defined as lobbying and does so on behalf of a client who is paying them. There is no benefit to accountability or transparency if registration can be avoided because a time docket was not submitted for a specific email.

Mr. Apps appeared before this committee on April 18, 2012, and stated that he did not lobby. As an officer of the Legislative Assembly, I felt that the committee should be made aware of my advisory opinion and to see the discrepancies between my point of view and that of Mr. Apps. In a letter to my staff on April 23, Mr. Apps further stated his case. In that letter, he stated that he would be providing this information to the committee as well. My opinion remains unchanged.

I would like to now turn to the Public Service of Ontario Act, and I will refer to it as the PSOA. This legislation provides the basis of the ethical conduct, conflict of interest and political activity rules for many types of public servants, including the staff of cabinet ministers. When one leaves their position in a minister's office, he or she cannot lobby their former ministry for 12 months. Other rules exist to protect confidential information and prohibit the seeking of preferential treatment. These rules encourage appropriate ethical behaviour without unfairly restricting future employment prospects.

I have noted that the committee has heard from witnesses who had previously tried to raise the alarm about inappropriate activities taking place at Ornge. There is another component to the PSOA which provides a disclosure-of-wrongdoing framework, establishing mechanisms and protections for public servants for disclosing wrongdoing in the public service. This framework has an internal component where public servants can raise issues with the deputy minister or the head of their agency or public body.

It also has an external component. Public servants can submit a disclosure to my office when they do not believe it is appropriate to disclose internally. In the case of Ornge, my office does not have jurisdiction to receive complaints from employees.

Based on my experience receiving complaints from employees in the Ontario public service, I strongly believe there are benefits to formal processes for addressing whistle-blowing complaints by public servants. This, along with strong protections from reprisal, is a key component of accountability within the public service. This should be considered in relation to the facts surrounding the Ornge matter.

Finally, I would like to speak to my call for a review of the Lobbyists Registration Act, which has not undergone a significant review since it came into force. While the registration system has generally worked well, it is time to modernize the legislation and make it more effective. I have been calling for a thoughtful review of the act, and in May this year I released recommendations on how I believe the legislation can be improved. I have included a copy of my recommendations at tab 9.

I welcome the government's proposals to amend Ontario's legislation, and I look forward to an opportunity to participate in the discussion with all stakeholders.

I would like to emphasize that Ontario has a strong framework of accountability and ethical-conduct legislation. It is time to build on that framework to ensure that Ontario regains its place as a leader in the area of lobbyist registration.

I trust that my remarks are of assistance to you, and I am happy to answer any questions you may have. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for that. We will go to the government members first. Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Good afternoon, Ms. Morrison, and thank you for appearing today, and thank you for your introductory remarks, because that helps very much set the context of your appearance here today.

All of us on the committee, as MPPs, of course—I find it odd to call you Ms. Morrison, because I usually say, “Hi, Lynn”—we all get to visit you annually and have a little chat, so this is a more formal venue in which to have a little chat.

Certainly, as you're aware, because you've obviously been following really closely, the committee has had—I think we're up to 70 hours of testimony now and about 600 pages of Hansard, tens of thousands of documents. I think just yesterday we got 33,000 documents from the Ministry of Finance.

At any rate, one of the issues that has come up, as you've clearly outlined in the material that you've provided for us, is this whole issue of lobbying and the registration of lobbying and appropriate activity of lobbying. Obviously, you've raised issues with Mr. Apps specifically, and there may be some other issues at Fasken's as well, as things unfold.

We've certainly also, in the course of the testimony, heard from a gentleman by the name of Kelly Mitchell, who was at a government relations firm, Pathway Group, had a past history with the Conservative Party, and had also acted, I think, for the members for Parry Sound-Muskoka and Whitby-Oshawa, but at any rate—so political as well as lobbying involvement. He was serving on the board of Ornge at the same time. In fact, he actually ended up having a contract as a government relations person at the same time as he was serving on the board, which is perhaps beyond your purview but was a bit of an odd situation.

You mentioned at the end of your remarks—and you've provided us a copy of your recommendations around the lobbying act. But I wonder if we could maybe look at some of the proposals that have just been announced in terms of the lobbying registration, the proposals to amend the Lobbyists Registration Act.

I think that most of the reforms that are in the act are reforms that derive from the recommendations that you've made. Is that a correct observation?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Yes, it is.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It is? And actually, I agree with your introductory statement that being a lobbyist isn't a bad thing. As you know, at one point I was actually registered as a lobbyist because I was the president of the Ontario Public School Boards' Association. In that capacity—we didn't have a paid lobbyist—the president was the lobbyist-in-chief. During the period in which I was president, I had to register. So, as I say, I've got nothing against lobbyists because I once had to register as one.

Certainly, from my point of view it was clear that part of my job was to lobby. It was there for the record. That was very public, and there was nothing wrong with what I was doing because that was part of my function as president of an organization. I agree with your analysis that lobbying is fine but you need to be open and above board about it.

If we could go through some of the amendments that have been proposed, maybe, and get your reaction about: How does that help you do your work in ensuring that lobbying is open, above board and follows the rules? One of the ones—you've mentioned this in your remarks, I think—is increasing the maximum fine for an offence from $25,000 to $100,000. It would be up to $25,000 for the first offence and up to $100,000 for subsequent offences. If you could give us—and if counsel wants to chime in, that's fine too—a bit of a comment on how that would assist you in your work to have a higher fine.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I think it's fair to say that because I have no investigative powers, I have no power to issue penalties. That's the first thing that is important to understand. I have asked for certain penalties; absolutely. The $100,000 refers more to a conviction—not for me to impose but would be on conviction. The powers that I'm looking for, more specifically, are the ability to issue reports; compel testimony; issue, perhaps, administrative monetary penalties and things of that nature. But I think that increasing the penalty seems to be a trend in Canada and I think it also helps in the compliance—that people will take this more seriously.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because should something happen that would attract a penalty, then the penalty would be higher; it is high enough that it's not just a cost of doing business. Is that the idea?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I suppose that's one way of putting it, but again, before anything would be referred to the authorities I'd have to balance that out as to the seriousness of the offence, because I want to do what makes sense.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That probably feeds into one of the other changes that is proposed, which is providing the registrar with the ability to impose a penalty following an investigation and a finding of non-compliance, which would be a new power. Then, there would also, as you mentioned, continue to be the availability of a fine upon conviction. The penalties would be a prohibition of lobbying for up to two years and publicly disclosing information about violations of the act.

Is that in line with what you were looking for, and again, a bit about the significance of you having the ability to do something on your own without the conviction.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: If you're going to have investigative powers you should have the power to issue reports and you should have the power to issue a penalty. Before you issue that penalty, you consider the seriousness of the offence. Is it an error made in good faith? Is it a repeat error or lack of registering, a repeating offence? You have to look at the facts of the case and then make a determination at that time.

I haven't seen, obviously, the legislation the government is proposing to bring forward, and I look forward to that. Even if I did get those, I think that we would be establishing certain criteria for each of those penalties to provide us with some guidance.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you would be either creating or looking for a template as to what sort of a finding elicits what sort of penalty. Is that what you're sort of envisioning?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Sort of, but it's really hard to tell until such time as I've got something before me that I am considering.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. And then, I take it that there is a proposal for some other additional powers. One would be to provide you with the power to investigate possible violations of the act, and you've mentioned that a couple of times. I actually didn't realize you didn't have the power to investigate. If you don't have the power to investigate right now, what is it you can do? And then, in contrast, what would this mean? I honestly assumed you could investigate.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: No, I cannot. You know, despite that ability not to be able to investigate, I have taken it upon myself to spend my energy on trying to educate our stakeholders and to encourage compliance. I think, to me, that has been the most important thing that I could do without anything else, without the ability to investigate. In fact, when I do hear of a potential breach—and there are not many of them—I take the opportunity to educate both parties and, believe it or not, even the complainant could use some education; they don't understand the act. I try to educate both parties, and the individual or organization accused of not registering—I provide them with all the education I can and ask them for a response after they've reviewed that legislation. Most times, it's a matter of the individual not understanding the provisions of the act or not even realizing it existed, and they will register.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The correspondence that you actually presented us with here, where you've got the correspondence back and forth with Mr. Apps and with the law firm he was associated with at the time of the incident that prompted all of this—that to-ing and fro-ing and the correspondence and the opinion and the request for further detail, that's sort of typical, then, if I hear you, of the power you have at the moment, which is this conversation about what are the rules.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: That's right. The only difference is that I don't normally give opinions about past activities. I'm very often giving opinions about future activities of lobbyists. But I felt that this was a good opportunity to educate both Fasken and Mr. Apps and that's why I followed that process. It made sense to me. When I got their assurance in writing that they understood and accepted my opinion, I felt there was no need to proceed any further.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Because you now had the opportunity to influence future behaviour—

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Yes, and as you'll note from my correspondence, or correspondence, I believe, from Fasken, they indicated that they would be sure that they understood that for the future.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then the other power is to specifically include the ability to provide guidance and direction on lobbyists' conduct and also include the ability to develop a code of conduct for lobbyists. Again, is that consistent with your advice? Or how does that affect the work that you do?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: In terms of the code of conduct, I have not called for a code of conduct. However, I'm pleased to see that the government has given me the ability if I feel it's necessary.

To be honest with you, I'm not convinced a code is the answer. It's really hard to deal with what's appropriate in professionalism. I appreciate the government's offer that I have that jurisdiction, and I'd like to have it and see what happens with any new responsibilities I get under this act.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it may be more the individual guidance, given the explicit circumstances, that is ultimately more powerful.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Well, I can do that now. I have the ability to provide advisory opinions, and I often provide advisory opinions in writing, as we have done with Fasken and Mr. Apps.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. New rules for lobbyists: Provide a single set of rules to determine whether all in-house lobbyists are required to register and to require all in-house lobbyists to follow the rules currently in place for in-house lobbyists in not-for-profit entities. Again, I think that's consistent with some advice you gave.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: It is.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And does that simplify the rules?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Yes, I think it does. Perhaps I can just describe what an in-house lobbyist is. There's an in-house lobbyist for for-profit companies and an in-house lobbyist for not-for-profits. The in-house lobbyist for for-profit companies, perhaps your pharmaceutical companies—each employee who is paid must register if they spend 20% of their time, a significant part of their duties, lobbying the provincial government. So for every individual lobbying, they must have a registration.

In-house not-for-profit: In your particular situation, the requirement is that the most senior paid officer of that organization must register and then they list those in the employ of that organization who are lobbying. So you've just got one registration. To me, it makes sense that they should all be on the same playing field, have one registration for each organization or company, and then list those within that organization who are lobbying. I think it provides more transparency, because right now if an employee of a for-profit company might make a couple of phone calls, they're not required to register.

Having said that, I have to say that it's my sense that a good many in-house organizations and we call them persons and partnerships, the for-profits, register, even though they don't meet that 20%. They do it out of an abundance of caution.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That was certainly always the attitude that we took when I was registering. As the president, I was the person whose name was there, but for all the other listed people, it wasn't, "Were they going to meet some threshold?" It was simply, "Here's everybody who might be called on to lobby," and we probably listed the entire executive and the senior staff at the organization. They might, so why worry about thresholds? That makes sense.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I encourage that approach to registration. If somebody asks me for an opinion, "Should I register?", and they say, "Well, I don't spend 20% of my time," I'd say, "That's fine. You're not required to, but I encourage you to give it consideration, just to be transparent." There's nothing wrong with being on the registry, and it's very easy to register.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then, require lobbyists to identify MPPs, including cabinet ministers, by office, when they are the subject of lobbying. So for example, you would talk about the office of the Minister of Government Services or the office of the MPP for a specific riding.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Yes, that's right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And that would be to, again, identify—ease of identifying the activity?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: It just provides more transparency.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Prohibit consultant lobbyists from accepting fees contingent on a particular lobbying outcome.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: That was a government initiative. It was a policy decision.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Oh, okay. But it would preclude contingency.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then prohibit lobbyists from lobbying and providing paid advice at the same time to any ministry or any agency on the same subject matter, and lobbying and providing paid advice at the same time to the same ministry or agency on any subject matter.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: This isn't a new idea. This is something that I do when I am asked to provide an opinion on a non-jurisdictional matter. I'm often asked to provide advice to people who don't really fall within a particular act or don't have anybody to come to, so I try to provide them with some guidance. It makes sense to me. I can see it coming into other provincial legislation. I felt it made sense, and it again clarifies and strengthens the legislation.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Chair, how much time do I have left?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have four minutes—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, in the first—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): —in total.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In total. Okay, I'll set aside some time then. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, very well. Then we shall move to the opposition. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Chair. I will call you "Commissioner," because that's what I call you. I want to thank you for the work you do generally, and I want to thank you for your initiative in dealing with this lobbying issue.

You can imagine, of course, those of us in this committee when we were sitting in that meeting on April 18 and this exchange was taking place that you've referenced here in your presentation between myself and Mr. Apps.

My question to you now is this: Given the legislation, as it sits today, what next step is available to me, as a member of provincial Parliament, confronted with the fact that we had a witness who gave contrary evidence, who gave evidence that he was not lobbying? Clearly, I think there isn't anyone in this committee who would have agreed with him based on what we saw. We then have a confirmation from you in extensive correspondence saying, "Yes, you did lobby." I'm assuming that Mr. Apps still contends that he did not.

So here we have this situation. I'm sure the public is probably wondering the same thing. We had an individual, in a very high-profile case before the public accounts committee, clearly in contravention of the lobbyist act, who has had this debate with the commissioner. What's to be done? I think there's a cynicism out there that says, "Well, everybody gets away with everything." What are the next steps?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I think, first of all, that's for the committee to decide. I am not a gatekeeper of lobbyists' conduct if it's inappropriate. I think it's fair to say that if anybody wanted to bring something to the attention of the authorities, they're entitled to do so.

Mr. Frank Klees: You know, in the same way that Ms. Sandals earlier said she wasn't aware that you don't have investigative powers, I think the public would join with that sentiment to say, "Why do we have a commissioner or a registrar, why do we have an act, why are there rules, if all they mean is that you might get your finger slapped at some point? There might be a little bit of embarrassment for someone."

I somehow doubt that Mr. Apps is embarrassed about anything at this point because his boldness in terms of challenging you in such a public way was confounding to me. I would have thought that there would be some contrition, but there isn't.

In the interest of giving some reassurance to the public that we actually have some rules in place by which we have to conduct ourselves, lawyers have to conduct themselves, consultants, lobbyists, that they mean something, my question to you is: What, in your opinion, would it take? We're looking at a review of the act, and I saw what the government has said they're willing to do. I don't see that any of the changes that are being proposed at this point by the government, of what I've seen, would address the issue that I'm attempting to get at here, and that is to put some teeth into legislation that individuals like Alf Apps could not simply take for granted that he could simply walk away from this and go on to the next file, and even pay a financial penalty. The issue of fines is, in many ways, just simply, for some people, a cost of doing business. If you're billing $9 million in legal fees, you can easily pay $100,000 in fines. At the end of the day, it will probably be a tax write-off.

My question is: If the government is serious about doing something about this, particularly against the backdrop of this scandal that we're dealing with in this committee, what recommendation do you have for us that would make this legislation actually work?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Mr. Klees, I think that my recommendations will contribute to making it work. I think it's fair to say that my request, for example, to make reports public can be very damaging to a lobbyist. Let's face it: The only sure thing we have is our reputation, and that's pretty precious to all of us. If I were to issue a negative report against a lobbyist, how would you, as members of a government or opposition, feel about that individual? How would the public feel about that individual? I think that's something to give some thought to. In the worst-case scenario, if I have the powers to investigate and I decide, at the end of the day, that this is a serious matter, then I've got the right to refer it to the authorities.

I have an example in front of me, yes, but I did what I thought made sense. The committee was looking into matters regarding Ornge and this issue came up before the committee. I felt that both Fasken's and Mr. Apps understood and accepted my opinion and I felt that there was nothing more to do. A lesson had been learned. It had happened a year before. There was no evidence that it was continuing. I felt I did the right thing.

Absolutely, I got concerned when I heard Mr. Apps's testimony, and that's why I provided you with this material. You were looking into it; I felt it was best in your hands. But I do think that my recommendations would go a long way towards your concerns.

Mr. Frank Klees: Have you had an indication from the government that they will accept your recommendations?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I've only seen the announcement of what came out recently, but I am looking forward to seeing the proposed legislation.

Mr. Frank Klees: Has anyone from the government met with you to discuss draft legislation?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: We have met just to talk about the overall recommendations to ensure that they understood what we were asking for, but I have not had that opportunity to discuss any legislation.

Mr. Frank Klees: Who did you meet with from the government?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: The minister, Mr. Takhar.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: And his staff—Minister Takhar and his chief of staff and the deputy minister.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay, thank you.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Catherine Brown.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to just ask you your opinion on whistle-blower protection. The government has included a reference to whistle-blower protection in Bill 50. This is the legislation that's being proposed in response to the Ornge situation. Have you had a chance to see that legislation and look at that whistle-blower protection clause?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: No, I have not. I'm sorry.

Mr. Frank Klees: I would ask you to do that, if you could.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I will.

Mr. Frank Klees: Our concern with that clause is that, like so many things, unfortunately, when it comes to legislation, it sounds good but has very little efficacy in terms of actually giving the kind of freedom to employees or staff or the public to come forward. It's very restrictive in terms of who individuals could go to. In fact, that particular clause relating to the whistle-blower protection in Bill 50 actually restricts people from going to the very individuals whom they've gone to in the past who shut down the information.

Our view is that that should be considerably broadened. We would appreciate your input and your advice as to what you think might be an appropriate amendment to improve that particular aspect of that legislation, if you're willing to do that.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: If that would be helpful to the committee, I'd be happy to.

I might just point out that the whistle-blowing regime that we have now for the Ontario public service certainly has that internal disclosure process to the deputy minister or the head of the agency, but it also has a provision that if the public office-holder is not comfortable or feels that they can't go to that individual, they then come to our office as an outside office.

Mr. Frank Klees: It's an important issue because quite often, whether it's the director of a department, whether it's the assistant deputy minister or the deputy minister—sometimes the deputy minister is the problem—not that it would ever happen. But I have certainly been told by civil servants, "Look, I can't go to the deputy; that's my issue." So we can profess to have this legislation, but if it doesn't free up the individual to make their complaint or to get advice, then we're back at square one. We'd appreciate your view on that.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I'd be happy to take a look at that and provide it to the committee.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll defer my next questions.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay; very well. We'll move to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It is a pleasure to see you here, Commissioner Morrison.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Thank you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We'll call you "Commissioner." You are responsible in front of this Legislature. It's a big job and a big responsibility, and I thank you for taking the time to come and talk to us today.

It's the first time that I see all of the documents that you have presented in front of us, so I have a couple of questions. The first one is: When you received this letter under tab 3 that you gave us, from Mr. Martin Denyes from Fasken Martineau, did they also call you, or you just received this out of the blue?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: No, we just received the letter.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You just received the letter. Have you talked to them since?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I think there may have been occasion when Ms. Jepson spoke with them.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: I can elaborate. When we got the letter, we weren't sure what the purpose of the letter was. Was it a complaint? Was it a request for an opinion? I did speak to Mr. Denyes. At the end of that tab is a second letter from Mr. Denyes dated January 30, which refers to conversations he and I had confirming that they were seeking an advisory opinion. The purpose was just to procedurally figure out what it was that the request was.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did he ever share with you as to what brought them to want to have an opinion from the commissioner?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: No, there was no other information other than what was in this letter, that it had come to their attention and that they were providing it to us.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So you received this out of the blue. Do you receive things like this often?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: We receive letters requesting an opinion, but sometimes somebody will call first and we ask that they put it in writing, and then we provide the opinion.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But as you said, most of the time when you're asked for an opinion, it is for an activity that is yet to take place?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: That's correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Very few are looking back. Was this the first one where you were asked to look back?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: We get a different kind of request sometimes where, as the commissioner was saying before, people will notify us that they think someone is engaged in unregistered lobbying. So that's something that's already happened, and that's when the commissioner will do what she described as, "Go back to the person; get their explanation; try to educate them." Sometimes it results in a registration.

But no, this was unusual. That was why I phoned to say, "Help us understand what is the purpose of this," and explain to Mr. Denyes that we didn't provide advisory opinions in the past, so it would be up to the commissioner whether or not she wanted to do that. And the letter that the commissioner did send addressed that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It's on tab 4?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: Tab 4, yes. Thanks.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's okay.

So we're now on tab 4. You responded to Mr. Denyes and in a three-page letter made it clear that in your opinion, lobbying activity had taken place. Attached to this, you share an interpretation bulletin on your activities that you do to educate. I take it this is something useful.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I hope so.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Once you read this, it becomes pretty clear. You do the same thing with Mr. Apps. You share with him what has happened, and then the answer. Through all of this, was there any doubt left in your mind that he understood the advice that you had given and he understood that what he had done was lobbying?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I had no doubt, no. But in terms of him accepting it, I certainly felt that way when I received the letter from him that he had accepted it, and even though he provided further submissions, it didn't change my mind.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So you do your analysis; you share your opinion that there has been lobbying activity. By the time the new information was shared with you and all this—we're still in February. Then he comes to see us in April. Was this a surprise when you heard him say, "I never lobbied"?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: It was, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In the exchange of correspondence, plus exchange on the phone that your counsel had done for you, you felt that they understood. They also took in the educational piece to learn—we all learn from our mistakes. And then on April 18—can you resolve the disconnect, I guess, for us? How could somebody write to you that they understand and approve, and then come in front of us under oath and say that they never lobbied?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I can't resolve it for you. I don't understand.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. I don't understand either. So then—

Ms. Valerie Jepson: The other piece of information was, when the commissioner provided the—it was six days after she heard the evidence that we provided this information to the committee, all of this material, and we notified Mr. Denyes and Mr. Apps that we were going to do that, just as a courtesy, and Mr. Apps did provide a letter to the committee. It was actually addressed to me, but copied to Mr. Short. It's not in this material, but it appears that he has a different point of view on the interpretation.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. This letter has already been circulated to us. But this new point of view came as a surprise to you after his testimony on April 18?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I think Mr. Apps was twisting my words in trying to make submissions. It still came down to the fact that Mr. Apps was working as a consultant lobbyist, as defined by the act, in trying to arrange an appointment. It doesn't matter if he was successful. It doesn't matter who looked at the calendar to see when everybody was available. Mr. Apps should have been registered for that activity. His arguments are just twisting my words.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Commissioner, I want to thank you for coming in as well. I want to just build on this point. We may discuss this and may make recommendations. We want to hear directly from you, as a commissioner: What is the impact of this? In layman's terms, why do we need to register lobbyists and what is the impact of having someone who is not registered as a lobbyist conduct an activity that is lobbying? What does that mean to the public? What should they take from this?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Why do we have them register? I think it provides transparency in government. It's certainly the way of the world today. There's nothing wrong with being on the registry. Lobbying is a legitimate activity. Not registering—I don't understand why some people don't feel it's appropriate. If you're not doing anything inappropriate, there's nothing wrong with registering. That's, for me, the bottom line.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. So, when my colleague asked, "Shouldn't there be repercussions?"—I would say all of us share the comments that Ms. Sandals shared with you that we all thought you did follow up with this, that you had the powers that you don't have, which you wrote down here as "no authority to prosecute an offence under the act." When you tell us we have to go to the authorities, who are those authorities and who do we go to?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I would suggest the OPP.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We go and tell the OPP?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I know that you said in your opening comments that this has never been done before.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Has it been done in other Canadian jurisdictions?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Federally.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Federally it has been done? Do you have a case in mind that may ring a bell with us?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: At the federal level, the commissioner has much more extensive investigation powers. Federally, the Commissioner of Lobbying has issued a number of reports under their legislation. If the commissioner at the federal level believes that there has been an offence committed, she is required—it is a she federally, also—to refer it to the RCMP. She has made a number of referrals to the RCMP. I believe only one of several has resulted in a charge. I can't remember all the particulars. I know that there are a lot who are upset about it, because in the one that did result in a charge, the penalty that the lobbyist got was to write an essay or something about why he should have registered. So there's a lot of skepticism around whether or not these penalties are—even the authorities are going to issue penalties. I don't know the circumstances why that—presumably, it was the person's first offence and all kinds of things like that that would normally go into consideration when you're sentencing someone.

There is the other jurisdiction. BC was the same as Ontario until a couple of years ago. The commissioner there had no investigation powers. The commissioner in BC became inundated with requests for enforcement, and the commissioner said, "Look, I don't know what you think is in my act. I don't have that ability." So they've amended the act to include investigation and enforcement powers, then.

In the commissioner's recommendations on the lobbying act, that's what we want. We want something like the BC model, where the commissioner could go and investigate matters, and three types of penalties:

(1) a public report—I hear what you're saying, that there's skepticism around that, but, as the commissioner said, we think that matters to lobbyists, that a public report would be damaging;

(2) the ability to restrict a lobbyist who has contravened the act from lobbying in the future—we think that would be a helpful penalty;

(3) administrative monetary penalties, because we think that would bring a deterrent effect.

We do think there should be maintained both an offence-type, criminal-type penalty system and an administrative one that we would administer, because we care a lot about lobbying and we want lobbying to be enforced. Is this going to be on the top of the agenda for a police force? Maybe. But at least for us, it would be. So that's why we want the power in our office to carry out penalties. That's what they have in BC.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just to clarify, though, similar to a municipal offence or similar to a highway traffic offence—highway traffic offences are prosecuted by or investigated by police, but they don't result in a criminal record of any sort. So similarly with this—this is a lobby—

Ms. Valerie Jepson: It's a provincial offence.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: It's a provincial offence.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So it would make sense for the OPP to investigate it, and if there's an offence, if there seems to be an offence—sending that material along to the OPP for them to investigate and then lay a charge, if they see fit. It would still not fall underneath the criminal jurisdiction; it would be within the provincial offences.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: Right, and if we had enhanced investigation powers, we would, as any other similar body, be better positioned to assist in providing information to peace officers—in our case, we think the OPP makes sense—so that they could have a start when we handed over a file, if it came to our attention.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So as it stands, without any further action, either by the committee or with the commissioner, there will be no charge laid for a potential, in this case, contravention of the act?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: No—

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Not unless somebody brings it forward to them, and there's no guarantee there either that they will investigate or prosecute.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In the BC case, does it make any difference who the lobbyist is? We tend to hold lawyers and judges and even police officers to look at the laws with great respect. Do they deal with that in the BC law?

Ms. Valerie Jepson: I don't think that they do.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I think the bottom line is that they should be treated the same. You look at the offence and then make your determination from there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So what is becoming clearer as to how you would like the reform of the existing act to roll out—at the beginning, Ontario was kind of at the forefront. How far behind are we now?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Way behind, absolutely. It's very public that Guy Giorno, who is an expert in lobbying legislation, particularly across Canada, has indicated we once were a leader and today we're not. We're at the bottom of the list. I identified this some time ago. I was watching other jurisdictions very closely as to what was going on. When I realized that we had to do something, we took a lot of time studying other jurisdictions, talking to my colleagues across Canada: "What works and what doesn't work for you?" That's why it took us some time to put together a package that I felt was well researched, well thought out and it made sense.

M^{me} France Gélinas: This is what you presented to the government to help frame the changes—

Ms. Lynn Morrison: That's right, exactly.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Some of them look like they will be in, some of them won't, but you say that this process is still unfolding and you feel that you're being listened to?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Yes, I do.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Very good.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: My concern is that I think it's important that we look at lobbying and make sure that lobbying is done properly and that it's monitored. I think it's important.

But for the public to care, we need to give them an explanation of why it matters. Instead of me advocating why it's important, I think it would be best coming from the commissioner, so I want to return to this point. What would be the impact of having unregistered lobbyists? What, if any, is the impact of that? What's the negative impact of that? Lobbying is legitimate and it's an activity that we support and we're not against, but why is it important to regulate it so it's done properly, and why is that so important?

That's a two-part question there. One is the unregistered lobbyists and why does that matter; what's the impact of that? The second is: In general, why do we care about lobbying and ensuring that it's done properly?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: First of all, I think it's important for me to put it on the record that I don't think this is a major problem in Ontario. Yes, this is an important case that we're speaking about today, but I don't get a lot of complaints in our office about lobbying activity. In fact, I have found lobbyists to be very co-operative with me.

Unregistered lobbying? It doesn't help the system. People are very skeptical today, anyway. But I think that with our recommendations, I can help to dissuade a lot of that.

The other problem, I suppose, is that the public doesn't understand a lot of my mandates. That's why I've made a concerted effort over the last couple of years to educate, get out into the public and talk to them.

Unregistered lobbying: Yes, I suppose it's going to happen. I just don't think it's a really big problem. But again, if people see that somebody is not registered and they should be and they've got the evidence, they can bring it to me, but I'm limited right now. I'm not the gatekeeper. They're entitled to go to the authorities if they want.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So you don't have a blacklist of people you're keeping an eye on as to—

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I wouldn't say that. I can say that we're doing a lot in terms of that education. We do media scans. We're watching various industries and groups to see—just watching. It may come to our attention that a particular group may need to receive some communication from us, maybe a little education, and we will send some information to them: "It has come to our attention—do you realize this act is in place? You might want to take a look at it."

M^{me} France Gélinas: And it's working well most of the time?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: We continue to get new registrations all the time, yes.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: If you're trying to, for the public, figure out the value in it, I think any member of the public could be able to see that quickly if they went on to the registry. I think people don't realize how much information is on that website. You can have a quick scan, look at the recent registrations.

The commissioner has worked really hard over the last few years to improve the quality of the information in each return. The goal that we have is that we want to make sure that anyone who goes on that registry, no matter who you are, you'll be able to understand what the lobbyist is doing when they're talking to the government: What's their goal?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Exactly. Maybe I can just present my opinion. I think it's crucially important, if you meet with someone as an elected official and I don't know that person is a lobbyist—I think that perhaps their concern is a concern of a constituent and they're just raising concerns that might be a concern that maybe people in the region are concerned about. But if it's a lobbyist, it's important for me to know that, "This is a concern of a particular interest group." There's nothing wrong with that, but it's good for me to know that. This is why I think it's important for us to know who we're dealing with and who each elected official is dealing with.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Some of you may recall that in our last meeting I encouraged all of you to—and when I meet with ministers' staff, I encourage them to check the registry, but even for you as opposition members, I encourage your staff to look at the registry when they get a call to meet with you. See what they're lobbying about. Then, if they're not on the registry, just raise with them, "You realize there is a lobbyist registration. You may have an obligation to register." You have no obligation to do that, but I think it just helps inform.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Absolutely. I'd like to speak a little bit—I only have a few—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Three minutes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —three minutes left—about whistle-blowers. I am starting to understand better what exists for the public service. We're dealing with the Ministry of Health and one of their transfer payments right now, where a review was done by an auditing firm that recommended that they put whistle-blower protection in place. They flatly refused.

I was wondering, does any other jurisdiction—or do you know of any government which, in their accountability agreement—they request all sorts of stuff. The Ministry of Health will—you know, like you have to have insurance for your board. They request you to do a whole bunch of stuff before they transfer money to you.

Would it be reasonable to say, "You should also have whistle-blower protection in place and develop whistle-blower protection that would go beyond the public service to transfer payment agencies"?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I think it's a benefit to organizations, but what is really key is that employees have to have trust in their superiors. They have to have confidence in making those disclosures. They have to know that what they're saying means something, that it's important to somebody. It may not result in anything, but they have to feel that somebody is listening. When these disclosures come in, they have to know that it's being treated confidentially but also in a professional manner. They're not going to do it otherwise. There's probably a lot of HR involved in training people, informing them about the process, but most importantly, they need to know that their concerns matter.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In the other provinces and jurisdictions in Canada, is it typical that you go to your supervisor but you also have an option B, that, if you don't have this relationship of trust, you can go to an officer of the Legislature, which is you in this—

Ms. Lynn Morrison: There is legislation in other provinces. Ours is unique. We're the only province where there's an internal process, with the external process to our office. Val, you might be able to speak more specifically about the other jurisdictions.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: Yes. Ontario is unique for one reason, but the jurisdictions are common, that there is an internal mechanism and an external mechanism.

A few things about other jurisdictions: It's not in every province. They have it at the federal level, New Brunswick and in the Legislature only in Newfoundland. They have it in Manitoba—

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's okay; I only have three minutes. It's not a memory test.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: I'm just scanning through, but it is common that there is either a senior person like a deputy minister who receives the disclosure, or there's a senior officer designated within the ministry. All of the other provinces do have an officer who can receive the complaint.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And do any of them extend it—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sorry, you're out of time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: —beyond the public service? You'll have to name them just—

Ms. Valerie Jepson: I don't know the answer cold on that. I have to check.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the government. You have four minutes left.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. Thank you very much. I wanted to raise another issue, Commissioner, that has come up, and this is going back quite a ways, because it's 2003 and it goes back to the early days of trying to set up Ornge.

At this point, Chris Mazza was lobbying, working on getting Ornge set up. Tony Clement was the Minister of Health. Chris Mazza had engaged Fasken's, and Tony Clement's wife, Lynne Golding, was lead counsel on the file at Fasken's to convince the ministry to set up Ornge, as it were. The goal, as I say, of this initial engagement was to get the policy approval to create Ornge. Ultimately, that work led to Fasken's, at the time of the auditor's report, making close to $10 million on this file over the years.

Given that I'm not sure whether it's members' integrity or whether it's lobbyist registration, but if Lynne Golding, while she was acting for Chris Mazza, was to raise this with her husband, Tony Clement, the Minister of Health, is that appropriate?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I can understand why you're asking this question, but I don't have all the facts and I'm very reluctant to provide an opinion when I don't have all the information.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And of course we have no knowledge of what private conversation she might have had. The second one we do have more knowledge of, because it's reflected in the billings, which is that Guy Giorno, who was registered as a lobbyist, as you mentioned, and Kevin McCarthy, who were also with the firm—it is recorded that they were meeting with the minister or the minister's staff. Now, given the relationship, is this appropriate given that the law firm was ultimately in the position to make considerable profit or at least considerable revenue from this file?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Again, I have to tell you that I don't have all the facts before me and I'm just not prepared to give an opinion. I think you all know that I'm not prepared to provide any opinions on a hypothetical basis. Even though there is some information before this committee, it was asked in the context of your jurisdiction and what you're trying to do, not in terms of what I would be giving an opinion about.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I appreciate that position, because you're behaving as you should as commissioner.

If we've got a little bit of time, over to Mr. Zimmer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. You have a minute, Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. I'm just curious: What's your position on various—there are lots of health organizations out there. I don't want to name them, but there's the heart, cancer, Alzheimer's and so on. Often, organizations like that have lobby days and the local representatives from the association also might come around to your constituency office and make a pitch. It's typically for more funding for the organization, whether it's cancer, heart, stroke or anything. How do you deal with—are those people lobbyists or not? They're doing it with the best of intentions. They tend to be community-oriented, but they're making an ask: "Please do this. Have your government do this."

Ms. Lynn Morrison: I think it's important to understand what the different types of lobbyists are. Obviously, those organizations are not-for-profit and the criteria before registering is that the accumulation of activity of all paid employees must meet that 20% threshold, the significant part of duties. We have developed a formula and it equates to about four days a month. That's a lot of lobbying for some of these organizations. If they're recording their time and they get close to that 20%, they should be looking at registering, but they're not required. Having said that, you will find many of those organizations on the registry.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the opposition. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Commissioner, I've asked to have a copy of Hansard for Wednesday, May 16, handed to you, which I think is being delivered right now. I'm not asking you to make a ruling on this; that's unfair. I would ask you, however, to take this back and, if you would, have a look. When you've had a chance to consider the context of this, I would appreciate you, to the degree that you feel comfortable, giving an opinion in terms of whether lobbying was taking place here.

The reason that I'm drawing your attention to this is because it is another set of—how can I put it?—individuals who were involved here. This particularly refers to Mr. Don Guy, who was a former principal secretary to the Premier. We were going through some of the history of who was lobbying whom at Ornge with Mr. Jacob Blum, who was a senior executive. Mr. Blum swore an affidavit and delivered to this committee that sworn affidavit, which had his notes of meetings that took place. In this particular discourse, he was referring to a meeting that took place in the presence—and he didn't recall whether it was an in-person meeting or by teleconference, but it was attended by Alfred Apps as well as Don Guy. The outcome of this was that there were some takeaways from that discussion that they were having that Don Guy would undertake to have some discussions with the Ministry of Finance regarding the consolidation issue that was under discussion with Ornge.

Mr. Guy, when he was here, insisted that he was not lobbying either. There are some technicalities here that I think he may be relying on as well. He insisted that he did not bill Ornge directly, that his billings went through Fasken's. One of the issues that comes out of this is, whether you're billing the client directly or whether you're billing through a third party but nevertheless providing services and benefit to the client, does that somehow circumvent the lobbyist registration or not? Maybe to that technical point, whether it's Mr. Guy or anyone else, I'd be interested in your opinion, if you're prepared to give it, as to whether how you bill, directly or indirectly, somehow allows you to circumvent registration.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: Just in case it helps, we have this, and then you provided a lot of other information that's not in here, but I think there's no issue with providing the answer to your question there. Would that be sufficient to just discharge this issue, maybe?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, and everything I've told you is actually in this document.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: Okay.

Mr. Frank Klees: I just didn't want to take the time to read it verbatim. I would ask you to take it back with you. But that particular question, if you wouldn't mind answering that, if you can.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Certainly. I'd be happy to take a look at it.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: While they're discussing—point of order, Chair: Should they not have Mr. Guy's testimony if they're going to give an opinion? Because Mr. Guy's testimony was quite contradictory to Mr. Blum's.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll just continue with the question, and I'm sure that the Integrity Commissioner will decide if she wishes to give an opinion or look for more information, if she needs more information.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: I think we have to review the request. As the commissioner was saying, the evidence that all the witnesses were providing was evidence to you in carrying out the work that you're doing. I don't think you're asking the commissioner to do a fresh inquiry, so you're asking her to provide an opinion on evidence, her impression of the evidence. I think that's something that we'd have to think hard about, because I don't think that's something that is going to be possible for her to do.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, I would think that it's no different than the opinion that was rendered with regard to Mr. Alfred Apps.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: That was on the basis of documentary records. There were emails. What you're asking the commissioner to do, I think, is to make a finding of fact, based on evidence that was gathered in the context of this committee.

Mr. Frank Klees: Which we would make available to you.

Ms. Valerie Jepson: If there were findings of fact, maybe that would be the better point. If you had made a finding of fact about these circumstances rather than—as you'll know, there's evidence and then someone is going to make a decision: "What were the facts?" That might be a point when the commissioner could—

Mr. Frank Klees: Sure, and that's fair. I think the findings of fact are that we were presented with testimony here. Mr. Blum presented a sworn affidavit with notes relating to discussions that took place. I think it would be appropriate, unless you suggest we should refer it to the OPP—

Mr. David Zimmer: Point of order, Chair: It's not a finding of fact. The committee hasn't written its report yet. We heard that testimony from various people in this case, Mr. Guy and others—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You don't have the floor, but I think you're making a valid point. Go ahead, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll leave it with you. This committee still has a great deal of work to do. What I will undertake to do is provide you with information that is now public—documentation. I would appreciate you at least considering providing us with an opinion.

Apart from that—and this has nothing to do with Mr. Guy, other than the fact that he said he billed indirectly—I would ask: Can you tell me now, if someone bills directly or indirectly, does that make a difference as to whether he's considered to be lobbying or not?

Ms. Lynn Morrison: No, it doesn't make a difference. As a matter of fact, you will see some registrations on the registry now where individual A is acting for a particular organization, but there's a further question of: Is there a third party involved in this? That often happens where a consulting firm will hire an independent consultant to deal with that client, so it's a third party situation. It doesn't matter.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. In that particular case, coming back to Mr. Apps, if, in fact, Mr. Apps had retained someone else to help him on a particular file, Mr. Apps would have been required to disclose that.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I suppose the third person should have registered as well, if, in fact, he was engaged in lobbying.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Generally, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you very much.

I think, in closing my remarks, the key here and the reason that we're having this discussion is exactly what you said previously, and it's about the issue of transparency. At every turn on this file, the reason that one problem led to many others is because there was a lack of disclosure and a lack of transparency, certainly within Ornge. It seemed the right hand didn't know what the left hand was doing. In the Ministry of Health, there were departments that didn't know what was going on in the next department. The whole issue of transparency—at the end of the day, I don't think we'd be asking questions here about Mr. Apps or Mr. Guy or anyone else if everyone had, in fact, at the very outset, disclosed that they were lobbying.

I enjoy when someone comes to me and says, "We have a proposal. Here's a policy proposal we want to bring forward, and here are the reasons." It's the only way we get informed about what the right thing is to do, and then we make our own decision in terms of whether that is a good public policy or not.

The issue here is transparency and ensuring that all of us are playing on a level playing field.

Again, I want to thank you for your recommendations in terms of changes that you're proposing to this lobby act. We're looking forward to working with the government to ensure that we get it done.

Ms. Lynn Morrison: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much, Commissioner and counsel, for coming before the committee today.

MINISTRY OF FINANCE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our next witness today is David Schell, manager, risk and assurance services, health audit service team, Ontario internal audit division, Ministry of Finance. Welcome, Mr. Schell.

Just to confirm that you've received the letter giving you information about a witness coming before the committee?

Mr. David Schell: Yes, I have.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well, and would you like to do an oath or affirmation?

Mr. David Schell: Affirmation.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Our clerk will do so.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Mr. Schell, do you solemnly affirm that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Mr. David Schell: Yes, I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

1430

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. If you'd like to make an opening statement, please feel free to do so.

Mr. David Schell: Good afternoon. My name is David Schell, manager, risk and assurance services, with the health audit service team, Ontario internal audit division, Ministry of Finance.

For the past seven years, I've managed internal auditing engagements on behalf of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care. Thank you to the Chair and members for the opportunity to be here to address the Standing Committee on Public Accounts with respect to the Auditor General's special report, Ornge Air Ambulance and Related Services.

With respect to Ornge, I managed the internal audit engagement, the Review of Air Ambulance and Related Services, contracted out to the accounting firm of Meyers Norris Penny in 2008.

At this time, I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. The official opposition will go first in this case. Mr. Klees?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes, thank you, Mr. Chair. Mr. Schell, thank you for being here. We had an opportunity to review the report from Meyers Norris Penny at committee. Did you have an opportunity to observe that or to read the transcripts from that?

Mr. David Schell: Yes, I did.

Mr. Frank Klees: You received a letter from Chris Mazza dated August 27, 2010, in which he referenced this report and gave his—if I can put it this way—sanitized assessment of the report. He said, in his second paragraph—and I'm assuming you've got it. Do you have a copy?

Mr. David Schell: Yes, I do.

Mr. Frank Klees: You've got a copy of the letter, okay. And we all do too, because we received this at committee.

He says, in the second paragraph: "The review concluded that overall Ornge is using provincial grant funding economically, efficiently and for the purposes intended in providing air ambulance and related services for the province. This finding is a reflection of our commitment and success as the operators of one of the largest and most sophisticated transport medicine programs in North America. Ornge is proud of our leadership and approach to the delivery of transport medicine." It's an interesting letter. I read this, and here is Chris Mazza pounding his chest about what a great job they're doing.

Now, we know the rest of the story, and we know that there were some 26 recommendations. There were some issues that were raised that were really quite serious in this report in terms of non-compliance. There was the issue—the flags were raised—about this very complex corporate structure that was being cobbled together. Mr. Schell, I'm assuming that you didn't fall for Chris Mazza's letter here.

Mr. David Schell: Well, his statement about "efficiently" and "economically" that was in the report related to one particular objective in the engagement. There were six other objectives. So perhaps he—I'm not sure of exactly the right words—focused on that one particular conclusion.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, we've been told that he is a consummate salesman, and I think that marketing came very naturally to him. He's obviously an eternal optimist as well. But that's not your role. Your role in your position is to look below the surface, which is no doubt why this report was originally commissioned. Can you tell us the context in which you retained the services of Meyers Norris Penny to conduct this audit?

Mr. David Schell: Absolutely. It was requested, the engagement, by the ministry, for us to outsource this engagement. I actually drafted the objectives of the engagement for consideration of the ministry. So it was a request. I have a bunch of dates here and timelines that I have. I think they're all accurate; there may be something slightly off, but to the best of my knowledge, they're accurate. I have a date here of May 1, 2008. The health audit service team was requested by the chief administrative officer, who would be Dawn Ogram, to acquire the services of a consulting firm via the internal audit services vendor of record to perform a review of air ambulance-related services. HAST's resources were otherwise engaged. We only have about 15 auditors for a close-to-$50-billion ministry with 50 classified agencies, approximately, and all the transfer payments we also go to.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm not interrupting you. If you don't mind, I'll insert from time to time just to get clarification.

The reason that you went outside is that your other investigative teams were otherwise occupied, and so this must have been considered a priority, a pretty important audit for you to be directed to go outside and retain these services.

Mr. David Schell: It's normal for us to go outside. We go outside quite frequently because we don't have the resources. This is not abnormal.

I think there was also, if I'm recalling correctly—it was quite a while ago—the direction from the ministry to go outside, even if we had the resources available. But to my knowledge, back then I don't believe we had the resources available, but I think there was some direction, actually, to go outside as well.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay, thank you. So you wouldn't mind continuing with your timeline, then?

Mr. David Schell: Yes. So a couple of things happened in between. We wanted to go in rather quickly, and Ornge's CEO, May 9, wanted the engagement deferred. Apparently, they had some staffing problems in the summer. Everybody wasn't available and whatnot.

May 20, 2008, we received information that Ornge intended to create additional corporate entities and we notified the legal services branch. June 4, there's an email from MOHLTC legal services, advice regarding potential creation of other Ornge entities and purchases of new aircraft.

July 11—this is all 2008—CEO and executive lead met with the OPCD to share the draft review plan and scope. We also went over to meet the provincial controller and got his opinion as to potential audit strategy, potential audit objectives, during the spring, around that period.

I crafted the objectives. There were some 10 objectives at the time. We had normal meetings with the ministry. We had meetings with the board chair and the CEO of Ornge. It was decided by the executive that there would be a separate internal audit engagement and a separate legal review. That wasn't in May 2009; that was in July 2008.

Mr. Frank Klees: July 2008.

Mr. David Schell: Right. About that time.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. David Schell: I have the draft of the actual finalized objectives, the audit objectives as well as the legal objectives, as of July 2008.

Mr. Frank Klees: Could you table that with the committee, please? I appreciate that.

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Clerk.

I understand that this particular audit was triggered by a discussion that was beginning to take place or was in place relating to the proposed consolidation of Ornge's financials with the government's. Were you privy to those discussions by way of context, by way of background?

Mr. David Schell: The provincial controller invited me and my director over for a meeting, but I believe that was after the decision was made that the consolidation would occur. But he did ask our opinion and we had some of the support that Ornge was putting forward to support their opinion as to why it shouldn't be consolidated. We discussed that with him. He wanted our opinion, even though I think it had happened already, but we had a conversation, and that's when we also had the conversation about potential objectives, potential strategy, what were the best things for the people of Ontario to include in that internal audit engagement.

Mr. Frank Klees: Were you privy to those discussions regarding consolidation leading up to the final decision about—

Mr. David Schell: No, I don't believe so. It was kind of after. I believe it was in the early spring and the decision had been made previously. But he did want to talk to us about it.

1440

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you recall the reasons given by Ornge as to why they should not be included in that consolidation?

Mr. David Schell: Yes. I reviewed the support that they had put forward in detail—some of it compelling, some of it not. It was a grey issue at the time. However, obviously, the provincial controller made a decision.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you just highlight for us some of the key reasons that Ornge did not want to be included in the consolidation?

Mr. David Schell: I don't have that detail here.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you provide that for us?

Mr. David Schell: We have a file about that whole topic, in my office, and I'm sure that would be there, so I could provide it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay, I would—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The auditor would like to comment.

Mr. Jim McCarter: It revolves around the issue of control. If they're considered controlled by the government, then they're basically included in the statements. I would agree that, basically, this was a grey one. But their argument would be along the lines of, "We're not controlled by the government; therefore, it should not be consolidated."

Mr. Frank Klees: All right. Thank you.

I would appreciate receiving a copy of that file, and I would want, Mr. Chair, to ensure that we have all of the documentation in that file. That would include correspondence between the ministry and any records relating to phone calls on this issue, so that we know who was involved in advocating on behalf of Ornge on that. If we could have that undertaking.

Mr. David Schell: Yes, I have some of that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Mr. Schell, I'd like to know from you: When you received this audit, what did you do with it?

Mr. David Schell: At what stage?

Mr. Frank Klees: From day one. It was delivered to you. You now have the product.

Mr. David Schell: Are you talking about the draft report or just—

Mr. Frank Klees: Let's start with the draft, because I understand there were stages. The first time that you received a report, do you have the date available?

Mr. David Schell: Yes, I do.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was that?

Mr. David Schell: Just one second. It was in January 2009. I'm just looking for the date.

Mr. Frank Klees: It would have been January 2010?

Mr. David Schell: No, 2009.

Mr. Frank Klees: In 2011?

M^{me} France G linas: Nine.

Mr. Frank Klees: Oh, nine. Sorry. Yes, of course.

Mr. David Schell: January 21, 2009: preliminary MNP draft report received by HAST.

Mr. Frank Klees: What did you do with that draft report?

Mr. David Schell: The draft report—I obviously gave it to the ministry after we had a look at it. The ministry had big problems with the factual accuracy of the report.

Mr. Frank Klees: With the factual accuracy?

Mr. David Schell: That's right. One of our responsibilities, obviously, is to make sure the final report is factually accurate.

One of the key components that they thought was factually inaccurate was, the initial report concluded that the emergency health services branch, basically who oversaw the program, was non-compliant with the transfer payment accountability directive, which they took great exception to.

Mr. Frank Klees: So the draft report stated that the emergency health services branch was not in compliance.

Mr. David Schell: I don't know whether it said the branch or the ministry. They were obviously the branch that was responsible for the oversight and compliance with—I could go back to that draft; I don't have it here with me.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Well, it's kind of important—

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —because part of the challenge that we have in this issue is that there's such a lack of transparency in terms of what the role of the ministry was, what the ministry knew and when the ministry knew it. Some of us—well, let me not speak for anyone else on this committee. I have concerns that the Ministry of Health failed far too often in its oversight responsibilities, as defined within the performance agreement. I'm convinced that we wouldn't be here today if, in fact, there had been stronger oversight on the part of the Ministry of Health.

This is very interesting for me that we had a draft report that implicated the emergency health services branch for a lack of compliance, and then the emergency health services branch had an opportunity to clean that report up.

Mr. David Schell: No. They didn't clean the report up, just to put that in proper context. That's not the process. It's quite frequent for audit reports to contain factual inaccuracies. That's quite common, and that's why we forward out draft reports, get their comments. They provided to MNP and ourselves quite a thick document—40, 50 pages; I forget what it was—to support their opinion that they were compliant.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. So after they provided their contrary opinion that they were compliant, what did the final report end up looking like?

Mr. David Schell: Actually, the report, as of March 30, 2009—there were quite a few versions of this report. I forget the exact number; it might be seven, eight, nine. At that point, it says that they were compliant.

Mr. Frank Klees: So it went from non-compliance to compliance?

Mr. David Schell: Within a little more than two months.

Mr. Frank Klees: Forgive me for my cynicism. I have to tell you, I already had some concerns about how this report was written because, as I said yesterday, if you just read the headlines, it actually is quite complimentary. When you start digging a little deeper, you have some serious concerns and there are a lot of red flags. Now we're hearing that there were eight versions of this report—

Mr. David Schell: Approximately.

Mr. Frank Klees: —and it went from the emergency health services department or branch being declared non-compliant on a number of issues to the final version, where, somehow miraculously, they were found to be compliant.

Mr. David Schell: It was non-compliant on the big issue of compliance with the directive.

Mr. Frank Klees: But you understand why one would question this?

Mr. David Schell: If I could—

Mr. Frank Klees: Please.

Mr. David Schell: The branch had said that MNP was there very briefly at the branch. They didn't perform an exit meeting, which would be normal. They didn't clear the factual accuracy when the field work exit meeting would have occurred. The branch, for instance, wasn't asked to provide that kind of support. Those are the kinds of things the branch was saying against MNP.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Schell, did you have—and I'm going to move to the final report now. That's what was tabled. That was made public. Did you have a role in analyzing this report?

Mr. David Schell: Absolutely.

Mr. Frank Klees: And did you write a report to anyone? How did you then report to the Ministry of Finance or the Ministry of Health? Did you make any observations, formally, in writing, concerning this report?

Mr. David Schell: We debriefed the executive of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care—I have the date—April 3, 2009.

Mr. Frank Klees: April 3, 2009?

Mr. David Schell: Yes. That would be the chief administrative officer, Dawn Ogram; the executive lead, Ruth Hawkins; Malcolm Bates—I believe Malcolm Bates was there, either in person or in teleconference. We went through that report in detail answering their questions.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'm assuming that you would have created a written summary highlighting certain areas of concern.

Mr. David Schell: I'm not sure about that, Mr. Klees. It may have been some rough notes on the report. There were no formal minutes taken, so I'm not sure what detail of that meeting we had.

Mr. Frank Klees: If you wouldn't mind, when you're looking at that other file, checking to see if you have some notes and include that in the documentation you'll provide us.

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: To your best recollection, then, in that meeting, what were your conclusions or what did you have to say to these folks at the Ministry of Health?

Mr. David Schell: My director, Ken Flynn, was doing most of the debriefing. I just thought I'd mention that. But I was involved, obviously, as well. We just went through the main concerns in the report, the key draft recommendations, answering their questions about some of those key—it was probably an hour meeting, and we went through quite a bit of detail.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was there any one of these 26 recommendations that stood out particularly, that you spent more time on than another?

Mr. David Schell: Nothing comes to mind off the top of my head, but we obviously took what we considered the most serious and spent time on those to make sure that they were debriefed properly.

Mr. Frank Klees: Which would have been the most serious that you would have discussed?

Mr. David Schell: I'm just going back to that report that we used for the debriefing. We went through some of the items, for example, the issues at Ornge when they were not in compliance with the PA; there are quite a few things there. I'm starting to recall—they were certainly interested in the foreign currency, the hedging, or the lack of hedging. My director was an expert in that area.

Mr. Frank Klees: That was related to the bond offering?

Mr. David Schell: Right.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. So there was concern expressed there?

Mr. David Schell: Yes, that was one of the big ones there.

Mr. Frank Klees: With regard to that, there was specific reference made to the capital payments that would begin in 2012, escalating to $7 million a year. Was there any discussion around that?

Mr. David Schell: My director, like I said, was an expert in that area. He went into quite a bit of detail regarding that. I can't say off the top of my head; it was more than three years ago. But I know that topic was discussed in detail.

Mr. Frank Klees: And what else?

Mr. David Schell: Just bear with me one second. The communication—frustration, confusion, conflict, I believe that was mentioned. That was never obviously a good sign.

Mr. Frank Klees: When you say "conflict," would that be conflict of interest?

Mr. David Schell: No, that was in relation to the communication between the ministry and Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: Between the ministry and Ornge.

Mr. David Schell: Right.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. David Schell: I'm just kind of scanning that draft report at the time. Nothing sticks out in my mind particularly.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you're reading from a document that you used for that debriefing. Is that it?

Mr. David Schell: That's correct.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you table that document with the committee as well?

Mr. David Schell: Sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. Do you know what happened to this report after your debriefing?

Mr. David Schell: As in, for instance—I'm not sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: What action would have—

Mr. David Schell: By the ministry?

Mr. Frank Klees: By the minister.

Mr. David Schell: I don't know.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever hear anything again about this report after your debriefing?

Mr. David Schell: About action taken at that time? Is that what you're—

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes. Was there any further discussion in your branch, in your ministry, with anybody? Did anyone contact you after the fact to clarify? Was there any further discussion?

Mr. David Schell: Well, nothing comes to my mind off the top of my head about further discussion. I mean, obviously, we were still trying to work through the report, and getting it out to Ornge happened months later. We were wanting the ministry to approve us to issue the report to Ornge, which happened a little later. So what they did with their report—I don't specifically remember what might have happened there with that draft report.

Mr. Frank Klees: So the report was with the ministry for how long before the ministry authorized it to be released to Ornge?

Mr. David Schell: I don't know exactly the date that we had their approval, but I know that the date that we sent it to Ornge was around September. I have that date here.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, you have about six minutes of your total time left.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Well, in any event—

Mr. David Schell: September 17, 2009.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Schell, as someone involved in internal audits, familiar with these types of reports and knowing what was contained in the report, what would your expectation have been that the Ministry of Health would do with this?

Mr. David Schell: Some entities would take action quickly, to address draft recommendations even, to get ahead of the game, shall we say, before they became final. Others would wait until the final report was received because, especially in a case where there were factual inaccuracies in a report, they might say, "Let's wait until the whole report is cleared for factual accuracy before we take"—because there was quite a bit of disagreement about the factual accuracy. It might be either of those scenarios.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is it fairly chronic that reports—this report cost the government about $300,000—

Mr. David Schell: Actually, it didn't. That was a mistake yesterday. Ms. Kiel—

Mr. Frank Klees: If you could clarify that for us, then.

Mr. David Schell: This is to my knowledge. I managed the contract. The contract was for $199,475. The total amount paid out was $198,495.96, consisting of $195,475 of professional fees and $3,020.96 of expenses. MNP had sent me a lot of invoices wanting extra dollars.

Mr. Frank Klees: And you didn't pay them?

Mr. David Schell: No. I wasn't, I suppose, in her good books.

Mr. Frank Klees: Because Ms. Kiel was very definite that there was an uptick of some $95,000 because of delays.

Mr. David Schell: Yes, I was surprised when she said that yesterday. She wasn't involved in any of the billing.

It was all done with other people at MNP who I dealt with, John Caggianiello and others. I don't think I ever discussed billing with her.

Mr. Frank Klees: If they're watching this, they may come after you for the other $95,000 when they realize that you didn't pay it.

Mr. David Schell: They're not going to get it.

Mr. Frank Klees: The concern that we have here is that there were so many, particularly in this report, red flags about things that were going on. Would you agree with that?

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And if you would have been at the Ministry of Health, what would you have done with this report?

Mr. David Schell: I'm an internal auditor. I don't want to go there. That's what the ministry's responsibilities are. My responsibilities are to prepare—

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, you did your part. You prepared the report. You pointed out that there were serious concerns. It was then up to the CAO and others in the emergency health services branch to do something about it. The first signal they had was on April 3rd, 2009, that there was a problem. Apparently, this didn't mean enough for them to bring it to the minister's attention, because it wasn't until December 2011 that the minister woke up to the fact that there might be a problem at Ornge. Talk about a communication problem: It wasn't just between Ornge and the Ministry of Health; it was within the Ministry of Health. I'm not sure what it's going to take, Mr. Schell, to convince the minister that she has a serious problem within her ministry. If I was the minister, I would be going to these folks who had this meeting with you on April 3rd, 2009, and say, "Why wasn't I told?" But we may never know the answer to that. I thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We shall move to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas?

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm pleased to meet you, Mr. Schell, and thank you for coming. The first question is very much along the same line as Mr. Klees's first question, but the point I don't understand is, how do those requests for the review come to be? I'm not that interested as to why we went outside or inside; I'm more interested as to, why?

Mr. David Schell: The normal audit process is we do audit planning annually. It usually starts around January and concludes—we prepare an audit plan for the ministry's consideration and it's usually tabled in our audit committee around April of every year. We'll go around and interview key directors and most of the executive. We get their thoughts and we also do our risk assessment about what areas—there's around 50 branches in the ministry. Based on risk criteria, we'll develop an audit plan for their consideration. We'll take their input and also engagements that they want for sure included in the audit plan. We'll have some thoughts and we'll get input from them, and they'll have some thoughts. We'll put together a draft plan and we'll present it at the audit committee for their consideration for approval. And then, in addition to that, throughout the year there's always ad hoc requests. So, something could come up in August aside from the plan and they may want a certain topic looked at, and we'll take it on.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Would you remember how this one came to be? Was it an ad hoc? Was it from your risk assessment criteria, or did it come from the branch that says, "We'd like you to look at this"?

Mr. David Schell: Yes, that's a good question. I think it was included on the original audit plan that year. I don't have that audit plan with me here today. I think it was. It was right at the start of that fiscal year when they would have requested it, and maybe also the audit committee might have been held in May that year. Therefore, if it was requested May 1, the date that I have—

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so it was not an ad hoc. Can you tell—

Mr. David Schell: I don't think it was an ad hoc.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So can you tell if it came from your risk criteria assessment or if it came from the branch requesting it?

Mr. David Schell: I can't say for sure, but I believe it was a request by the branch, rather than something we had put forward. That's my feeling on that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And when the branch requests an audit, do they have to tell you why they want such-and-such a thing audited?

Mr. David Schell: Well, usually, we always seek—the ADM approval has to happen. It's not at the branch level. We insist on the ADM sending us a formal letter saying, "We request this engagement to be performed," and then we'll action that letter.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So for Ornge, did you receive a letter from the ADM?

Mr. David Schell: If it was an ad hoc, we would have. If it was on the original plan, we wouldn't have, because that would have been approved in audit committee as the normal course of business.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so during the normal course of business, some idea or suspicion arises, and then, once you have your committee, they say, "I pick this one and this one, because something is going on."

Mr. David Schell: Yes. I mean, internal audit is there to help them to meet their business objectives.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How does an audit help one meet business objectives?

Mr. David Schell: Well, we'll draft objectives and scope for things that they would like looked at. We're all over the health care system. We're in long-term-care homes, hospitals, family health teams, right across—public health units; ministry, obviously; classified agencies; we're into eHealth Ontario right now. So—

M^{me} France Gélinas: So this little agency had raced close enough to the top to be included in your plan for that year?

Mr. David Schell: Well, yes. Again, if they want an ad hoc request, we're not usually one to say, "Well, that doesn't meet the test." They may want it looked at, and we wouldn't push back and say, "No way. We're not doing it."

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, no. But you don't remember it being an ad hoc. You remember—

Mr. David Schell: I don't remember it being an ad hoc. The timing of the request, May 1, was right around the time of the audit committee. If this was September 1, it definitely would be an ad hoc. But I'm not sure of the timing of that audit committee.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Yesterday we had an opportunity to hear from Mrs. Kiel, and she put quite a bit of emphasis on saying recommendation number one had to do with the corporate structure. Did you agree that this was their number one recommendation because it was not through the luck of the draw, but because it was one of the red flags?

Mr. David Schell: I agree it was a significant issue.

M^{me} France Gélinas: It was a significant issue. So this is an issue that was never—through the beginning until the end, it was an issue that was factually accurate and not one of the ones that was debated, or was it—

Mr. David Schell: I can't say for certain on that. I'd have to look through the documents.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. But it certainly is an issue that made it until the end, until the final report, because we have it in front of us and it's there.

Mr. David Schell: Again, there were seven, eight, nine versions of the report, so I'm not—you know, I have all those, obviously, so I could see if it was included in the first one or just in the ninth one, for example.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. But you agree that it was a significant issue. So when you—

Mr. David Schell: Well, there was also a legal review looking at the corporate structure that was happening concurrently. That—

M^{me} France Gélinas: There was a what review?

Mr. David Schell: The legal review looking into that. So the ministry had concern about the corporate structure, because the legal review, whose objectives were set in July 2008—and actually, we were tasked by the executive to be a conduit for information flowing between Ornge and MOHLTC legal services related to that legal review. The legal review went on, and actually, to my knowledge, it wasn't completed. We asked for a copy of the report; they never gave it to us. It wasn't completed until after this report was issued, if it was completed. I assume it was completed.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So in July 2008, as you're getting ready to do your review of Ornge, there's also a legal review that is going on.

Mr. David Schell: It started at the same time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That started at the same time. Yours was supposed to be completed in a couple of months. It ends up taking over two years before the final—it's 2010 by the time the final review is tabled. By 2010, the legal review has not been completed.

Mr. David Schell: That's correct.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In your—

Mr. David Schell: They also said, the lawyers, who were Mel Springman and Bill Georgas, that they wanted to see the final report before they would conclude their review.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. But since then, you haven't seen—

Mr. David Schell: They wouldn't give it to us. I asked.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. So when we hear that recommendation number 1 from the review is to be looked at seriously, they were looking at it through their legal department. Were there issues that were specific to your area versus legal?

Mr. David Schell: The legal objectives, as you'll see, are for lawyers to perform. That piece was carved off for lawyers, and we had the piece related to accountants.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. You saw it as a significant issue. Do you still believe that it was a significant issue in what ended up being what we have now?

Mr. David Schell: I mean, a significant issue to get some assurance about and comfort that they would be—I would imagine the ministry will have assurance and comfort about that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The recommendations are to get the government to get reassurance and comfort about the corporate structure. They get this from you; they have a legal review doing the same thing, I guess, to try to get them this reassurance and comfort. But yet, the Auditor General goes in. The corporate structure has actually ballooned since you did your review, and the comfort is still missing.

Mr. David Schell: I don't know what comfort they had. I hadn't seen the final report on the legal review, so I don't know what comfort they had.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, but for you, it was something that needed reassurance.

My colleague wants to ask a question.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I just want to summarize some of the findings and some of the things that we've all talked about. Tell me if I have it right.

First and foremost, you liaison directly with the ministry. As an auditor, you provide the results of audits directly to the ministry. Is that correct?

Mr. David Schell: Yes. We issue the final report, usually to the ADM of the responsible division—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Perfect.

Mr. David Schell: —and c.c. the audit committee.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So to put it bluntly, what you find—there's no way that the ministry doesn't know about it. If you know something, the ministry knows it as well.

Mr. David Schell: We issue all our final reports to the audit committee.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So there's no way they could say, "Well, we didn't know about that."

Mr. David Schell: Not the final reports, no.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. And in the final reports—the number one MNP finding was there were some issues and concerns around the corporate structure and that the ministry should take some steps to become more comfortable with that. That was very clear. Do you agree with that?

Mr. David Schell: Well, I am agreeing that it was a significant recommendation.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. And parallel to this audit, there was a review going on from the legal team. They were looking into the corporate structure. The legal services—

Mr. David Schell: You probably have the objectives there from what I—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Exactly. So that was going on as well. Is that correct?

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you agree that comparing the findings of this audit—if you compare it to the findings of the Auditor General, there are a lot of similarities. A lot of the concerns that were raised initially in that audit were some of the very same concerns that were raised by the Auditor General. Do you agree with that?

Mr. David Schell: In some cases, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: There were a number of years to act. Though there were delays, this final report was issued in 2010. The Auditor General's report was at least two years later.

Mr. David Schell: A little over one year later—oh, yes, actually, a year and a half.

M^{me} France Gélinas: A year and a half later.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just under two years, let's say.

1510

M^{me} France Gélinas: I truly believe that what you do adds value. You put in black and white serious issues, but we only get value if they're acted upon. Would you say, in your experience, that usually, after you do the work of doing your review or doing an audit, that generates action?

Mr. David Schell: Absolutely. We follow up one year later, usually with all audit reports, as to the status of the implementation of recommendations.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And in this case, what was the status of the implementation?

Mr. David Schell: My director decided for this particular one—because the Auditor General was in there and about to release his report, we had thought to defer that follow-up for this particular one. This is a rare exception that that would happen.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Now, having seen the Auditor General's report, it looks like there was very little to no implementation of the recommendations. Would you agree with that statement?

Mr. David Schell: I'm not going to go there right off the bat as to what was done by the ministry. That's their responsibility. I don't have the implementation status of those recommendations to be able to agree with that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Would you be able to infer from the fact that the corporate structure, which was already in question, ballooned into an even more complex corporate structure that resulted in significant issues, one of them being public funding being transferred into the private side—you could infer from that very clearly that the concerns raised by the MNP audit and the recommendations in 2010 were not addressed if, by a year and a half later, the Auditor General found even more issues.

Mr. David Schell: I know that the corporate structure had ballooned to 21 or 22 entities because I was in Ornge in January and February of this year.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Twenty-one or 22. That's even worse than what we have in this picture—

Mr. David Schell: Approximately.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. Lucky you.

This starts in 2008—sorry, by April 2009, we have a draft report. Would it be a common occurrence that ministries start to work on draft reports? If a review is done, they flag something to be looked at—okay, some of it may be questionable but not the entire report—

Mr. David Schell: It's quite common to take action early on when a draft report is received.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So really, for some of it, it would be from 2009 to 2012 that there was an opportunity to take action, or am I dreaming this up?

Mr. David Schell: Like I said, perhaps the ministry had concerns about the factual accuracy of the report and wanted to wait till this was issued, which was November 2010.

M^{me} France Gélinas: September.

Mr. David Schell: It was November. They issued us the report in September. We had it forwarded to MOHLTC legal services, as all the reports go to them before we release them. I believe that took a few weeks—three or four weeks—before we got their take on it. And we issued—I believe it was November 4.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: If we frame it in terms of red flags, in terms of the ministry being aware of concerns in Ornge—if we frame it in that sense. The ministry was aware, we can infer—not even infer. The fact that a draft report was given to the ministry and it had concerns raised in that draft report, that would be a red flag for the ministry. They would be able to say, “Okay, these are some concerns that an independent auditor, the MNP—auditors have gone in and found these concerns.” As soon as that draft report hits the ministry, they're aware of these concerns, right off the bat.

Mr. David Schell: They're aware of them.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: They're aware of them.

Mr. David Schell: Yes, of the draft recommendations, the draft observations.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And like you said, many times when you see a draft report or draft recommendations, work begins right away to implement or to address those concerns.

Mr. David Schell: Yes, and sometimes they wait.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sometimes they wait.

Mr. David Schell: There are some times they take immediate action and sometimes they wait. It's a combination.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So in 2008, we start to flag the corporate structure, an audit is done, legal opinion is sought, and we have recommendation number one that says that you have to clarify this to get—“comfort” is the word that you use. I suppose the legal opinion gets wrapped up at some point and their recommendation goes as well. This corporate structure continues to grow. We have a Minister of Health who says the corporate structure was not the problem and that she doesn’t see a problem with the corporate structure. What does she know that the rest of us don’t know?

Mr. David Schell: I’m not going to comment on that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Is there anything in there that I’m missing that would give us comfort that the corporate structure did not need looking at?

Mr. David Schell: In where?

M^{me} France Gélinas: In the report that you commissioned, the Review of Air Ambulance and Related Services.

Mr. David Schell: Right. The report had recommendations. If I can just look at it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Recommendation number one, page 73.

Mr. David Schell: Yes, so, “must discuss and document” the ministry’s “concerns regarding Ornge’s corporate structure and enter into agreed-upon revisions to their contractual relationship, if any, that are required to give the” ministry “more comfort regarding Ornge’s corporate structure....” It’s very clear. I’m not sure what your question was.

M^{me} France Gélinas: My question is that this is recommendation number one. It is written there in black and white, and I understand it, I think, the same way you do. This is an issue that needs to be looked at.

Mr. David Schell: That was the recommendation.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That was the recommendation. We have, believe me, dug pretty hard to find any action. You had an opportunity to see if action was done, but it was decided that, given that the Auditor General was in there, you were not going to do a one-year review.

Mr. David Schell: It’s just asking the ministry what the status of the implementation is. We actually don’t do a review, but we forward them the recommendations and say, “What’s the implementation status? What is the time frame when they’ll be addressed, or have they been addressed?”

M^{me} France Gélinas: And you do this a year later? You don’t do this before?

Mr. David Schell: We do it a year later—that’s our process—and then every six months thereafter.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, and have you done that since?

Mr. David Schell: No, we haven’t.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And the reason is?

Mr. David Schell: Those decisions are made at the director level. That’s not up to me.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Because somebody within your branch said, “We didn’t need to do the review.”

Mr. David Schell: No, no; I didn’t say that. I’m actually not sure why it hasn’t been done subsequently. The Auditor General’s report came out in March and so perhaps a decision on that will be made soon.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I’m just going to ask you about another area that was flagged, and that was communication. Was that something that was raised in the draft report as well, the fact that communication between Ornge and the ministry, some of the language used was—there was “confusion,” “frustration”—some strong language was used?

Mr. David Schell: Yes. In the March 30, 2009, report it states, “This has caused some frustration, confusion and conflict for both Ornge and” the ministry. “Some activity did not result in meaningful, collaborative dialogue between Ornge and” the ministry. Of course, the heading there is “Communication between Ornge and MOHLTC.” “Both parties should commit to a process of continuous improvement in an effort to develop an effective communication plan....”

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So that recommendation in the draft form—the ministry was aware of that in 2009?

Mr. David Schell: What I just read?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What you just read, right. That was in 2009?

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So, if today the ministry says, “We were having difficulty getting information. It was hard for us to find out what was going on,” and they say that that’s an issue that they were just aware of in 2012 or 2011, we have some clear evidence that this issue of communication was raised as early as 2009 and that it was flagged as a concern.

Mr. David Schell: What I just read you was the March 30, 2009, draft report.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. Would you agree with me that the issue of a lack of communication or at least a problem with communication was raised as early as 2009 and was not something that was a surprise in 2011 or 2012? There’s at least a notice of that.

Mr. David Schell: It was raised in this report, March 30, 2009.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I want to come back to the delays. You followed the testimony from Ms. Kiel.

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yesterday, she went through great detail with me as to what happened when, from the September 4 request for documents; September 9, fieldwork etc. On April 7, she talks about the draft report to the Ministries of Health and Finance; on September 9, Ornge etc. She led me to believe that she expected the review to be wrapped up in a few months.

Mr. David Schell: We were hoping.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In your mind, can you justify all of the delays as being legitimate, or were some of the delay tactics from Ornge to not get scrutinized?

Mr. David Schell: I’m not sure if “stonewalling” is too hard a word from Ornge, but there was an inordinate amount of delay on their part.

M^{me} France Gélinas: An inordinate amount of delay from the part of Ornge to get you answers.

Mr. David Schell: And they of course appointed a legal counsel to lead the clearing of the factual accuracy, which is highly abnormal in my 31 years of public sector—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That, in and of itself, is that a flag to you or a concern? This is the first time it has ever happened that an entity or institution has got a legal team there to clear up these—

Mr. David Schell: I don't know if it's the first time it has ever happened with me, but I can't remember the last time it has happened. It's almost always usually an accountant that would clear a financial-oriented report.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Right. And the fact that that happened, was that something that raised any concerns?

Mr. David Schell: Absolutely. I wanted the report cleared for factual accuracy and issued, so yes, it caused me concern.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Was that concern passed along to anyone, the fact that they were lawyering up?

Mr. David Schell: Of course, the ministry knew and who they had appointed. My director was involved. Yes, it was common knowledge that that's the person that Mazza wanted, Catherine Rosebrugh, I believe the name was. Of course, she fell ill then and they had someone else afterwards, causing further delay. It was challenging and frustrating. I was trying to push this out the door. There was constant—you heard MNP yesterday saying internal audit was trying to get weekly meetings, doing prompt QA on the file and giving them review notes, trying to push getting meetings. I had a long list of meetings that I had; I went back through my calendar.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Is there anything the ministry could have done? If a transfer agency like Ornge is delaying and not providing information right away, can the ministry say, "Listen, we're providing you with the funding. You're essentially solely funded through the ministry, through taxpayer dollars. You must comply immediately and get this done." Is there something the ministry could have done to step in to get them to speed up their process and not delay?

Mr. David Schell: That's an interesting question. Obviously it was in the ministry—obviously, yes, at the highest level, you could have had that branch prepare—clear the report for factual accuracy. I'm not exactly sure what they could have done with Ornge. They're an independent entity separate from government. Obviously, they're a transfer payment recipient. But this is challenging the whole process of trying to clear the report for factual accuracy.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In your experience, you've never seen a government agency tell a transfer payment agency, "You will receive whatever transfer you were receiving last year. We're not going to change your budget until you comply with what we want you to do"?

Mr. David Schell: Well, I'm an internal auditor, so that's what the ministry does.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But they didn't do any of this with Ornge. They just—

Mr. David Schell: I'm not sure what they did on that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Whatever they did was not effective, because it dragged on for two years.

Mr. David Schell: It did drag on until November 2010.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We'll hold our last minutes for the next round.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, very well. We'll move to the government. Mr. McNeely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Thank you, Mr. Schell, for being in here. This committee has heard quite a bit about the MNP report. In fact, we heard Margriet Kiel, an internal audit practice leader at Meyers Norris Penny, yesterday. Can you go over your role again for this committee for the MNP review of Ornge, starting with drafting the—I think we have seven separate areas that the consultant was supposed to cover—

Mr. David Schell: Right.

Mr. Phil McNeely: —but you mentioned 10.

Mr. David Schell: Some of that was incorporated in the legal review. It was found better to put that in the legal review, some of those additional ones. It's normal to have a bunch of objectives that I would do up and the ministry to pick the most salient ones, that they thought were the most significant. That's a normal thing to occur.

Mr. Phil McNeely: You were satisfied with the seven that were presented?

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Okay. Prior to the review of Ornge, had you worked at MNP?

Mr. David Schell: No. I have been in the public sector my whole life.

Mr. Phil McNeely: My understanding is that the Ontario internal audit division, under the Ministry of Finance, usually conducts audits internally. Is that correct? You normally do them yourselves?

Mr. David Schell: Pardon me?

Mr. Phil McNeely: You normally do the internal audits yourselves?

Mr. David Schell: We normally do them ourselves, yes.

Mr. Phil McNeely: And you mentioned in earlier evidence that this was a period when there was a lot of work to do—

Mr. David Schell: We're always extremely busy.

Mr. Phil McNeely: And that, you feel, is the only reason that you went out to a private consultant?

Mr. David Schell: I remember we were busy at the time. I'm not sure it was the only reason, but I know we were busy. We're always busy, so that's normal.

Mr. Phil McNeely: So you drafted the terms of engagement and MNP signed an agreement with whom? With the Ministry of Finance?

Mr. David Schell: Dawn Ogram signed the contract—

Mr. Phil McNeely: Is that the Ministry of Finance?

Mr. David Schell: No, that's the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care, the assistant deputy minister, who had that level of delegation of authority. It was the director of the health audit service team, Ken Flynn, and it was the partner—I believe it was John Caggianiello who signed the SLA from Meyers Norris Penny.

Mr. Phil McNeely: On page 2 of the MNP report, it summarizes the terms of engagement as follows: “to review specific areas relating to organizational effectiveness in connection with the delivery of air ambulance and related services provided by Ornge to the province of Ontario....”

It also states, at pages 11 and 12 of the report, that MNP looked specifically at seven objectives, so we’ll go through those:

- an assessment of financial management processes;
- an assessment of the appropriateness of Ornge’s procurement processes;
- an assessment of the integrity of the financial and service data reports provided by Ornge to the ministry;
- an assessment of whether Ornge was in compliance with the performance agreement;
- an assessment of whether Ornge was using provincial funds economically and efficiently;
- an assessment of the enterprise risk management framework; and
- an assessment of the governance and accountability framework and mechanisms in place within the ministry and Ornge.

Is that an accurate overview of what the engagement for MNP was?

Mr. David Schell: Absolutely.

Mr. Phil McNeely: You say the Ministry of Health signed the contract with MNP. Who signed off on the payments?

Mr. David Schell: What happened there was, with the role that we play with internal audit, we would get the invoices from MNP and we would give the ministry assurance that the services were received from an audit technical viewpoint. So for every invoice, to my knowledge, that was received for this particular agreement, I put “services received, David Schell,” as the lead manager, and I gave that invoice to Malcolm Bates for payment.

Mr. Phil McNeely: To Malcolm Bates.

Mr. David Schell: Right.

Mr. Phil McNeely: There was some discussion of what the total dollars were. So $195,000, plus—Ms. Kiel told us yesterday it was another $95,000, I believe. It was almost up to $300,000.

Mr. David Schell: I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Pardon me?

Mr. David Schell: I have no knowledge of those—

Mr. Phil McNeely: You had no knowledge of that?

Mr. David Schell: No. I assume, in fact, I know, that the partner is—after the last payment was made and it was only $198,000, they talked to me and said, “Okay, we’ll absorb this one. We had incurred this many more dollars on this contract”—a very high amount because of all the delays by Ornge. They told me afterwards, “This is something we’ll swallow this time.” I held a fast line on the contract total amount and, much to their chagrin, they accepted it. I said, “Perhaps on the next one, you’ll have a better rate of return and you won’t have this kind of situation happen again.”

Mr. Phil McNeely: Would Ornge have paid them directly, the other $95,000?

Mr. David Schell: No, definitely not.

Mr. Phil McNeely: I’m surprised that Ms. Kiel had that information for us yesterday.

Mr. David Schell: She wasn’t involved at all in the billing. It was always between me and John Caggianiello; there’s another partner, Geoff Rodrigues. I don’t think I ever talked to her about fees, and I received all the invoices. Maybe she was given that figure in her preparation and someone gave it to her, but to my knowledge, it’s totally erroneous.

1530

Mr. Phil McNeely: We’ll go to the MNP report now. There were 26, I think, recommendations. There was some discussion yesterday about what the report really said. Did you review the final report?

Mr. David Schell: Yes. I managed the engagement.

Mr. Phil McNeely: It was quite lengthy and detailed, but the overall conclusion of the final report—I will quote from page 2 of the final report: “Overall, our review indicated that Ornge is using provincial grant funding economically, efficiently and for the purposes intended in providing air ambulance and related services for the province.”

Do you agree that the overall conclusion of the MNP final report was quite positive?

Mr. David Schell: I agree that, in relation to objective 5, to what that statement relates, it was accurate, based on MNP’s review procedures relating to the source and use of funds.

Mr. Phil McNeely: The final report found a number of other positive conclusions, which I will briefly review for you.

With respect to procurement processes, at page 35, the final report concluded the procurement process was appropriate, documented and is in accordance with the performance agreement—the PA—best practices, and, in the spirit of government directives, ensuring openness, transparency, fairness, competitiveness and value for money.

Regarding compliance with the performance agreement, the final report noted that Ornge was not in compliance with some administrative sections. However, none of these issues affects the delivery of services. “We have concluded that Ornge is using grant funding efficiently, effectively and in accordance with the provisions of the performance agreement.”

Lastly, in respect of risk management, the final report found that, “Overall, our review indicated that the risk management approach and capability within Ornge is effective.” I take it that you would agree with me that those are also positive conclusions drawn by MNP?

Mr. David Schell: I would agree that they are the conclusions made.

Mr. Phil McNeely: But they’re positive conclusions. I think they’re all positive conclusions.

Mr. David Schell: They’re the conclusions.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry, I didn't hear that.

Mr. David Schell: They're the conclusions that they made. I'm not going to—how positive they were—

Mr. Phil McNeely: If I read the report, I would think these were very positive paragraphs.

Based on the findings of the final report, did you feel confident that Ornge was an effective organization that was using provincial funds appropriately? Would you not agree?

Mr. David Schell: I agree with the factual accuracy of the report. The emergency health services branch, Ornge, the health audit services team and the ministry executive all agreed that the report was factually accurate when it was released, or else we would not have released it. So I agree with everything that's in the report.

Mr. Phil McNeely: I assume you are aware that the Auditor General of Ontario recently completed a review and released a report regarding Ontario's air ambulance and its related services. Are you familiar with the report?

Mr. David Schell: Yes, I am.

Mr. Phil McNeely: The Auditor General's report details a number of issues at Ornge ranging from secrecy to financial irregularities. MNP's report was overall quite a positive report.

Would you agree that the MNP report did not find the same issues as the Auditor General did, and would not have caused any grave concerns for the minister? More specifically, the Minister of Health would have felt confident following the receipt of the MNP report. To quote the MNP report, Ornge was "using provincial grant funding economically, efficiently and for the purposes intended in providing air ambulance and related services for the province." Would you agree that the MNP report differed a lot from the Auditor General's?

Mr. David Schell: No. There was a different scope, different objectives. It was a different time period we looked at. Ours was before the Auditor General. Again, you're focusing on the one objective, number 5, in relation to that statement. There were a number of very serious recommendations in this report.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Based on the findings of the final report, did you feel confident that Ornge was an effective organization that was using provincial funds appropriately? I think that's the question.

Mr. David Schell: If that's the exact wording that's in the report, I agree with that, in relation to the review procedures that were performed, the source and use of funds in relation to what MNP did in relation to that objective.

Mr. Phil McNeely: I'd like to turn it over to Ms. Sandals to continue the time we have.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. Once you get a report like this and it has been completed, what's your expectation about what happens to it next?

Mr. David Schell: A draft report, a final report or—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We understand that the process, in the case of this particular report, has been very painful, so it took a long time to get from the first draft of findings to the final report. We understand, from the testimony yesterday, that that was a long, painful process—

Mr. David Schell: Yes, it was.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —fraught with lawyers instead of accountants. But when you finally get a report, just generically, because you talked about the audit committee in response to, I think, the NDP question, you talked about the—and that's an internal audit committee that you're referring to.

Mr. David Schell: That's correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you've got this internal audit committee amongst various ministries?

Mr. David Schell: Each ministry has their own audit committee that's chaired by, usually, the deputy. All the ADMs usually sit on that, as well as the director of legal services, communications—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you've got this internal committee of ADMs and auditors that sits around and says, "Okay, I think we should do an internal audit on X and Y because we've got some issues that we're concerned about or we haven't done it for a long time, so this one is due," whatever the reasoning. It gets sent over to finance and you arrange to have the audit done.

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You've now got the audit done; what's the expectation about where it goes next?

Mr. David Schell: The final report gets issued, as I said, to the assistant deputy minister.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So the report goes back to the ADM—

Mr. David Schell: Right.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —and from finance's point of view, you're essentially done with it at that point.

Mr. David Schell: It's their responsibility to take action: whether they want to or not, whether they want to disregard recommendations, implement recommendations, whatever corrective action—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Do you ever have any knowledge of what happens to the report after internal audit is done with it?

Mr. David Schell: As I stated, we follow up our normal processes, which happens with almost all engagements, a follow-up one year later.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Except, in the case of this particular one, you were bumping into the auditor, so you said—

Mr. David Schell: That didn't happen in this particular one—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —that's not terribly productive.

Mr. David Schell: —but that almost always happens. We're updated as to their reporting to us without us doing any more audit work, as to where they with their recommendations. Obviously the senior executive wants assurance that actions have been taken by the division, for example, related to audit recommendations, if they're appropriate, that are necessary for them to take action.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I think the frustration that I have a little bit, maybe as a long-standing member of public accounts, is that there doesn't seem to be much of a connect between internal audit and the external audit, the legislative audit—let's put it that way—by the Auditor General and the actual political minister's office. It's like internal offices of audit are sort of a bureaucratic process, and the part that becomes public is the Auditor General's work, because that's issued publicly, and there's sort of a lack of connection.

Mr. David Schell: I worked at the Auditor General of another province for six years and I'm aware of the interaction between an internal audit and the Auditor General. I think there's usually a healthier relationship. We share our audit plans. If we've done work—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, sorry. This is from a politician's point of view, okay? I'm beginning to get the feeling that from an auditor's point of view, the auditors talk amongst themselves. We know what happens to the auditor's work because the auditor's work ends up in the public realm and very much a political realm, whereas the work that goes on at internal audit doesn't necessarily even seem to rise up to the minister's office, necessarily.

Mr. David Schell: Our reports can be FOIed by the public, so they can go in the public domain.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, I get that, but it's not a visible process where—I'm not even suggesting it should—

Mr. David Schell: No, I'm just saying that we give it to the deputy, and that's where we stop as far as—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Or the ADM—

Mr. David Schell: Every report goes to the deputy.
1540

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Because we're sort of looking at—you've had the benefit of reading the whole report. My sense is that if anything from internal audit ever gets to the minister's office at all, it's probably the two-page executive summary. This seems to be a classic example of the executive summary, the first few pages that somebody will pull off and put in a briefing note, being kind of disconnected from the impression you would get if you read the detail of the whole report.

Mr. David Schell: I'm not going to necessarily agree with that characterization, but I understand what you're saying.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, the executive summary of a report, if that's going to be what filters on up, which, realistically, if you consider something the size of the Ministry of Health—this isn't a Ministry of Health comment; this is just sort of a generic observation—what filters up to the political side of the organization is probably, at best, the executive summary.

Mr. David Schell: In many cases, the executive summary is the only part of the report that a deputy would read, even below that ministerial level.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, exactly. There's this group of accountants and people, maybe, in the branch, who are going to read through the details, and there's lots of valuable information in those details, but it's not at all clear that that valuable information gets reported up the chain. And you haven't been sitting around here for 70 days listening to us talk, but one of the themes that does seem to be coming out is not only a disconnect between ministry and agency in terms of sharing information, but sometimes the information doesn't get shared vertically within the ministry. Anyway, I don't know if you've got any comment on that.

Mr. David Schell: I would agree that at the highest levels, they wouldn't necessarily read an entire report, and that's the reason for an executive summary.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well—

Mr. Jim McCarter: Just to step in for 30 seconds, I think the question was, was there any difference between our report and the Meyers report? Probably one big difference is, our number one conclusion was clearly that the oversight was not adequate, which was certainly different from the Meyers report. When I went through the Meyers report, I have to say, probably five of the seven objectives, I think, concluded fairly positively, and I think for two of the seven they did have a number of concerns. I think they did raise a number of red flags, but our overall message was probably, as Mr. McNeely said, a bit different.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry, I missed that comment.

Mr. Jim McCarter: Our overall message was basically that our biggest concern was that oversight was not adequate. I think that was a bit different than the message we got yesterday.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just so I understand: different from the message yesterday in what sense?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I think the message was, yesterday, on page 2, they said the overall conclusion was that things are very economic and efficient, and because that was on page 2, would that convey that. We had a different overall message.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: His page 2 is different than MNP's page 2, for those of us who never get past page 2.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do we have any time left?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, you have time.

Mr. David Zimmer: How much?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have nine minutes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. I just want to follow up on the thing Mr. McNeely touched on. What's the size of the internal audit division at the Ministry of Finance?

Mr. David Schell: It's about 200 people, give or take.

Mr. David Zimmer: And how many audits a year do those 200 people do?

Mr. David Schell: Good question.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just ballpark it.

Mr. David Schell: This is right off the top of my head for ourselves. I'm not sure what the other teams are doing. We're quite independent, even though we're a division. We report to our individual audit committees. I'm thinking we might do around 20 per year. It depends on the complexity, obviously, whether there are very few objectives and limited scope and easy—

Mr. David Zimmer: Sure. So it's 200 in the entire Ministry of Finance, at the—

Mr. David Schell: The Ontario internal audit division—approximately.

Mr. David Zimmer: And you talked about how you do about 20 audits a year.

Mr. David Schell: Approximately.

Mr. David Zimmer: Would you do what I'll refer to as big, complicated audits and more simple, straightforward audits?

Mr. David Schell: Cancer Care Ontario, the LHINs; we're on eHealth Ontario. We're into hospitals, as I said before; family health teams, public health units. It goes on and on.

Mr. David Zimmer: You do 20 audits on your own. How many audits do you outsource?

Mr. David Schell: That varies from year to year. Sometimes we've had four or five happening at a time, and sometimes we have very few; right now we have very few.

Mr. David Zimmer: But it would be in the order of half a dozen or less or something like that?

Mr. David Schell: It varies from year to year.

Mr. David Zimmer: What factors go into deciding whether to outsource an audit?

Mr. David Schell: For example, we went into a public health unit approximately five or six years ago. Actually, with that one we engaged outside expertise and they became part of our team. But in some cases, we don't have the expertise, so that may be one reason, or we don't have—there are all kinds of different levels of expertise.

Mr. David Zimmer: Would there be internal documents at the audit division surrounding or related to the decision to outsource the Ornge audit to MNP?

Mr. David Schell: There may be.

Mr. David Zimmer: How would a decision like that be made? Would somebody just sort of say, "Let's outsource this one," or would a group of you sit together and discuss whether to outsource it or not?

Mr. David Schell: If we're busy, we may say to the ministry, "The only way we can do this one is if you pay for it and it gets outsourced." Or the ministry may say, "We want this one outsourced," for whatever reason they might have.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. Could you check your files and see if there's some paper surrounding the decision to outsource it?

Mr. David Schell: Absolutely.

Mr. David Zimmer: Whose idea it was; what the discussions were.

Mr. David Schell: Absolutely.

Mr. David Zimmer: When you outsource it, you do an RFP?

Mr. David Schell: RFS, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: I'm sorry; RFS, yes. Were you privy to the discussions to outsource the Ornge audit?

Mr. David Schell: I was basically told that this was going to be outsourced at my level. I'm a manager. This was to be outsourced, and I'd actioned it.

Mr. David Zimmer: Who told you that?

Mr. David Schell: Either the ministry requested it or my director told me that it was going to be outsourced, with his conversations that I may not be privy to.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. But typically who would make that decision to outsource it?

Mr. David Schell: Like I said, the ministry requested, "We want this one outsourced."

Mr. David Zimmer: And when you say, "the ministry," who at the ministry would make that kind of a decision?

Mr. David Schell: The executive, obviously, would have to approve.

Mr. David Zimmer: Anyway, if you could search your files or look around and see if there's something on that to shed some light on why the thing got outsourced.

Just, again, to reiterate some of the points that my colleague Mr. McNeely read, and indeed that the auditor touched on: I think the auditor said that five of the seven audit areas were okay—five of the seven—and in two of the seven audit areas, there were some issues. I don't want to understate or overstate.

Mr. Jim McCarter: Yes. I think five of them were generally positive, with what I'd call some minor exceptions. There were two of them that would be what I'd call a mixed bag. And then there were some other what I'd call observations, which would be hard to categorize, but I would almost put them in the red flags. On page 61, I think the terminology used about the communication, the more general comment—I don't know if you could put that in one of the seven, but Meyers Norris felt it was important enough to add in there. But I would say that five of the seven, to my mind, looked fairly positive.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. Based on what the Auditor General has just told us about five of the seven and two of the seven and how he has characterized the five and characterized the two: As an experienced auditor yourself, when you got back that report, the MNP audit, would you agree with me, keeping in mind what the Auditor General said, that there was nothing in that report that jumped off the page and said, "My God, I've got to red-flag this and take it into the deputy minister or take it to the minister"?

Mr. David Schell: I totally agree, of course, with what the Auditor General has just said, but I think there were a number of observations that raised serious concerns.

Mr. David Zimmer: And which ones were they?

Mr. David Schell: These were varying degrees of seriousness.

Mr. David Zimmer: Varying degrees of seriousness. All right.

Mr. David Schell: Obviously, there was the communication issue, misunderstanding with respect to—I think we've been through this one—the process to achieve shared goals and objectives. This caused some frustration, confusion and conflict.

To a lesser degree, Ornge's non-compliance to the administrative clauses of the PA; "not all accounting records have been established for each entity." An accountant never likes to see that. "As Ornge continues to operate through new entities, management should ensure that all transactions from inception are recorded directly in each entity's books...."

Contracts—

M^{me} France Gélinas: You're going too fast there. Could you reread what you just read, the very last sentence? But slower, as if you were talking to somebody who speaks French.

Mr. David Schell: Sorry. "As Ornge continues to operate through new entities, management should ensure that all transactions from inception are recorded directly in each entity's books...."

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

Mr. David Schell: There's a lot more, but—

Mr. David Zimmer: But suffice it to say that those ones that raised an issue with you or raised issues of varying degrees were contained in the deeper body of the report, rather than up front in what sometimes are characterized as the front-page executive summary?

Mr. David Schell: Some were included in the executive summary and some were not.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. When you got the report, then, on these issues that concerned you, did you run your concerns up the flagpole, up the management chain, and say, "Look, I've got this report. I'm concerned about these issues?"

Mr. David Schell: We debriefed the executive thoroughly on that date, April 3, 2009.

Mr. David Zimmer: And what action did the executive take? Do you know?

Mr. David Schell: That's up to—I don't know.

Mr. David Zimmer: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Mr. Klees, you have a minute and a half left, if you want to use it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Schell, I have two quick questions for you. The terms of reference—there's a reference made to the fact that the province will be conducting a legal review of Ornge and its related entities concurrent with this engagement, which was the Meyers engagement. What happened to that legal review? Have you seen that?

Mr. David Schell: It wasn't completed by the time Meyers Norris Penny—we issued that final report. I had asked the legal counsel for a copy of that report once it was finished. They said, "No, you can't have it." So we never received it.

Mr. Frank Klees: How would this committee be able to get access to that legal review?

Mr. David Schell: I don't have a definite answer on that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Could we ask the clerk to do some research on this?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you know anything about this?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I actually went back and asked Susan. I don't think we were aware of it. We know Mel Springman, the lawyer. Mr. Springman was waiting for this Meyers Norris report to finish his review, or had he already finished his review?

Mr. David Schell: No. My understanding is that he was conducting his review during different parts of when the Meyers Norris Penny engagement was under way. At some point, he said, "I'm not going to do any more, I'm not going to conclude, until I receive this final report."

Mr. Jim McCarter: But to answer your question, no, I don't think we've seen it.

Mr. Frank Klees: If we could, Mr. Clerk, let's get that tabled with the committee.

I have one last comment, Mr. Schell. I did my own audit, and I know that I lost about five minutes of time with you because you were looking for documentation and you weren't quite sure about certain things. That's very disappointing to me. The reason it's disappointing is, as someone who has significant auditing responsibilities within the government of Ontario, you've known that you were coming here since July 9. My expectations would have been that you came here prepared to answer our questions, and I think we could have done a better job.

Mr. David Schell: I tried my best.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the NDP for the last five minutes. Mr. Singh?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes, thank you very much. I just need to summarize a couple of other points that I didn't get to before, Mr. Schell. Just to get your opinion or just your response, a yes or no if possible—if not, that's okay—should the minister have been concerned after receiving this report? The Meyers Norris Penny report: Should the ministry have had concerns after reading this report?

Mr. David Schell: There were serious recommendations in the report, and it was delivered to the ministry.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So, should they have had concerns? The recommendations mean they should have done something; there's a problem. Should they have had concerns?

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Should it have raised flags? Should this report have raised flags?

Mr. David Schell: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Should the ministry have immediately or expediently executed the recommendations that had been provided?

Mr. David Schell: That's their decision.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That's their decision, but should they have? If these are serious recommendations, should they have executed these recommendations?

Mr. David Schell: Any serious recommendation, obviously, it's up to them whether, you know—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So, to push that aside, it's up to them, but in your opinion, if you have a recommendation, should the recommendation be executed?

Mr. David Schell: That's up to them. I'm just going to leave it at that. That's up to them whether they want to do it.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay, that's fine. Then, just a final thing: Do you agree with me that there is no way that the minister or the ministry could have read this report and have felt that there was absolutely nothing wrong at Ornge?

Mr. David Schell: I think there were a number of red flags and serious issues raised where action was certainly potentially warranted.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you.

That's good for me.

M^{me} France G  linas: Thank you. You still have a few minutes and then you're off. It's kind of a surprise for me to hear that the legal review of Ornge and related entities was going on at the same time as the review of air ambulance and related services that you commissioned, especially when you look at, review the charitable activities—the donations of Ornge include an $8.7-million donation made by Ornge to Ornge Foundation. Why wouldn't that have been reviewed by the bookkeeping side, the auditor side, rather than by the legal side? Isn't this like an accounting transaction?

Mr. David Schell: That's the decision that was made to carve it off in that manner. So, we had our objectives that the ministry wanted us to focus on, and those objectives, the legal team was to look at.

M^{me} France G  linas: If it hadn't been carved off to legal, would it be a reasonable expectation that you would have looked at those monetary transactions?

Mr. David Schell: To some extent, potentially.

M^{me} France G  linas: To some extent, potentially? Okay, all right. The last question that I had was really that we've seen—well, you went back in there, so you've seen what the structure had evolved to. From what you had read of the report, did you expect the corporate structure to continue to evolve or did you expect it to sort of go the other way?

Mr. David Schell: I had neither expectation. I didn't know what was going to transpire.

M^{me} France G  linas: You had no expectation? Okay, so we raise it as a number-one recommendation to look at, and when you see that it continues, is it reasonable then to expect that they've received the recommendations; they must feel comfortable with what's there because they've allowed it to expand to 21?

Mr. David Schell: I'm just not sure of your question.

M^{me} France G  linas: The question is, you have a number-one recommendation that has to do with having comfort with the corporate structure that is evolving. The corporate structure continues to evolve from what it was when you did your report. You said, "Here's the corporate structure. I think you should look at it until you're comfortable with it." Then, we see that the corporate structure continues to evolve. So, I'm looking at this and think that they must have felt pretty comfortable with the research that they did because this corporate structure continues to evolve.

Mr. David Schell: I don't know how much comfort they received from whatever. All I know is, we had this report. It had that corporate structure. As far as projecting what might have happened, whether it would have stayed the same, reduced or increased—

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay. So, if they had followed your recommendation, the recommendation, and got the level of comfort, then, on one side, they agree with the recommendation, they get the comfort and they say, "Continue to evolve; we're happy with what's going on. We feel comfortable with what's going on."

Mr. David Schell: Well, that's up to them to decide. We make the recommendation, and they do what they do.

M^{me} France G  linas: Sounds good. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And thank you very much, Mr. Schell, for coming before the committee this afternoon. We appreciate that.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead, Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: I just think it's appropriate to say that, unlike Mr. Klees, who had trouble with your performance today, I've done a lot of commercial litigation and I've examined and cross-examined a lot of auditors and accountants—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, that's—you can just thank him. You don't have to make a political comment, because I know we'll be getting rebuttals if that's the case.

Mr. David Zimmer: —and I think you were one of the best-prepared and thoughtful witnesses.

Mr. Frank Klees: If I might?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Quickly, 30 seconds.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you very much. I'm not sure what the significance of this is, but we've all observed that Mr. Zimmer has been reading, throughout the course of these hearings, Death of a Salesman, and I'm just wondering—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, that's good. On this high note—

Mr. David Zimmer: Actually, in that regard—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, on this high note, we're going to end the proceedings this afternoon. I thank all the committee members for their co-operation. This committee is adjourned.

The committee adjourned at 1601.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTSCOMITÉ PERMANENT DES
COMPTES PUBLICS

Wednesday 29 August 2012

Mercredi 29 août 2012

The committee met at 0901 in room 151.

SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'll call the committee to order and to start out with, we have a subcommittee report. Mrs. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Your subcommittee met on Thursday, August 23, 2012, to consider the method of proceeding on the 2012 Special Report of the Office of the Auditor General on Ornge Air Ambulance and Related Services, and recommends the following:

(1) That should the House be in session, the committee meet on Wednesday, August 29, 2012, and Wednesday, September 5, 2012, to continue its review of the Special Report on Ornge Air Ambulance and Related Services.

(2) That the committee invite two witnesses to appear before the committee on both Wednesday, August 29, 2012, and Wednesday, September 5, 2012.

(3) That each witness be scheduled for one hour and fifteen minutes.

(4) That the committee clerk contact the following witnesses for scheduling: Jay Lebo, Lisa Kirbie, the Honourable Dalton McGuinty, Poul-Erik Binderup, Pat Auger and Giuseppe Orsi.

(5) That the committee meet in camera to discuss report writing.

(6) That the committee clerk, in consultation with the Chair, be authorized prior to the adoption of the report of the subcommittee to commence making any preliminary arrangements necessary to facilitate the committee's proceedings.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Any debate? All in favour? Carried.

Then we shall now go into closed session to discuss the report writing and other items.

The committee continued in closed session at 0903 and resumed at 1225.

SPECIAL REPORT, AUDITOR GENERAL:
ORNGE AIR AMBULANCE
AND RELATED SERVICES

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'll call the meeting to order, then. We have some motions before us. France.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes. So Will was nice enough to help me rephrase the original motion into three motions.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Do you want to move your microphone down?

M^{me} France Gélinas: I could. Will is still nice and he has still done the splitting of the motion into three, and it goes as follows:

I move that, pursuant to standing order 110(b), that Ornge air ambulance produce all correspondence and documents relating to the suspension of Ornge rotor pilot Bruce Wade, and that these documents shall be produced by Tuesday, September 4, 2012.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Any discussion? Yes, Liz?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Would it be friendly, or if not, I'll move it—"produce all correspondence and documents, including"—this is the addition—"Bruce Wade's entire employment file, as well as complaints, incident reports and minutes from meetings relating to the suspension." That's just the catalogue of related documents. I think you've already said "all correspondence and documents," but that would make it clear that we're looking for the whole file.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I have no problem with this.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Could she say it again?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Could you say it again, please, Ms. Sandals?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I'm not sure where you want to put it in because we were amending the motion sight unseen. So I'm happy with wherever you make it make sense.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): So it would now read, "I move that, pursuant to standing order 110(b), that Ornge air ambulance produce all correspondence and documents, including Bruce Wade's entire employment file, as well as all complaints, incident reports and minutes from meetings relating to the suspension of Ornge rotor pilot Bruce Wade, and that these documents shall be produced by Tuesday, September 4, 2012." Agreed? All in favour? We're voting on the amendment and for the motion as amended. Carried.

Okay, we have a second motion.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I move that, pursuant to standing order 110(b), that Ornge rotor pilot Bruce Wade produce all correspondence and documents relating to his suspension at Ornge air ambulance, and that these documents shall be produced by Tuesday, September 4, 2012.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then again, if we could just, for further clarity, add in “all correspondence, including email.” So just add in “including emails.”

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Including emails, okay. So there’s agreement to the amendment?

M^{me} France G  linas: I do.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. All in favour of the motion, as amended? Carried.

The third motion, Ms. G  linas.

M^{me} France G  linas: The lucky third one. I move that, pursuant to standing order 110(b), that Ornge air ambulance produce their aircraft out-of-service reports and that these documents shall be produced by Tuesday, September 4, 2012.

I would be willing to give it a time frame. So let’s say from January 2012 till now.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. And actually, that’s what I was going to suggest, that we put in a time frame. So, for further clarity, that would be from January 2012 to August 2012.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Is there agreement on the amendment? Agreed.

And now for the motion, as amended, all in agreement? Carried.

MR. JAY LEBO

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our first witness of the afternoon is Mr. Jay Lebo. If you could come forward, Mr. Lebo.

Just to confirm that you received the letter for a witness coming before the committee?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, I did.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Great. Our clerk shall do either an oath or affirmation.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Affirmation.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): An affirmation. Okay. Mr. Lebo, do you solemnly affirm that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, I do.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. If you want to take some time for an opening statement, please—

Mr. Jay Lebo: I have no opening remarks.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. Very well. Then we shall move to the opposition for questioning to begin with, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Mr. Lebo, welcome.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Thank you.

Mr. Frank Klees: I would like to start off by asking you why you took the initiative to write this committee and volunteer to come forward. With some witnesses we’ve had difficulty getting them here, including the Premier himself. But, could I ask why you took the initiative to write to us?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. I wasn’t eager to be here, but I’ve been following this committee’s investigation into what happened at Ornge. I’ve heard questions asked in this committee that weren’t answered, and I felt that I had some of the answers, and so I felt an obligation to make myself known to the committee.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, and I appreciate that.

Could I ask you, then, to perhaps give us an idea of what some of those questions are, and if we could, perhaps—as someone who was on the inside at Ornge, you have a sensitivity. Clearly, you knew what was going on there; you know the issues that this committee is interested in. What would the most important issue be that, as you were observing these proceedings, your antennae went up and you said, “Wait a minute. This is wrong. This is an important issue. I know what really happened.” Could you share that with us?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. I do want to make it clear that there are a lot of things of which I don’t have any first-hand knowledge. There are a lot of things that have come out through this committee and through the media that are news to me. So I don’t want to let anyone think that I had some inside information—but I wasn’t all knowing.

The reason that I reached out to the committee was really for a couple of questions in particular. Earlier on in this procedure, it seemed ambiguous as to whether or not money that had been intended for Ornge’s operation had been used for personal gain. I think that’s become decreasingly ambiguous, but it’s not at all ambiguous to me because I was paid from Ornge—always from Ornge, never from Ornge Peel or any other organization, and a great deal of my time was spent working on for-profit ventures that I later found out through the Toronto Star were benefiting primarily private shareholders. At the time, I believed that those for-profit entities were going to flow 100% of their profits to the province. When I discovered through the media that in fact that was not the case, that’s when it became clear to me that at the very least, if nothing else, at least a portion of my salary was used to pursue avenues for private benefit.

Mr. Frank Klees: We’ve heard testimony here that any dollar amount that may have been paid to Ornge employees through Ornge and they were doing work for for-profits would be charged back. Can you share with us what insight you have as to whether or not that in fact took place?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I worked on a couple of consulting projects for third party clients on behalf of the company, and when I was doing work that was being paid for by third parties, I logged my time so that the company could recoup it. But in my day-to-day activities I was not keeping track of which hours were spent on, let’s call it, provincial issues versus international expansion. I wasn’t asked to keep a log for that.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay, and of course everyone at Ornge in the executive suite at least knew full well what your time was being focused on and at no time were you ever asked to log that time so that it could be charged back; is that right?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Exactly. That's right, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Could you just tell us—you indicated that you did work on behalf of a number of these for-profit entities. Can you give us some specifics on that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Certainly. I conducted—I'll back up a minute and say that I'm not a health care professional and so my involvement in all of these projects, the projects that I'm about to tell you about, were of a project management and client relations nature. I was never the subject matter expert, but I worked on a project evaluating Bermuda air ambulance on behalf of an Ontario insurance company. I can't remember the name of that company, but a Canadian insurance company asked us to evaluate Bermuda air ambulance, which was one of their partners, and they asked us for our opinion on what kind of outfit Bermuda air ambulance was, and I project-managed that.

I worked on a consulting agreement to the province of Saskatchewan and that was an evaluation of their air ambulance operation, along with recommendations for the launch of a rotor-wing program in Saskatchewan. I was the project manager and lead author on that project. Finally, there was a consulting project to the government of Nunavut which was similar to the Saskatchewan project but on a smaller scale. I was the project manager and author for that agreement.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who would have given you those specific assignments?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Frank Klees: Dr. Mazza himself?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to just follow up on the Saskatchewan report. Obviously, there are some media reports around that report. You yourself say that you were the lead author, and yet your name never appeared on that report. Could you tell us, first of all, why? There was a biography in that report and it named, I think, four or five individuals in-house at Ornge. If you read the report, it talks about the team biographies, and one would conclude—and probably it was intended that one would conclude—that the report was actually written by these well-experienced individuals. Help me to understand how it is that you were the lead author, your name didn't appear on the report at all and, from what I understand, the people whose names did appear had very little to do with the report itself.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I would disagree with the last part of your question there. The report is entirely the product of the opinions, analysis and recommendations of the people described in the back of the report. It was my job to take what they had to say and to compile it into a report that was fit for public consumption. Writing is one of my talents. It's probably not among the talents of the people listed at the back of the report, but they were the subject matter experts. So they made their observations, they made the recommendations and analysis, and I crafted the report. But everything in the report really comes from their minds, not from mine.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you recall what the value of that report was? What was the consulting fee that Saskatchewan paid to Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't remember exactly what it was. It was, I believe, in the neighbourhood of $100,000 to $220,000.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. And that would have been which of the companies?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Ornge Peel, I assume.

Mr. Frank Klees: While you were writing that report, who were you billing your time to?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was being paid only by Ornge and I was logging my time so that my hours could then be billed to the client.

Mr. Frank Klees: So for this particular report it was charged back, as far as you know.

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's my understanding, yes, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to move on to another report, and that is the marketing agreement with AgustaWestland. As the senior aide to the CEO, can you tell me, were you aware of the discussions that were taking place between Chris Mazza and AgustaWestland?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was aware that there were discussions, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you confirm for us some of the testimony that we have had here, namely that the amount that was related to that marketing agreement essentially was an overpayment of the contract for the helicopters that was signed between AgustaWestland and Ornge? Are you aware of that detail?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Not really, no. While I was there, I heard some talk about the weight upgrades. That was discussed within earshot of me. And I always knew that it was Dr. Mazza's intention to make Agusta a consulting client, but I knew of no other details. The details of the marketing agreement I think came after I left the organization.

Mr. Frank Klees: As a senior aide, you would be very close to discussions that Chris Mazza was having. This was a very important deal. Did you ever become privy to or overhear conversations relating to this? Was there ever any reason for you to have concern that something might not be quite right about this deal that was coming down?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was your response when—and I'm assuming that you've been following these hearings—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —particularly the last testimony we had from Mr. Beltzner as the chair of the board—when he advised this committee that he was presented with a letter that gave him documentary proof of the fact that Ornge was overpaying to the tune of some $6.7 million for those weight upgrades. You're aware of that testimony that was given?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: How did you react to that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: When I heard that testimony?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes. Did it surprise you?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to get your sense of who in that executive suite would have been aware of the details of that deal.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I can only speculate: Dr. Mazza and Maria Renzella.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'd like to ask you to give some thought to your experience as a base manager, a very important role in an air ambulance organization. When you were appointed as the base manager—I think it was for the Toronto base, is that right?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's right, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: What experience did you have in helicopters, in EMS, in managing an emergency helicopter base?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I had no management experience in that area. In terms of my knowledge of air ambulance in general, it would be only what I had learned at Ornge in the year and a few months prior to me taking on that role.

Mr. Frank Klees: And how did you feel about being placed into that responsible position?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Well, I volunteered for it; I should make that clear. It seemed to me an unusual choice, but a good choice given the circumstances at the time. I think it's important to realize that a regional operations manager at Ornge is not part of the decision loop that actually helps the patients. A regional operations manager is not at all involved in dispatching helicopters or in any real-time patient care sort of way; it's really a support role and a conduit to improve communication between headquarters and the front line. So being a paramedic or having a strong health care background is not a job requirement for that position.

At the time that I was given that position, I had been told that the position had been open for months, that there were no qualified applicants and that the region was in crisis. At this time, I had been at Ornge for about a year and I was looking forward to a long career at Ornge. I felt that it would be beneficial to me to get some operational experience on the front line.

Also at that time, the overarching strategic objective for Ornge was operational excellence, and that's something I know quite a lot about from my business background. The major challenge in Toronto was low morale, poor employee engagement and poor trust between the front line and headquarters. That's really a leadership function rather than a health care type of function, so I felt that given that nobody else would apply for this position and given that the major objectives were about operational improvement and human capital management, I was a suitable choice, even though my qualifications were unusual for that role.

Mr. Frank Klees: How long were you the operations manager there?

Mr. Jay Lebo: How long was I the operations manager?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I officially became the operations manager in March 2009. I was finishing up the Saskatchewan report at that time, so I wasn't able to devote 100% of my time to that role until about April 2009, and then I was terminated from the organization in January 2010.

Mr. Frank Klees: During the period of time that you were the operations manager, was there ever a visit from the Ministry of Health in terms of an inspection, an on-site visit?

Mr. Jay Lebo: There was. I believe it was called a performance review, where the government basically audited the operation—not the type of audit that the Auditor General does, but an audit of the health care provision side of the organization.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you ever get a call or were you ever confronted or alerted by paramedics or pilots concerning perhaps issues such as understaffing? Can you tell us about them?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. I heard complaints about all kinds of things. If you want me to focus on understaffing—

Mr. Frank Klees: Let's talk about the understaffing issue because we've heard a lot about that, and obviously that leads to incident reports that we've been dealing with here. So let's focus on this understaffing issue, paramedics not available or pilots not available, so that Ornge could not respond to calls.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Okay. In my time, there were never any issues of pilot availability. CHL was completely responsible for the aviation side of the rotoring operation, and I never experienced at first hand any issues of pilots being unavailable. It was a common occurrence for there to be only one paramedic on duty at a time or for a paramedic who had called in sick to be backfilled with, let's say, a primary care paramedic, which I think you understand. If you've got a primary care paramedic partnered with a critical care paramedic, then as a team they don't operate at a critical care level. So even though one paramedic knows what to do, they're not permitted as a team to do all of that if one of them is a primary care paramedic. So there were lots of complaints that came to be about, "Why do I have to work alone?" or "Why can I not work to the full breadth of my abilities because I've been partnered with someone whose qualifications are below my own?"

Mr. Frank Klees: All right. Of course we know that, by regulation, they're not allowed to work alone?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And yet you're telling us that quite often that would be the case, which translates into the understaffing, which obviously translates into the incident reports that we've had reviewed here where a helicopter goes to a scene and the paramedic actually has to decline because they're not qualified to deal with that particular critical case.

What did you as an operations manager then do, knowing that these circumstances were prevailing, knowing the implications to patient care? How did you respond to that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Well, first, I took the issues to my superiors and made them aware of these complaints—

Mr. Frank Klees: And your superiors at that time were?

Mr. Jay Lebo: At that time, for about the first half of my term in that role, my direct superior was Steve Farquhar, the vice-president of operations. Later on, there was a new director of operations inserted between us. When I started, there was no director of operations.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who was that director of operations?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sandra Burnside.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. And how did they respond to your concerns?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I haven't quite finished answering your previous question.

Mr. Frank Klees: Oh, sorry; go ahead.

Mr. Jay Lebo: So I brought these issues to my superiors and I also, as regional operations manager, made what efforts I could to improve staffing. I didn't have the authority to hire people, but I did what I could to reduce absenteeism and days off work due to workplace injury and that sort of thing.

I'm sorry; could you repeat your next question, please?

Mr. Frank Klees: When you brought these concerns to your superiors, how did they respond?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And you have five minutes, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

Mr. Jay Lebo: They acknowledged them. There wasn't any indication that anything would be done about it. Senior management had determined that every base gets X number of paramedics, and that really wasn't open to negotiation, for me to say, "But my base needs more."

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. So, you made it very clear to your superiors that you were understaffed on the paramedic side. At the same time that you were understaffed at your base for paramedics, Ornge was engaged in these international outreaches and was establishing these various beachheads, whether it's Brazil, Bermuda or wherever else, and while they were starving your base and probably others in the province of Ontario, a decision was made to divert funds to these international schemes, if I can put it that way.

Mr. Jay Lebo: It seems that way. I want to make it clear that in the time that I was there, there were no beachheads, so to speak; that came after my time. It's my understanding that there was an employee in Brazil, but that was after my time. In the time that I was there, everything was being done from headquarters in Toronto.

At the time, it was my understanding that these diversions were an investment in a new model that would generate revenue from outside the province to the benefit of Ornge's stakeholders. So yes, I saw some money going towards these efforts, but I believed that there would ultimately be an enormous return on those investments for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Frank Klees: So we had testimony here that the expertise that was being developed within Ornge, the not-for-profit, was being used to develop strategies and competencies that would ultimately be ceded into these for-profit companies and the shareholders of those for-profit companies would then benefit from that equity that's created in those companies. The amount that would be streamed back to the taxpayers of Ontario was something like 3%. Did you ever question that formula?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I only learned that formula from the Toronto Star. In my time at Ornge, I had been told—everybody had been told—that 100% of the profits would flow to the province; there was never any talk of shareholders.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you weren't aware that Mr. Mazza and others in that executive suite were actually the shareholders of these for-profit companies, is that correct?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Absolutely not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Thank you, sir.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much. We'll move on to Ms. Gélinas of the NDP.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I think I will continue on this before I go on with other questions that I have. So the plan, if it had worked and the way it was explained to you, was really, we would leverage this great thing that we had in Ontario with air ambulance and show the rest of the world how great we're doing. They would buy our knowledge, buy our technology and buy our competencies. We would make money. So who shared that vision and how come you knew about it?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was common knowledge that—you know, you could have asked anybody at Ornge, "What is the CEO's vision?" and that's what they would have articulated to you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So this was shared broadly while you were there in 2009 and before—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Absolutely. Absolutely. When paramedics came to me with questions about why we were diverting our attention, the answer I was instructed to give was: These are investments from which the people of Ontario will realize a return. The vision was that Ornge would one day be able to go to the Ministry of Health and say, "We don't need your money any more. We're self-sufficient. We'll continue meeting our performance agreement obligations, but you can cut our budget to zero." That seemed like a terrific vision. I was proud to be part of that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And it was presented to you and the rest of the people at Ornge in a way where you believed in it and worked in it and really thought that that was achievable?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: And when you were terminated, had you changed your mind about the vision?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. I still think that the vision, as it was articulated to me at the time, is a good one.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay; that it could have worked? Why do you figure it didn't?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It appears as though somewhere along the way the senior executives decided to keep the money.

M^{me} France G  linas: From the time that you spent at Ornge, you've already shared with us that everybody knew about the vision. So everybody knew that there were people divesting some of their time, their energy, their effort in Saskatchewan, Bermuda, Brazil etc. Would the people at the ministry have been aware of the vision?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was my understanding that they were aware of the vision, but I had no first-hand knowledge of any communication between the ministry and the organization.

M^{me} France G  linas: When you were executive to Chris Mazza, you never saw anything where Dr. Mazza tried to communicate with the ministry or that the ministry tried to communicate with Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was aware that meetings took place. I would observe executives talking to each other about some upcoming meeting or following up on some question, but I wasn't privy to details.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay, but you knew that meetings were taking place between the executive at Ornge and the people at the ministry?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: Were any of those meetings ever at Ornge sites?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't think so, no.

M^{me} France G  linas: They were mainly at the ministry?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. In fact, I think that Dr. Mazza didn't want anyone from the ministry to see the office.

M^{me} France G  linas: Why is that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was expensive.

M^{me} France G  linas: Oh. And it looked expensive and it was?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: And why do you figure he didn't want the ministry to see that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That might have raised questions that he would prefer not to answer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry. I'm having trouble hearing—

Mr. Jay Lebo: It would seem to me that that would have raised questions that Dr. Mazza would have preferred not to answer.

M^{me} France G  linas: As to being too lavish and being on the taxpayers' dime?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. At some stage, he also said that paramedics were no longer welcome at head office—at least, not without an escort.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What about the office was so lavish or would have raised those concerns, do you think? In detail, I guess.

Mr. Jay Lebo: By the standards of private organizations, it wasn't lavish. I mean, there were no marble fountains or anything like that. But it was a nice office, with—I don't know what the dollar value was, but I know that a lot of money had been spent on renovations, and it showed.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You've indicated that you knew that there were meetings, that they took place not at the office. How were you aware of those meetings?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I observed the daily meeting of the executive management team, and when there were meetings coming up, that was mentioned at the table. I was there when those meetings were discussed, although I want to say that as far as I can recall, the details or the content of those meetings was never discussed in great detail at the—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: In front of you.

Mr. Jay Lebo: In front of me, yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

M^{me} France G  linas: So the vision that we are going to develop—all of those for-profits, we are going to go outside of Ontario and Canada—was broadly shared with everybody. From front-line staff on, everybody knew. Do you figure there would have been any way of keeping this a secret from the ministry?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I couldn't say. As far as I know, there was no intention to keep it a secret. It wasn't a secret. There were plenty of secrets at Ornge. This was not one of them. I don't know how to answer that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What were some of the secrets at Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: You're testing my memory now.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I've put you on the spot.

Mr. Jay Lebo: You're putting me on the spot. I guess, you know, the nature of Dr. Mazza's relationship with Ms. Long. The details about this marketing agreement, I expect, would have happened behind closed doors. What's come out in the media about 3% of the profits flowing to the province, as opposed to 100%—I don't know if any of that was ever shared. I've been out of the organization for more than two years, so for all I know, some of these secrets ceased to be secret after I left. But the executive team was certainly secretive.

M^{me} France G  linas: The Minister of Health said that she tried to get meetings with Dr. Mazza but couldn't get through to the man. To your knowledge, was Dr. Mazza or the executive at Ornge trying to avoid the ministry?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Not to my knowledge, but I know that they were very careful about what they disclosed to the ministry.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry. I didn't hear that again.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't know that they intended to avoid the ministry, but I do know that they were very selective in what they disclosed to the ministry.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So would you think it out of the ordinary that if the ministry calls, they don't make themselves available, that they refused to meet with her?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That seems strange to me. Dr. Mazza presents well. He's very persuasive and I never saw him shy away from an opportunity to win someone over.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So your best bet is that if the minister calls, he puts on the best show he can put on?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's my best bet, but I'm speculating.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's okay. We were not there either. You were closer than us.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: In 2008 to 2009, your role was executive aide—

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's right.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: —directly to Mr. Mazza?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: To Dr. Mazza. Is that correct?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, it is.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: During that time, do you recall Dr. Mazza ever asking you to try to schedule meetings with the minister or attempting to set up meetings with the minister?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. I wasn't responsible for Dr. Mazza's scheduling. He had someone else for that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Who was involved in his scheduling or who was responsible for that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: His personal assistant.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: At that time, who was it?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Lina Paolucci.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So what were your responsibilities as an executive aide? What does that mean, anyway?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's a good question. I say that because I was never really happy with the title. I never felt that the title described what I did, but it was the best we could come up with. My role was essentially business analysis. Dr. Mazza recently got an MBA himself and, as far as I know, he was the only person in the organization with an MBA. He had this vision to launch these for-profit activities, and he wanted someone with a business education to help him strategize and plan that and also to act as a sort of ad hoc internal consultant, helping whom-ever needed help in the organization to infuse some business rigour into what they were doing.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Except for the three contracts you've talked to us about, the ones for Bermuda, Saskatchewan and Nunavut, did you do any other work toward the international side of the business?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, a lot of research and analysis and strategizing about potential opportunities. So, you know, all the work that precedes launching something, that's—when I began, Dr. Mazza knew that he wanted to generate revenue in a number of different ways, and he had lots of ideas about how that might be done, but none of these ideas were concrete. So part of my role was to put some meat on the bones and help him identify the best opportunities.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Did you identify any? Were there any good leads out there?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Well, it wasn't my job to look for leads. It was my job to figure out how Ornge's strengths could best be commercialized. Yes, it seemed to me that there were lots of opportunities to commercialize Ornge's intellectual property.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And this is what you were hired to do. Did you ever have a chance to do this? Did you ever—

Mr. Jay Lebo: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, nothing was ever executed while I was there.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You mentioned that some of the paramedics came to you and asked why this shift, why the priority shift. What was that about? Why were they asking that question?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Why were they asking that question?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Right. I mean, there was a vision. The vision was that the for-profits would create revenue that would eventually flow back into the organizations with a view to having 100% funding—you know, self-sufficient, not needing the ministry for funding. And you mentioned something to the effect that paramedics would, and I don't know if I'm quoting exactly, approach you, saying, "Why are our priorities changing?"

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What would be the reason why they were asking you that? There must have been something that went on in the organization that prompted them to ask this question.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. I hope I'm going to answer your question correctly. You'll let me know if I don't. The rationale for this new vision was—I had been told; everyone had been told—was that demand for Ornge's operation was steadily increasing and that the ministry had indicated that the organization could not expect commensurate increases in its budget year over year. So there was a gap between growing demand and growing budget, and the only choices of the organization were to either let that gap be and let some people do without the service, or fill that gap with revenue generated elsewhere. That's what I was told. That's what everyone was told. The Auditor General's report doesn't seem consistent with that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I take it that at some point, because of this for-profit to address this potential gap that was perceived or that the management was warning people about, there was a priority shift in terms of what paramedics were doing in terms of their actual employment. Were they doing less primary care work and then they were starting to do more for-profit work? Is that—

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. No, not at all. The day-to-day duties of paramedics never changed. All of what we're talking about—you would have seen changes at head office but not on the front line. The front line may have felt that their superiors were distracted, but the job duties of the paramedics didn't change.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I understand.

M^{me} France G  linas: The ministry laid down the cards, "We know that demand for your services is going to grow. Your budget is not going to grow. You're on your own to try to fill that gap," and this is why you did the business analysis and this is why Ornge did the best it could to try to find business elsewhere so that they could continue to fully meet the needs of the people of Ontario. That was what you were operating under?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, that's right.

M^{me} France G  linas: Had the ministry come at any time and said, "No, I don't think this private venture is working anymore; we want you to live within your means," would the vision have changed?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It would have had to.

M^{me} France G  linas: It would have had to?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. That's incompatible with what was happening. If the organization had been directed to stop that, that would have necessarily changed the vision.

M^{me} France G  linas: That confirmed my question that I asked you earlier: Was the vision shared by the ministry? Not only was it shared, but it came from the ministry that you were responsible for fully meeting the needs of the people of Ontario, but you were not fully funded to meet those needs.

Mr. Jay Lebo: To be fair, I'm very confused myself about all this. I was told that demand was increasing steadily and that the budget was staying flat. The Auditor General's report suggests the opposite: that the budget was increasing steadily and that demand was flat. It would seem to me that what I was told wasn't true.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What was the source of that? Was that directly from Dr. Mazza, or was it—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: This issue of the gap was something that was told to you directly by Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, and anyone who was in a management position was also instructed to disseminate this.

M^{me} France G  linas: So it would be the same thing with Mr. Farquhar, who, if you went to him and said, "I have issues," you didn't even have an opportunity to ask for more medics to work within your base because this was the way it had been allocated, but he would also agree with the fact that, "We have to do the best we can with the resources we have, and anything over and above we have to self-fund?"

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes,

M^{me} France G  linas: Basically, the mission and the vision were well explained, it was well understood, and there were people dedicated within Ornge to making sure that this vision was being implemented?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: From your experience, having worked there, had the ministry at any time said no, like it does to other transfer payment agencies, you would have done what the ministry had told you to do?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's my expectation. We've seen some evidence that Dr. Mazza and the board felt that they were beyond the ministry's influence in areas like that. There was a letter from the chairman to the ministry, saying something along the lines of, "We can do whatever we want," so I can't say for certain whether or not that would have stopped them. I don't know.

M^{me} France G  linas: But from what had been shared with—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Excuse me. The Auditor General would like to clarify a point.

Mr. Jim McCarter: Just to clarify, what we said about the issue being about the demand going down: What we actually said was that Ornge was saying that the number of transports they were doing was gradually going up. We did some computer-based analysis and other analysis, and what we found was that the number of actual transports was actually going down, not going up. But that could be different than demand, because you could get a situation where the number of land ambulance inter-facility transfers was down, but that may have been—the demand may be going up, but if, for instance, the hospitals were saying, "We're not getting timely transport from Ornge," they'd get somebody else. So, just a clarification.

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's fair. Thank you. Everybody knows about the demographic shift that's happening in the Western world, so I think it's reasonable to expect that the demand for health care is going to go up as the population ages. You don't have to be a health care expert to understand that. But it seems to me, from the Auditor General's report, that the money was there for the asking, because it increased steadily every year.

M^{me} France G  linas: Had it not been for what ended up on the front page of the Toronto Star, you would have left Ornge thinking that the vision that had been put in place made sense, that what they were trying to do to leverage the knowledge and skills elsewhere to bring money in made sense, that it was being supported by the ministry because the ministry was saying, "You will have to manage within your own means or go find your own means of financing increases, because we are on a tight budget." All of this held together and made sense to you till it hit the front page of the Toronto Star?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have five minutes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Is there anything in our questioning that maybe perhaps we've missed that you think is important for us to know, some areas that we should perhaps look into more, or areas of concern that you saw, looking at the hearings or from what you've read in the newspaper, as areas of concern that have not been touched by this committee hearing?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I don't think so. I think you've done a pretty good job of getting everything out there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: While you were at Ornge, how much effort was put into keeping salaries secret?

Mr. Jay Lebo: A lot.

M^{me} France Gélinas: A lot? And at what level was that happening?

Mr. Jay Lebo: The most senior levels.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So we're talking Maria Renzella. We're talking Dr. Mazza—

Mr. Jay Lebo: The executive management team, including the CEO.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Steve Farquhar. How far down did it go?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Not below the level of vice-presidents. The executive management team included anyone with a VP title, a COO title, and the CEO. All of those people would have been privy to those discussions.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Within the executive team, the salaries were shared, but outside of the executive team, nobody knew?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't think I understand your question. Shared among the executives? I don't think that they shared their salaries with each other.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, but they knew the salaries within the organization?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. I'm sorry; maybe I'm still not understanding your question.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No; you're doing fine. I wanted to know how much effort was put into keeping salaries secret. So you didn't know what the executives were making at Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. It was understood among the executives that the CEO wanted to keep executive compensation secret.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: How was that known?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was a regular topic of discussion at the executive management team meetings.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: In what sense?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I can't recall specifics, but people saying, "I don't want my salaries disclosed," or "What can we do to avoid disclosing salaries?" or "How will this or that keep us off the sunshine list?" I don't recall any efforts to keep the entire organization off the sunshine list. You know, plenty of paramedics and middle managers appear on the sunshine list, and as far as I know, senior management was never concerned with that, but certainly the executive management team understood that Dr. Mazza wanted executive salaries kept secret.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'll save my two minutes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move on to the government, Mr. Moridi.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, Mr. Lebo, for appearing before this committee.

Mr. Lebo, I see from your resumé that you attended the Richard Ivey School of Business between the years 2006 and 2007, I believe; is that correct?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: And your resumé states that you attended the University of Toronto between the years 1998 and 2000, two years.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Did you do a degree program there or—

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was pursuing a degree but I didn't complete that degree.

Mr. Reza Moridi: And how did you get to a master's degree program without having a bachelor's degree?

Mr. Jay Lebo: The other parts of my application package were strong. I had international experience, entrepreneurial experience, a strong GMAT score, and I think that the admission team liked me. I was what they call a "special admit." I was one of two people in that class who didn't have an undergraduate degree, but part of what I like about that school so much is that they take a holistic view of applicants and they make exceptions.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you. You began working at Ornge as an executive aide to the CEO, Dr. Chris Mazza, in 2008. This committee has previously heard that executives at Ornge had the tendency to hire their friends and relatives, and so on and so forth. How did this position come about so that you got employed at Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: An HR manager at Ornge reached out to me. At that time, I had never heard of Ornge; I didn't know who they were. I got an email from someone in the HR department at Ornge saying that they had found my resumé in the Ivey resumé book—the school publishes a book of resúmes of recent graduates—that the CEO had specifically asked for a recent Ivey graduate and that they had identified me as a potential candidate and invited me to apply for the position.

Mr. Reza Moridi: So you didn't have any personal dealing with Dr. Mazza or any executive prior to—

Mr. Jay Lebo: I had never heard of them or the organization.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You worked as Dr. Mazza's executive aide between the years 2008 and 2009, for about a year; is that correct?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: And from there, you moved to become the regional operations manager for the greater Toronto area at Ornge; is that correct?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: How did this change in position come through?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It began in the back of a taxi with Steve Farquhar in Saskatoon. We were working on the Saskatchewan project together. We were just making conversation and he mentioned his frustration with not having a manager in Toronto. He talked about how the region was in crisis, how he couldn't get anyone to apply for the job and how, between the operational challenges and the labour relations challenges, he really needed a manager there. I said to him that sounded like a tremendous challenge and opportunity, and given the right kind of support, that might be a challenge that I would like to take on.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Dr. Mazza has been characterized in many ways by people who came as witnesses to this committee. He has been called, for example, “inspiring” but also “controlling” and even a “monster.” Another witness, actually, Mr. Tom Rothfels, described him as “charming but emotional,” and explained that the organization was top-driven. These are the points some of the witnesses made to this committee. How would you describe Dr. Mazza and his management style?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I’ve been following these committee hearings, and I think all of the adjectives that you’ve heard are true. He is all of those things. I could add adjectives of my own if you’d like, but—

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes, please.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Okay. He is inspiring and charismatic and deeply intelligent and passionate. He is also controlling. I want to use the word “paranoid,” but not in a clinical sense because I can’t diagnose him, but fearful of a lot of things; autocratic, volatile. I think that covers it.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Okay, thank you. In an article that appeared in the Star Phoenix—I guess this is the Saskatchewan paper, right?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: On February 10, 2012, you were quoted as describing Ornge as an autocratic organization.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You already mentioned that he was an autocratic person, basically—Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: What did you mean by that, or what do you mean by “autocratic”?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was his way or the highway. Dissent in the organization was not tolerated. You either did as you were told with a smile or you were shown the door.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Were there any instances, in your view, of which you’re aware, of Dr. Mazza ramming an initiative through despite advice to the contrary?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I’m sorry, could you please repeat that?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes. Were there any instances which you were aware of where Dr. Mazza rammed an initiative through despite advice to the contrary? Any specific example of his being autocratic or—

Mr. Jay Lebo: The boat that we all know of: The boat was purchased before I arrived in Ornge, but it was my understanding, not that he went ahead despite advice to the contrary, but that he went ahead unilaterally and announced one day that he had done this.

There was another instance in which he announced during a meeting of the executive management team that he had sold Ornge’s hangar at the Toronto Island Airport to Porter.

I can’t recall any instances where somebody said, “Don’t do this,” and then he went ahead and did it. But there were certainly times where he just went and did things, and there were other times where people expressed, let’s say, more general concerns, not, “Don’t do this project,” but rather, “We have a problem here,” or, “I think that you should change this.” People learned that your time at Ornge would be short if you kept that up.

Mr. Reza Moridi: The Star Phoenix article—the same article, actually—reports that you and several others at Ornge were fired in 2010 without any cause. Is this correct?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You are cited as saying that you frequently disagreed with them and they didn’t like it. What did you disagree over?

Mr. Jay Lebo: A variety of things, but more than anything else I disagreed with management’s tactics. As I mentioned to Mr. Klees, the overarching strategic goal for the organization was operational excellence. The biggest problem, in my region in particular, was trust, morale and engagement. I felt that senior management’s style was making it impossible to achieve those objectives.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Who are “they” in the article? When you refer to “they,” do you meant the senior management?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Were any of the concerns you raised when you disagreed with them addressed? Did they ever address your concerns when you disagreed with them?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. On the contrary, when I was terminated I was informed that the reason for my termination was that it appeared to them as though I felt senior management lived in an ivory tower, that I dissented too much and I didn’t fit in with the direction the organization was going. That was an hour-long conversation. But the very first thing that was expressed to me after I was informed that my employment was being terminated was, “Jay, you seem to think we live in an ivory tower, and we don’t understand why you feel that way.”

Mr. Reza Moridi: So they simply ignored you, basically.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I would have preferred to be ignored; I was terminated.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You were terminated, yes.

Mr. Lebo, we touched very briefly on this issue earlier when I asked you whether you came to be employed at Ornge due to any family or personal relationship, but I want to revisit this issue a little more because, as I explained, there seemed to have been a pattern at Ornge of hiring friends and family members etc., regardless of qualifications.

One person who has stood in this committee was Ms. Kelly Long, Dr. Mazza’s girlfriend. Ms. Kelly Long was originally hired at Pathway Group and then seconded to Ornge, and a few months later Ms. Long was hired to work at Ornge as a junior level communications officer. This was in December 2006. She was earning $60,000 a year for that position. Then she quickly ascended to the ranks of associate vice-president in 2011, with a salary of $120,000 a year. In just a few years, her salary doubled.

When Dr. Mazza appeared before this committee, he maintained the view that Ms. Kelly Long was just a friend of his when she first started her work at Ornge. Is this true? And if yes, when did Dr. Mazza and Ms. Long begin dating?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't know. I always knew that they were friends; that was not a secret. When they became more than friends, I don't know.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Didn't it strike you that this was odd, that Dr. Mazza was dating one of his much younger employees?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I didn't know that they were dating. I remember thinking, "If they are dating, then this is not good," but I didn't know.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You weren't aware.

Dr. Mazza said that Ms. Kelly Long was smart and that her ascension through the ranks was due to her ability and not to her status as his girlfriend. Do you agree with this statement?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. Intending no disrespect to Ms. Long, I don't agree with that statement.

Mr. Reza Moridi: In a few short years, Ms. Long went from making $60,000 to $120,000 a year. That's a lot of money, as you know. Do you believe that someone with Ms. Kelly Long's limited experience should have been making $120,000 a year?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you.

It's my understanding, Mr. Lebo, that Ms. Kelly Long was originally hired by Pathway Group and then seconded to Ornge because Dr. Mazza had another girlfriend at that time working at Ornge. Do you have any knowledge of this?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I don't.

Mr. Reza Moridi: It has been reported in the media that Dr. Mazza earned a whopping $1.4-million-per-year salary in the year 2011. In addition, he received loans from Ornge to purchase his million-dollar home, and he received a medical stipend as well. Were you aware of Dr. Mazza's outrageous salary and benefits and the whole compensation?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was aware of Dr. Mazza's compensation at that time, and at that time, in my opinion, it was not outrageous. It was not $1.4 million; it was under $500,000, as I understood it.

Mr. Reza Moridi: At that time.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Do you think that Dr. Mazza deserved this type of compensation while working for a not-for-profit entity such as Ornge? Did not the organization receive the majority of its funding from the taxpayers' funds, from the government of Ontario?

Mr. Jay Lebo: If you're speaking of compensation of $1.4 million, no, I don't think that's reasonable.

Mr. Reza Moridi: When Dr. Mazza appeared before this committee, he said that he regretted that his $1.4-million-a-year salary had become—I'm just quoting him saying it—"a lightning rod for controversy." However, Dr. Mazza refused to acknowledge that his compensation package was in any way excessive and repeatedly told this committee that he was not involved in setting up his own compensation. He said, "My compensation was always the purview of my board of directors. I had no input into my compensation. I had no opinion that was ever—my opinion was never requested about my compensation."

It's somehow bizarre that Dr. Mazza was unable to confirm his salary for the committee over the years and tried basically to convince this committee that he had no input to his salary and to his compensation. Rather, he seemed to suggest that the board of directors simply set his salary and compensation without even him negotiating with them.

During your time, your work at Ornge, and working for Dr. Mazza as his executive aide, were you ever aware of or do you have any knowledge of any involvement of Dr. Mazza relating to establishing his compensation?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. Dr. Mazza worked hard to manage his board. It's hard for me to imagine that anything at the board happened without his influence, but I have no specific knowledge of what you're asking me about.

Mr. Reza Moridi: In your letter to this committee, where you offered basically to appear before the committee, you suggested that your salary during the year 2008 might represent a misuse of public funds for privileged gains. What did you mean by that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's what I was trying to explain to Mr. Klees, that a good deal of my time was spent researching for-profit opportunities. I was always paid out of the Ornge operational budget. So when I found out through the media that 97% of this profit was going to the senior executives and board members, that's when it occurred to me that—I thought that I was working for the benefit of the people of Ontario. It now appears as though I was working for their personal benefit. That's what I meant by that.

Mr. Reza Moridi: It must be hard on you to have that kind of feeling at that moment.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I have lots of feelings about all of this. That's not one of the dominating ones.

Mr. Reza Moridi: While you were an employee at Ornge, Mr. Lebo, what was your salary at that time?

Mr. Jay Lebo: As executive aide to Dr. Mazza, my base salary was $75,000.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Was this the starting salary when you started working there?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That was a guaranteed base salary, with an opportunity to earn up to I think 20% more, if I recall correctly. My total compensation for the year, including bonus, was slightly less than $100,000. As regional operations manager, I made about $10,000 more than that.

Mr. Reza Moridi: So when you left—or you were fired, basically—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: —your salary and compensation total would have been over $100,000, or $110,000.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I think it was a smidge under $100,000, including all bonuses.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You also wrote to the committee that you were under the impression, while working at Ornge, that for-profit ventures were donating 100% of their profits. Do you still think that this was the case?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I don't. No.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Do you have any reason to believe that the money was not being given back to the Ornge not-for-profit?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It's only what I've read—reading the Auditor General's report and reading the reports in the media. That's how I came to understand that 97% of the money was destined for the individual shareholders.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you. In your resumé, Mr. Lebo, you stated that you provided strategic advice and tactical analysis for securing new sources of revenue and promoting the Ornge brand. How did Dr. Mazza describe this vision to you?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Which vision do you mean, exactly?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Your job, basically, at Ornge saying that you were providing strategic advice and tactical analysis for securing new sources of revenue for Ornge and promoting the Ornge brand—I guess you had conversations with Dr. Mazza.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: How did he convey his vision to you so that you could develop this kind of strategy and tactics for the organization?

Mr. Jay Lebo: He felt that Ornge was a world leader in transport medicine, that it was the best organization of its kind. He referenced some other companies: the Royal Flying Doctor Service of Australia, for example. You may have heard of them. If you have heard of them, it's remarkable that you have heard of them, because they're in Australia. He wanted a similar global reputation for Ornge and felt that if that could be achieved, it could be very lucrative.

Mr. Reza Moridi: That was basically your job, to develop such strategies and tactics.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, to research the opportunities and to make the CEO aware of them and to make my recommendations when asked.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about three minutes left.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you. Between the years of 2006 and 2011, Ornge established a series of affiliated corporations, as you know, some of which were not-for-profit. Many of them were for-profit corporations. I'm not going to name all of them, but the list includes Ornge Peel, Ornge Issuer Trust and Ornge Global Air Inc. Were you involved in these initiatives?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. I observed them; I wasn't involved.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Were you aware that Dr. Mazza's salary used to be disclosed on an annual basis on the sunshine list, but in the year of 2008, when Dr. Mazza's employment was transferred from not-for-profit Ornge to Ornge Peel, his name ceased to appear on the sunshine list? Was there ever any discussion around using the for-profit entities at Ornge to shield executives from having to disclose their salaries on the sunshine list?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you very much.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Can you tell us about it? The conversation that you were aware of.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. We're now going back more than three years. I don't recall the specifics of the conversations, but certainly at the executive management team meetings it was discussed, by moving us onto the—"us" meaning the executives—by moving the executives onto the payroll of the for-profit companies, they could be removed from the sunshine list, and that would be good.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So that was an explicit conversation that you overheard.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move on to the opposition. You have two minutes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Lebo, in the time that you were associated with Mr. Mazza, do you recall any meetings that he would have had with the Premier?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Any meetings that he might have had with the Minister of Health?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. I recall that he had a meeting with Minister Smitherman. I don't think I remember anything more than that.

Mr. Frank Klees: No details about that?

1340

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I believe it was over dinner. I'm sorry; I don't remember anything more about that.

Mr. Frank Klees: You're familiar with the—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Excuse me, Mr. Klees. When Mr. Smitherman was succeeded by Minister Caplan, I believe that there was also a meeting during which Chris wanted to introduce himself to the new minister, and I think that that happened.

Mr. Frank Klees: So he would have had a meeting with Minister Caplan as well.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: You're familiar with the Meyers Norris Penny audit—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: —a fairly extensive audit. Were you involved in that audit at all?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I wasn't involved in the audit. It depends what you call "involved." I was asked to make some—there were a few occasions where someone would come to me and say, "The auditor is asking for this. Can you help us with that?"

Mr. Frank Klees: Were you ever instructed to give false information to the auditors?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was instructed to create false information for the auditors.

Mr. Frank Klees: And who would have instructed you to create that false information?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Dr. Mazza and Maria Renzella.

Mr. Frank Klees: What was the nature of the information, to the best of your recollection, that they were trying to falsify?

Mr. Jay Lebo: To the best of my recollection, the auditors were asking for the business justification for a number of expenses, and I was asked to write the business justifications and to backdate them.

Mr. Frank Klees: And did you do that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I wrote the business justifications but I did not backdate them. I put the correct dates on them.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'm sorry; you're out of time, Mr. Klees. We'll move to the NDP.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so the auditors are in there. Basically, what Dr. Mazza is asking you to do is illegal; you don't backdate documents. So you wrote them up but you put the actual dates on it.

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's what I recall, yes. That's the best of my recollection.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So here we have Dr. Mazza asking you to do something specific, and you're not doing what he wants. I expect you out the door the same night, but you're still there. You stayed there after not following his order.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: How did it go?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was never mentioned again. You know, when I delivered the documents to Ms. Renzella, they were in the form of an electronic Word document. If she wanted the date changed, she could have done so herself without coming back to me.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Do you figure that's what happened?

Mr. Jay Lebo: At the time, I didn't expect that that would happen. I know more now than I did then. In retrospect, for them to do that would seem consistent with a pattern of behaviour; at the time, it seemed implausible that they would actually go through with that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Was this the first and only time you were asked to do something that was morally wrong or illegal?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was the only time I was asked to do something illegal. It was not the only time I was asked to do something morally wrong.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Give me an example.

Mr. Jay Lebo: The examples would have come from my time as regional operations manager, where I actually had responsibility for doing things. I was instructed to lie to paramedics.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: About what?

Mr. Jay Lebo: About what? One example I can give is that during that year the organization's budget for paramedic overtime had been far exceeded. It was something like 50% beyond what it was supposed to be and there were still some months left in the year. The collective bargaining agreement between the CAW, representing the medics, and the organization specifically said that paramedics' vacation could only be denied on the grounds of "operational requirements." I and my fellow regional operations managers were instructed to deny vacations to mitigate the hemorrhaging of the overtime budget, but if asked why we were denying vacation, we were instructed to say it was for operational requirements.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And we must move to the government now. Go ahead, Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Were there other examples? You said that the backdating of documents was the only thing that you were asked to do which was illegal. Were there other things you were asked to do which were morally wrong?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was instructed to terminate people where I felt that doing so was morally wrong. I was—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We don't need names, but give us a sense of why.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. I was instructed to terminate one person who had done nothing wrong at all, but by virtue of where he lived—it's hard to explain. Having this person on the payroll was more expensive than having some other person on the payroll who lived in a more convenient place. I was instructed to terminate him for that reason, even though the collective bargaining agreement is very specific about what are permissible terms for termination, and this is not one of them. You can't terminate a unionized employee who has done nothing wrong, and that was precisely what I was instructed to do.

There was another paramedic whom I was instructed to terminate even though I felt that this person needed help—was facing challenges that I wasn't qualified to diagnose—but that terminating this person was neither in the organization's interest nor in his interest; I did not feel right about doing that. I objected repeatedly and was ultimately given a flat-out order: "Do this today."

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So, "He goes or you go"?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, and I went anyway, about two weeks later.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We are out of time, so thank you very much, Mr. Lebo, for coming in.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Thank you.

ORNGE

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Our next witness is Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup, senior pilot, fixed-wing operations, from Ornge. If he could come up, please.

Welcome. Just to confirm: You have received the letter for witnesses coming before the committee?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Our clerk has an oath for you.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): The Bible is in front of you there, Mr. Binderup.

Mr. Binderup, do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give to this committee touching the subject of the present inquiry shall be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: So help me God.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If you'd like to make a short opening statement, you're welcome to, and then we'll move to questioning after that.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Thanks. Good afternoon. My name is Poul-Erik Binderup, and I am one of the fixed-wing pilots who operate the PC-12 aircraft for Ornge based in Thunder Bay. When I was asked to come and appear before this committee, I spent countless hours, mostly while I was trying to sleep, considering what I could possibly add to the extensive testimony that has already been given, in an effort to get to the bottom of the current state that Ornge finds itself in.

I debated what words of wisdom that I might be able to impart that would convince everyone to get along and get down to fixing what needs to be fixed. However, I realized that that would require more than a few clever words. Then I thought that I should arm myself with statistics and information that might make me seem wise—I didn't think on that one too long—or perhaps I should watch as much testimony as I could and then I could pick all of the good stuff that might help further my agenda. That's when it dawned on me that I wasn't even really sure what my agenda was.

On July 28, I sent a letter to the members of this committee, with the support of many of my fixed-wing colleagues, to say that I stand behind Ornge and that I wanted to see it succeed. I still stand behind that statement. In the weeks following, it became very apparent that I underestimated the biggest problem Ornge has to overcome, and that is lack of trust—not only the public's trust in us, but also our trust in each other and in the Ornge management.

I have been fortunate in my three-plus years at Ornge to work with some very dedicated individuals, not only fixed-wing pilots but paramedics and helicopter pilots who have devoted their lives to the goal of serving the people of Ontario. I owe it to them to show them the respect that they deserve—something that my previous letter neglected to do. For many of these people, it's more than a job; it's a calling.

The fixed-wing pilots are considered the new kids on the block, but many of us hold this model of dedication up as something to aspire to. When Ornge announced in 2009 that it would be starting a fixed-wing division, there were many of us who jumped at the opportunity to be a part of something special.

So now here we are, in the middle of quite an awful mess, to be honest. There have been political lines drawn in the sand, personal lines drawn in the sand and some pretty incredible rifts formed right on the front lines. The very people who should be unified in one purpose are now fractured. Many employees, including myself, have felt forced to pick sides and, in doing so, ran the risk of alienating those with differing views, only serving to deepen these rifts.

Right now, Ornge is dealing with some very serious issues. No one, including myself, is arguing that those issues don't exist. Let's be honest, we need more paramedics and we need more pilots, specifically rotor pilots. I'm sure that there are many other issues needing to be dealt with, but these things, in my opinion, are not insurmountable; they can be fixed. It wasn't that long ago that there were many people in this organization who didn't think there would ever be a chance that the top management would ever be held accountable for mismanaging Ornge. Well, we know how that worked out.

So now the new Ornge management is faced with the daunting task of trying to sort out all these issues while, at the same time, dealing with a rash of new issues that arise. But change is happening.

So now what? Well, it turns out I found my agenda. My agenda is the people who work for Ornge. It's why I came to Ornge in the first place. I still feel that Ornge, with all of its issues, can be fixed. It's going to take a whole lot of work by a whole lot of people, but at the heart of it all we need to be able to trust each other. The new Ornge management needs to be purposeful in establishing an atmosphere of trust, not only within the company but also with the people of Ontario.

I, for my part, feel bad that I lost some of the trust and respect of some of my colleagues by picking a side. I can only pledge to do exactly what I am encouraging others to do, and that is to work even harder to fix what problems I can and hopefully gain back that trust. Certainly, the people of Ontario deserve no less. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you. We'll move to the NDP for the first questioning. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sure. Before I start with my questions, I'm sort of curious to know a little bit more. You seem very—how can I say it?—moved by what happened since you picked a side and the lack of trust between some of the front line who work together. When you say “picked a side,” what are the sides?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Within Ornge there are two very distinct camps. There are people who feel that Ornge screwed up, that Ornge messed up, that they mismanaged the company to the point where Ornge should be disbanded, shut down—however you want to word it—and that a new company or a different company should be given the opportunity to come in and do things right. Then there are those who feel that yes, Ornge messed up, but that, you know, there have been steps taken to rectify that over the course of the last eight months, that we still have a long way to go but that these problems can be fixed and that Ornge should have the opportunity to fix them. With its new management structure, we've seen some of the steps taken towards that—or I have.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So there are people within the organization who still think that Ornge should be disbanded?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And it should be shut down?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Are there many?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: There are a vocal few; some are more vocal than others. There are many who are just kind of watching to see what happens, kind of let it play out and hope for the best, and then there are a few on the other side who are actively trying to make things better. I'd say in each camp there's maybe a handful, a half dozen to a dozen, who are fairly vocal either way.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What would there be to win or to gain by dismantling Ornge?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Well, if you think about it, everybody hates change and this whole thing has really been, in my opinion again, about change. If you look at the rotor-wing pilots who worked for Canadian Helicopters for many, many years—some of them have been there countless years—that job, for them, has become the pinnacle of their career. They worked with Ornge but not for Ornge. Now that contract is no longer, and they're faced with numerous changes to their operation. Ornge is doing things differently, perhaps with the same helicopter, but it's a different operation, and it has had to play by different rules. That change can be very difficult, for sure.

It's the same for paramedics. Many of the paramedics who have worked for Ornge have seen many changes. Some of them worked for the Ministry of Health back before Ornge was in operation. They saw Ornge come in and saw the mismanagement happening. Some of them tried to raise concerns over the years that weren't listened to. But they saw all that change happening, and a lot of it, for them, was not for the better. For them, there was actually, honestly, a collective cry of cheer when Dr. Mazza was fired. There were quite a number of paramedics that thought, at that point, "Yay; our team won."

On the fixed-wing side, again, we're kind of the new kids on the block, so we haven't seen any of that change. We came in under the guise of thinking that Ornge had it all together. Really, all we had to go by, for the most part, were the paramedics and the rotor pilots that we would end up working with. Change is difficult, for sure.

M^{me} France Gélinas: From the time you were there, you had never heard of problems at Ornge, of whistle-blowers coming to the government, of whistle-blowers coming to the opposition, of people thinking that something is wrong at Ornge? Until it hit the front page of the paper, you had never heard of anything wrong?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No. There were memos. There were inside jokes, if you will, about Dr. Mazza and some of his memos. For us, we came in at a time—the summer of 2009—when a lot of this, I believe—I don't know the exact timeline—was just starting to really develop. Ornge Global came in the next summer, I believe. I don't know how long that had been in the works prior to that.

While there were always people that were quite vocal about the downside at Ornge, it never presented itself more than people that were vocal about the downside of Ornge. The term "whistle-blower" really never even popped up until this spring, when things really hit the fan.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you perceive the committee work, or any investigation into things that are not being properly handled at Ornge by the management, as an attack on the front-line workers?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No, not the committee. There's a perception that lines are divided in the government circles, but not necessarily at the committee level.

That doesn't really make sense; let me try to explain. The opposition has its duties to try and steer the government straight. The government, I think, would try and do its best to lead the people of Ontario. This committee was set up—and this is my understanding, at least—to really get down to the bare bones of what went wrong at Ornge. When it all became very apparent through the Star—Kevin Donovan—

Mr. David Zimmer: Can I ask you to speak into the mike?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Oh, sorry.

Mr. David Zimmer: Pull the mike towards you—just like this.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Is that better?

Mr. David Zimmer: That's better, yes.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Okay. When it all became very apparent, what was actually going on—I'm sorry; I lost my train of thought. What was your question?

1400

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I can move on to another area.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Oh, the committee.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just in general—I mean, I don't want the front-line workers to think that by looking at what Ornge did wrong or how Ornge was mismanaged or how there was some oversight that was not done by the government, perhaps, then none of that—I hope that the front-line workers don't think that that is in any way casting aspersions on their work or on their qualifications or on their quality of care.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No, we understand—I can really only speak for myself for the most part, but we understand that there is a job to be done, that you guys need to get to the bottom of what happened. How else are we going to make sure that it doesn't happen again?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure; that's exactly it.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes. The front line—we've had some disparaging things from the public through all of this. But the public is kind of funny that way. Sometimes they will latch on to the negative things that can just as easily fizzle and go away. You kind of roll with that, I guess.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure. Do you know Bruce Wade?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I do.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you know him personally?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I do.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And how would you describe your relationship with him?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Strained as of late.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Can you explain to me what a FOOR is?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: FOOR is basically a flight operations occurrence report. It's our way of basically making the company know of just about anything that happens within Ornge. That could be a delayed departure, it could be a declined trip due to weather, safety concerns reports. It's tied very closely with our safety management system, so it's partly the safety system as well as just our way of tracking information in general.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do I have it correct that you initiated or wrote up a FOOR in regards to Mr. Wade?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I did.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And what was the basis of that FOOR?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I don't want to get into—if I am allowed the latitude, I don't want to get into bashing of Mr. Wade any further than has already been done.

For me, I initiated that process as a way to hold Mr. Wade accountable for his actions in the workplace. That strictly stemmed around the way that he carried himself at work, which in my opinion created a hostile work environment.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So it would be a personality thing as opposed to an actual—the way he was flying his aircraft or the way he was—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No, it had nothing to do with the way he was flying his aircraft.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: My worry would be that it would affect me in a way that I flew mine.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And how would it affect you?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: We're trained as pilots every year in terms of human factors, things that affect us from outside the cockpit that could affect us inside the cockpit—somebody going through a divorce, financial troubles. I mean, it could be anything. We're trained in that manner to recognize or at least try to recognize these things. I felt that it was getting to the point where it was becoming what we would call a human factor.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I get a sense that you're somewhat of a leader amongst, perhaps—maybe not officially, but definitely you have some leadership qualities. Is that how people look up to you in your organization?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I'm sorry?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Is that how people regard you in your organization?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I'd like to think I'm well respected and I certainly get along with people that I work with, for the most part.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Does that also apply, then, to upper levels of management, that you have a very good relationship with them as well?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I do; I try. In Thunder Bay, we don't have much contact with the management here in Toronto; just geographical for the most part, some via email and whatnot—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: In terms of upper management, who would your contact person be that you have—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: My direct supervisor would be our chief pilot, Jim Bennett.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I'm sorry, who—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Our chief pilot, Jim Bennett, would be my direct supervisor.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And then, besides Mr. Bennett, in terms of any contact here in Toronto, who would you have relationships with—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Beyond that would probably be, right now, Jeff Garipey. He's our director of flight operations. He would be the next up the—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: The ladder.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: —chain of command.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I've put a copy of an email that you sent out on July 27. Do you recognize this email?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes, I sure do.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I will read some of it into the record later, but I want to first give you an opportunity to give me some context as to, why would you write to all of the fixed-wing pilots, from the people I was able to identify—some of them I have not been able to identify—what were you hoping to achieve, and did you achieve your goals?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I guess partly it was a two-fold thing. As a group in Thunder Bay, and the Sioux Lookout and Timmins bases as well, we always have the opportunity to talk, and many of us had become very frustrated with what we perceived as being a very negative turn on Ornge, both in the press and even within our own workplace and work environment. The negativity was really starting to beat us up, to be honest. There was a pretty solid sentiment among the fixed-wing pilots that we just didn't know what to do. Where do we go? What do we do?

At that point, I guess my first thing that I did was, I went to my union representative. I sent him an email and asked how we might go about filing a grievance, given the work environment that we were working in. The union indicated to me that it wouldn't be able to do anything. I'm not very well versed in union protocols, but same union, two different bargaining units, so it felt like the answer was, how does one bargaining unit complain against the other? I didn't really have any reason to believe that that wasn't the case, so I left that. I didn't pursue it through the union.

My next avenue, I felt, was to send something through the FOOR, through our safety department, in that respect. That's where the original complaint actually came in.

The other part of this was that, again, we were feeling a very negative sentiment in terms of how Ornge was being portrayed. Some of it we didn't feel was fair. The fixed-wing pilots really hadn't had a voice at that point. That's when I drafted the letter to the committee—on July 28, I believe.

The email itself was kind of twofold. It was to see, first of all, if there was support behind a move to actually draft a letter and send it. So this email went out prior to that letter. The issue with Mr. Wade was something that had happened prior to the letter as well, so it was kind of a separate issue, although the two are inexplicably united.

The pilots that I spoke with to whom I sent this email indicated that they were behind that process. So that's why I went forward with the letter. I believe there was an attached—I had sent as well some of the comments from the pilots to kind of indicate that support as well.

We just felt that we hadn't had a voice up to that point and that it was important that somebody heard from a group of pilots that really kind of stood behind Ornge and wanted to see it succeed.

M^{me} France Gélinas: There are lots of people who want Ornge to succeed. I represent the fourth-biggest riding in northern Ontario. All of my constituents depend on Ornge being there in their time of need because this is the way we get ambulance services for the people. There are a lot of people who want Ornge to succeed, but we don't go about shutting down the people who are saying, "Well, things were not that good." You realize what has happened to Mr. Wade since you put the FOOR forward?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: What has happened to Mr. Wade?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Since that time, Ornge has hired an outside, independent investigator to investigate the allegation. I'm not sure exactly how that process will end. I didn't really see that process starting to begin, to be honest. I thought that at some point there needed to be some accountability for his actions. That was my goal: that somebody would just say, "Stop."

M^{me} France Gélinas: What action do you figure he was not being held accountable for?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Mr. Wade has been described as a very passionate individual, but he comes across as angry and argumentative—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So you filed a FOOR against him because he's angry?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No, no.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: You filed a FOOR against him because he's complaining about things?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I filed a FOOR against him because that's the way—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: It's not acceptable to you that someone can complain about what's going on in the workplace?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I know that you folks have protocols that you need to follow in Parliament, and if you go outside of those protocols, then you are held accountable. There are things that you can and can't do. I felt that, in my opinion, Mr. Wade was creating an environment where—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: How was he creating this environment?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Use of language—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Please let him finish, Mr. Singh.

You have three minutes left, by the way.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Use of language, being aggressive, argumentative, raised voice—

M^{me} France Gélinas: You're describing 50% of the pilots that I know.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Could be, but 50% of the pilots that you know don't make people angry back and don't create an environment whereby I don't feel safe to go to work. I can only tell you how he made me feel at the time.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: How often do you cross each other's paths?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Not very often.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: In your day-to-day work, you go and fly a fixed-wing aircraft; he flies a rotary-wing aircraft?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you have shared locker rooms?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Do you have shared places where you change clothes?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And how often do you work the same shift?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I would say—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: How many times a week, let's say, would you cross his path?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: How many times a week? Maybe two to three.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Two to three times a week, you cross his path. And how long would you be in his proximity for, in terms of minutes, hours, seconds?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: That would depend. If we were sharing a shift, we would be there 12 hours.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And you would be in the same workplace?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: We'd be in the same workplace.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And how close together would you be sitting?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: That depends. If we were sitting in the lunchroom together, then we'd be very close. Rotary pilots and fixed-wing pilots share a flight planning office, so again there's close proximity. It's not that big a facility.

M^{me} France Gélinas: When was the last time you spent a 12-hour shift with Mr. Wade?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: It would have been in July.

M^{me} France Gélinas: In July this year?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And the time before that?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: There would be several times in July.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Where you worked together.

We'll save our time.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay; very well. We'll move on to the government. Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you, Mr. Binderup. How do we pronounce that properly?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: It's Binderup, yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. There has been a lot of discussion about the letter that you wrote. Just so we can be absolutely clear, I think you've described already that you had a discussion with some of your fellow pilots about whether you should do something. Did anybody ask you to write that letter?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No; absolutely not.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So this was something that you, with the support of some of your fellow pilots, wanted to do. It isn't that somebody came to you and asked you to—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No; absolutely not.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And there's a mention here that you contacted Minister Gravelle's office.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Would he have been your MPP in Thunder Bay?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: He is one of the MPPs in Thunder Bay, yes. I don't think that he's mine, actually. He's in the north end of the city. But I had known of him through a mutual friend.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, so he was one of your area MPPs, which is—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: But it wasn't him. It was his assistant, Mr. Larry Joy, whom I was actually able to contact.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay, so you spoke to Mr. Joy. You didn't actually speak to Mr. Gravelle.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: That's correct.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And what was the conversation that you had with Mr. Joy?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I indicated to him that we, as a group of fixed-wing pilots, would like to basically stand behind Minister Deb Matthews, because we felt that she had shown some support to us so we'd like to return the favour, basically, and how would I go about getting a letter to her or to the committee or to someone, to do that, to make that happen?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you went to Mr. Joy and said, "We'd like to send a letter," and asked him for our contact information for the committee or the minister or whoever.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Exactly—whatever he was able to do, or did he think that was even possible?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Could we talk a bit about some of the things that you actually did say in your letter that you sent to the committee?

You say in your letter that in December of last year, you "watched as the fabric of the Ornge machine began to unravel." Can you explain to us what you meant by the fabric of Ornge beginning to unravel? You were having a poetic flight here, so let's get some specifics.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Basically, we watched, the same as everybody else did, through the newspaper. I guess it was probably the middle of December when things really became open, or began to open up, essentially, in the press. We watched that happen, just the same as everybody in Ontario did, I guess—very concerned. The whole thing seemed to be kind of falling down, so everybody, I think, was concerned initially, until it started to take shape and we could get an idea of what was actually going on and who was being singled out and how that actually took shape.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: One of the other things that you talked about was an issue that seemed to be part of the conflict, maybe, between yourself and Mr. Wade, if I can put it that way. You talked in your letter about, "There have been issues raised that there are not enough paramedics to staff all the aircraft that Ornge operates. While I cannot speak to optimal staffing levels, I can say that there are many, many cases where the weather precludes the helicopters from being able to respond to a call, where the PC-12 aircraft is subsequently dispatched. And yes, in those cases it is often the helicopter medics that are dispatched on the PC-12. For our part, we are there to fly aircraft and respond to the calls of people all over the province of Ontario who may need us. And if we can respond to that call safely, then we do."

Could you elaborate on that a little bit? For those of us who aren't actually pilots—and actually, there are a couple of pilots in the room—it would be helpful if we understood when a helicopter can go, when an aircraft can go, and this flow back and forth of paramedics.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I'm going to round-about answer your question, if I could. One of the things that we saw, and I made reference to in that—I'll back you up a couple of paragraphs, where I said that there were people with flawed information. What I was alluding to there, and I guess I didn't maybe say it all that well, was that people were gathering information at that point on downstaffing, for example. Nobody disagrees that we need paramedics for the helicopter, but what I saw happening was that every time a helicopter couldn't fly, it was being blamed on the one issue.

You can take information and you can take data and you can spin it however you want. I'll use an example. For the helicopter in Thunder Bay, they have some pretty strict regulations or guidelines in terms of when they can fly at night just due to the aircraft, Transport Canada regulations and whatnot. They basically need essentially VFR conditions roughly around 3,000 feet before they can actually go out and fly at night.

So, if an aircraft or if a helicopter—let's say the weather is down to 1,000 feet and they can't fly, and the helicopter can't do anything, and then the medics go out on an airplane, is it because of the weather or is it because of the lack of paramedics?

There are some who would take that information and say, "Well, the paramedics are gone. That's down-staffed the helicopter." And while that may be, it's all on how you—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You up-staff the aircraft—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: We up-staff the aircraft. It's all how you put the spin on it. I want to say, along with that, that I believe that we should have medics for every aircraft so that everything—if the weather is good, everything should be able to fly. So, my issue wasn't necessarily with the lack of paramedics so much as it was the way that it was being portrayed.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. The email that Ms. Gélinas mentioned, which is the email from you to some of your colleagues—I suspect that you’re going to get questioned on it more. Would you like to read it into the record and stop and comment on why you wrote what you did? Because I suspect we’re going to have more questions, and when we’ve got you here, go ahead and tell us what you said and tell us why you said it.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Okay. Do you want me to read from the top?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Okay. This is, again, an email from myself to my fixed-wing pilot group.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, and you weren’t anticipating that it was for public consumption, but it’s now been tabled with the committee so it’s now part of the public record.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: “I trust this email finds everyone well as the summer motors on. Many of you have been following the legislative hearings in Toronto by the standing committee investigating the scandal at Ornge.”

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sorry. Could you slow down a little bit and speak into that microphone, please?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Sorry. This is all new to me.

“I trust this email finds everyone well as the summer motors on. Many of you have been following the legislative hearings in Toronto by the standing committee investigating the scandal at Ornge. While many of us have been content up to now to watch these on YouTube and smiling, there have been some things developing behind the scenes that I would like everyone to be aware of. Those of you in Thunder Bay are no doubt aware that Mr. Bruce Wade has been a significant source of information to MPP Frank Klees.”

Can I just interject as I go?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, that’s what I’d like you to do, is comment on—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Okay. I mean Bruce had commented on this at numerous times as well, so this—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So you got this information from Mr. Wade himself, that he’d been in contact with Mr. Klees?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes, for sure.

“Mr. Wade has bragged to many of us in Thunder Bay of his relationship to Mr. Klees. He has also made it very clear through ... verbal altercations with flight crew that he wishes to aid Mr. Klees”—and I quote Bruce—“in ‘bringing Ornge down,’ no doubt in the hope that Canadian Helicopters would come riding to his rescue”—again, comments that he had made as well.

“I do not wish to comment on this except to say that this is not how I feel. Mr. Wade does not have my support nor does he represent me in any way. I found out recently that Mr. Wade has been invited by Mr. Klees to appear before the committee to speak on the state of Ornge. While I do not know what this testimony will entail, I do not get a warm fuzzy feeling about it, that I can assure you. All of a sudden I realized that the time is now to stand up for ourselves and let someone know how we feel. As Terry”—one of my co-workers—“mentioned in his ... email, we are the dirty little secret of Ornge. In fact, when we should be applauded for going out there and making a difference in the lives of Ontarians, we are being shot down and bad-mouthed for ‘stealing’ medics off the helicopter.

“Well, folks, I don’t want to put too fine a point on this, but I have had enough. Having been a part of this from the very beginning, I am extremely proud of what we have accomplished here. And I am even more proud of what we do ... what I do. I think we can all say that. When the weather is less than stellar, we are the guys and gals out there making a difference. It’s time we stood together as a unified group of professionals and let people know how we feel.

“So here is what I have been up to.

“I spoke with Rob Lindsay”—he is our union representative in Thunder Bay—“about the union’s standpoint on this (specifically how Mr. Wade has been undermining our future employment with Ornge). Thank you to Rob for following this up with the union. Unfortunately, the union has indicated that it is unable to do anything with respect to Mr. Wade’s actions.”

“So I filed a FOOR with respect to Mr. Wade’s actions, and indicated that he is creating a hostile work environment and that this matter is bordering on a safety issue. As human factors go, this is distracting when we should be focusing on our duties. I received a positive response from the safety department, and would encourage anyone who feels similarly to file such a report or simply send an email to the safety department.

“Lastly, I have started a dialogue with the office of Michael Gravelle, the local Liberal MPP here in Thunder Bay. I do not want to get into politics here, but the bottom line is that the current Liberal Minister of Health, Deb Matthews, has been a huge supporter of ours over the last number of months, and I believe it is time to return the favour. I will be drafting a letter to Ms. Matthews in essence stating how much we appreciate her support. It is also my goal to put some distance between myself and Mr. Wade. I believe that he is a loose cannon, and has his own agenda that in no way represents how I feel about my job. People like Ron McKerlie and Deb Matthews are the ones on the front lines fighting to keep Ornge alive. It’s time we put some ammunition back in the guns of the people who are trying to defend us against the Wades and Kleeses out there who are constantly taking potshots at us and our livelihood.

“Mr. Wade is scheduled to appear before the committee next Tuesday, and I am hoping to have a letter ... together and sent to Deb Matthews’s office no later than Monday. I am also hoping to be able to send the letters to each member of the standing committee. At this time I am waiting to hear back from Mr. Gravelle’s office with the contact information ... and with the most advantageous method of proceeding. I will let you know as things progress.

"In the meantime, please understand that I am not trying to convince anyone of anything. If there is any among you that do not feel as I do or don't want to get involved or just really don't care, that is your prerogative. If you do care, then please put together a letter or simply email me your support. Remember there is strength in numbers. There are those individuals out there who are fighting to take away my livelihood and put my family on the street.... Nobody messes with my family (and you all can consider yourselves my family).

"Cheers,
"PE"

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you for taking the initiative, because that's tough to do when you find yourself in a workplace where life has become difficult. We're kind of used to being at the centre of political storms, but when your job is to fly medevac airplanes, you don't really expect to be at the centre of a political storm. So thank you for having the courage to take that initiative.

You've mentioned your intent here and when you wrote the actual letter, to note that you've seen positive changes since Mr. McKerlie replaced Dr. Mazza and the support you've gotten from Minister Matthews. Could you tell us a little bit about the things that you've seen change since December, as the world was unravelling? What's going back together?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Even right now, one of the things, and this is just kind of from the outside looking in—to address the paramedic issue, for example, right now we have two classes of paramedics that are being upgraded in certification, one in Toronto and one in Thunder Bay. I'm not sure of the exact numbers, but I think there are 10 to 12 in Thunder Bay, and I'm not sure in Toronto. That will go a long way to putting more advanced care paramedics into the mix. We've hired a few, at least, paramedics in Thunder Bay. Some of them have been to replace the paramedics that are now on course, so in that respect, we haven't really seen a whole lot of change in terms of the actual staffing levels in Thunder Bay. But again, from the outside looking in, we've done some hiring and we're doing some upgrading, so that's positive change.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And you anticipate that when the training is complete, then there will be more people on the ground in Thunder Bay.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: We've hired enough, I believe, to sort of backfill the ones that are on course. We constantly see emails go out in terms of job postings. I don't know how many of those are responded to, but they certainly are looking for paramedics.

Once the courses are complete, then we've got a dozen or more paramedics who are instantly put back into the system as well, which will again go a long way to staffing.

I can't speak to the intent of staffing levels and what the endgame is in terms of staffing. We're having some difficulties right now keeping helicopter pilots. Again, they're actively seeking out helicopter pilots. I believe there will be two, if not four, rotor pilots coming out of sim this week or next week, who will be put into Moosonee, I believe. Don't necessarily quote me on that, but I know that Moosonee is a big issue right now, and having to down-staff one base to up-staff another. But again, there are pilots being hired. Is it enough? I can't speak to the actual numbers right now, but again, for me, it's a step in the right direction.

Communication has been another big thing. There was a time when, if I were to actually send Dr. Mazza an email and jump the chain of command, I would likely lose my job, or at least that would be a fear. I can actually send Mr. McKerlie an email, and he's quite likely to respond. We get weekly updates in terms of what's going on in the OCC, what's going on the rotor world, what's going on with the different departments. So every week we get at least a taste of what's being done to help. Again, is it enough? I can't speak to that, but there are certainly steps that are being taken in the right direction to fix some of these problems. At this stage in the game, for me, that's good news.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: On the flip side, one of the things Mr. Klees has said, and I think this was in the House, was, "I would not want to be a pilot, I would not want to be a paramedic and I would not want to be a patient. Knowing the track record of these helicopters, I would take my chances getting from point A to point B with some other means."

How would you and your pilot colleagues react when you hear those sorts of comments?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about three minutes left.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: All I can say to that, really, is that, in the face of all this, we take our jobs very seriously. I had a quick look on the website, because I was curious—I alluded to it in the letter—to see how many miles we flew yesterday, between the helicopters and the fixed-wing. It was 27,000 statute miles yesterday. We transported 60 patients. That's something to be proud of. I don't know what all those patients were; we're not supposed to know. But I know that every day I go to work, whether the phone rings or not, if somebody out there needs me, I'm going to go if it's safe to do so. That goes across the board for paramedics, rotor pilots, fixed-wing pilots. Regardless of everything else, we're very happy to do what we do. That's why we're there, and it is what we do. We're medevac pilots.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you for doing your job. We appreciate that the pilots, regardless of what sort of aircraft they're flying, and the paramedics who are on the ground, are out there doing their job; and, I guess, apologies that the administrative levels of Ornge have interfered with the good work you're out there doing every day and dragged you into a hornet's nest that you have no need to be in the middle of. Thank you very much.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I appreciate that.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the official opposition. Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Mr. Binderup, I want to put into context the comments by Ms. Sandals. Those comments were made in response to this document here, which was a confidential document that listed numerous incidents where paramedics had to decline critically ill patients because they were incapable of doing basic CPR because of the interior of the AW139. Are you familiar with that?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I'm familiar with the document, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Does that concern you as someone who is in your profession, that you would have to turn down a patient because the interior of a helicopter would not allow a paramedic to do CPR?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Absolutely. That's an issue.

Mr. Frank Klees: I would think so.

I want to clarify something else as well. The advantage that I have is that every word that is said in the Legislature and in this hearing is recorded, as is yours. I'm sure that your colleagues will observe this hearing right across the province, and they'll be very interested in what you have to say here, as they were when Mr. Wade was here.

I have some of that record here, and I can tell you, when Mr. Wade came forward, there wasn't a negative thing that Mr. Wade said about fixed-wing pilots or about paramedics. He had a great deal of negative comment to make about the administration at Ornge, the lack of proper resourcing, the fact that incidents such as the one reported just yesterday by the CBC in Thunder Bay—Thunder Bay without an Ornge helicopter yet one more time, and the reason is understaffing.

To Mr. Wade's credit, he was very courageous. I can't tell you the number of times that I spoke with him when he was very hesitant to give us factual information that we could use to make the point not only here in this committee but in the Legislature to get the attention, yes, of the government but also of the administration at Ornge to say, "What is happening is unacceptable."

Sir, you are a very experienced pilot. I have to believe that you're a pretty strong guy. I think you can stand up for yourself pretty well. I can't understand, I have to admit to you, that you felt compelled to report a fellow colleague for what you have described here as being angry, as being unco-operative, as being offensive. You come across him once or twice a month. I would think you could hold your own, perhaps even understand that the reason that Mr. Wade is not a happy man is because of the circumstances that he has to face on a very regular basis about not having enough paramedics to respond to a call, because he shares your calling as well.

Here's what Mr. Wade said when he was here. First of all, he told us about the problems of understaffing of paramedics. He was asked the question, "Are things getting better under the new administration?" On July 31, he said this: "It's not gotten better from the rotary perspective. From the fixed-wing side, kudos to my colleagues. They're doing great work."

Mr. Wade continues to advocate because of what he feels is a patient care issue. I'm concerned about how we got here with you, and I'd like to just follow through on some questions with you. The email that my colleague distributed, that you read into the record, went to your colleagues.

You are the flight training captain?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I am one of them, yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: And approved check pilot.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: I understand that you're really the person who reports to management as to which one of the pilots—or if you do your check with the pilot, management would take your recommendation as to whether those pilots deserve to stay on or whether they should perhaps be promoted. Is that true?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Not just me, and not just for those qualifications.

Mr. Frank Klees: No, but that is one of your responsibilities, right?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: So those people who are on your email list hold you in pretty high regard, because, as you say—and your entire email is all about your job, let's face it. They're going to be concerned about theirs too. I would think it would be reasonable to assume that any of those colleagues who got that email from you in which you say that one of their colleagues is conspiring with an MPP to bring down Ornge—is it fair to say that those people on that distribution list would be somewhat intimidated by that?

1440

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No, sir.

Mr. Frank Klees: Really? You don't think that would concern them at all?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: How can you say that?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Because I know those guys and girls. I work very closely with them. I have a very good relationship with them. Yes, I'm one of the training captains; I do check rides. We also have outside people do check rides, but I am—

Mr. Frank Klees: Just one of the guys.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: They're my friends. They're my colleagues. No, I would say, absolutely not.

Mr. Frank Klees: Can you share with us what would have emboldened you to ascribe to Mr. Wade the objective of bringing down Ornge?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I'm not sure I understand the question.

Mr. Frank Klees: You make it very clear in your email that it's Mr. Wade's objective to bring down Ornge, and you ascribe that same objective to me.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: That was a statement that he made.

Mr. Frank Klees: Is there anything in the course of the last number of months that would cause you to think that I, as a member of this committee, as a member of the Legislature who spent hours and hours trying to determine what went wrong and what it is that we need to do to get things right—that it would be my objective to bring down Ornge?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Not specifically, no.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you. I want to assure you that that is the last thing that any of us here want to do. The reason that we spent hours and hours and hours on this file is because what we want to do is ensure that people like yourself—whether it's on the fixed-wing or rotor-wing, whether it's paramedics or anyone else on the front line—are properly resourced so that we determine what went wrong and so that we can ensure that it'll never happen again, and so that we can restore confidence in our air ambulance service. It'll be up to us to determine what the best go-forward strategy is going to be. That's our objective here. I would suggest that everything that I've heard—there hasn't been a witness that has come forward that hasn't expressed that same objective.

I will say this: The timing seemed somewhat questionable of your email that went out to all of your colleagues. Two days later we get a letter here, and it just so happens to be 24 hours before Bruce Wade is testifying. Is that just coincidence, or was there an intention on your part to send a signal, as you said in your email, that you're going to take it upon yourself; you're going to do something about it; you're going to separate yourself from Wade and you're going to send a strong message? Was that the intent?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes, it was. My intent with the letter was to present a group of pilots that felt differently. Again, my sentiment towards Mr. Wade was based on what he said at work and how he said it. I wasn't drawing conclusions. Many of the pilots have heard him make those statements. Yes, it made us quite concerned—

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Wade, today, is—

Mr. David Zimmer: Wait a second. Let him finish. He's midway through his answer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer, it's okay. I will chair.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you, Chair.

Mr. Frank Klees: I thought you were finished. Thank you, Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. Wade, today, is suspended.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: In large part because of your actions of filing a grievance against him. An investigation is under way.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: We raised the issue in the Legislature today that his suspension came within hours of him testifying here. You yourself admitted that your letter, your email, his testifying—all were interlinked.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: The timing was absolutely awful.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, the timing, in one sense, was awful for sure. In the other, it certainly achieved a certain objective, didn't it?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I had absolutely no objective in terms of having Mr. Wade suspended. That was not my wish.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, if you didn't want him to be suspended, what was your objective in signing a grievance?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: The grievance was—ultimately, I wanted somebody to take him aside and say—

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, perhaps we should have a copy of the grievance so that we all know what—

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We've passed a resolution asking for that, Mr. Zimmer. Continue, Mr. Klees.

Mr. Frank Klees: Please continue.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Okay. Sorry. I thought that—

Mr. Frank Klees: So you filed a grievance. What was your objective?

Mr. David Zimmer: What was the grievance?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Was for somebody—sorry, I lost my train of thought—was for somebody—

Mr. Frank Klees: Is it not true that the purpose of your filing the grievance was to silence Mr. Wade, to shut him down because he was complaining about what was going on—

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, that's an inappropriate line of questioning—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer, if you can please just—

Mr. Frank Klees: It's a reasonable conclusion.

Mr. David Zimmer: —we don't have the grievance in front of us.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Will you allow the questioning, please? Continue.

Mr. David Zimmer: Well, maybe he can tell us what the substance of the grievance was and then that'll help us to understand the—

M^{me} France Gélinas: When you get to ask questions, ask him.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Zimmer. Please.

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer, can you please—

Mr. Frank Klees: You don't have to listen to Mr. Zimmer. He'll have his time. I'm asking the questions.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Okay. I wanted somebody to take Mr. Wade aside and say, "Bruce, you're making people angry. Please stop it." Ultimately—

Mr. Frank Klees: So it was for the purpose of silencing him?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I wanted him—I have conversations all the time with paramedics, with maintenance engineers from Canadian who have radically different opinions from me. We're able to sit down or stand in the hangar and have conversations about it. At the end of the day, we agree to disagree. I was not in any way able to have a conversation with Mr. Wade. It was very hostile. Every encounter with him was very hostile.

Mr. Frank Klees: We have some people like that in the Legislature here, too.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I can imagine.

Mr. Frank Klees: But we don't go about filing grievances. However, when you wrote your letter, were you advised by Mr. Gravelle's office that the Minister of Health would be appearing at the committee the same time that Mr. Wade was going to be here?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Were you advised that the letter would be read at the committee?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I honestly had no idea where it would go. I just sent it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did anyone at any time ever tell you that the intimidation of a witness is an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I wasn't, in my mind, intimidating anybody.

Mr. Frank Klees: You were never told that—

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, that's entirely inappropriate. The information is that this person is trying to—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer—

Mr. David Zimmer:—and you should rein Mr. Klees in. That's entirely inappropriate. That's scandalous.

Mr. Frank Klees: Thank you, Mr. Zimmer. I think it takes—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, if you can not lead the witness, that would be appreciated.

Mr. Frank Klees: I'll try not to lead the witness. I'm just simply trying to tell you what seems to be apparent to a lot of people who were observing what took place.

As you say, it may be an unfortunate timing, but the reality is, we have a circumstance where Mr. Wade was complaining about what was happening at Ornge. He was concerned about understaffing. He was making recommendations. He was coming here. Two days before he was scheduled to be here, you send out your email to 40 of your colleagues saying that you're going to separate yourself from Wade. You've had enough with him. Now we get the letter read at the committee hours before Mr. Wade is here; in fact, he's sitting in the audience listening to it being read. Would that be intimidating? It would be intimidating to me, and I'm just simply saying—and Mr. Zimmer knows well—that intimidation of a witness is—

Mr. David Zimmer: Chair, that's inappropriate.

Mr. Frank Klees:—is inappropriate and it is illegal.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer—

Interjection.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer, if you can be quiet for a moment, please. I would just clarify that the committee has asked for information to determine if intimidation has occurred, but there's been no conclusion by the committee that intimidation has occurred—

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, that's right, and I think I'm entitled to my opinion about that, and we'll have to see what happens. My point simply is that that is how this is being perceived. Mr. Binderup, I'm just saying to you that we appreciate you coming forward—

Mr. David Zimmer: Perceptions aren't facts. Fairy tales aren't facts. Your daydreams aren't facts.
1450

Mr. Frank Klees: You see Mr. Zimmer, who is trying to drown out the facts of what has happened, and there's a reason for that. They were very quick to read your letter that praises the minister. When we challenged the circumstance under which that letter was presented to this committee—

Interjection.

Mr. Frank Klees: He can't keep quiet. I understand that, because I'm used to heckling in this place, but unfortunately, you're not.

So, Mr. Binderup, here's how I'd like to leave this with you. There's a man who today is suspended. From what I can conclude, the reason that he is suspended, is not working today and is under investigation, is because you took issue with the fact that he was expressing his concerns—and, yes, obviously in a passionate way. My question to you is: Is that what your intention was?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Let me answer your question with a question. Had this gone just a little bit differently and had the union been able to do what I was hoping they would be able to do with the grievance, if that's what it was, we wouldn't be having this conversation. I would have sent the letter anyway, but the issue between Mr. Wade and myself would have been resolved either through union channels or through the company itself. The fact that it has gone to an investigation and they've gone so far as to suspend Mr. Wade with pay—I have no control over that. So it could have gone very differently.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you don't blame us for drawing the conclusion that the reason for the suspension was more because of Mr. Wade's testimony—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Klees, remember, that's your—Mr. Klees, it's your opinion. Please don't say "us," being the committee.

Continue.

Mr. Frank Klees: Well, I think some of us on the committee probably agree.

Can I just ask this, Mr. Binderup? Would you agree that this wouldn't be an issue, Mr. Wade would not be suspended today, you would not have filed a grievance, had the issue been different? If those bases, and specifically the Thunder Bay base, were properly staffed, if Mr. Wade did not have to agonize over the fact that calls come in and there are no paramedics to respond to the call—that that is really the issue; that the issue is the underfunding or the understaffing at that Thunder Bay base? That's really the problem, and who we should be focusing on is in fact the Minister of Health, whom you praised, to say, "Minister, we've got a problem. Staff us up. Get us up to the point where not only can the fixed-wing division of Ornge do their job, but let's ensure that the rotary-wing side of our operation is also able to do their job."

That's the problem. The problem is not Mr. Wade; the problem is the Ministry of Health, which after all this length of time still has bases that are understaffed. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: You don't agree that there are bases that are understaffed?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I agree with that 100%, but I don't think that's the point you're trying to make.

My problem with Mr. Wade was his behaviour. Maybe that behaviour was brought on by the issues; I can't speak to that. I don't know Bruce that well. I will grant you that he is a very passionate individual. But my issue with Mr. Wade was brought on, and this whole situation was brought on, by his actions, not the issues directly at Ornge.

Mr. Frank Klees: So you yourself agree that it didn't merit a suspension; that's what you said earlier.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: That was not my goal, certainly.

Mr. Frank Klees: That wasn't your goal—

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: That wasn't something I wanted.

Mr. Frank Klees: Do you think a suspension was deserved?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I can't speak to that. I wouldn't have wanted that. If somebody had asked me in the beginning, that wouldn't have been one of my choices.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Binderup, thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Unless the government wants to use their 30 seconds—

M^{me} France G  linas: I have my two minutes that I saved—

Mr. David Zimmer: I've got 30 seconds, Chair.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. We have five minutes left, so you will split that evenly, because you've already used about 22 minutes. Go ahead.

Mr. David Zimmer: And I have 30 seconds.

M^{me} France G  linas: The first question I want to ask you is, before coming to testify today, did you talk to anybody in Ornge management?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I did speak with a couple of folks in our communications department.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Who were they?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: James MacDonald—mostly to James—and I did speak very briefly with Jennifer Tracey as well.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Jennifer Tracey?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes. Really, it was more just to let her know that I had been invited. James and I talked briefly. I wanted to try to get an idea of the flavour of how the committee hearings were going, just to try to get the lay of the land, if you will.

M^{me} France G  linas: You made reference to having a contact with Minister Gravelle or Minister Gravelle's office staff. Who is this contact, and how did you come to have contact with Minister Gravelle's office?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: The gentleman I talked to was Mr. Larry Joy. That was the only contact I had.

M^{me} France G  linas: How do you know Larry?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I don't know him, actually, but I know somebody who worked for him. It was a friend of mine from Nova Scotia who gave me his name.

M^{me} France G  linas: Do you know Mr. McKerlie?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I've met him a couple of times. I wouldn't say that I know him, but I have met him a couple of times, yes.

M^{me} France G  linas: Do you know anybody within the Liberal Party that you are friends with?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: What about Minister Matthews, Deb Matthews? Do you have any contact with her, or do you know anyone in her office?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No, none whatsoever. I've never spoken with her.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: And how many times have you met Mr. McKerlie?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Including today, twice.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: When did you meet him today?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: This morning.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll move to the government for a minute of questioning. Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: I just want to confirm again from your letter that the following phrase that you used in your letter is a direct quote from Mr. Wade. I'll read the sentence to you again: "He," referring to Wade, "has also made it very clear through many verbal altercations with flight crew that he wishes to aid Mr. Klees in 'bringing Ornge down'...." That's a quote you heard Mr. Wade say?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes, sir.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And the last 30 seconds of your question before we go?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The other thing I just want to double-check with you: When I look at your email to your colleagues, dated July 27, and look at the language, you say, "I filed an FOOR"—past tense—"with respect to Mr. Wade ... and indicated that he is creating a hostile work environment...."

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I understand from that that your complaint, your grievance, was with respect to the workplace atmosphere.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: It was not with respect to his testimony, because he didn't give his testimony until later that week.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: That's true. The FOOR came out certainly before the letter and before the testimony.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it was relevant to what was already happening in the workplace, not about the testimony.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes, ma'am.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. We shall move to Mr. Klees for the last two minutes. Go ahead.

Mr. Frank Klees: Mr. Binderup, you mentioned that you met with Mr. McKerlie this morning.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: Was that at his request?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No, sir. I went to the head office. I had some time to kill before coming here.

Mr. Frank Klees: What did you discuss with Mr. McKerlie?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I didn't discuss anything. I shook his hand and—

Mr. Frank Klees: Pardon?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I shook his hand and he said, "Good luck."

Mr. Frank Klees: Good luck?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes.

Mr. Frank Klees: What did he mean by that?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I'm not sure.

Mr. Frank Klees: And that was it?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: That was it.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you meet with anyone else there?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: At Ornge head office?

Mr. Frank Klees: Yes.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: Yes. Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay.

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: I'd never been in the facility yet, so I got a little bit of a grand tour.

Mr. Frank Klees: Did you show anyone there your script that you used here, in terms of your preparation?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No, not at all.

Mr. Frank Klees: No?

Mr. Poul-Erik Binderup: No.

Mr. Frank Klees: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you very much for coming before the committee today. It's appreciated.

We are adjourned.

The committee adjourned at 1500.

COMMITTEE BUSINESS

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'll call this committee to order, then. The first thing we're going to do is talk about a motion that was passed a while ago—it was moved on March 7 by Ms. Gélinas, and I'll just read it again for everyone's benefit because it was a while ago that it was moved, and that is:

"I move that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts immediately request that the Auditor General examine the contracts between the Ontario Power Authority and gas-fired plant proponents TransCanada Corp. (Oakville) and Greenfield South Power Corp./Eastern Power (Mississauga), focusing specifically on the potential cost to ratepayers of the government's 2010 and 2011 decisions to cancel the projects, and report back in a special report."

I will open the floor up for debate. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you. This is a motion I had put forward way back at the beginning of March. At the time, after I had heard what everybody had to say, including some of the comments that the Auditor General had made regarding the timing of his work and what he had to do, I felt quite comfortable with a deferral of the motion.

This being said, I brought it back last week and listened to some of the comments that were made. Then again, one of the most telling comments that was shared last week had to do with the auditor feeling that—at the time, he used a two-to-three-week time frame—he would have time in his schedule to do some of that work.

I fully understand that the state of negotiations between the government and TransCanada Corp. is not the same as the one with Greenfield South Power Corp./Eastern Power; that is, the state of negotiations between the cancellation in Oakville and the cancellation in Mississauga is not the same.

The direction from the committee is clear: We want the auditor to go in to really look at what the potential costs to ratepayers are. This being said, I trust his judgment. If sharing information was to have a negative impact, as in increasing the costs that the ratepayers would end up paying, then I will trust his judgment that he would let us know that and not share any information.

What I would like him to do is really go in, look at the state of the transactions, the way they are, and report back to us information that is as precise as he can, always with the caveat that if sharing some of that information puts the ratepayers at risk, then be very, very conservative in your reporting back. Only share with us information in a way that will never result in the taxpayers having to pay more.

I trust the Auditor General. He has a good relationship with the people he works with to ask those questions, and if the answer to those questions is that the auditor believes that there's a risk in sharing that information, then use your judgment as to how you share that information or when you share it. I would like the auditor to go in, investigate those two transactions and report back to us. You would certainly be free to report back on one of those contracts before the other, if that makes sense, report in great detail about one and in great generality about the other. At the end of the day, I will, and I think we all will, trust your judgment that you will not make public any information that puts the ratepayers at risk.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Are you finished? Okay. And the auditor did have a comment about the specific language of this particular motion.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Sure.

Mr. Jim McCarter: The only comment was that when it says "examine the contracts," I'm always wary of when we go in, someone might say, "Well, Auditor"—

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry, Auditor, I can't hear you. There's a fan in the back.

Mr. Jim McCarter: Just in reference to the second line, where it says, "examine the contracts," I'm always a bit wary when it's very specific about just the contracts. I might get the people who we're talking to saying, "Well, the motion just allowed you to look at the contracts, Auditor. We're not going to provide you with other information." I suspect there will be a lot of other information besides the contracts, such as correspondence, letters, emails, so maybe "contracts and related information" or "related documentation" would give me a bit of a wider purview to access what I feel would be needed to do a complete job in looking at this.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So examine the documentation between?

Mr. Jim McCarter: The documentation or anything like that which doesn't—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So this would be an amendment, then?

M^{me} France G  linas: Yes.

Mr. Jim McCarter: I would say “contracts and related documentation” or the documentation between—anything like that would be fine, just as long as it doesn’t limit it to a specific document such as a contract.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay, so, “examine the contracts and related documents.”

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Chair, point of order: This would need to be placed as an amendment, I think.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I think she’s just working on that right now.

M^{me} France G  linas: If everybody is okay with a friendly amendment, I could change the word “contracts” to “documents.”

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No.

M^{me} France G  linas: No friendly amendment?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We told you what we would agree to.

M^{me} France G  linas: Okay, so then I would—I don’t know if I’d move to amend, but I would take the recommendations of the Auditor General to say, “examine the contracts and related documentation.”

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Any comments?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Could we have that in writing, please?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Certainly. We’ll have to recess for five minutes to get that in writing.

M^{me} France G  linas: No problem.

The committee recessed from 0915 to 0919.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, we’re back in session. Everyone has a copy of the amendment to the original motion. Discussion? Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: My concern with the amendment, “and related documentation,” is that the auditor shows up at the office at these power places and wants to examine the contracts. I can see that’s a clearly defined—it’s the contract between the entities involved in this thing.

But then, speaking as the lawyer—and I’ve been through this in complex commercial litigation where parties, either on examination for discovery or in the proceedings, want to examine related or—another expression that is sometimes used—relevant documentation.

Then there’s a great row that gets started about what’s relevant, because the parties are sitting around the table with a pile of documents and one party says, “I don’t think these documents are related,” and the other party says, “Well, I think they are,” and the other party says, “But you haven’t seen them. I’ve got them in my possession and I say that these documents are not related. Not only that, but the other party to the contract agrees with me and says they’re not related.”

So the only person who thinks they may be related—and I say this with the greatest respect to the auditor—is, in this case, the auditor or the person who wants to examine the document. But that person is caught in a Catch-22, because they haven’t seen the documents so they can’t make an informed decision on whether it’s related. And the other party’s in a Catch-22 and saying, “Well, we’re not going to show you the documents because we say they’re not related.” We get into this bizarre situation, then, of trying to sort out that issue.

So my point is that the expression “and related documents”—what does that include? What does that exclude? How does one define “related documents”? Related documents in person A’s view may be such-and-such, and person B may have another view, and person C has another view. Then we get into a great toing and froing, and the thing doesn’t get resolved.

Then, I suppose, the question becomes who sorts out what’s related, what form is used, or who’s got the hammer on that decision. I suppose what happens then is that perhaps it comes back to the public accounts committee, and we have a discussion. But how do the members of this committee sort out what’s related?

It’s such a loose definition of “related documents,” or “relevant documents,” as it’s sometimes used in other contexts, but the essence is the same. It seems to me that the amendment “and related documents” is going to cause, and has the potential—in fact, I would argue that it’s a potential that will actually be realized, because we all know the sensitivity of the documentation involved.

We’ve heard from both parties to the contract, the government side and the private sector side, and their positions are, or have been publicly—and at other times, messages they’ve sent to this committee. Indeed, the Minister of Energy, speaking before the estimates committee, spoke at length on this issue and in fact tendered a four-page, single-spaced, detailed letter outlining the reason why he was claiming privilege on, really, what is the related documentation, because the related documentation necessarily has to deal with the negotiations and all the documentations that have arisen post-contract, as the parties are trying to wind down the contract.

This issue was debated for hours and hours and hours at the estimates committee, and I was subbed onto the estimates committee to speak to these issues. The final result of that is, as I understand it, the question about whether that documentation has to be produced at estimates committee is working its way up to the Speaker’s office now for a ruling. But the same issue that the Speaker has been asked to deal with on this question of what documents are properly before the estimates committee, on this very same issue, is still awaiting a decision from the Speaker. So we may well find ourselves in the situation where the Speaker has issued a ruling which may be in conflict with this amendment—if it were to pass—that the Auditor General should go out and look at other documentation.

I have no difficulty with the auditor looking at the contracts if the main motion passes because the contract is a clearly defined document that both parties have access to. It’s there in its entirety, there’s a start and a finish to it. But it’s the related documentation, it’s such a loosey-goosey—and I say that with the greatest of respect. I think it presents problems for the auditor because where does one draw the line? Do you look at 10 cubic feet of documentation or do you look at a pile of six inches of documentation?

It puts the Auditor General in a difficult position because he shows up at one of the private sector companies and says, "I want the related documentation," and they respond through their lawyers or through their contract people who are managing the contracts, "No, that's not related."

What does the Auditor General do then? He can take the company at its word that it's not related. He can accept the company's lawyers' arguments that it's not related. Or the Auditor General may quite properly say to himself, "I'm the Auditor General, I have to do my job and I've been asked to look at the related documents. I want to see all the documents and I'll decide if they're related." Then we get into this whole issue of why the Auditor General should decide what's related rather than the private sector entity or the government.

Do you know what's going to happen with all of this? It's going to end up in front of a judge who's going to hear respectfully from the Auditor General and hear respectfully from the private sector entities and from the government. And the judge, as he does—as Ms. Elliott will tell you, this is an issue that crops up in litigation all the time. Parties A, B and C, however many parties, are arguing over whether document X should be produced or not produced and that sort of stuff. They generate hours and hours of billings and hours and hours of time—and Ms. Elliott's smiling knowingly at that, as I expect we've both been through that.

Ultimately, it ends up in front of a judge who says it is or it isn't. And that's not the end of the matter and it won't be the end of the matter at that level because there's the potential for significant amounts of money involved on these penalties that may or may not be out there. We don't know and we won't know until the negotiations to wind down the contracts are over. So whoever loses at that first-level judge is going to end up in the Divisional Court and it's going to go on from there. It'll be months and months, it'll be the better part of a year, before somebody says, "This is the relevant documentation that should be turned over to the auditor."

Now, what happens in the meantime? In the meantime, while everybody's arguing over the related documentation, the main issue about having the Auditor General examine the contracts in the narrower sense is parked and it's waiting, because the Auditor General—and the committee properly says, "We want the related documentation to go along with the examination of the contracts and we're not going to examine the contracts until we sort out the related documentation issue," and this thing's going to go on and on for the better part of a year.

It seems to me that the amendment to the motion ought to fail. I'm going to vote against it. Let's stick to the definition of "contract," because all of the parties to this issue, the private sector and the government parties, know what the contract is. They have it in their hand.

I appreciate where Ms. Gélinas is coming from on this, to get more and more, but there may be a principle here, the old philosophical concept of Occam's razor—he's heard of it—where less is actually more. And more, in this case, asking to look at a ton of documentation, is going to create a whole host of problems, which is just going to, like dumping a whole lot of stuff down the drain, choke the drainage system.

That's why I'm going to vote against this, because I see big, big problems down the road because of the looseness of the definition "other documentation."

I know my colleague Ms. Sandals wants to speak to the matter, so I'll stop there. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And I would just ask the auditor to make a comment, if I may, on the definition that you were discussing.

Mr. Jim McCarter: Sure. My sense is, the reason for the suggestion was to make the motion consistent with the Audit Act. Under the Auditor General Act, when I go in to do an audit, I'm entitled to have access, basically, to anything that I feel is necessary to do the audit. I think in this case, even if the amendment wasn't made, and even if it just said "contract," I think my position would be, when I go in to do the audit, I would still say that under the Auditor General Act I'm entitled to all information that I think I need in order to assess what the intent of the motion is. So my sense was just to make the motion consistent with the Audit Act.

Just as far as going before a judge, I think my position would be that if at any time—and I face this in other audits, too, from time to time—a ministry or an agency might say, "Auditor, we're not going to give you access to that," basically all I do is I just report that, and that's the end of it.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals?

Mr. David Zimmer: Can I ask the auditor a question?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Go ahead and ask the question.

Mr. David Zimmer: If one of the parties says on an audit, "I don't want to give you that documentation," and you say, "That's the end of it. I just report to the Legislature then that I was denied or I couldn't get access to this," then the matter is still out there hanging, isn't it?

Mr. Jim McCarter: Usually what we find is that when somebody says to us, "Auditor, we're not going to give you this piece of information," typically that would be at a lower level. Usually it goes to the deputy minister. At that point, usually we tend to get the information fairly quickly. There have been one or two instances where we still had some resistance. In that case, I would typically pick up the phone and even phone the minister and say, "I just want to make you aware that I'm going to be reporting this in my report." And again, usually we get the information. The odd time we haven't gotten the information, it would be because of kind of a legal matter and we would basically point that out in our report.

On this one, it could happen, but with respect to the amendment, whether the amendment is passed or not, I was just trying to make the wording suggest that the motion be consistent with the intent of the Audit Act, and the intent of the Audit Act is that the Auditor General will be provided with the information that he feels is necessary to basically do the audit work necessary. But I think even if the amendment was not passed, that's how I would approach the audit when I went in, to basically say, if I think there's a piece of correspondence or something that I need in order to address the motion in a fulsome way, I would request it. And if, at the end of the day, the OPA said, "We're still not going to give it to you," I think I would just include that as part of my report to the Legislature and indicate the underlying reasons, and that would be the end of it. But I certainly wouldn't be going to court or going before a judge.

Mr. David Zimmer: Just a question for clarification from the auditor. So the situation is a little different here in that, for instance, at the estimates committee, a request for the same documentation has been made and the minister responded in a fulsome letter, which I'll get into later, in which the minister formally claimed privilege on essentially all of these documents until the negotiations have been concluded and the matter has been settled. And as I understand the minister's position, he obviously has no difficulty with the hindsight view after the negotiation, but the privilege has been claimed, that if the documents are produced, it could jeopardize the negotiations. That matter is working itself through to the Speaker's office now, because it was unresolved after hours and hours and hours of debate.

So what is the auditor's position if, on the same issue that's working its way to the Speaker's office, the Speaker—I'm not prejudging. Just hypothetically, if the Speaker says the minister's claim for privilege stands and the documents don't have to be released, yet at the same time the auditor is going in with a direction to examine the contracts and related documents, which is the negotiation stuff on the settlement, and the Speaker and the Auditor General then find themselves in what amounts to conflicting positions, what would the auditor's view of that difficulty be?

Mr. Jim McCarter: On the Mississauga one, where there has been a settlement, my sense is that we would get access to the documentation that we need in order to be able to fulfill the intent of the committee's motion.

My sense on the Oakville one, where it's currently in arbitration—and taking into consideration Ms. Gélinas's comments about not disclosing any information—is that it could very well be that some of this information could be subject to client-solicitor privilege, or even if we were to get it, in my opinion, it could be damaging to the province's negotiating position.

In either one of those situations, I think that I would basically—it might be a much shorter report relating to the Oakville one, basically saying that here's sort of the state of the nation on this, but at the end of the day, all I can do is come up with a fairly broad range. Because of these other factors, in my opinion, it's not appropriate either to divulge the information, or it's protected by client-solicitor privilege. That could very well be the end result.

Mr. David Zimmer: But, Auditor General, under our parliamentary system and the ministerial system of government, it's the minister's decision to make the call on whether documents are privileged. If this motion went through with the amendment, "examine the contracts and related documents"—and I say this with respect—and the Auditor General gets in and gets the related documents, and this Auditor General decides, "No, these documents aren't going to affect the province's negotiating position, so I'm going to comment on them and they'll in effect be out in the public forum," isn't that a call, as a matter of parliamentary law, that the minister makes, the claim to privilege, subject to the ruling of a judge on the judicial branch of the government? We've got the legislative branch, the public service, the executive branch and the legal branch. It puts the Auditor General, whether it's you or any other Auditor General, in a difficult position, because you are making a call on whether documents are going to affect the province's negotiating position or not. Surely that's a decision that, in our system of government, the minister makes.

Mr. Jim McCarter: I think there's probably some truth to that. I think there could be some of the documents or some of the information for which the Auditor General would have to use his or her professional judgment to make the call: "No, I think they're just saying this because they don't want the information disclosed," or "I think what they're saying is reasonable. It could affect the province's negotiating position, and therefore, in my opinion, notwithstanding that I have right of access, I'm not prepared to disclose it." I don't disagree that the Auditor General would have to exercise his or her professional—

Mr. David Zimmer: But my question is, isn't that something that properly rests with the minister and—I say this with the greatest respect—not the Auditor General, subject, of course, to a judge's view of the matter?

Mr. Jim McCarter: But I—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll go on. Ms. Elliott had a comment she wanted to make.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Sure. I would just suggest, from a strictly legal perspective, that the suggestions for the amendment that have been made are consistent with the provisions of the Audit Act in that the Auditor General already has the ability to take a look at this. He has never been constrained by looking strictly at contracts before. It has always been understood that he has the ability to look at all relevant documentation.

I think the rest of it is purely speculation about what might or might not happen. The auditor routinely looks at all documentation, not just contracts. We trust his judgment and that if there are conflicts that arise in the course of examining the documents, whether they're privileged or not, the Auditor General will make his professional determination in that case, and we certainly are satisfied that he would exercise that judgment accordingly.

I would respectfully ask that we move on. I think we're arguing about something that we don't really need to be arguing about at this point.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Other comments?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Ready for the vote.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Point of order.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Could we have a 20-minute recess before the vote?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Before that can happen, I will call the vote, then.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And now point of order. I thought you had called the vote.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): No, I hadn't. Okay, so we'll have a 20-minute recess before the vote.

The committee recessed from 0940 to 1000.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We're back in session, then, and we have a vote on the amendment from Ms. Gélinas.

All in favour? A show of hands. All opposed? We have a tie vote, and I will vote in favour of the motion. My logic is that I trust the auditor's discretion and judgment, and this was an amendment specifically suggested by the auditor to make the amendment consistent with the Auditor General Act.

We now move to the motion, as amended. Any debate?

Mr. Victor Fedeli: Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, Mr. Fedeli.

Mr. Victor Fedeli: Thank you very much, Chair. I will be—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Excuse me. If you're on the main motion, we never got to speak to the main motion.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I believe that's what we're doing.

Mr. Victor Fedeli: I haven't either.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You'll get a chance to speak.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. Victor Fedeli: Thank you again, Chair. I will be supporting this motion. I did sit through this committee when it was discussed the first time and agreed with the AG's point that it should be taken up later. I congratulate you for moving it to this particular point.

I do recall that one of the comments made at that time was, "Well, we shouldn't be discussing it," because it was in litigation. The Mississauga one was in litigation at the time. As we all know, that's over. That has been settled, and we've moved on. There is no litigation for the Oakville plant. Therefore, there's nothing interfering with the Auditor General to proceed with this report.

We're most eager—I think the public is most eager to understand this as well. I agree with Ms. Gélinas's point about discretion, that if and when something is determined, its release would end up costing the taxpayers more money. I agree with it being kept in the purview of the AG until such time as it would not affect the taxpayer.

For instance, we've seen the math from Mississauga, the $190-million cancellation of Mississauga. We've seen that almost $90 million of it was purely a cancellation fee, and when extrapolated over the cost and size of the Oakville plant, we know the bare minimum of this cancellation will be $300 million. Many industry insiders expect that number to be $1 billion. Certainly, if there are documents within the government that say, "We're concerned about paying a billion dollars, but maybe we should be doing this at this point rather than fighting for the $300 million"—these are the kinds of areas where I would expect the auditor not to release those facts. Those facts would of course lead the other side to know what's in the deck of cards of the government. If it would cost $300 million instead of $1 billion, the taxpayer of course will be much happier, but I would not want the corporations to know that the government is ready to pay out a billion dollars.

So, while I support this motion, I agree with your philosophy of not disclosing numbers at the purview of the Auditor General if it would be deemed or viewed to increase any cost to the taxpayer. The $300 million will be bad enough; any further is unnecessary. So I will be supporting this, Chair. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, thank you very much.

We've made it clear all along that obviously the Auditor General can go in at any point without a special request from the committee. So if the auditor chooses to do a value-for-money on either Mississauga or Oakville or both, that's certainly within his authority to do so with respect to looking at the Ministry of Energy and the Ontario Power Authority. There's no question that the auditor has the authority to do this within the legislation that controls the auditor's activities anyway.

But we've been very clear that if we're going to have the auditor spending time on this—because there is an issue of having his staff gearing up to do an investigation—if we were going to have the auditor use his time to do this, it would be most productive to do it at the point where the negotiations, arbitrations, whatever, happen to be complete.

We've had extensive conversation with the auditor already this morning about whether or not the auditor would have access to the documents with respect to Oakville, given that Oakville is still under negotiation, and that it would be the auditor's view—I think I'm paraphrasing you accurately, Jim, if I say that it would not be your intent to interfere with negotiations over Oakville if that would interfere with the public interest. Is that fair?

Mr. Jim McCarter: Yes, that would be fair to say.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: We see the Mississauga issue, where the negotiations are complete, it's a matter of public record what the settlement is—that's settled; it's been resolved. It isn't that the audit will in and of itself interfere with the process of trying to resolve the issue, and it would be appropriate for the auditor to have a look at the Mississauga situation and look at value for money.

That is not the case with the Oakville plant. The Oakville plant, the cancellation of that plant, is still the subject of negotiation. Although not the subject of litigation before the court, I believe that there is an arbitrator involved, so there are proceedings which are legal, though not necessarily litigation, ongoing. This is a very active issue.

To our mind, if we're going to send the auditor in, it should be when the process on Oakville is complete, because if we're asking the auditor to comment on value for money, he's in no position to comment on value for money if the discussion is still ongoing; we don't know what the outcome is. How can he possibly tell us what the value-for-money implications are if in fact there has actually not been a resolution?

It seems to us that the motion as it is before us requesting that the auditor—and I quote the motion: "...immediately request that the Auditor General examine the contracts and related documentation between the Ontario Power Authority and gas-fired plant proponents TransCanada Corp. (Oakville)"—we have a problem with that—"and Greenfield South Power Corp./Eastern Power (Mississauga)"—we're okay with that—"focusing specifically on the potential cost to ratepayers of the government's 2010 and 2011 decisions to cancel the projects, and report back in a special report."

We see this as two distinct issues. We're in agreement with one of the issues; we're in disagreement with the other issues. As my colleague Mr. Zimmer has reflected, not only has there been extensive conversation at the estimates committee about what documents can and cannot be produced with respect to Oakville, but the issue of the production of documents with respect to Oakville is currently before the Speaker, and we really don't see that we should be sending the auditor off to look at Oakville when the Speaker hasn't even ruled on the issue yet.

As I say, we agree: Mississauga's done. It's appropriate for the auditor to look at Mississauga, either as directed by this committee or of his own volition. Either way, we agree that that's an appropriate activity. We do not agree that Oakville is an appropriate audit to be pursuing at this point because of the practical reason: What on earth is the auditor going to audit with respect to value for money?

Furthermore, what is the Speaker going to say about the availability of the documents? Because we now get into this issue that my colleague raised, which is that the auditor is an officer of the Legislature. We know that the Speaker is about to make a ruling—well, we don't know when he is. I know no more than you do about when he might choose to make that ruling, but we know that it has been presented as an issue to the Speaker, which has been extensively argued and which the Speaker will need to rule on. So we believe that it is quite premature to pursue the Oakville part of this motion at this time.

We think that we also need to have a bit of a discussion around what are the expectations of the committee with respect to timing. There was some suggestion that the auditor would be able to move in very quickly right now and have a look at Mississauga. I think the auditor had indicated to us one day when we were having a discussion—I don't know if it was captured by Hansard, but the auditor talked about the fact that he could go in now because he's got a little bit of a lull and look at Mississauga. You also mentioned I think that from the other part of your role, from the public accounts point of view, you had actually already been doing some work on Mississauga. So that's a file which is sort of half open, if I can put it that way—your office is familiar with the documentation—so that's something you might be able to do reasonably quickly. I think Ms. Gélinas suggested that February would be an appropriate date.

But if we are going to add on this whole issue of Oakville, that's not a quick in-and-out for all the reasons we've just mentioned, which is that the information isn't really available yet. When I look at the conversation that we had back on March 21, which I think would have been captured in the Hansard of this committee, Mr. McCarter raised some quite important concerns about his ability to conduct a high-quality audit. Those were the circumstances he was reflecting on at the time, but I think with respect to Oakville, his comments then are still quite relevant. I would like to, if I may, review some of the concerns that were raised at that time.

Do you want me to continue right now with those concerns, Chair?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): If you would like to raise those concerns, go ahead.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. I will continue with that right now, then.

If we look at the record back on March 21, Mr. McCarter said, "There's a number of challenges in doing this audit. We would probably not have access to—and I also talked to my staff about the challenges we would have in doing an audit of this nature. I've got a long list here. We would probably not have access to TransCanada or Greenfield records."

If I can interject, Auditor, is that still true, regardless of whether or not—that you, under the act, don't have access to the records of the private companies?

Mr. Jim McCarter: Yes. If we were to request something, we would probably do it through the OPA, and I suspect it would be up to them whether they wanted to provide it to us or not. I'm not sure we would have access to a private sector company's records.

However, with respect to the Mississauga one, where it's been settled, I'm hopeful that there would be enough documentation residing with the OPA to enable us to conduct a fairly fulsome review. We have very little information on the Oakville one, so it's hard for me to answer that.

But to get to your question, I'm not sure we would need any documentation from Greenfield, and I'm not sure, if we did, whether they would be liable to provide it to us. I think it might be at their discretion.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, because you did go on to say, back in March, "We would probably not have access to their staff to talk to them." That would not have changed.

“We might not even have access to the site, to go out and have a look at the site.” I’m not sure of the status of visiting the site, or whether that would actually be relevant.

Mr. Jim McCarter: I suspect that the OPA would be able to—I think certainly we could go out and look at the Mississauga site, and with the Oakville site, I’m not sure they could stop us from looking at the site. But it would be more the documentation which would be of interest to us.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. “We don’t know what kind of access we would have from a legal perspective.” Then you go on to say, “Ongoing negotiations—often, parties don’t want to talk during ongoing negotiations. There is a list of challenges to doing this audit. We’re certainly aware of the challenges that there would be to do this audit.”

Some of those exist regardless on the Mississauga site, on the Mississauga contract. You’ve got adequate information on the Oakville. All of those challenges would still exist. Is that fair?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I think with respect to the Mississauga one, most of those challenges would no longer exist because it’s been settled. With respect to the Oakville one, because it’s in arbitration, I suspect that a number of those challenges would remain.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Perhaps at this time, with the amount of debate that’s going on, I can see we’re not going to get this resolved, either before we have to break for question period or before we have a witness scheduled at 12:30 this afternoon. So we’ll postpone this until after we come back, after our witness this afternoon.

Also, for the committee’s knowledge, there is one matter we have to deal with in camera this afternoon—the response to a question put to legal counsel—so we will want to have time for that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So would you be doing that after the witness?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Perhaps if the committee agrees, after our witness we should deal with the in camera concern first and then deal with the motion, so that it’s looked after.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay.

Mr. David Zimmer: Is this the matter that I raised, Speaker, about getting an opinion from counsel about the—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes. Thank you.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So, Chair, can I call the question now?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, because I haven’t finished.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We’re still in the middle of debate, so no.

You can have five more minutes of debate.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Then it goes on. When you look at Hansard, it goes on after that. This is an exchange between Mr. McCarter and Mr. Zimmer.

“Mr. Auditor, how would you handle this, hypothetically, if you were doing the audit? You get into the audit, you’re looking at things and one of the parties to the contract, the government side, one of the private contractors or the utility and so forth says to you, ‘Mr. Auditor, we’d really like to co-operate with you fully and share all the information and so on, but we are on the cusp of a very delicate negotiation with various parties, and we just can’t respect our fiduciary relationship to the parties we’re representing in the negotiation and, at the same time, at this time, share this information with you, because it may do one of two things: It may place us, the party that’s raising this issue, in a terrible conflict of interest’ vis-à-vis their obligations to get the best deal for their side, and it could well place you, in their opinion, in a conflict-of-interest position because, depending on how you manage or interpret or use that information, you have the ability—almost inadvertently—to affect the negotiation one way or the other.”

I think that would be—from the conversation that we’ve had so far, that would still be the situation with Oakville, in response to the question that Mr. Zimmer raised at the time, and I think, given your earlier comments, that that situation would still be problematic with respect to Oakville.

Mr. Jim McCarter: I think we would go into Oakville, we would ask to see the documentation, but it could well be that the OPA indicated that because it was in arbitration, they might give us some documentation but say it’s protected by client-solicitor privilege; it may be harmful to the negotiations. At that point, it would be up to the professional judgment of the Auditor General either to essentially report that or to make a decision whether the Auditor General agreed with that statement. Some of those challenges would still remain with respect to Oakville, but we would pursue it as far as we could.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then in response to his question about how you would handle that, I think you said, at that time, something similar to what you just said now, that you “would not be surprised to see that situation arise, especially with respect to the two external parties, Greenfield and TransCanada, who would probably say, ‘Our primary responsibility is our fiduciary interest toward our shareholders, and consequently it’s not in the best interests of our shareholders to provide or share any information with you. We’re under no legal obligation to do so. Consequently, unfortunately, as much as we would like to help you out, it’s not in the best interests of our shareholders. Therefore, we cannot share information with you whatsoever.’”

So that would still be true of Oakville, then, what you said at the time?

Mr. Jim McCarter: Probably.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Then you went on to say, “The ministry would be in a more difficult position with respect to that, because I think they’d be required to share information with us. Their concern would probably be,

'Just don't disclose anything, Auditor, that might jeopardize us paying the least amount of cancellation charges that we can pay.'"

Presumably, still the case with Oakville.

Mr. Jim McCarter: My sense is that the committee has made their direction to me very clear: not to disclose anything which could be harmful to either the taxpayer or the ratepayer's interests.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Then you go on to say that "the ministry would have to provide us with full and complete access to whatever information they have, although I suspect they would also say that some of this is protected by client-solicitor information."

And that's what we're waiting for the Speaker to, in essence, rule on.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Sandals, we are now out of time for this morning, so we shall continue this debate after our witness this afternoon and after we've done the in camera discussion. We are recessed until 12:30.

The committee recessed from 1025 to 1230.

SPECIAL REPORT, AUDITOR GENERAL: ORNGE AIR AMBULANCE AND RELATED SERVICES

MR. JAY LEBO

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): I'd like to call the meeting to order and welcome back Mr. Jay Lebo to the committee as witness, and just remind you that you swore an oath last week, so you are still under oath. Thank you for coming back. Did you want to make any statement to begin with?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. I'm back to answer your questions.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very good. The committee does appreciate you coming back. At the end of your testimony last week, there were some points that came up, and then we did run out of time. We will move to the official opposition to begin with. Ms. Elliott.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Thank you, Chair, and thank you, Mr. Lebo, for agreeing to come before the committee. We certainly appreciate your assistance and you gave us some very interesting information last time. I'd really like to pick up where Mr. Klees left off. He was asking you, during your time at Ornge, if you'd been asked to participate or be involved in any illegal or immoral activities, and you gave us an example with respect to—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Sorry, can I ask you to move your microphone a little closer?

Mr. David Zimmer: I just couldn't hear.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Sure. Sorry. He asked you whether you had been asked to participate in any illegal or immoral activities, and you gave us several examples. I wonder if you could expand on anything else that you were asked to do that you felt was wrong, either illegal or immoral?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. It's hard to know where to start. I'm just kind of taking a minute to gather my thoughts.

Mr. David Zimmer: Sorry, I couldn't hear that either.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I just said it's hard for me to know where to start. There's a lot I could say, so I want to start with the most important things.

As a regional operations manager, I didn't feel as though paramedics were being treated in a particularly ethical way, and I gave some details last time about that, how I was instructed to lie about why I had to deny vacation.

Other circumstances centering around the paramedics would involve things like workplace injuries. There were a lot of workplace injuries at Ornge. Many of them, I felt, were due to defective equipment, and there really wasn't any appetite among senior management to do something like that, so I think letting people work with equipment that you know is likely to cause injury is unethical.

There were things that I was asked to keep secret like—this committee has heard a lot about the debate as to whether or not the Toronto base should be relocated to Hamilton or Oshawa or some other location, and this is a question that paramedics cared a lot about, because it had to do with where they were commuting to work. I wasn't allowed to tell them anything about that. I'm not sure that that was really unethical, but I sort of felt like they deserved more information about where they were going to be working next year. Some of them were in the process of buying houses closer to work and so forth, and I felt if somebody could have told me, "Give that person a nudge and maybe suggest that they shouldn't buy that house," that might have saved people a lot of money and aggravation, but—

Mrs. Christine Elliott: I'm sorry, could you tell us specifically what you did know about that decision?

Mr. Jay Lebo: The decision to move to Hamilton versus Oshawa versus whatever decision?

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Yes.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Well, I knew that Ornge was unhappy with having a base located on the Toronto Island, primarily because of the access issues to the island. I personally had to take the ferry to work every day. For a manager, that was merely inconvenient, but for paramedics and pilots, it had an impact on the service when people couldn't get to work or home from work because crossing that channel was impossible, which at times it is. And at that time, the question as to whether or not there was going to be any kind of pedestrian or automotive link from the mainland to the island was all up in the air. I think they've settled on a pedestrian link now, but at that time it was really ambiguous. So the company needed to move and there were a lot of variables that the decision needed to satisfy. I'll state right off the bat that I wasn't involved in any of that decision-making, but I can tell you what I understood the variables to be.

Obviously, there had to be an appetite on the part of the airport to have Ornge there, and not only on the part of the airport but also the community. Ornge's helicopters are extraordinarily loud. They can't be compared to news helicopters or police helicopters, and that's something that people who aren't in the business might not appreciate. Ornge's helicopters are much bigger and much louder than the helicopters we see in the sky every day. So it was important to find a community that was going to welcome the helicopters and not be a long-term thorn in the organization's side.

It was also important to the organization, wherever they moved, to have the ability to accommodate jets, because that was part of Dr. Mazza's long-term vision. That immediately ruled out a lot of possibilities. When you start talking about jets—they make a lot of noise too, so some airports simply don't allow them. And even though most airports will make exceptions for medevac flights, you can't, for example, be flying jets in and out of Buttonville all day. The community wouldn't tolerate it. So finding a community that was welcoming was important.

As far as I know, probably the third-most important variable would have been the paramedics. People at Ornge did appreciate that if you live in Oakville, you don't want to work in Oshawa, and if you live in Scarborough, you don't want to commute to Hamilton. There was some desire to accommodate the paramedics as much as possible, although, of course, they weren't unanimous themselves as to where they wanted the new base to be. But certainly the senior management at Ornge didn't want to add to the already volatile relationship between management and the unionized staff.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Do you know anything more about the decision-making process and what ended up happening?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. I and the other regional operations managers were kept in the dark on that—intentionally, I'm sure, but I couldn't say why.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Okay. What did they ask you to say to the staff, then?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was instructed to say that all the opportunities were being examined and that the organization would make a choice that best fit the criteria and the constraints.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: What do you think was immoral about that, then? That they were kept in the dark too long, or that a decision had been made that was being withheld from them or—

Mr. Jay Lebo: I think it's debatable as to whether or not it was immoral, but being on the front line, I saw people who were uprooting their families in order to be closer to work. Anybody knows that their place of work might change at any time, but paramedics who work at Ornge don't really have the option of going somewhere else. If you're a critical care paramedic, there really only is one game in town and you're tied to that organization. It upset me to see people making long-term, family-type decisions to be closer to the island when I knew that it was coming to an end; or people speculating that the base was moving to Oshawa and then buying homes close to Oshawa, and then if they find out later that they're commuting to Hamilton, that's going to be big problems for them.

I can't really put my finger on that and say that was unethical, but it was part of a pattern of keeping paramedics in the dark, and I think that the pattern overall was unethical.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Can you tell us about any other maybe direct instructions you would have received from either Dr. Mazza, Ms. Renzella or anybody else that wasn't in keeping with perhaps the truth?

Mr. Jay Lebo: You want me to specifically think of times where I was instructed to lie?

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Yes.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't recall any other times. It seemed to me that there came a point that senior management—I say "seemed to me." It's important that I say I don't know what I don't know, but it seemed to me that there came a point when senior management decided to keep information from the regional operations managers to avoid having that problem. Rather than asking us to mislead the paramedics, we were just kept in the dark so that we didn't have any information at all.

1240

For example, I was frequently asked by the paramedics working in my region, "When are the new helicopters coming online? When will the first ones be delivered? When can we expect to be working on the new helicopters?" That was information I didn't have. It was never shared with me.

I mentioned the last time I was here about a couple of people I was instructed to terminate and how I felt that that was wrong.

I don't have a long list of lies that I was asked to relay to people, if that's what you're looking for, but what I can speak to more is just a general culture of opacity and secrecy. I'm sorry I'm not able to be more specific.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Okay. And where did that come from?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Dr. Mazza.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Did he ever say anything specific to you about any of these issues—about, you know, we need to keep information close—or was it just understood?

Mr. Jay Lebo: When I stopped working directly for Dr. Mazza and became a regional operations manager, my communications with him stopped. I remember being a little surprised by that, because I had worked closely with him for a year and I kind of expected him to maintain some sort of relationship. But I had very little personal contact with Dr. Mazza after I became a regional operations manager. My contact then was with my direct superiors and their superiors in the operations department.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: During the time that you did work directly with Dr. Mazza, you must have observed his interactions with a number of other people.

First of all, can you describe his relationship with Ms. Renzella. Were they close, in terms of business, discussing issues back and forth, or was she sort of left in the dark, as other people were?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, most definitely they were close. Dr. Mazza was pretty good about getting the input of his senior executives, especially Ms. Renzella, before going ahead with something. I think that Dr. Mazza relied heavily on her financial expertise. They were fairly close. Dr. Mazza gave the orders, and Ms. Renzella followed them, but it seemed to me that they discussed things at length before pulling the trigger on anything.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: What about the relationship with Mr. Beltzner, the board chair? How did that work?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I'm not the one who placed Dr. Mazza's phone calls for him or made his appointments, so I don't know all of what went on between them, but they did seem to me to have a reasonably close relationship. The chairman was in the office fairly regularly. It was my understanding that they also met outside of the office fairly regularly. They seemed to have a reasonably close and friendly working relationship.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Did Mr. Beltzner have an office at Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, he didn't.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: And when you say "reasonably often," how often would he have been around?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Maybe once a month, maybe a little more.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Okay. Did he have any interaction with staff, or was he mostly just speaking with Dr. Mazza or anybody else?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Mr. Beltzner is a friendly person, from what I know of him, and he would be friendly to anyone he would bump into in the office. But his business discussions were with Dr. Mazza.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Did you, while you were working with Dr. Mazza, have the ability to attend any of the board meetings?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. Actually, I never attended a board meeting.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Did you get any reports about the board meetings? Did you see the minutes of the meetings?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Occasionally, but nothing memorable sticks in my mind. There was a corporate secretary at Ornge whose responsibility was all things board-related. There were minutes taken, and there was at least one board member who was present at all the—excuse me. There was at least one non-board-member who was present at all the meetings. That would have been the corporate secretary. That wasn't me.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: So the board meetings were always closed to anything other than strictly—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, and often after hours too.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Okay. Were staff ever invited to make any presentations on any issues? To your knowledge, anyway, were any issues discussed relating to paramedics, relating to design of helicopters? Were any of those issues discussed?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Executives often made presentations during board meetings, but I wouldn't be able to tell you anything about the substance of those presentations.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: When the issues arose with respect to the design of the helicopters, were you one of the managers at that point, or were you still working—

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was one of the managers. You've probably heard that two paramedics were assigned to that design team. One of those paramedics was in my region, so I heard second-hand information about how that process was progressing, but I wasn't involved.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Can you give us some indication of what he told you?

Mr. Jay Lebo: That paramedic?

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Yes, please.

Mr. Jay Lebo: It sounded to me like things were going well. I was very glad to know that paramedics were on the team. That seemed to me like a reasonable assurance that whatever was designed would be acceptable to the paramedics. He told me that there were trips to Switzerland to try out the prototype. It seemed that that particular paramedic was pleased with the progress of the project.

I left the organization before that project was complete, so what happened after that, I couldn't say. Whether or not that paramedic was pleased up until the end, or whether it all fell apart after I left, I couldn't say.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: So you left, then, before people began experiencing difficulties with it. You've probably heard that they were unable to perform CPR on the helicopters. So that all happened—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. It's my understanding that these problems weren't discovered until the new helicopters actually went into service, and that didn't happen until after I had left.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Last week, you indicated that Dr. Mazza had wanted a meeting with Mr. Caplan when he was then Minister of Health—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: —after he succeeded Mr. Smitherman. Did he make the same request with Minister Matthews? Do you know if there was a meeting with Minister Matthews at all?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't remember when Minister Matthews became the Minister of Health. Could you tell me? Do you know? I think it was after my time.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: It may well have been, but I'm just not sure.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't remember her name coming up while I was there.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: What about Minister Caplan? Were there discussions with him?

Mr. Jay Lebo: All I recall is Dr. Mazza mentioning, during a meeting of the executive management team, "There's a new Minister of Health and I ought to meet that person face to face." I don't know that that meeting ever happened.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Have you ever heard the name Sophia Ikura?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I don't know that name.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: So you never had any interactions with her at all when you were there?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I've never heard that name before.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: I guess I'm just looking for some general information. While you were there, did you ever hear any other concerns that were being expressed about the operation by paramedics, by pilots, other than what we've heard already?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I think you've heard it all. There were lots of concerns expressed by paramedics, but I think most of them have come out in this committee.

In my time as regional operations manager, one of the most common complaints among paramedics had to do with a recent policy that had come out that said paramedics were not to engage in conversation with the Ornge communications centre; that when a call came in from the communications centre saying, "There's a call and you're going," paramedics weren't to engage in any kind of conversation. I don't recall if you've heard about that before, but it was certainly a major source of tension in the time I was there.

I could elaborate on that, if you'd like.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Yes, please.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Okay. When a call comes in to a base, two things start happening at the same time. The pilots start preparing themselves and the aircraft, and the paramedics start preparing themselves to meet the patient. These two things happen in parallel.

Usually the pilots take longer, meaning that the paramedics have some buffer time. The paramedics are always in uniform, ready to go out the door and get on the helicopter with zero notice, but the helicopter is not usually ready to go, because the pilots have to check the weather; they have to plan the route; they have to make sure the appropriate amount of fuel is on board etc. So usually the paramedics have a bit of downtime before the helicopter is ready to take them.

The paramedics felt—reasonably, it seemed to me—that a good use of that time would be to engage in conversation with the Ornge communications centre, and with the patch physician in the OCC, to refine the patient treatment strategy. Basically, the thinking was, "We've got five minutes here. The helicopter's not ready. Let's talk for five minutes about this patient."

An order came down from senior management that these conversations were not to happen anymore. The feeling was that paramedics were using this as an opportunity to delay calls or refuse calls or basically to obstruct the operation, and they just wanted that conversation stopped. The paramedics were really frustrated by that. They felt that they weren't given an opportunity to express their opinions and to share their expertise. They felt that they had value to offer in making the decisions as to how this patient would be treated. They were really bothered by the fact that their opinions were no longer welcome. That annoyed them a lot, and that was something I heard a lot about.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: And do you know what happened with that? Did those concerns get expressed back to senior management?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. I brought those concerns directly to Mr. Lepine, the COO, and he was angry that these concerns were being voiced. The consensus among the senior management team seemed to be that paramedics don't like helping patients and they would rather stay at the base and not work, and that if they were expressing concerns like these, they were just smokescreens for the medics' real motive, which was to watch TV. That was how senior management felt, but it didn't take me very long on the front line to see that that wasn't the case.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have three minutes left.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Okay, thank you. Can you just express—was Mr. Lepine the person that you would normally have spoken to about any issues during the time—

Mr. Jay Lebo: He wasn't my direct superior, but when things got hairy, he would often join the operations meetings. He wasn't my primary point of contact, but, yes, I spoke with him frequently, both one-on-one but more commonly as a group, as an operations department.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: So he was certainly well aware of what the concerns were on the ground, so to speak?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Absolutely.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: And to your knowledge, then, he was pretty dismissive of any complaints of the nature we just discussed?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Was there anybody else—your direct supervisor, I'm sure. Can you tell me again who it was?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. My direct superior was initially Steve Farquhar, the vice-president of operations, and during the second half of my time as regional ops manager, there was a director of operations inserted between me and Mr. Farquhar. That was a position that hadn't existed before.

I tried repeatedly to communicate my concerns to all of these people and could not get any traction.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: I guess I'm running out of time. Just in conclusion, is there anything else that you wanted to say before the committee that I haven't asked you about yet? Any specific thing that you think is important that we know about?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I don't think so. I don't know what's most important to you. I don't think I have any more bombshells, to use the Star's word, like the one that came out last week. So much of my knowledge is just superficial. I saw and heard a lot of things, but my knowledge about these things doesn't go very deep. I don't think that I have anything else, but I'm certainly happy to hear your questions. I'm sorry; I can't help you ask the right questions. I don't know what I could tell you that you'd want to hear.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Thank you very much. We certainly appreciate your candour and, again, your appearance before the committee.

Mr. Jay Lebo: My pleasure.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you, and we'll move on to the NDP. Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Thank you, Mr. Lebo. The first thing I would say is, I'm assuming that the last week was very stressful for you: "Why is this committee calling me back?" Not to worry, we just want to continue the conversations we have had with you. You're not in danger of anything. It was just we ran out of time to finish the questions.

I will read, from your testimony from last week, a short paragraph, and this is where I will lead off—if I had had more time.

You start by saying, "As I mentioned to Mr. Klees, the overarching strategy goal for the organization was operational excellence. The biggest problem, in my region in particular, was trust, morale and engagement. I felt that senior management's style was making it impossible to achieve those objectives."

But you did go and become the regional manager. Were you able to change things? Was it successful?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, in a word. I wasn't able to—I made some small incremental changes, but I wasn't able to have the kind of influence that I would have liked to have.

I didn't really understand—I had been told, before I became a regional ops manager, that the operation was in crisis and that the organization wasn't happy with the operations department. I didn't begin to understand until after I became an ops manager what the causes of those problems were.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So you went in thinking that a different management style was going to fix the issues, but the issues were different than that? Is that it?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, exactly. I had thought that—yes, that's precisely right. I thought that a different manager with a different style could help restore trust and morale and start bringing the operation—start improving the operation. But when I got to the job, I discovered that the causes of the problems were originating at senior management. As a middle manager, I didn't have any ability to impact that, other than expressing my opinion to senior management, and I did that a lot.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. So you have front-line workers who are very unhappy. You go in there with the goal of—you have some strong management skills, a new set of skills—a new manager who will be able to get this team to gel together and produce good-quality care. Once you look at the situation, you realize that it doesn't matter how fantastic a manager we put in there; the problems are coming from above. Were you also aware that some of those people who were really, really unhappy, participating in that low morale, were reaching out outside of the organization?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. It wouldn't have surprised me to know that, but I didn't know that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. You say it wouldn't have surprised you. What makes you say that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Paramedics were quite desperate for change. They had been operating in an environment that I would have considered to be intolerable, for a long time. I guess that, like me, they perceived no appetite for change within the organization. So if I had been in their shoes, I would have felt pretty desperate myself and probably would have taken that to anyone who would listen.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Some of what you call the immoral activities that you faced or had to deal with—you give an example of having to let go an employee. Did that employee—was he or she actually let go?

Mr. Jay Lebo: There were two employees that I was ordered—there were two specific cases in which I was ordered to terminate an employee, over my objections. I ultimately had to. I objected for a while and then was ultimately given a point-blank direction: "You will do this today."

With one of those employees, it's my understanding that that termination was later overturned in a labour arbitration. The other employee, I don't know what happened with that, but it's my understanding that the union grieved it. But, yes, I did terminate those people.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. And so—

Mr. Jay Lebo: I would prefer to say I delivered the termination message. It wasn't my decision to terminate them.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But the dirty deed was done.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So it wouldn't be a big stretch to think that those employees, then, felt the need to reach out because they felt that what was happening to them was not fair.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Well, because both of those terminations were grieved by the union, I would infer that those paramedics had some expectation of getting their employment back and probably would have stayed quiet to avoid burning that bridge.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So the people who you felt would be reaching out would be other than those two?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Precisely, yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I forgot—you gave us the size of your workforce last week and I forgot how big it was.

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was in the neighbourhood of 35 people, including part-timers and a couple of admin staff.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Was this general feeling of low morale throughout everybody or was it specific to the paramedics versus the pilots versus the fixed-wing versus the temporary workers or the—

Mr. Jay Lebo: I would say that low morale penetrated all parts of the operations department but was particularly strong among the paramedics. The pilots had a different employer, but by virtue of how closely they worked with the paramedics, the low morale contagion spread to them, and to me.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And to everybody else around.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: But you're not surprised that those people would—you basically tried within the organization, the communication channel that existed to you, to help them. They had tried to help themselves. Nothing in-house was working, so it's no surprise that they started to become whistle-blowers.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. I mean, you learn at business school that in order for people to deliver excellence and to be engaged in their work, management needs to give them the right kind of environment and culture, and that if you don't do that, then it's a foregone conclusion what's going to happen. People who aren't treated with dignity and respect won't deliver excellence and won't be excited to go to work every day.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And given, as you said, that if you're a critical care paramedic, your employer is Ornge or you're not working in Ontario, they knew that they didn't have—because what most employees will do is they will walk.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Exactly.

M^{me} France Gélinas: They will say, "I had fun here, but I'm going to go have fun someplace else." They have nowhere else to go, so they have to make things work. For them, talking with their feet is not an option. Therefore, they started talking.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Exactly. For a critical care paramedic to leave Ornge and accept a job with another ambulance service would represent an enormous pay cut beyond what you could reasonably ask someone to do.

M^{me} France Gélinas: My colleague had a few questions.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure. Thank you again for being here today. You mentioned before to one of my colleagues that you weren't exactly sure what we wanted. I can tell you what I'm looking for and that might help you jog your memory or perhaps give you some insight into what I'm looking for.

What I want to know is if you could tell me, were there any signs that things were going wrong at Ornge, any red flags that the ministry ought to have known of, that the ministry ought to have seen because it was so flagrant—whether it's in the culture, whether it was in the management, whether it was in this culture of secrecy, whether it was in any other business arrangements? Were there any signs that ought to have been apparent?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't think so. We know that Ornge wasn't collecting a lot of data, and it's hard to make good decisions when you don't have any data. It's my understanding that the performance agreement didn't require them to collect lots of data, but it seems to me—maybe this is just because I went to business school, but it seems to me like common sense that in an operation like that you need to rely on data and evidence-based decision-making. Choose any successful company you care to name, whether it's McDonald's, Air Canada or whatever: They make decisions based on data, not on intuition and whim. And these are companies that are just trying to earn money. When you've got an organization that's trying to save lives, it seems to me a moral imperative to collect lots of data and make data-based decisions. It always disturbed me that that wasn't happening at Ornge. But I can't say that it was any failing on the ministry's part that they didn't identify that, because I don't know how closely—

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure. Whether working with Dr. Mazza or when you were working as a regional manager, what knowledge or awareness were you aware that the ministry knew about within your purview? Whether it was the helicopter purchases or whether it was the business plan or the vision of Dr. Mazza, what did the ministry know?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I really don't know what the ministry knew. I would hear people talking about upcoming meetings with the ministry, but I can't tell you anything about the substance of those meetings.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. In terms of oversight—again, when you were working directly with Dr. Mazza or as a regional supervisor—did you ever experience or witness, or are you aware of any ministry officials and any audits, any spot checks, any sort of oversight?

Mr. Jay Lebo: There was the performance review I mentioned last week where ministry representatives came into the organization to evaluate the aero-medical side of the operation.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: This is while you're a regional?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. So they did things like inspect the paramedics' bags to make sure that everything was in there that was supposed to be in there, make sure that vehicles were ready to launch when they were supposed to, make sure that paramedics' documentation and vaccinations were in order—that sort of thing. But that really focused on regulatory compliance, which is a very different issue from organizational excellence, right? Legislation and regulations don't tell you how to run an excellent organization.

So, yes, there was oversight of the kind you're asking about, but it's not the kind of oversight that would have helped put a stop to the kinds of problems I've been talking about in the last few minutes.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: The last area I want to touch on: looking at organizational excellence. I think that's really what it comes down to. I mean, regulatory oversight is important, but what I think the ministry should be doing or ought to have done then and should certainly be doing now in all organizations is provide operational oversight to ensure that there is excellence in the service that's delivered. As someone applying your business school lens and that critical analysis, what were some key, I guess, lack of excellence, flawed operational issues that were glaring in your mind?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Okay. I could give you a few examples. One example that comes to mind has to do with shifts. At the time I was there, paramedic shifts were always 12 hours, and there are always challenges that happen during a shift change and challenges associated with what happens when a paramedic shift ends but he or she is not finished dealing with a patient, or maybe he is finished dealing with the patient but he's in Kenora and he lives in Toronto. So there are always challenges having to do with the timing of shifts.

So, senior management and operations senior management decided to play around with shifts a little bit. Instead of 7 to 7, maybe we try 9 to 9 or maybe we try overlapping the shifts or something like that. It seems that the question of when a shift should start and end can be answered with management science. You create a model and run simulations, and you see the impact of those simulations before you make a decision. But the decision in this case was just based on human intuition; you know, someone saying, "I believe that if the shift starts at 9, it will be better than if the shift starts at 7." We could have easily modelled that on a computer to see the operational impact of that decision, but that wasn't done. That's the first example that comes to mind, but that's typical.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Any other examples that you can think of in—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. During the summer months, the Toronto base puts a helicopter at Muskoka. There are two operational helicopters at the Toronto base. During the summer months, what the paramedics call "trauma season," you'd have one helicopter taking off in the morning and flying to Muskoka airport and just waiting there so that it could respond more quickly to a trauma in cottage country.

That seemed pretty reasonable to me, but you have questions about when does trauma season really start, what is the real operational impact of doing this? Again, that's something that you would model, right? You'd want to look at your call volume and where the calls are coming from and all of your response times and have a computer tell you where your helicopter ought to sit and wait, rather than just saying, "Well, it's the first day of summer, so starting today, we'll put the helicopter there." It's a multi-million-dollar asset and lives are in the balance. In my opinion, that's not how you make a decision like that.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Okay. Do you have any—

M^{me} France Gélinas: No. I would throw in, chart the temperature also.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: On big rainy days, you're not going to get any calls.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Absolutely.

M^{me} France Gélinas: All right. The last time—sorry, go ahead.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I just want to throw in that doing some regression analysis to correlate call volume with weather would have been an amazingly valuable piece of information. It would have taken a couple of hours for someone to do that, but that kind of thinking just didn't go on there.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And we see the consequences of it.

I'm going to take you on a whole bunch of things that we talked about last week that I wanted to dive into and didn't have time. Last time you were here, you talked about a conscious decision for salaries to be removed from the sunshine list. So how I would like to expand on this is, do you think that the people at Ornge—the executive at Ornge, were they worried about this decision, as in thinking that the ministry may be coming and asking about this? What do you know about this state of affairs?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I only know that Dr. Mazza wanted to keep salaries secret. I don't know why. There may not even—

M^{me} France Gélinas: He was successful; the salaries were secret.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, but I don't necessarily know that he was trying to keep it secret because he believed it to be an unreasonable salary. It could have just been that he valued his privacy. He certainly did value his privacy, so I can't speculate on what his motives were but—I'm sorry, I've gone off track.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, that's okay. I was asking you what you've heard about this conversation and this decision. At any point did people raise the issue that the ministry may come asking and the ministry should have access?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Not that I heard.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Not that you heard?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So nobody worried about the ministry? They knew the ministry wouldn't be looking?

Mr. Jay Lebo: If anyone voiced an opinion along the lines of, "I think this is a bad idea," then I didn't hear it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: So nobody was worried about that decision?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. I think it's important to recognize that Dr. Mazza built a team of people who would not disagree with him.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay.

Mr. Jay Lebo: So if you're wondering why didn't anybody say anything, it's because the people who might have said something had already been systematically eliminated from the organization.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And that was systematic, as in, you didn't agree with him, you didn't stay there long.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. According to the testimony you've heard, it even happened among board members.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, we did.

Another loose end: The MNP audit—this is where you talked to us about having been required to produce documents that basically had to be postdated. You did not do this. You produced the documents, but you put the dates that you wrote them on them.

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's what I remember.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. Was management nervous about the audit taking place?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: And how can you know that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: When people are anxious, it shows. You can tell that there is anxiety. I don't think I'm able to point to anything concrete, but there were—I mean, I don't know what to say.

M^{me} France Gélinas: No, that's okay.

Mr. Jay Lebo: It seemed to me like some very important people were spending an awful lot of time on something where it seemed to me like if you were just going to disclose the truth about everything, then that shouldn't take very long. It's obfuscation that takes time.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes. Of those people that you felt were nervous, could you name me a few?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Dr. Mazza and Ms. Renzella. The other people, I think, would have been too busy in their day-to-day jobs to worry too much about that. But Ms. Renzella was the point person for the audit. I expect that the chairman of the board would have been involved in those discussions too.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay. During the time that the audit was going on, do you know if the ministry ever did follow up, or even after, or intervene? Because there were long, long delays in getting that audit finally done. Anything you know as to people interfering? Something that should have taken a couple of weeks ended up taking a year and a half.

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I don't remember anything about that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Nothing about the length of time or anything like that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. I do know that in the executive management team meetings, questions were often brought to the table as to, "The auditor is asking for this. Do we disclose it or do we not disclose it?" I can't remember what it was they were discussing whether or not to disclose, but there was certainly a lot of attention paid to disclosing only the bare minimum.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): You have about three minutes left.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Wow.

Who was the corporate secretary taking minutes?

Mr. Jay Lebo: In the time that I was there, it was Melinda Moore.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Melinda Moore?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I'm going to save my two minutes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. We'll move on to the government, then. Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you for coming back again and making yourself available today.

One of the things that's certainly very clear to us from the testimony you gave last time and the testimony today is you've demonstrated a lot of concern about treating employees ethically. You've expressed concern about low morale. You seem to have a great deal of empathy for how the front-line staff, when you were regional manager, were feeling about things.

Certainly, some of the testimony that we've heard from other individuals who were front-line staff sort of has given us a sense of the passion and the commitment to really helping people. I think of Brandon Doneff, who is a front-line paramedic, a critical care paramedic, based out of London, who is very highly trained and has written books on it; Jonathan Lee, who works out of Markham. Would he have been in your area?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. Mr. Lee reported to me.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes, and he would be on the pediatric team now. We were very impressed with the commitment and the passion that these folks have had.

I'm not asking you to name names, but can you think of incidents or people who—as I say, I'm not asking for names, but the sort of characteristics you observed demonstrating that sort of passion that people had, and commitment to the job?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I'm sorry. I don't think I understand your question.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You seem to be very empathetic and concerned about what was going on with the front-line people. So often, what we've heard is negative. I mean, we've had Mr. Klees, who said, "I wouldn't want to be a pilot, I wouldn't want to be a patient, I wouldn't want to be a paramedic. This is just something that's totally broken."

1320

You seem to have been at the regional management level and paying a lot of attention to what was going on on the front lines. You've told us some of the operational challenges. What about the actual service delivery?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Okay—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: In terms of the individuals, the paramedics, who were out there actually interacting with patients.

Mr. Jay Lebo: The individuals that I worked with in the operations department were as universally dedicated and committed as any group of people you'd hope to have in any organization. Certainly my peers, the regional operations managers in other regions, were at least as dedicated as I was. For me, this was a pit-stop position on the way to a business career; for them, it was their career.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This was their life.

Mr. Jay Lebo: That's right. Many of them had been former paramedics and had dedicated their careers to helping sick people. For me, helping sick people was just a lucky opportunity, something I was proud to be a part of but not something I dedicated my career to.

There were scores—I'm sure, still, scores of people in the organization who want to do a good job and have what it takes to do a good job, but they need the right leadership and direction and culture. Without the right support, your best intentions don't get you far enough.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You talked about the fact that even at the time that you were there, that morale was low because people had a sense of struggling to do their job. What sort of impact would you expect it would have, then, to have this intense public scrutiny, a lot of it very, very negative, people denigrating the job that the people do? How would you expect that to impact the people that you had working for you?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I know that workers on the front line have been exposed to some abuse because people tend to tar the whole group with the same brush. People see the Ornge scandal in the news and most people don't take the time to understand that this was orchestrated by a small group of people. They're brightly coloured vehicles, so they're sort of a magnet for public opinion, and I know that gets some of them down.

I think that they see it as a necessary evil. I'm not really close with people there anymore but I know that they believed that the leadership was broken and that the operation was broken, and I expect that they see this as a catalyst towards fixing those things. I would expect that they see it as the darkest—what's the saying? The night is darkest before the dawn? I think that's probably where they are now. Nobody's happy to see what's happening, but then nobody was happy with the status quo either. If this moves them forward, I think they probably welcome that and will suffer with the short-term damage to their brand that they literally wear on their sleeves, but hopefully it's a new beginning.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You're certainly right about visibility. My little preschooler grandson sees one flying over Muskoka and goes, "Oh. Ornge. Helicopter." He knows what it is. He knows it's headed in and out of hospitals—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. Nobody on that helicopter had anything to do with what we're discussing here. They're hard-working, highly trained professionals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You talked last time about the fact that you were terminated from Ornge in—I think it was January 2010—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: —from the area manager position that you had talked about. Who did you report to directly at the point you were terminated?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sandra Burnside, the director of operations.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And she in turn reported to?

Mr. Jay Lebo: The vice-president of operations, Steve Farquhar.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Okay. You indicated that you were fired because other executives at Ornge said that you thought they lived in an ivory tower. Can you explain, number one, who said that to you, and then, secondly, why would they say that? It seems like an unusual conversation to have at termination, if I can put it that way.

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was. The whole conversation was unusual. Steve Farquhar said that to me—and it was true; I did believe that. They were living in an ivory tower. They were disconnected from reality, unable to see that the problems that were driving them crazy were of their own making. I tried many times to explain that: "You've made operational excellence a strategic objective, yet the culture you cultivate precludes operational excellence." I couldn't make my superiors understand that.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: If you went back, say, six months before you were terminated—because you had been there for six months as area manager—would you have still had a positive relationship at that point? Was there a culminating incident point when this relationship went south for you?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. It was a pattern of me bringing forward my concerns and my analysis as to what I thought the causes of the problems were and what I thought the right remedies were and my being rebuffed. There was no climax, so to speak, but it was a pattern.

As I said to Ms. Gélinas, this company systematically eliminated people who disagreed with the direction in which things were going, so I felt that I was one of those casualties.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: You felt that you were one of the people being systematically eliminated because you were speaking out on behalf of the employees and trying to find a better way of doing things.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes. I had seen it happen to other people before me. When I was terminated, it wasn't a surprise.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Thank you. I'm going to turn it over to Mr. Moridi.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you, Mr. Lebo, for appearing before this committee for the second time.

Last week when you appeared before this committee, you said, "There were plenty of secrets at Ornge." I just want to explore this statement a little further with you, if I could. It has become abundantly clear to this committee through our 17 hearings and dozens of people who have appeared before this committee that Dr. Mazza kept many, many secrets from the employers, from the employees, from the public and also from the government.

Shortly after you said that there were plenty of secrets at Ornge, you made mention of Dr. Mazza's girlfriend, Ms. Kelly Long. Did you know Ms. Long?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I did.

Mr. Reza Moridi: As Dr. Mazza's executive aide—you served for some time as his executive aide—what was the nature of your professional relationship with Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Jay Lebo: The nature of my professional relationship with Dr. Mazza?

Mr. Reza Moridi: That's right.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was his executive aide. I worked closely with him. He very generously allowed me to observe a lot of high-level meetings. He and I understood that part of the reason I accepted this role was so that I could observe first-hand what happens at the highest levels of an organization and learn from that. I often accompanied him on meetings and observed him day to day. He didn't include me in everything, but I was physically close to him. My desk was closer to his desk than anyone else's desk. I'm not sure what else I can tell you. It was a good working relationship.

Mr. Reza Moridi: And what was your professional relationship with Ms. Long?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Again, our desks were in close proximity, so we saw each other in the office every day and we chatted and said hello, as you do with people you see in the office every day, but our work—we didn't cross paths very much in terms of our work. I never worked with her on anything. But she was a face that I would see in the office every day.

Mr. Reza Moridi: You used the word “secret.” What were you referring to in relation to Ms. Long?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Mr. Singh asked me last week what the secrets were and he put me on the spot and I had trouble coming up with some answers. I’ve had a week to reflect on that and have some other ones that I’ve already shared in the last little while. I can only speculate. I was always told that they were friends. We know now that they’re together, so when did that change? Is that a recent development or is that an old development that was kept secret? I don’t know, but I suspect the latter.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Do you believe that Dr. Mazza kept his relationship with Ms. Long secret from employees?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It wasn’t a secret that they were friends. If they were more than that, then that was secret, and that’s why I can’t tell you, because it was secret from me.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Do you believe that Dr. Mazza played a hand in the rapid ascension of Ms. Long’s position and also her salary?

Mr. Jay Lebo: In the time that I was at Ornge, Ms. Long was a relatively junior person in the communications department, and she seemed to me well suited to that position. There were no red flags, to me, at that point. What happened to her career trajectory after that, I only know what I’ve read in the media. But if your question is, could she have become a vice-president without Dr. Mazza’s intervention, I don’t see how that could possibly be the case.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you.

Mr. Tom Lepine testified before this committee that if anybody “crossed”—that’s his word—Ms. Long, then that person wouldn’t last long in the organization. Would you agree with this statement?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I’ve heard stories about people who discovered that for themselves. But I have no first-hand knowledge of anyone who suffered repercussions for upsetting her.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Mr. Lepine also claimed that Ms. Long had special access to Dr. Mazza relative to her colleagues. Do you agree with this statement?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, I do.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Are there any secrets regarding Dr. Mazza and Ms. Kelly Long that you would like to elaborate on?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I really don’t know anything about them other than what I’ve read in this committee’s transcripts and the media. I knew that they were friends. I don’t believe that that was a secret. But as for further details of the relationship or the timing of the changes in the relationship, I don’t know.

Mr. Reza Moridi: Thank you very much, Mr. Lebo. Mr. Chair, I’m turning to Mr. Zimmer.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you. What was your starting compensation?

Mr. Jay Lebo: As executive aide to the CEO, $75,000 a year plus an opportunity to earn up to 30% of that as performance pay. I, in fact, earned about 20%.

Mr. David Zimmer: And your departing compensation?

Mr. Jay Lebo: As a regional operations manager, my base salary was $85,000 plus an opportunity to earn up to 27% performance pay.

Mr. David Zimmer: And when you left, did you get a package?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I did.

Mr. David Zimmer: And what was the package?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I received three months’ severance plus a bonus payout that was—because the year wasn’t complete and it’s supposed to be performance pay, it was really just a calculation. They took my result from the previous year and calculated it pro rata and that’s how they decided how much bonus pay I would get.

Mr. David Zimmer: Who led the negotiations on that, on the company side?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Rhoda Beecher.

Mr. David Zimmer: And what reason were you given for your sayonara?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was told that the organization was undergoing restructuring in the operations department and that I didn’t fit in with the new vision.

Mr. David Zimmer: How long had you been employed there?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Exactly two years.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you know Mr. Blum?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Where do you know Mr. Blum from?

Mr. Jay Lebo: From Ornge.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you know Mr. Blum before Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I didn’t.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you work with Mr. Blum at Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I was in close physical proximity with Mr. Blum—our desks were close together—but I didn’t work with him, no.

Mr. David Zimmer: Were you aware of the rumours floating around the place about Mr. Blum’s drug problem?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No.

Mr. David Zimmer: On Dr. Mazza’s salary, the evidence that we heard was that Dr. Mazza went to great pains, or was greatly troubled by the idea that the knowledge of his salary would get out into the public domain. Were you aware of that concern of Dr. Mazza’s?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: How did he express that concern to you?

Mr. Jay Lebo: It wouldn’t have been expressed directly to me, but I would have overheard him expressing that during the meetings of the executive management team. He wanted his salary to remain private. He was a private individual. I guess he felt that there are a lot of people out there who would be eager to get him, and the less information they have, the better.

Mr. David Zimmer: At the time that you became aware of those concerns, did you know what his salary was, that it was $1.4 million, I think it was?

Mr. Jay Lebo: When I was his executive aide—okay. A few issues that I need to unpack. I don't think his salary was $1.4 million while I was there. I understood his salary to be in the neighbourhood of $400,000 to $500,000 while I was there. He disclosed documents to me that suggested that his salary was in that range, and that's what I believed his salary was.

Mr. David Zimmer: And it was a matter of public record at that time. It was on the sunshine list.

Mr. Jay Lebo: In the time I was there, I think he had already disappeared from the sunshine list, but I could be wrong.

Mr. David Zimmer: But his salary initially was on the sunshine list.

Mr. Jay Lebo: It was initially, yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: So it wasn't a surprise that he was getting $400,000. But then sometime afterwards, he became agitated that the salary was going to get out into the public domain—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: —so a logical conclusion is that it must have taken a big jump, to create that anxiety on his part.

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't know if I would necessarily say that's a logical conclusion, but it's a reasonable guess.

Mr. David Zimmer: All right. Did you know that he had taken some steps to get some opinions from a leading Toronto law firm, Fasken's, and in particular one Guy Giorno, about whether he had to disclose his salary or not?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. I know that Ornge worked with Fasken Martineau a lot and was getting legal opinions from them on all kinds of things, but I wasn't part of those conversations. I don't know what was discussed.

Mr. David Zimmer: Typically, at least around this place, my executive assistant, and I'm sure others here have access—they see what's coming in on their boss's email account. They see the correspondence coming in. Did you have access to Chris Mazza's incoming emails and his correspondence, incoming and outgoing?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. It's important to distinguish my role from that of an executive assistant. Dr. Mazza did have an executive assistant, but my role was one of business analysis.

Mr. David Zimmer: Let me take you to the email—I think we've got a copy of it here. I'm referring to the email from Chris Mazza dated November 1, 2007, to Malcolm Bates at the Ministry of Health.

Mr. Jay Lebo: Thank you.

Mr. David Zimmer: Everybody's got that?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Does everyone have that?

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes, that was introduced—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Oh, dear. By Malcolm?

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I think in Malcolm's testimony—because somehow we've got it that—it came from testimony. I think it was part of Mr. Bates's testimony.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Would other members like a copy of this email?

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Yes, please.

Mr. David Zimmer: Yes, you might want to have it, because I'm going to go through it in some detail.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, we'll have to make a copy. You just have a couple of minutes left, although if the committee decides they want to extend it a few minutes, that's fine.

Mr. David Zimmer: Why don't we take a couple of minutes and do the copying. Then I can pick it up and treat it all as a whole.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll recess for a couple of minutes, then, until we get those copies made.

The committee recessed from 1340 to 1341.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We'll start. You have three minutes. Hopefully, we'll have the copies back.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Again, thank you for agreeing to come back. Some of the most shocking testimony that you did last week—certainly the one that grabbed headlines—had to do with what you said at the very end. Coming back on this, it had to do with—anything you can remember about the disgruntled employees: when they talked to one another, if they talked to people outside? Anything at all that you haven't shared with us yet?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. If any paramedics were talking to outside parties, I'm sure they would have tried hard to keep that from me, lest I inform on them.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Okay, so it would be by design that you would have been excluded from this because you were considered part of management?

Mr. Jay Lebo: Sure. People understood that if you went to the ministry or you went to the press, you were going to lose your job, so they weren't going to tell their manager about it.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You know that they would lose their job because of the confidentiality agreement that they have to sign?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I think it was just understood that you did not go outside the organization.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: So right now, I'm sure you've heard what's going on with Mr. Wade, who testified here and has been suspended. Does that seem consistent with the culture at Ornge when you were at Ornge?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't know what's going on with Mr. Wade. I understand that Ornge is saying that what's happening has absolutely nothing to do with his testimony here, and I don't know if that's true or not. I don't feel like I could comment on that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: The confidence has not been rebuilt so that now, when Ornge speaks, we know for a fact that it's speaking the truth. The old culture, where people didn't believe when management spoke, is more or less still there?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't know. I can only speculate, but it seems unlikely to me that they would treat Mr. Wade that way because of his testimony, because it's so transparent. I don't know Mr. McKerlie, but I don't think he's that dumb, which makes me think that what he's saying is probably true, that there's something else. But I don't know.

M^{me} France Gélinas: If you look at what was happening at Ornge, it was having an effect on the operations of it, yet we function within the Ministry of Health where the Ministry of Health pays agencies to deliver services to the people of Ontario. The ministry has a role of oversight, yet none of this worked. Ornge continued to go down this path that affected operations. Do you figure that what happened at Ornge could be happening in the 3,000-and-some other transfer payment agencies of the Ministry of Health, that those circumstances could be repeated someplace else?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I guess that's more likely than not. I mean, it depends if you want to say that the mistakes made at Ornge were random errors or systemic errors; "There's something wrong with the system." Is the system fundamentally lacking in oversight and controls? You probably know better than me.

It looks to me like the basic framework of a strong performance agreement was missing. The performance that Ornge was supposed to deliver was not sufficiently articulated and the compliance wasn't sufficiently communicated. So it would be my guess that that's probably a systemic error that you would find in other organizations.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And thank you very much. We'll move to the government, which has two minutes left.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you. You've got this memo from Mazza to Bates. The first sentence is, "Further to our telephone conversation yesterday, I am deeply concerned by, and opposed to, the sudden and over-reaching proposal of the office of the provincial controller," to consolidate the financial statements of Ornge.

He goes on in four pages of detailed analysis on 10 points, and then he concludes in the last sentence: "Given all the foregoing"—that's all his detailed reasoning why it's a bad idea—"we trust that you," meaning the ministry, "will immediately withdraw this proposal which completely flies in the face of the public policy," and so on and so on and so on. Then he says, "There is not one single indicia," or reason, why Ornge's statements should be consolidated.

Did you work on this document?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No, I've never seen this document before.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did you know that Mazza was passionately opposed to consolidating—

Mr. Jay Lebo: Yes, I did. I did know that.

Mr. David Zimmer: And did you give him any advice on that?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did he ask you for any of your advice?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No. Governmental relations is not my area of expertise. He wouldn't be looking to me for that kind of advice.

Mr. David Zimmer: Do you know who at Ornge worked with Mr. Mazza on this idea, that this was a bad idea to consolidate?

Mr. Jay Lebo: He would have relied on his vice-president of governmental relations.

Mr. David Zimmer: In your role as executive assistant, MBA person, do you have a view on whether it was reasonable for the government to say to Ornge, because of the public monies involved, "Consolidate"?

Mr. Jay Lebo: I don't feel qualified to give an opinion on that. I really don't have any opinion about it. I guess it seems reasonable to consolidate.

Mr. David Zimmer: Did Mazza ever treat you badly, rudely, aggressively, unprofessionally, yell at you, shout at you, say, "Get the hell out of here," or lose his temper with you?

Mr. Jay Lebo: No more so than you would expect any boss to do from time to time.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): And we are out of time there.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We thank you very much for coming once again to the committee, Mr. Lebo. We appreciate you taking the time.

Mr. Jay Lebo: You're welcome.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We are briefly going to go in camera now.

The committee continued in closed session from 1349 to 1356.

COMMITTEE BUSINESS

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We're back in open session then. We were in the midst of debate on the motion from Ms. Gélinas from March 7, as amended by the committee. Ms. Sandals, you wish to speak to it?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. I was talking about the concerns that we had and that had been captured by the auditor. Clearly, there are going to be some challenges.

Just to review, because we're coming back to the middle of this, we are not opposed to doing a review of Mississauga. For Mississauga, the information is public; it's appropriate now to do a review. In our view, the whole issue around Oakville is the issue of whether it's the appropriate time to be looking at Oakville because, obviously, there are still going to be challenges accessing the volume of records that are protected by privilege, in particular solicitor-client privileged records. In the case of Oakville explicitly, there are still ongoing proceedings, confidential negotiations; there are going to be a lot of concerns there.

It seems to me that this has been presented by the opposition as cut and dried and “You can just do this and do it quickly.” But it seems to us that in fact this is something that’s going to be a somewhat difficult process because Mississauga’s pretty cut and dried; Oakville is very much up in the air. We’re still awaiting the ruling from the Speaker on how much of the information is privileged.

I would actually like to move an amendment to the motion that’s currently on the floor that recognizes, the way it is currently structured, that this is going to be a difficult audit and to add the words “by no later than September 1, 2003” to the end of the motion. As amended, it would end up saying, “I move that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts immediately request that the Auditor General examine the contracts between the Ontario Power Authority and gas-fired plants proponents TransCanada Corp. (Oakville) and Greenfield South Power Corp./Eastern Power (Mississauga), focusing specifically on the potential cost to ratepayers of the government’s 2010 and 2011 decisions to cancel the projects, and report back in a special report by no later than September 1, 2003.”

M^{me} France Gélinas: Is it 2003?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Sorry, 2013. I’m missing reading a “1” in there. You’re right, 2013. There’s the motion.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We’ll recess for a few minutes so that we can make copies for everyone.

M^{me} France Gélinas: If all it is, is a date and if she’s going to support the motion if we support her amendment and if—Mr. Auditor, can you live with it, within a year? Let’s get this done.

Mr. Victor Fedeli: They’re suggesting Mississauga, not Oakville.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, I didn’t—I just read the motion that’s currently on the floor. I disagree with the main motion, but if you insist on putting Oakville into the main motion, I think we need to make it clear that this is going to take a little while, or at least that we’re clear that we’re allowing the auditor—but I think they’re copying—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Basically, the only change you’ve made is by adding the date, “by no later than September 1, 2013,” correct?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Is everyone fine with that?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I’d like to speak to that, if I may.

Mr. Victor Fedeli: Can you read it? Would you mind? Just so we get it.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Well, it’s in writing. You can get a copy of it.

Mr. Victor Fedeli: I’m fine.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We’ll just read it into the record, please, Will.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): Ms. Sandals moved “that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts immediately request that the Auditor General examine the contracts between the Ontario Power Authority and gas-fired plant proponents TransCanada Corp. (Oakville) and Greenfield South Power Corp./Eastern Power (Mississauga), focusing specifically on the potential cost to ratepayers of the government’s 2010 and 2011 decisions to cancel the projects, and report back in a special report”—here’s the amendment—“by no later than September 1, 2013.”

The original motion, as amended, included “and related documentation,” which isn’t in this motion, but that’s already in the main motion, as amended. Now we’re adding “by no later than September 1, 2013” to the end of the motion. That’s the new amendment that is now on the floor.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So if I may speak to the amendment, then, please?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, you may.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: This amendment is directed toward addressing a number of the concerns that have been raised by the government and by the auditor about the feasibility of conducting this audit at this point in time.

As we’ve said, this is a matter that was discussed over the course of several weeks at the estimates committee—that is, the availability of the documents. It’s a matter that involves large volumes of privileged records; it’s a matter that involves third party private sector companies in relation to highly sensitive commercial projects; and it’s a review that will require the dedication of substantial resources by the Auditor General.

It is incumbent on us to ensure that the Auditor General has the necessary time to conduct this audit, both to ensure he can get at the information he needs to get at—and it has got both Mississauga and Oakville in, at the moment—but also to ensure he isn’t forced by this committee to dedicate an overwhelming volume of resources in the immediate term, because we don’t want to interfere with the production of the annual report.

This just lays out the expectation that, obviously, the auditor would produce the report whenever he is finished, but to make it clear, given the requirement to look at both Mississauga and Oakville, that that may be a project that would take longer than simply to look at Mississauga.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Mr. Fedeli?

Mr. Victor Fedeli: Thank you, Chair. I appreciate that. The need to do this is real. I have heard on the other side that Mississauga is cut and dry, but I think it’s anything but cut and dry, and opens the door to questions that I would have about Oakville as well.

First of all, after the announcement was made of the $180 million, a very short period of time passed before it was corrected to $190 million. Then we learned of the sole-sourced deal between the government and the Mississauga proponent to build a new plant in Sarnia. This was a sole-sourced deal. You’ll see in a moment why I’m highlighting that, Chair. It’s anything but cut and dry. There are numbers that we are not aware of, because it was sole-sourced.

I have a concern about that sole-sourcing. First of all, we have no idea what kind of a deal was made; whether that was part of the deal with the $190-million penalty; whether it was included in there; if part of it is buried in there. It's sole-sourced.

At the estimates committee on July 19, our finance minister, the former Minister of Energy, said, and I quote from Hansard—when we were talking about why the Lambton coal plant was not simply converted from coal to gas, on the tour that many of us took of Lambton, one of the first things that OPG representative said when we walked in the door was about how all parties agree that the coal plants should be shut down by 2014. We weren't even sitting down before the executives talked about how easy it is to convert a coal plant to a gas plant. In estimates on July 19, Minister Duncan—former Energy Minister Duncan—said, "...to my knowledge, you can't convert a coal plant to a gas plant." That is part of the reasoning used to allow Greenfield to build a new plant, because you "can't convert a coal plant." Yet only days later, in northern Ontario, referring to the Atikokan coal plant—I'll read you the release: "Ontario Power Generation (OPG) has signed a contract awarding Aecon's industrial division design and construction work for the Atikokan" coal "Generating Station ... conversion project"—"biomass conversion project"; I'm sorry. It is a gas biomass project.

I bring these two issues up because certainly we do know that you can convert a coal plant to a gas plant. The people at OPG told us that. The press release only days later, about a different coal plant, boasts about converting it. Yet we see a sole-sourced contract, not to convert the coal plant in Lambton but to give this company, after a $190-million payout, a sole-sourced contract.

Why do we need to look at Oakville now? For the same reason, Chair. We need to look at Oakville to potentially learn, in advance this time, of any of these deals being negotiated between this government and Transfield with perhaps Nanticoke. That is what we will call the word on the street, that one of the side deals being looked at is the conversion of Nanticoke or a brand-new plant in that area. We're very concerned. You can fool us once, but shame on us if it's the second time, Chair.

We need to get into this Oakville plant's numbers. The auditor needs to have that opportunity to let us know what's going on before, and as soon as possible.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Thank you for that. Mr. Singh.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: My first question is to the Auditor General specifically. Auditor, if we added that amendment, "by no later than September 1, 2013"—the earlier language of the motion says, "to immediately request that the Auditor General examine"—would this in any way slow you down? Would it in any way make the report come back later to us if we added that amendment? Would we—

Mr. Jim McCarter: I think my interpretation would be that, initially, the gist of what I was getting is, "We'd like you to get the Mississauga done as quickly as possible, because it has been settled. However, with respect to Oakville, we understand that because it's in arbitration, we'd like you to go as far as you can. But having said that, Auditor, we would not want you to be disclosing information which could be prejudicial to the ongoing negotiations. If that's the case, then we'd expect you to come back again and basically say, 'Well, here's what I can report, but I can't really go any further.'"

My sense, and perhaps I'm reading the tea leaves wrong, is that by putting in the September 1, 2013, you might be saying to the auditor, "Even though you maybe get the Mississauga plant done within"—whatever—"six months' time, because we've given you to September 1, if it looks like the arbitration might be winding up in the spring, perhaps hold off and see if you can get that completed so you can get it to us by September 1." That would be my interpretation of it. Other than that, I would have to say that having the date in here certainly is no constraint to us. Regardless of the date, we would report as fast as we could report.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Just to make everything clear, by adding September 1, 2013—if that amendment was to pass—it wouldn't slow you down. It wouldn't be that you would wait till that date.

Mr. Jim McCarter: It wouldn't slow me down. It might give me second thought: Is the committee really saying to me, "If you think the arbitration is going to be winding up in April, May, June, if before you might have just come out and given us a report at the end of February or in March on Mississauga saying, 'Here's what I can tell you on Oakville, but some of it I can't tell you because the arbitration is under way,'" I might be thinking—and I'm speaking a bit off the top of my head—the committee has said to me, "Take till September 1, if you'd like to, Auditor," and if the arbitration was winding up, I might decide to hold off tabling what I would have tabled, in the hopes that I could get all the information on the Oakville plant and give you a more fulsome report, if I could put it that way. Am I making myself clear, Mr. Singh?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Yes, you are, absolutely.

My submission to the committee is that I think that what we should do—and I'm hoping we can have some consensus on this—our goal would be to get as much information immediately on the Mississauga plant, because it's completed, and have that tabled as soon as possible within, obviously, your resource limitations, Auditor.

With respect to Oakville, I would prefer, and I have a feeling that my colleague would also prefer, that we get updated with as much information as possible as soon as possible, even if that's, "It's in arbitration. We can't release very much information to you." We'd like to have whatever is possible as soon as possible. If your report can't be as fulsome until later on, that's fine as well. But we'd like to immediately find out as much as we can as quickly as possible.

Mr. Jim McCarter: I can obviously go either way. Whatever the committee directs me to do, we'll do.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Ms. Gélinas.

M^{me} France Gélinas: I would just echo what Mr. Singh just said. I agree, Auditor, with your read of the thing, understanding that you'll give us what you can as soon as possible, respecting the taxpayer at the end of the day. Don't give us anything that will increase the cost, but give it to us as fast as you can. We've put a hard deadline as to no later than—but as fast as you can with a hard deadline.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Auditor General, I'm still struggling with this concept. As we all know, the Minister of Energy, Minister Bentley, has formally, in a lengthy letter, claimed not just that he's reluctant to give the information, but made a formal, technical and legal claim of privilege with respect to this information. I'm just talking about the Oakville thing now; Mississauga is done. How will you deal with that formal claim of privilege when you ask to see the documents? That's one thing. Then, how will you deal with this issue of that formal claim of privilege on those documents, which, I've said earlier this morning, was debated at length before the estimates committee? There was a vote on it and now an appeal of that decision the committee has taken to the Speaker, and we await the Speaker's decision on that.

The problem is that in the space of the same week—I'm making this hypothetically—you could show up and say, "Give me those documents," and the minister could say, "There's an outstanding formal, legal and technical claim of privilege, and we don't expect the Speaker's ruling until next week." Or it may be that the Speaker rules and upholds the minister's claim of privilege. Then what do you do?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I'll speak practically. I think, practically, what we would do is we would use our staff and get the Mississauga work up and running as quickly as we could. I think on the Oakville one, knowing that the Speaker's ruling is coming out in a week or two, we'd probably want to read the estimates Hansard documentation. It would take a bit of time for us to do all that, and I think we would wait for the Speaker's ruling to see what the Speaker's ruling would be.

Having said that, I think we would still go out and ask the question, "We've been asked to do this. What documentation are you prepared to share with us to allow us to go as far as we can on the motion?" I think it would be incumbent on us to at least ask that question. I guess that would be the way I would proceed.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Mrs. Elliott?

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Auditor General, you had asked for some direction on which way we would want to proceed with this, and we would certainly, as PCs, agree with the position articulated by Mr. Singh, which is to proceed with a Mississauga inquiry and then to go as far with the Oakville inquiry as you're able, with the ability to come back and report again, if material becomes available to you by the deadline.

Mr. Jim McCarter: And I would have to say, I think I would also use my judgment in the sense that if it looked like the arbitration was wrapping up and it meant that maybe in just an extra month I could get a more fulsome report—I think to some extent I'd have to use my judgment. I've always felt I could come back to the committee and also seek direction from the committee in three or four months' time saying, "This is where the situation stands now." My sense is I would have no hesitation in coming back to the committee and saying, "This is where I stand right now. I can go this route or this route. Does the committee have any direction?" Sometimes the committee will give me direction and sometimes the committee will say, "No, Auditor, you make the call and decide what you think is best."

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Mr. Singh?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I'm very satisfied, Auditor, with your response and I'm completely satisfied with your position on it and the way you want to carry it out.

One thing I forgot to mention, and it's already been covered mostly, but I think it's important for us to know that each committee is independent and it's important, if we make a request, that this committee's request is honoured and respect. Then the Auditor General would do his job, and then if he receives information that he can't—whatever assertion made by the minister, whether it's an assertion of his right, under his discretion, not to release information, that that would happen to the Auditor General and that's fine, that would happen.

I think waiting to hear from the ruling would probably make sense, but I like the idea of asking the question and if, again, the minister asserts that, "This is under my discretion. I don't want to release this information," we'll deal with that when that happens. I think that doesn't preclude us from making the request. The minister can still exercise his discretion as he feels fit.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer?

Mr. David Zimmer: Just one question to the auditor just so it's on the record. Mr. Auditor, is it your position that if the Speaker gave ruling X and, notwithstanding that ruling X, your view of the matter was Y, the way the system works here, the ruling Speaker trumps your view of the matter? In other words, the Speaker has got the last word in this. If the Speaker says whatever and you disagree with that, does the Speaker have the last word?

Mr. Jim McCarter: I don't like to sit on the fence, but it would be difficult for me to give you a definitive answer without actually doing a bit more homework on what the issue is and, basically, what the ruling was all about, and then reading the exact Speaker's ruling. I think it would be hasty of me to give you a yes or no in advance of that, Mr. Zimmer.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Very well. Can we put the question?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Point of order.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: A 20-minute recess before the vote.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, this is on the amendment—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: On the amendment.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): —put forward by you, Mrs. Sandals. Okay, 20-minute recess.

The committee recessed from 1420 to 1440.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): We're back in session. Do we have unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment and the main motion, as amended? Agreed? Agreed.

Ms. Gélinas, I believe you have a new motion—

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And the other motion that was on the table about Oakville?

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): The main motion, as amended.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: No, also withdrawing the other. There are two motions on the table that mention Oakville. The one that mentions Oakville only that France tabled the other day—

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): They've never been moved.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Oh.

The Clerk of the Committee (Mr. William Short): They were never moved, so they're not on the floor.

M^{me} France Gélinas: We're not going to do this.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay. We have a new motion from Ms. Gélinas, if you would like to move that.

M^{me} France Gélinas: Yes, it reads as follows: I move that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts immediately request the Auditor General examine the contract and related documents between the Ontario Power Authority and Greenfield South Power Corp./Eastern Power regarding the cancelled Mississauga gas plant, focusing specifically on the cost to taxpayers, and that the Auditor General report back to the committee in the form of a special report before September 1, 2013, notwithstanding any prorogation of the House.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Any discussion? Ms. Sandals.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Just one note: You read in "and related documents," and I thought we had decided we were better to rely on a Hansard reference to his usual powers under the act.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): The Auditor General.

Mr. Jim McCarter: If I could just offer a comment: As long as it's the understanding of the committee that although it says "examine the contract" in compliance with the intent of the Audit Act, basically the intent is that I should have access to all related documentation to do as fulsome a job as I could, that that would be the committee's direction to me.

M^{me} France Gélinas: That's the direction.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: That would be our understanding.

Interjections.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So it will be as printed, with September 1.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, I believe so. Ms. Gélinas, is that fine with you?

M^{me} France Gélinas: It's absolutely fine with me. It was a technical error on my part.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: And then we'll get the—we're implying that we will pick up the motion, the wording around documents, from the Audit Act, which are the powers the auditor would normally have.

Mr. Jim McCarter: The only way I can see this coming up is, for instance, if the OPA said, "Well, Auditor, it just said 'contract' or 'contracts.' That's all we're giving you." I would then show Colin Andersen the discussion in Hansard to say it's very clear that the will of the committee is that I be provided access to all documentation. At that point, I don't think Colin Andersen would then say, "Auditor, I don't agree." I think it would be very clear from Hansard.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes.

Mr. David Zimmer: Could you just read it again for me?

M^{me} France Gélinas: Absolutely. I move that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts immediately request the Auditor General examine the contract between the Ontario Power Authority and Greenfield South Power Corp./Eastern Power regarding the cancelled Mississauga gas plant, focusing specifically on the cost to taxpayers, and that the Auditor General report back to the committee in the form of a special report before September 1, 2013, notwithstanding any prorogation of the House.

Mr. David Zimmer: Thank you.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): All in favour of this? Carried.

Mr. Singh, I believe you have a motion?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: I do indeed, my friend. Mr. Chair, the motion that's before everybody is titled "Motion 5." Does everyone have that motion?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Just a sec. I think we have the copies here.

Interjections.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Mr. Chair, is it all right if I begin reading it?

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Just hold on for a second.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, go ahead.

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

I move that notwithstanding the order of the House dated Thursday, February 23, 2012, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts request to the House leaders that it continue to sit past September 9, 2012, with its current membership in order to meet on the 2012 Special Report of the Office of the Auditor General of Ontario on Ornge Air Ambulance and Related Services.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay.

Mr. David Zimmer: You might want to take out request "to." Just "request the House."

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: Sure, that's not a problem. If you want to do a friendly amendment, I agree.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, any discussion? Ms. Sandals?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Yes. I guess I'm a little bit confused by this in the sense not that I don't hope that the current membership of the committee continue, because I actually do hope that the current membership of the committee continue because it would be a shame for us to have heard all this testimony and then not to actually digest it and make recommendations about it. I don't disagree with the request that the current membership continue. What I'm struggling with is that my understanding was that it was the opposition House leaders who actually wanted the motion that says that the committees sort of self-destruct on September 9. It wasn't the government that asked for it; it was the opposition that asked for it. So I'm a little bit confused as to why the opposition is asking the House leaders to change something that we, in good faith, negotiated with the House leaders. I don't feel like I've got the authority to overturn an agreement that we made with the opposition at the opposition's request.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Yes, and apparently, this wouldn't be binding on the House leaders, but it would be reported to the House leaders. It would still be up to them. Jagmeet?

Mr. Jagmeet Singh: That doesn't change the meat or the substance of the motion, so I'd like to call the vote at this point.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Mr. Zimmer?

Mr. David Zimmer: I don't have any problem with this because what it says is that we "request the House leaders." At the end of the day, the House leaders are going to figure it out and we, as the loyal foot soldiers of our respective parties, will get our marching orders.

I'm quite happy to see—although I'm speaking personally and privately, I would hope that your House leader of the official opposition might remove Mr. Klees.

M^{me} France Gélinas: You'll have to put that in the motion.

Mr. David Zimmer: I think he wants me off too.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Any other debate? Okay. All in favour?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: Point of order. Sorry, Chair: Point of order.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): A point of order.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: A 20-minute recess, because it goes against what we—I've got to figure out whether we're going there or not.

The Chair (Mr. Norm Miller): Okay, well, a 20-minute recess, then, and this will not be finished at this meeting, as the committee finishes at 3 o'clock. We are recessed.

The committee recessed from 1448 to 1500.

The committee adjourned at 1500.
